ſeverall writers, if they were heaped together, would make a book [illegible] beloved: in this ſo cleere a caſe, to cite any examples, I ſee not to what purpoſe [illegible] ſhould uſe it, leſſe it were to make little children that learne [illegible] in the Grammar Schoole, [illegible] like-neſſes of your intollerable arrogancie, and incredible ignorance. One [illegible] were led ſo bring you out of S. Marke, not unlike this of S. Luke, but the verbe [illegible] like-ϗ φέρουσιν αὐτὸν ἐπὶ γολγοθᾶ τόπον ὅ ἐστι μεθερμηνευόμενον, κρανίου τόπος. and they bring [illegible] place Golgotha, which is beeing interpreted the place of Sculls. This example [illegible] then ſufficient for ſo plaine a matter, For although it bee an elegancie for the [illegible] was agree in caſe with the Antecedent ſometimes, yet to make a perpetuall [illegible] bee proceedeth of too much raſhneſſe, want of knowledge and conſideration. [illegible] hat bee able to bring one example like to this of S. Luke, where the Relative not ag[illegible] with the Antecedent, the Participle may bee reſolved by the verbe Subſtantive that [illegible] preſſed: and I wilfully abuſe whatſoever knowledge I have of the Greeke tongue, to deceive the ignorant, or elſe I have no skill at all, to ſpeake ſo barbarouſly, and ruſtically of Greeke elegancie, and I know in my conſcience, it is as greate a Solœciſme in Greeke; and no more elegancie then to ſay in Latine, In meo ſanguine fuſus pro vobis, which in the Schoole deſerveth whipping: and I know not what beſide. But touching the ſimilitude of the Solœciſme, if you had made your example alike, that is put in the Relatiue in the Latine, as it is in the Greeke In meo ſanguine qui fuſus pro vobis, there is no more Solœciſme in the one, then in the other. But all this while I bring no example, and you urge an example, yea ſo extreamely, that you ſay confidently, I ſhall never bee able to bring one: but what if I bring two or three? who then abuſeth his knowledge in the Greeke? who hath no skill at all? who deſerveth whipping? Have you ſo read all Authours, and beare them, and all their phraſes ſo well in minde, that you dare before all the world avouche, that I ſhall never bee able to bring one example? But to let all the world ſee your vanitie, I will beginne with Theognis, who in the 863. of his Elegiacke ſentences writeth thus:

Ἐσθλὸν ὃς οὐδ' αὐτῷ βέλτερος οὐδὲν ἐὼν, Οὔτε φίλοις—

See you here the relative ὃς beeing the nominative caſe not agreeing with his antecedent ὄλβον of the accuſative caſe, but comming before the verbe ἐστὶ that is included in the particle ἐών; What can you here ſay? will you cavill at the ſubjunctive Article? then reade a few verſes after, and ſee whether this Poet uſeth not as indifferently the prepoſitive article as the ſubjunctive, for the relative.

Πῖν' οἶνον τὸν ἐμῆς κορυφῆς ὕπο Ταϋγέτοιο, Ἄμπελοι ἤνεγκαν τὰς ἐφύτευσ' ὁ γέρων.

And within two verſes,

ſpeaking of the ſame wine.

Οὐλομένοις ὀφίεσσι, τὰ ϗ θεοὶ ἐχθαίροντι.

Καὶ ποτὶ τὸν θεὸν ἦνθε τὸν ὕβρισε.

From Theocritus let us paſſe to Heſiodus, out of whom it were over tedious to cite how often hee uſeth the article prepoſitive for the Relative, and not agreeing in caſe with the Antecedent: but an example or two ſhall ſerve, where the verbe ſubſtantive is underſtood, and not expreſſed, nor any other verbe to governe the relative, yet not agreeing in caſe with the Antecedent.

Againe in ἐν ἡμέρ.

Οἴωνους κρίνας οἱ ἐπ' ἔργματι τούτῳ ἄεισοι.

Here mee thinkes, I heare you grudge againſt Poetrie, and poeticall licence, as doubtleſſe you would quarrell againſt prophane authorities, if I ſhould bring you any like examples out of Proſaicall writers.

Wee muſt ſee therefore, whether wee are not able to bring examples of the like phraſe, out of the holy Scriptures. First that Solœcophanes is found in Saint Luke, I will referre you to the firſt Chapter of his Goſpell, verſe 74. and chap. 6. verſ. 4. Likewiſe [illegible] 27, verſ. 3. and Act. 13 verſ. 6. But for the like Solœcophanes to this in queſtion, Luke [illegible] will ſend you firſt to Saint Paul, Coloſſ. [illegible] verſ. 26. πληρῶσαι τὸν λόγον τοῦ Θεοῦ, [illegible] ἀποκεκρυμμένον ἀπὸ τῶν αἰώνων ϗ ἀπὸ τῶν γενεῶν, νυνὶ δὲ ἐφανερώθη τοῖς ἁγ[illegible] τὸ μυστήριον, muſt needes bee the accuſative caſe, as τὸν λόγον is, by [illegible] τὸ ἀποκεκρυμμένον, for all the word, as [illegible], the nominative caſe, [illegible] condi

[illegible] ſhould [illegible] the nominative [illegible] tranſlated [illegible] ut impleam verbum Dei, myſterium [illegible] nunc autem manifeſtatum eſt ſanctis ejus. [illegible] the nominative caſe and the accuſative of the [illegible], I will bring you yet more plaine examples [illegible] chap. 1. verſ. 4. χάρις ὑμῖν καὶ εἰρήνη ἀπὸ τοῦ ὁ ὢν, καὶ ὁ ἦν, καὶ ὁ ἐρχόμενος. Grace to you [illegible] from [illegible], or from God, (as ſome coppies have) which is, and which was, [illegible] to come. Would not your Grammarian ſay it is a plaine Solœciſme, becauſe [illegible], and ὁ ἐρχόμενος, what have you here to quarrell? Is not ἀπὸ τοῦ ὁ ὢν, and [illegible] ſame Phraſe that is in S. Luke. τῷ αἵματι, τὸ ἐκχυνόμενον; Well, let us go a [illegible], to the next verſe of the ſame Chapter, where wee reade thus, καὶ ἀπὸ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, [illegible], ὁ πρωτότοκος ἐκ τῶν νεκρῶν, καὶ ὁ ἄρχων τῶν βασιλέων τῆς γῆς. And from Ieſus [illegible] which is a faithfull witneſſe, the firſt borne from the dead, and Prince over the [illegible] the earth. The more uſuall conſtruction would require, that hee ſhould have ſaid, ἀπὸ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ τοῦ μάρτυρος τοῦ πιστοῦ, τοῦ πρωτοτόκου καὶ τοῦ ἄρχοντος. But that hee uſeth the ſame Solœcophanes, which S. Luke doeth. chap. 22. (If the reading bee not altered) where the Article præpoſitive is put in the place of the ſubjunctive, and agreeth not in caſe with the antecedent, as often it doeth, but being the nominative caſe, commeth before the verbe ἐστι, which is not expreſſed, but muſt needes bee underſtood: as even your vulgar Tranſlatour doeth acknowledge, rendring it in both verſes thus: ab eo qui eſt, et qui erat, et qui venturus eſt, and à Ieſu Chriſto qui eſt teſtis fidelis, &c. Theſe examples I doubt not, but they are ſufficient to ſatiſfie any reaſonable man, to ſhew that I have not invented a new conſtruction that was never heard of, to ſave Bezaes credite, and whereof I am able to give not ſo much as one example. But that I may overthrow M. Martines vaine inſultation, with a whole cloud of examples, I will yet adde one or two more. In the ſame revelation. chap, 8. verſ. 9. Thus we reade καὶ ἀπέθανε τὸ τρίτον τῶν κτισμάτων τῶν ἐν τῇ θαλάσσῃ, τὰ ἔχοντα ψυχάς, and there dyed the third of all creatures, which are in the ſea, which had lives. Your vulgar Latine text turneth it thus. Et mortua eſt tertia pars creaturæ, eorum qui habebant animas in mari, And there dyed the third part of the creatures, of thoſe things which had life in the ſea. In which tranſlation, although the order of the wordes, which Saint Iohn uſeth, is ſomewhat inverted: yet the ſenſe remaineth the ſame, and τὰ ἔχοντα is tranſlated, quæ habebant, which agreeth not with τῶν κτισμάτων in caſe, as every childe that can decline a Greeke noune, doeth know: where otherwiſe the moſt common conſtruction were to have ſaid, τῶν κτισμάτων, τῶν ἐχόντων. Therefore the phraſe and conſtruction is the ſame, which is Luk. 22. τῷ αἵματι, τὸ ἐκχυνόμενον. What can fine [illegible] Gregorie, which carpeth at my skill, that ſpeake ſo barbarouſly, and ruſtically of [illegible] Greeke elegancies, what can M. Gregorie Martine I ſay, the great Linguiſt of the Seminarie of Rhemes, alledge, why theſe phraſes are not alike? or rather changing the [illegible] des in figure the very ſame? And if hee have anything to cavill againſt this example, as I ſee not what hee can have, yet have I another out of the ſame booke, cap. 3. v. 12. [illegible] ἐπ' αὐτὸν τὸ ὄνομα τοῦ Θεοῦ μου, καὶ τὸ ὄνομα τῆς πόλεως τοῦ Θεοῦ μου, τῆς καινῆς Ἱερουσαλὴμ, ἡ κα[illegible] ἐκ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ ἀπὸ τοῦ Θεοῦ μου. And I will write upon him the name of my God, [illegible] of the citie of my God, the new Hieruſalem, which deſcendeth out of [illegible] my God. The vulgar Latine tranſlation differeth not from this, which ſayth: [illegible] ſuper eum nomen Dei mei, et nomen civitatis Dei mei, novæ Hieruſalem, quæ de[illegible] à Deo meo. Here the antecedent is of the genitive caſe, the relative of the nominative [illegible] which commeth before the verbe ἐστι, underſtood in the participle καταβαίνουσα, [illegible] 22. it is in the participle, ἐκχυνόμενον. By theſe examples, in ſeeking whereof, I [illegible] you, I ſpent no greate time, you may learne to bee wiſer hereafter, and not to condemne all men, beſide your ſelfe, out of your Readers chayre at Rhemes, of ignorance, unskilfulneſſe, barbarouſneſſe, ruſticitie, yea wilfulneſſe, and madneſſe, where you your ſelfe deſerve a much ſharper cenſure, through your immoderate inſultation, the matter thereof being more falſe and forged, then wee might juſtly have borne, if wee had beene overtaken with a little Grammaticall ignorance. By theſe examples I truſt you ſee, or if you will needes bee blinde, all the young Grecians in England, may ſee, that as in the Latine tranſlation, you confeſſe the relative ſtandeth more likely to bee referred to the word Sanguine, then to the word Calix, ſo in the Greeke, there is no [illegible] to remove it from the next manifeſt and [illegible] antecedent, to a word further off, with which the ſignification of the participle cannot agree. For who would ſay that a [illegible] for us? And though you [illegible] a Metonymy of [illegible] that which is [illegible], what is that I pray you? Not [illegible] you will [illegible], I am [illegible], but the bloud of Chriſt

Chriſt. If [illegible] that vaine nugation which [illegible] which bloud is ſhedd for you, [illegible]. Is that bloud in the cuppe diverſe from that [illegible] new [illegible] is confirmed? If it bee the ſame, how often was it ſhed? If [illegible] in the [illegible], how holdeth your unbloudy ſacrifice? Or how can you ſay [illegible] in the cuppe, where, by your rule of concomitants, it is not ſeparated from the [illegible] as it was in his paſsion? If it were not ſeparated, as certainely his bloud was not [illegible] from his body, in the ſupper, how can that which was in the cuppe, bee his bloud [illegible] ſhed for us? for the word of ſhedding ſignifyeth ſeparation. Wherefore it [illegible] referred to that in the cuppe, but to his bloud which was ſhed on the croſſe for [illegible] there is a manifeſt Enallage or change of the Tempes. The preſent beeing put for [illegible] ture as it is manifeſt by the other Evangeliſts, where the word of ſhedding, can bee [illegible] red to nothing elſe, but to his bloud ſhedd upon the croſſe: wherefore the Gree[illegible] can here reſolve you of no ambiguity, as in the place you cite, Act, 14. Neither was [illegible] ever any auncient writer that ſtumbled upon this ambiguity, but all with one conſent referre the word of ſhedding to his bloud, and not to the cuppe, or the content thereof, ſo many as ſpeake of it.

Mart. 40. And this is one commoditie among others, that we reape of the Greeke text, to reſolve the ambiguity that is ſometime in the Latine: whereas you neither admit the one nor the other, but as you liſt, neither doeth the Greeke ſatisfie you, be it never ſo plaine and infallible, but you will deviſe that it is corrupted, that there is a ſolœciſme, that the ſame ſolœciſme is an elegancie, and thereupon you tranſlate your owne device, and not the word of God. Which whence can it proceed but of moſt wilfull corruption? See chap 17. num. 10.11.12.

Fulk. 40. This is nothing but generall rayling, and impudent ſlaundering, as in the particular ſections before is proved. For wee neither deviſe that the text is corrupted, to alter anything of the text, no not where it is undoubtedly corrupted, as in the name of Ieremie. Mat. 27. Neither deviſe wee a Solœciſme, when wee admoniſh that there is a Solœcophanes, which of no Papiſt that ever I heard was before obſerved. Neither make wee a Solœciſme to bee an elegancie, when wee ſay againſt them that confound a Solœciſme with Solœcophanes, that Solœcophanes is a figure uſed ſometimes of moſt eloquent writers, neither is it ſtraiteway a vertue of elegancie of ſpeech whatſoever eloquent writers ſometimes have uſed: wherefore wee tranſlate nothing of our owne deviſe, but wee tranſlate the word of God without any wilfull corruption.

Mart. 41. If in ambiguous Hebrew words of doubtfull ſignification, where the Greeke giveth one cer[illegible] ſenſe, you refuſe the Greeke, and take your advantage of the other ſenſe: what is this but wilf[illegible] partialitie? ſo you doe in, Redime Eleemoſynis peccata tua, Dan. 4. and Inclinavi cor meum ad faciendas juſtificationes tuas propter retributionem. And Nimis honorati ſunt amici [illegible] Deus, &c. And yet at another time you follow the determination of the Greeke for ano[illegible] advantage: as Pſal. 19. Adore his footeſtoole, becauſe hee is holy. Whereas in the Hebr[illegible] it may bee as in our Latine, becauſe it is holy. See chap. 13. num. 18. chap. 9. num. 23. [illegible] chap. 18. num. 1. 2. So you flee from the Hebrew to the Greeke, and from this to that a[illegible] from both to the vulgar Latine, as is ſhewed in other places. And as S. Auguſtine ſay[illegible] Fauſtus the Manichee, You are the rule of trueth, whatſoever is for you, is true: whatſ[illegible] is againſt you, is not true.

Fulk. 41. If Hebrew wordes bee ambiguous, wee take that ſenſe which agreeth with othe[illegible] that are plaine, and without all ambiguitie, and this is no partialitie, but wiſedome and love of the trueth: not to ground any new doctrine upon ſuch places onely, where the Hebrew word is ambiguous, and may have diverſe ſignifications. As you doe the redemption of ſinnes by almes, upon that place of Daniel 4. Where you confeſſe that the Hebrew word is ambiguous, and are not able to bring one plaine text for it, where the wordes are not ambiguous. But wee ground our refuſall upon an hundred plaine texts, that aſcribe the whole glory of our ranſome and redemption from ſinnes, to the onely mercy of God. But as well this text, as the other two, that you cite in the Chapters by you quoted, ſhall bee throughly diſcuſſed, to ſee if you have any advantage at our Tranſlatours of the ſame. But on the contrary ſide (you ſay) that at another time wee follow the determination of the Greeke for another advantage, as in that text, Pſalm. 89. Adore his foote-ſtoole, becauſe hee is holy, whereas in the Hebrew it may bee as in your Latine, becauſe it is holy. I anſwer, that wee follow not the determination of the Greeke, as moved by the onely authoritie thereof, for any advantage, but becauſe wee learne our interpretation out of the very Pſalme it ſelfe. For whereas the Prophet [illegible] 5. verſe hath ſayd, Exalt yee the Lord our God, and worſhip at the [illegible] feete, for hee is holy: in the laſt verſe of the ſame, hee repeateth againe the [illegible] e the Lord our God, and worſhip him in his holy hill, for the Lord our . In this verſe for his foote-ſtoole hee placeth the holy hill, which expreſſeth foote-ſtoole was, namely the holy Arke, and for Cadhoſhhu, holy is hee, now Cadoſh Iehovah, holy is the Lord our God, which putteth the other verſe out of ity. Wherefore if wee take teſtimonie of the Greeke, wee fly not to the Greeke the Hebrew, but ſhew that the Hebrew may ſo bee underſtood, having other more ne arguments then the teſtimonie of the Greeke. Againe, it is utterly falſe that ou ſay, (wee fly from both Hebrew and Greeke to the Latine, for wee never fly from the Hebr, but acknowledge it as the fountaine and ſpring, from whence wee muſt receive ible trueth of Gods word, of the olde Teſtament, following the Latine or ſo farre, as they follow the trueth of the Hebrew text, and no farther. As for the of S. Auguſtine to Fauſtus the Manichee; (You are the rule of truth) doeth moſt aptly agree to you Papiſts and to your Pope: for you will not affoord unto the Scriptures ſelves, any authority or certainety of trueth, but upon your approbation and interpretation. Wherefore not onely that which hee ſayth to Fauſtus the Manichee, agreeth aptly to you: whatſoever is for you is true, whatſoever is againſt you, is not true: but that alſo which hee reporteth, Tyconius the Donatiſt ſayd of his ſect (Quod volumus ſanctum eſt, whatſoever we will is holy) you your ſelves take upon you. For no doctrine is good nor holy, though it be proved never ſo plainly out of the holy Scripture, except it be allowed by you for Catholike and holy.

2 קדוש יהוה

What ſhall I ſpeake of the Hebrew particle vau? which (Gen. 14. verſ. 18.) muſt in no caſe bee tranſlated, becauſe, leſt it ſhould proove that Melchiſedeck offered ſacrifice of bread and wine, as all the Fathers expound it: but (Luk. 1. verſ 42.) where they tranſlate the equivalent Greeke particle καὶ, there Beza prooveth the ſayd particle to ſignifie, becauſe, and tranſlateth accordingly, and the Engliſh Bezits likewiſe. I will not urge them why, we like the ſenſe well, and Theophilact ſo expoundeth it. But if the Greeke copulative may be ſo tranſlated, why not the Hebrew copulative much more, which often in the Scripture is uſed in that ſenſe? See chap. 17. num. 13. 14.

Quia benedictus, for & benedictus fructus ventris tui.

42. That the Hebrew particle Vau, is ſometimes to bee taken for a caſuall conjunction, and ſignifyeth, becauſe: no man denyeth: but that it muſt bee taken ſo. Gen. 14. becauſe καὶ is taken ſo, Luk. 1. 42. what reaſon is this? But all the Fathers (ſay you) expounde Melchiſedechs bringing foorth of bread and wine, to bee a ſacrifice. I graunt that many doe, but not all: yet doe not they ground upon the conjunction caſuall, for Cyprian Lib, 2. Epiſt. 3. ad Cacilium readeth thus, Fuit autem ſacerdos, and hee was a Prieſt. So doeth Hierome Epiſt. ad Euagrium, expounding the very Hebrew text, ſay, Et Melchiſedech rex Salem protulit panem et vinum, erat autem ſacerdos Dei excelſi, The word protulit alſo hath Ambroſe, de myſterijs initiand. Auguſtine upon the title of the 33. Pſalme. Cyprian in the Epiſtle before named, and the vulgar Latine hath proferens. Hierome Epiſt. ad Evagrium, ſheweth that the beſt learned of the Hebrews judgement was, that Melchiſedech victori Abraham obviam proceſſerit, et in refectionem, tam ipſius, quam pugnatorum ipſius, panes vinumque protulerit. Melchiſedech came foorth to meete Abraham the Conquerour, and for refection, as well of him, as of his warriours, brought foorth bread and wine. And after many interpretations of the Greeke writers which hee rehearſeth, in the end hee will determine nothing of his owne judgement. The Authour of Scholaſtica hiſtoria. Cap. 64. agreeth with the interpretation of the Hebrewes. At verò Melchiſedech rex Salem obtulit ei panem et vinum: quod (quaſi exponens) Ioſephus ait: miniſtravit exercitui xenia, et multam abundantiam rerum opportunarum ſimul exhibuit, et ſuper epulas benedixit Deum, qui Abrahæ ſubdiderat inimicos. Erat enim ſacerdos Dei altiſſimi. But Melchiſedech king of Salem, offered unto him bread and wine, which Ioſephus (as it were expounding of it) ſayth: hee miniſtred to his army the duties of hoſpitality, " and gave him great plenty of the things neceſſary, and beſide the feaſt, or at the feaſt, hee " bleſſed God, which had ſubdued unto Abraham his enemies: for hee was a Prieſt of the " higheſt God. Therefore not all the Fathers ſo judged of Melchiſedechs bread and wine. But againſt all them that referred the ſame to his Prieſthood, wee oppoſe the Apoſtle to the Hebrews, cap. 7. who ſearching of purpoſe whatſoever was in Melchiſedech, wherein hee reſembled Chriſt, ſo that hee omitted not the interpretation of his name, nor of his city, maketh no mention of his ſacrifice of bread and wine, whereas nothing ſeemeth to have greater reſemblance, then that, which deceived many of the auncient Fathers, but yet was not obſerved of the holy Ghoſt.

RT. 43. But I would aske rather, why κεχαριτωμένη may not in any caſe bee tranſlated, full of grace: whereas ἡλκωμένος is tranſlated, full of ſores. Both wordes beeing of like forme and force. See chap. 18. numb. 4. 5.

Luc. 1. v. 28.
Luc. 16. v. 20.

FULK. 43. The word beeing a participle is beſt tranſlated by a participle for the o if wee had a participle in Engliſh, to ſay ſored or botched, wee but for lacke of a participle, wee are conſtrained to uſe the noune, full of ſores. you, whether you would tranſlate κεχρυσωμένος, full of gold, or gilded all other verbs of that forme, where there is in Engliſh a participle: why ought no wiſe κεχαριτωμένη be tranſlated by the participle?

MART. 44. Againe, why ſay they (Heb. 13.) Let your converſation bee without covetouſn ſay not, Let marriage bee honourable in all, and the bed undefiled; both beeing alike by the Apoſtle, and by way of exhortation, as the reſt that goeth before and foll chap. 15. numb. 15.

FULK. 44. Although the ſenſe were not greatly different, yet the particle δὲ following in th part of the verſe, πόρνους δὲ, &c. but fornicators and adulterers God will judge, ſhew the former part of the verſe is an affirmation, rather then an exhortation. Againe t poſe of the Apoſtle is plaine, to diſwade them from whoredome and adulterie, and not to exhort marryed men to uſe marryage temperately, but for avoyding of whoredome and adultery, which God will puniſh, to ſhew the remedie that God hath provided for mans infirmity, to be honourable and voyd of filthineſſe.

MART. 45. *Are we too ſuſpicious, think you? FULK. 45. Wee thinke you not more ſuſpicious, then malicious. From his feare, may well (for explications ſake) bee tranſlated, from that which hee feared, Heb. 5. verſ. 7. even as hope is ſometimes taken for that which we hope for, as Coloſſ. 1. verſ. 5. Tit. 2 verſ. 13. So may repentance in Beza Act. 26. verſ. 20. ſignify them that repent, as circumciſion often ſignifyeth them that are circumciſed: neither is there any change of the ſenſe, to ſay the fruits worthy of repentance, or the fruits worthy of them that repent, or amend their life. And I pray you, what doeth tradition, 2 Theſſal. 2. & 3. ſignify, but the doctrine delivered? Doeth not the Apoſtle declare what his tradition was, when hee delivereth this doctrine, that if any man will not worke, let him not eate? 2 Theſſ. 3. verſ. 10. The word ναούς, as it is uſed Act. 19. verſ. 24. ſignifyeth neither temples nor ſhrines, but certaine idolatrous coynes, on which was ſtamped the figure of Dianaes temple, more like to your Popiſh ſhrines, t to the Temple of God. Where Idols are tranſlated devotions, I know not, except y meane Act. 17. verſ. 23. where the word is σεβάσματα, which your vulgar Latine Tranſla 2 Theſſal. 2. calleth quod colitur, that which is devoutly worſhipped, and ſo the word ſignifyeth whatſoever is religiouſly worſhipped and adored, and not Idols, as you ſay, nor Simulachra, Images, as your Tranſlatour calleth them Act. 17. For it is derived of σεβάζω, or σεβάζομαι, which ſignifyeth to adore, to worſhip, to honour devoutly, or religiouſly. Every humane creature ſignifyeth in that place, 1 Pet. 2. every magiſtrate, of what creation or ordination ſoever he bee, and ſo is meant by that tranſlation (all ordinances of men) not all lawes of men, which yet were not impious, if you adde the reſtraint, for the Lord, for whom nothing can bee, that is againſt his Law. The reſt of your quarrels bee all anſwered before.

FULK. 46. Theſe ſpeaches are not ſtrange in Gods Church, howſoever they ſound in your eares. So many of them as tranſlate for Sheol, the grave, have their anſwers, ſect. 32. and chap. 7. which is appoynted for that queſtion. The covetous man a worſhipper of Images, ſect. 5. of this chapter, and chap. 3. numb. 13. The laying on of handes of the Eldership, is warranted by the ſignification of the Greeke word πρεσβυτέριον, which ſignifyeth a company of Elders, as it is tranſlated by your owne vulgar Latine Interpreter, Luke 22. verſe 66. Seniores plebis, The Elders of the people: and Act. 22. v. 5. hee calleth πᾶν τὸ πρεσβυτέριον, Omnes majores natu. And for a conſiſtory of Elders, is the word Presbyterium uſed in Latine by Cyprian, lib. 3. epiſt. 11. and lib. 2. epiſt. 8. 10. Of la[illegible]e freely beloved [illegible] ſake late[illegible] ſect. 43. Of the text Gen. 4. v. 7. Sinne lyeth at the doore, &c. ſect. 28. and chap. 10, ſect. 9. of Dan. 4. breake, for redeeme thy ſinnes, ſect. 41.

If Calvin Tit. 3. did wrongly interprete that which is ſpoken of water, to bee meant of the holy Ghoſt, what is that to our tranſlation? But certaine it is, that Calvin never meant to take away the neceſſity of materiall water from the Sacrament of Baptiſme, although hee taught that the want of the externall Sacrament, where it cannot bee had, doth not deprive Gods elect from eternall ſalvation: neither hath Beza any other meaning in his annotation.

MART. 47. I had meant to have but briefely skimmed over theſe things, but multitude of matter maketh me too long, as it chanceth to a man that wadeth through myry and foule places, and yet the greateſt demonſtration that they are wilfull corrupters is behind, which onely I will adde, and for the reſt referre the Reader to the whole booke.

FULK. 47. It is a ſmall ſigne that multitude of matter is cauſe of your length, when you repeate one matter in ſo many ſections. Your ſimilitude of a man wading in foule and myry places, doeth well agree unto you, for you have beene all this while wading in the puddle of your ſlanders, miſpriſions, and falſe accuſations, In which you have ſo bewrayed your ſelfe, as you ſhall not eaſily purge your ſelfe from the myre of them. But becauſe you ſay the greateſt demonſtration that wee are wilfull corrupters is behinde, though it be tedious for us to rake in ſuch a gogmire of your forgeries and falſe accuſations, yet we will take courage, and conſider what mayne demonſtration you can make, to prove us in our Engliſh tranſlations to bee wilfull corrupters.

MART. 48. Doubt you whether they tranſlate of purpoſe and partialitie, in favour of their opinions? You ſhall heare themſelves ſay ſo, and proteſt it. If I dealt with Lutherans, this one teſtimonie of Luther were ſufficient, who being asked why he added onely into the text, Rom. 3. anſwered that he did it to explicate the Apoſtles ſenſe more plainly, that is, to make the Apoſtle ſay as are plainly that faith onely juſtifyeth. And his Diſciple Illyricus diſputeth the matter, that the Apoſtle ſaying, by faith without workes, ſaith indeed, onely faith. But becauſe I deale rather with our Engliſh Calviniſts, and Beza is their chiefe Tranſlatour, and a Captaine among them, whom they profeſſe to follow in the title of the new Teſtament, Anno 1580. and by the very name of their Geneva Bibles, let us ſee what hee ſaith.

Tom. 2. fol. [illegible] edit. Witteb. Anno 1551.

The expreſſe teſtimonies of Beza, (whom the Engliſh hereticall tranſlations follow herein) that hee doeth wilfully and of purpoſe tranſlate againſt ſuch and ſuch Catholike aſſertions.

[illegible]8. I thinke there is no man doubteth, but they tranſlated the Scripture with purpoſe to maintaine their opinions; but whether they have wittingly and wilfully tranſlated falſely, to maintaine any errours, or hereticall opinions, that is the matter in queſtion, and which hath neede of your greateſt demonſtration, to make it apparant. That Luther might rightly interpret the place Rom. 3. of onely faith juſtifying, by the excluding of workes, I have before acknowledged, and Illyricus doeth rightly defend it. But that hee did put in the word (onely) in his tranſlation, which is not in the originall, I will not take upon mee to excuſe, ſeeing the trueth of that doctrine is manifeſt, without that addition: and Luther himſelfe in his latter editions hath reformed it. Againe, what fault ſoever other men have committed in their tranſlation, wee are unjuſtly charged therewith, except wee follow the ſame in ours. That we profeſſe to follow Beza by the very name of our Geneva Bibles, it is a very ridiculous argument. For our Bibles are ſo commonly called, becauſe they were tranſlated and firſt printed at Geneva, not by Beza, who at that time had ſcarce finiſhed his tranſlation of the new Teſtament, and never dealt with Tranſlating of the old, ſo farre as wee know, but by certaine godly and learned Engliſhmen, which lived there in Queene Maries time, to enjoy the liberty of a good conſcience, which they could not have in their owne Countrey.

MART. 49. Firſt, concerning μετανοεῖτε, which the vulgar Latine and Eraſmus tranſlate, Agite poenitentiam, Repent, or Doe penance: This interpretation (ſaith hee) I refuſe for many cauſes, but for this eſpecially, that many ignorant perſons have taken hereby an occaſion of the falſe opinions of SATISFACTION, wherewith the Church is troubled at this day, Loe of purpoſe againſt Satisfaction, he will not tranſlate the Greeke word as it ought to be, and as it is proved to ſignifie, both in this booke, and in the annotations upon the new Teſtament. A little after ſpeaking of the ſame word, he ſaith: Why I have changed the name poenitentia, I have told a little before: * Affirming that he will never uſe thoſe wordes, but reſipiſcere, and reſipiſcentia, that is, amendment of life: becauſe of their hereſie, that repentance is nothing elſe but a meere amendment of former life, without recompence, or ſatiſfaction, or penance, for the ſinnes before committed. See chap. 13.

Matt. 3. v. 2.

FULK. 49. Of purpoſe againſt the hereſie of ſatiſfaction, Beza will not tranſlate the Greeke word as the vulgar Latine Tranſlatour doeth, but yet as the Greeke word ought to be tranſlated: Eraſmus finding the vulgar Latine inſufficient, hath added [illegible] of of your former life. Neither doeth Beza finde fault with the Engliſh word repent, but with the Latine, Agite poenitentiam, when you tranſlate it, doe penance, meaning thereby, payne or ſatiſfaction for ſinnes paſſed, to bee a neceſſary part of true repentance, which is not conteyned in the Greeke word μετανοεῖν, which ſignifyeth changing of the minde, that is not onely a ſorrow for the ſinne paſſed, but alſo a purpoſe of amendment, which is beſt expreſſed by the Latine word Reſipiſcere, which is alwayes taken in the good part, as μετανοεῖν is in the Scripture, whereas the Latine wordes poenitere, and poenitentia are uſed in Latine, of ſorrow or repentance that is too late. As poenitere and poenitentia may bee ſayd of Iudas griefe of minde, which cauſed him to hang himſelfe, but not μετανοεῖν or μετάνοια, or reſipiſcere and reſipiſcentia: and therefore the holy Ghoſt ſpeaking of his ſorrow, uſeth another word, μεταμέλειν, and μεταμέλεια. And this is the cauſe why Beza refuſed the word poenitentia, having a Latine word that more properly doeth expreſſe the Greeke word, as wee might lawfully doe in Engliſh, if wee had another Engliſh word proper to that repentance which is alwayes joyned with fayth, and purpoſe of amendment, for want whereof, wee are conſtrayned to uſe the wordes repent and repentance, which may bee taken in good part, or in evill. For wee ſay repentance too late, and Iudas repented too late, but there is no μετάνοια that can bee called too late. But where you ſay that reſipiſcere and reſipiſcentia, is nothing but amendment of life, and that repentance in our hereſie, is nothing elſe but a meere amendment of former life, you ſpeake untruely; for thoſe wordes doe ſignifie not onely amendment of life, but alſo ſorrow for the ſinnes paſt, although without recompence or ſatiſfaction, which you call penance, for the ſinnes before committed: for wee know no recompence or ſatiſfaction made to God for our ſinnes, but the death of Chriſt, who is the propitiation for our ſinnes, 1 Iohn 1. Neither hath your blaſphemous ſatiſfaction any ground in the Greeke word μετανοεῖν, but onely a fooliſh colour by the Latine tranſlation Agite poenitentiam, which it is like your Latine Interpreter did never dreame of, and therefore hee uſeth the word Reſipiſcere, 2 Tim. 2. of them to whom God ſhould give μετάνοιαν, repentance to the acknowledging of the trueth, et reſipiſcant, and ſo they may repent, or as you tranſlate it, recover themſelves from the ſnare of the Devill. Seeing therefore repentance is the gift of God, it is no recompence or ſatiſfaction made by us to God, to anſwer his juſtice, but an earneſt and true griefe of minde for our tranſgreſſion of Gods Law, and offending againſt his majeſty, with a certaine purpoſe and determination of amendment, ſo neere as God ſhall give us grace. Hitherto therefore wee have no demonſtration of any wilfull corruption, but a declaration of the cauſe that moved Beza to uſe a more exact tranſlation, and ſuch as commeth neerer to the originall word, then that which the vulgar tranſlation hath uſed, upon which, occaſion of a great blaſphemie hath beene taken, and is yet maintained.

MART. 50. Againe, concerning the word Iuſtifications, which in the Scripture very often ſignifie the commandements, he ſayth this: The Greeke Interpreters of the Bible (meaning the Septuaginta) apply this word to ſignify the whole Law of God, and therefore commonly it is wont to be tranſlated word for word, Iuſtificationes: which interpretation therefore onely I rejected, that I might take away this occaſion alſo of cavilling againſt juſtification by fayth, and ſo for Iuſtificationes hee putteth conſtituta, Tullies word forſooth, as hee ſayth. Can you have a more plaine teſtimonie of his hereticall purpoſe?

FULK. 50. Concerning the Greeke word δικαιώμασι, which Beza tranſlateth Conſtitutionibus, conſtitutions, and you confeſſe that in Scripture it doeth very often ſignifie the commandements, hee ſayth firſt, that as the whole Law of God is divided into three parts, Morall, Ceremoniall, and Iudiciall, ſo the Hebrewes have three ſeverall wordes, to expreſſe the ſeverall precepts of thoſe Lawes. For the Hebrew word which ſignifyeth the Ceremoniall precepts, the Greekes uſe to tranſlate δικαιώματα. So the ſenſe is, that Zacharie and Elizabeth were juſt, walking in all the Morall commandements, and obſerving the holy rites and ceremonies, as much as concerned them. But the third word, which ſignifyeth Iudgements, S. Luke doeth not adde, becauſe the exerciſe of Iudiciall caſes did not belong unto them, beeing private perſons. After this hee ſayth, that the Greeke Interpreters of the Bible transferred this word unto the whole Law of God, and eſpecially to the holy ceremonies: ſo verily, exceedingly commending the Law, that it is a certaine rule of all Iuſtice, and therefore men are wont commonly in reſpect of the word, to turne it, Iuſtifications. And this word in this place, Beza indeed confeſſeth that hee refuſed to uſe, for avoyding of cavillations againſt juſtification by fayth, ſeeing hee hath none other word, neither would hee for offence ſeeke any new word, to expreſſe juſtification by fayth, whereas the word δικαιώματα in this text, Luke 1. verſe 6. ſignifyeth not that by which they were made juſt, but the commandements or precepts of God, by walking in which, they were declared to bee juſt. For by the workes of the Law (ſuch as S. Luke here ſpeaketh of) no fleſh ſhall bee juſtifyed before God. Therefore δικαιώματα in this place, muſt have another ſenſe, then juſtifications, namely, commandements, as you ſay it is often taken, or conſtitutions, as Beza calleth them, which before God and the world, are not of ſuch difference, that you ſhould charge him with wilfull corruption, for tranſlating that word conſtitutions, which you confeſſe ſignifyeth very often, commandements, wherefore here appeareth no hereticall purpoſe, except you will ſay, that juſtification by faith, which S. Paul ſo often, ſo diligently, and ſo purpoſedly doeth teach, is an hereſie.

1. Againe, when hee had rejected this tranſlation (Act.2. verſ.27.) Non derelinques animam meam in inferno, Thou ſhalt not leave my ſoule in Hell: becauſe (as hee ſaith) hereupon grew the errours of Chriſts deſcending into Hell, of Limbus, and of Purgatory: at length hee concludeth thus: Whereas the doubtfull interpretation of one or two wordes hath brought foorth ſo many Monſters, I choſe rather * ſimply, for ſoule, to ſay, carcaſſe, for hell, grave; then to foſter theſe foule errours.

* Loe how ſimply Anima, carcaſſe. Infernus, grave.

51. Beza ſheweth, that becauſe the doubtfull interpretation of the Hebrew word Sheol into ᾅδης, which doeth not properly ſignify Hell, but a darke place, ſuch as the pitt is, wherein the dead are put, and of the Poets is taken for hell, had bred ſuch monſters, as Limbus patrum, Purgatory, and Chriſts deſcending into them: therefore hee did plainely tranſlate that verſe, as it is meant, of the rayſing up of Chriſts body out of the grave, which if hee had tranſlated out of Hebrew, as hee did out of Greeke, had not beene offenſive, nor untrue, as I have ſhewed in anſwer to your Preface, Sect. 46. And of this Chapter, Sect. 32. But ſeeing Beza himſelfe, hath altered that tranſlation, and it was never followed of our Engliſh Tranſlatours, what demonſtration is this, that wee are wilfull corrupters of the holy Scriptures?

52. Againe, when hee had tranſlated for, Whom heaven muſt receive, thus, who muſt be contained in heaven: hee ſayth, whereas we have uſed the paſſive kind of ſpeech, rather then the Active (which is in the Greeke:) we did it to avoyd all ambiguity. For it is very expedient, that there ſhouldbe in the Church of God, this perſpicuous teſtimony againſt them, that for aſcending by fayth into heaven, ſo to be joyned to our head, obſtinately maintaine that Chriſt muſt be called againe out of heaven unto us. *Meaning his preſence in the B. Sacrament, and inveighing no leſſe againſt the Lutherans, then the Catholikes, as the * Lutherans doe here againſt him, for this wilfull interpretation, and that by* Calvins owne judgement, who thinketh it a forced tranſlation.

ὃν δεῖ οὐρανὸν δέξασθαι. Act. 3. v. 21.

* Flac. Illyr.

52. True it is, that hee meant concerning the manner of Chriſts preſence in the bleſſed Sacrament, and that ſo hee tranſlated, to exclude the carnall manner of preſence, which the Papiſts have invented: but all this while the tranſlation is true, and warranted by Gregorie Nazianzene, as I have ſhewed before, Sect. 36. of this chapter. For hee that ſayth, Heaven muſt receive Chriſt, (as you doe) cannot deny, except he bee madd, but that Chriſt muſt bee received of Heaven. So that Beza doeth none otherwiſe tranſlate, then you doe, Qui dæmonia habebant, which is actively thus to bee tranſlated, thoſe who had Devills, and you ſay, which were poſſeſt of Devills, that is, were had of Devills. That the Lutherans finde fault with Bezaes tranſlation, it proveth it not to bee falſe, hee hath juſtifyed it ſufficiently in his anſwer to Selneccerus, and the Divines of Iena. Neither doeth Calvine (as you ſay untruely) thinke it a forced tranſlation, but not weighing the ſentence ſufficiently, ſuppoſeth that the wordes are placed ambiguouſly, for that it ſeemeth to bee doubtfull, whether wee ſhould ſay, that Heaven muſt receive Chriſt, or that Chriſt muſt receive Heaven. But if it be once graunted (as it is of you) that Heaven muſt receive Chriſt, there is neither Calvine, nor Illyricus, nor any man that beareth the face, but of a young Grammarian, yea of a reaſonable man, which can deny, that converſion by the paſſive: Chriſt muſt bee received of Heaven. Therefore if you had any reſpect of your credite, with men of underſtanding, you would not for ſhame, rehearſe this quarell ſo often, which hath not ſo much as any colour or ſhew of reaſon to maintaine it, but that you abuſe the names of Illyricus and Calvine, as miſliking it, whoſe arguments by no meanes will ſerve your turne, becauſe that which is denyed by them, or doubtfull to them, is plaine and confeſſed by you.

53. But Beza goeth forward ſtill in this kinde, Rom. 5. verſ. 18. whereas Eraſmus had put propagatum eſt, indifferently both of Adams ſinne which made us truely ſinners, and of Chriſts juſtice, which maketh us truely juſt: hee rejecting it, among other cauſes why it diſpleaſed him, ſaith: That old errour of the Sophiſts (meaning the Catholikes) which for imputative juſtice put an inherent qualitie in the place, is ſo great, and ſo execrable to all good men, that I think nothing is ſo much to bee avoyded as it.

FVLK. 53. A manifeſt ecclipſis, or want of wordes, beeing in that verſe, for which Eraſmus hath put propagatum eſt, which word is ambiguous, and may give occaſion of errour, for men to thinke, that the righteouſneſſe of Chriſt commeth by propagations as the guiltineſſe of Adam doeth: Beza thought good to ſupply the lacke, rather by ſuch wordes as are warranted by the text, verſ. 12. 15. and 16. and can give no occaſion of errour. And therefore thus hee rendreth that verſe, Nempe igitur, ſicut per unam offenſam reatus venit in omnes homines ad condemnationem: ita per unam juſtificationem, beneficium redundavit in omnes homines ad juſtificationem vitæ. Now therefore, as by one offence guiltineſſe came upon all men unto condemnation: ſo by one juſtification, the benefit abounded toward all men unto juſtification of life. In this verſe, theſe wordes, guiltineſſe came, and, the benefit abounded, are added for explication ſake, and are taken out of the verſes going before, in which the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of the ſame matter. Therefore Beza to avoyde occaſion of the hereſie of the Papiſts, of juſtice inherent, among other cauſes which hee rehearſeth, refuſeth that word, by which Eraſmus ſupplyed the text, and uſeth ſuch wordes for that purpoſe, as the Apoſtle himſelfe in the verſes precedent doeth often, for this neceſſary ſupply: which ſeeing it muſt bee made, that there may bee a ſenſe and underſtanding: who can miſlike that it ſhould bee made by the Apoſtles owne wordes? or who can ſuppoſe that the Apoſtle would leave any other wordes to bee underſtood, then ſuch as hee himſelfe had before expreſſed? And as for the hereſie of inherent juſtice, it can have no hold in this verſe, except ſome ſuch word bee added for ſupply, as the Apoſtle never uſed in this caſe. That Chriſts juſtice doeth make us as truely juſt, as Adams ſinne made us truely ſinners, there is no queſtion, but by what meanes wee are made juſt, wee ſay as the Scripture teacheth us to ſpeake, that juſtice is imputed to us through fayth, Rom. 4. The Papiſts ſay it is a qualitie inherent within us, for which wordes and matter, they have no warrant in the holy Scripture.

MART. 54. Theſe few examples prove unto us that the Scriptures tranſlated verbatim, exactly, and according to the propper uſe and ſignification of the words, doe by the Heretikes confeſſion make for the Catholikes, and therefore Beza *ſaith hee altereth the wordes into other: and (I thinke) it may ſuffice any indifferent Reader to judge of his purpoſe and meaning in other places of his tranſlation, and conſequently of theirs, that either allow him, or follow him, which are our Engliſh Calviniſts, and Bezites. Many other ways there are to make moſt certaine proofe of their Wilfulneſſe, as when * the Tranſlation is framed according to their falſe and hereticall commentarie: and when they will avouch their tranſlations out of prophane writers,* Homer, Plutarch, Pliny, Tully, Virgil, and Terence, and reject the Eccleſiaſticall uſe of words in the Scriptures and Fathers: which Beza doeth for the moſt part always. But it were infinite to note all the markes, and by theſe, the wiſe Reader may conceive the reſt.

* Col. & Ti Beza 2.15.

FVLK. 54. Theſe examples proove nothing leſſe. For to runne over them all briefely, the firſt two, wee tranſlate verbatim, A man is juſtifyed by fayth, without the workes of the Law, and repent, and repentance, wee ſay for μετανοεῖν and μετάνοια. What make theſe for Poperie? If Luk. 1. v. 6. wee ſhould call δικαιώματα juſtifications, what ſhould Poperie gaine, but a vaine cavill? when you your ſelves confeſſe, that thoſe juſtifications are often uſed for commandements? Act, 3. verſ. 27. all our Engliſh tranſlations are as you would have them. Thou ſhalt not leave my ſoule in hell, nor ſuffer thine holy one to ſee corruption, by which verſe no deſcent into Limbus, but the reſurrection from death can bee proved. If wee tranſlate as you doe Act. 3. v. 2. 1. whom heaven muſt receive, we will eaſily convince that Chriſt muſt bee received of heaven. In the laſt example the queſtion is not, how the word is to be tranſlated, but by what word the want of the text is to be ſupplyed, which we ſupply not with words of our owne, but with the Apoſtles owne words.

Have you not gained greatly by tranſlating verbatim, exactly, and according to the propper uſe and ſignification of the wordes? I like well that every indifferent Reader may judge by theſe examples, of Bezaes purpoſe in other places of his tranſlation. But you have two other ways, to make certaine proofe of their wilfulneſſe: The firſt is, when the tranſlation is framed according to their hereticall commentarie. A reaſonable man would thinke rather, that the commentarie were framed according to the text, then the text to the commentarie. But to juſtifie the trueth of thoſe tranſlations, for the firſt text you quote, it is handled Sect. 29. of this Chapter, and ſo conſequently cap. 7. The ſecond is anſwered Sect. 46. the other two concerning Tradition Sect. 23. of the preface, and in the chapter following. The ſecond way of proofe is, when they will avouch their tranſlations out of prophane writers. I thinke there is no better way, to know the proper, or diverſe ſignification of wordes, then out of ancient writers, though they bee never ſo prophane who uſed the wordes moſt indifferently, in reſpect of our controverſies, of which they were altogether ignorant. As for the Eccleſiaſticall uſe of wordes in the Scripture, and the Fathers, which Beza (you ſay) doeth for the moſt part reiect, it is untrue: except there bee good and ſufficient cauſe, why hee ſhould ſo doe, warranted by the Scripture it ſelfe, or neceſſary circumſtances of the places, which hee doeth tranſlate. For if the Scripture have uſed a word in one ſignification ſometimes, it is not neceſſary that it ſhould always uſe it in the ſame ſignification, when it is proved by auncient writers that the word hath other ſignifications, more proper to the place, and agreeable to the rule of fayth, which perhaps the uſuall ſignification is not. As for example, the Scripture uſeth very often this word παῖς for a boy, or ſervant. but when the ſame word is applied to our Saviour Christ, in the prayer of the Apoſtle, Act. 4. 27. Who would not rather tranſlate it childe, or ſonne as the word doeth ſometimes, but more ſeldome ſignifie? How the Fathers of the Church have uſed wordes, it is no rule for Tranſlatours of the Scripture to follow, who oftentimes uſed wordes, as the people did then take them, and not as they ſignified in the Apoſtles time. As μετάνοια for a publike teſtification of repentance, which wee call penance: χειροτονία for impoſition of handes, and ſuch like, in which ſenſe theſe wordes were never uſed before the Apoſtles times, and therefore it is not like, that they would beginne a new uſe of them, without ſome manifeſt explication of their meaning, without the which no man could have underſtood them: as they have done in the uſe of theſe wordes πίστις, βάπτισμα, ἐκκλησία, and ſuch like. It is not a fault therefore, prudently to ſeeke even out of prophane writers, what is the propper ſignification of wordes, and how many ſignifications a word may have, and reverently to judge, which is moſt apt for the place to bee tranſlated, and moſt agreeable with the holy Ghoſts meaning in that text: and not always to bee tyed to the uſuall ſignification of wordes, as they are ſometimes taken in the Scripture, and much leſſe as they are uſed of the auncient Fathers.

5. But would you thinke that theſe men could notwithſtanding ſpeake very gravely and honeſtly against voluntary and wilfull tranſlations of Scripture, that ſo notoriouſly therein offend themſelves? Hearken what Beza ſaith againſt Caſtaleo and the like: The matter (ſayth hee) is now come to this poynt that the Tranſlatours of Scripture out of the Greeke into Latine, or into any other tongue, thinke that they may lawfully doe any thing in tranſlating. Whom if a man reprehend, hee ſhall bee anſwered by and by, that they doe the office of a Tranſlatour, not that tranſlateth word for word, but that expreſſeth the ſenſe. So it commeth to paſſe, that whiles every man will rather freely follow his owne judgement, then bee a religious Interpreter of the holy Ghoſt, hee doeth rather pervert many things then tranſlate them. Is not this well ſayd, if he had done accordingly? but doing the cleane contrary, as hath beene proved, hee is a diſſembling hypocrite in ſo ſaying, and a wilfull Heretike in ſo doing, and condemned by his owne judgement.

Annot. act. 10. vers. 46.

K. 55. No wiſe man doubteth, but they could both ſpeake very gravely and avoyde moſt religiouſly all voluntarie, and wilfull tranſlations of Scripture, that might tend to maintaine any errour. And the rather they will bee perſwaded, that Beza hath avoyded that lewde kinde of tranſlation, for which hee reproveth Caſtaleo, when they will ſee, that you ſo malicious an enemie unto him, having ſpent all your invention to ſeeke holes in his tranſlation, can finde nothing but ſuch childiſh cavills, as when they bee diſcovered, men will marveile that you were not aſhamed to move them.

ART. 56. But after this generall view of their wilfull purpoſe and hereticall intention, let us examine their falſe tranſlations more particularly, and argue the caſe with them more at large, and preſſe them to anſwer, whether in their conſcience it bee ſo or no, as hitherto is ſayd: and that by ſeverall Chapters of ſuch Controverſies as their corruptions concerne: and firſt of all (without further curioſity whence to beginne, in caſes ſo indifferent) of Traditions.

FVLK. 56. The more particularly you examine our tranſlations, the freer, I hope, they ſhall bee found from falſehood, and wilfull corruption. And the more at large you argue the caſe, and preſſe us to anſwer, the more you ſhall make the caſe to appeare worſe on your ſide, and the trueth cleerer on our part. And as God is witneſſe of our conſcience and ſinceritie in ſetting foorth his word, without adulteration, or corruption, ſo I appeale to the conſciences of all indifferent Readers whether hitherto you have gotten any advantage againſt us in this whole Chapter, which yet you profeſſe to bee the abridgement, and ſumme of your whole Treatiſe.

CHAP. II.

Hereticall tranſlation of holy Scripture, againſt Apoſtolicall TRADITIONS.

*THis is a matter of ſuch importance, that if they ſhould graunt any Traditions of the Apoſtles, and not pretend the written word onely, they know that by ſuch Traditions mentioned in all antiquity, their Religion were wholly defaced and overthrowne. For remedie whereof, and for the defacing of all ſuch Traditions, they bend their tranſlations againſt them in this wonderfull manner: Whereſoever the holy Scripture ſpeaketh againſt certaine Traditions of the Iewes, partly frivolous, partly repugnant to the Law of God, there all the Engliſh tranſlations follow the Greeke exactly, never omitting this word Tradition. Contrarywiſe, whereſoever the holy Scripture ſpeaketh in the commendation of Traditions, to wit, ſuch Traditions as the Apoſtle delivered to the Church, there all their ſaid tranſlations agree not to follow the Greeke, which is ſtill the ſelfe ſame word, but for Traditions, they tranſlate ordinances or inſtructions. Why ſo, and to what purpoſe? Wee appeale to the Warrant of their conſcience, which continually accuſeth them of an hereticall meaning, whether by urging the word Traditions whereſoever they are diſcommended, and by ſuppreſſing the word whereſoever they are commended, their purpoſe and intent bee not to ſignifie to the Reader, that all Traditions are naught, and none good; all reproveable, none allowable.

FVLKE.

TRaditions indeed is a matter of ſuch importance, as if you may bee allowed whatſoever you will thruſt upon us under the name of unwritten Traditions, the written word of God ſhall ſerve to no purpoſe at all. For firſt, as you plainely profeſſe, the holy Scripture ſhall not bee accounted ſufficient to teach all trueth neceſſary to ſalvation, that the man of God may bee perfect, prepared to all good workes. Secondly, with the Valentinian Heretikes, you accuſe the Scriptures of uncertaine underſtanding without your Traditions, under pretence of which, you will bring in what you liſt, though it bee never ſo contrary to the holy Scriptures plaine wordes, by colour of interpretation, as you doe the worſhipping of Images, and many other like hereſies. As for the mention that is made of Apoſtolicall Traditions in diverſe of the auncient Fathers, ſome of them are ſuch as you your ſelves obſerve not, and not for the tenth part of thoſe that you obſerve, can you bring any teſtimonie out of the auncient Fathers, as is proved ſufficiently by ſo many propoſitions as were ſet downe by the Biſhop of Sariſburie M. Iewell, whereof you can bring no proofe for any one to have beene taught within five hundred yeares after Chriſt. Now concerning the Traditions of the Apoſtles, what they were, who can bee a better witneſſe unto us then Ignatius the diſciple of the Apoſtles, of whom Euſebius writeth, that when hee was led towards Rome, where hee ſuffered Martyrdome, hee earneſtly exhorted the Churches by which hee paſſed, to continue in the faith, and againſt all hereſies which even then beganne to budde up, hee charged them to retaine faſt the Tradition of the Apoſtles, which by that time hee proteſted to bee committed to writing: for by that time were all the bookes of the new Teſtament written. The wordes of Euſebius concerning this matter are, li.3.c.35. [illegible] ἐγγράφως ἤδη μαρτυρόμενος, [illegible] διατυποῦσθαι ἀναγκαῖον ἡγεῖτο. And hee exhorted them ſtraightly to keepe the Tradition of the Apoſtles, which teſtifying that it was now for aſſurance committed to writing, hee thought neceſſary to bee plainely taught. Againſt this Tradition of the Apoſtles, which for certainety and aſſurance is contained in their holy and undoubted writings, wee ſay nothing, but ſtrive altogether for it. But becauſe the word Traditions is by you Papiſts taken to ſignifie a doctrine ſecretly delivered by word of mouth, without authoritie of the holy Scriptures, wee doe willingly avoyde the word in our tranſlations, where the ſimple might bee deceived, to thinke that the holy Ghoſt did ever commend any ſuch to the Church, which hee would not have to bee committed to writing in the holy Scriptures: and in ſteade of that word ſo commonly taken, although it doth not neceſſarily ſignifie any ſuch matters, wee doe uſe ſuch wordes, as doe truely expreſſe the Apoſtles meaning, and the Greeke word doeth alſo ſignifie. Therefore wee uſe the wordes of ordinances, or inſtructions, or inſtitutions, or the doctrine delivered, all which beeing of one ſenſe, the Greeke word παραδόσεις doeth ſignifie, and the ſame doeth tradition ſignifie, if it bee rightly underſtood: but ſeeing it hath beene commonly taken, and is urged of the Papiſts to ſignifie onely a doctrine delivered beſide the word of God written, in ſuch places where the holy Ghoſt uſeth the Greeke word παραδόσεις in that ſenſe, wee tranſlate by that word (tradition) where hee uſeth it for ſuch doctrine as is grounded upon the holy Scriptures, our Tranſlatours have avoyded it, not of any hereticall meaning, that all [illegible] (traditions) are naught, but that all ſuch as have not the holy Scripture to teſtifie of them, and to warrant them, are evill, and to bee avoyded of all true Chriſtians, which cannot without blaſphemie acknowledge any imperfection in the holy Scriptures of God, which are able to make a man wiſe unto ſalvation, if they ſhould think any doctrine neceſſary to ſalvation not to bee contained therein.

Mart. 2. For example, Matt. 15. thus they tranſlate; Why doe thy Diſciples tranſgreſſe the TRADITION of the Elders? And againe; Why doe you alſo tranſgreſſe the commandement of God by your TRADITION? And againe; Thus have you made the commandement of God of none effect by your TRADITION. Here (I warrant you) all the bells ſound Tradition, and the word is never omitted, and it is very well and honeſtly tranſlated, for ſo the Greeke word doeth properly ſignifie. But now on the other ſide, concerning good Traditions, let us ſee their dealing. The Apoſtle by the ſelfe ſame word both in Greeke and Latine, ſayth thus; Therefore, brethren, ſtand and holde faſt the TRADITIONS which you have learned either by word, or by our Epiſtle. And againe; Withdraw your ſelves from every brother walking inordinately, and not according to the TRADITION which they have received of us. And againe, according to the Greeke which they profeſſe to follow; I prayſe you brethren, that in all things you are mindefull of mee, and as I have delivered unto you, you keepe my TRADITIONS.

2 Theſ 2.v.15. παραδόσεις, traditiones.
2 Theſſ.3.6.
1 Cor.15.2 καθὼς παρέδωκα, τὰς παραδόσεις κατέχετε.

Fulk. 2. No marveile though you cannot abide the bells ſounding againſt mans Traditions, which ſounding muſt needes trouble your conſcience more then it offendeth your eares, ſeeing you know that many of thoſe things which you defend under the name of Traditions, againſt holy Scriptures, have not God for their Authour, which forbiddeth to bee worſhipped in ſuch ſort, but man, or rather Sathan, which hath inſpired ſuch things unto men, thereby to diſhonour God, and to diſcredite his holy and moſt certaine written word. Yet you ſay it is well and honeſtly tranſlated: God knoweth how faine you would there were no ſuch text extant in the Goſpell againſt your ſuperſtition and will-worſhipping. But now let us ſee our craftie dealing (as you count it) againſt good Traditions. In the firſt text, 2 Theſſal. 2. verſ. 15. you may ſee your underſtanding of Traditions quite overthrowne; for the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of ſuch Traditions as were delivered to them partly by preaching, and partly by his Epiſtle. Therefore Tradition doeth not ſignifie a doctrine delivered by word of mouth onely. But yet you will ſay it ſignifyeth here a doctrine delivered by word of mouth alſo, which is not written. How prove you that? Becauſe all that the Apoſtle preached was not contained in his Epiſtles to the Theſſalonians, therefore was it no where written in the Scriptures? What the Tradition was in the ſecond text, 2 Theſſal. 3. v. 6. is expreſſed by and by after, That hee which will not labour, muſt not eate. Was this doctrine never written before? When God commandeth every man to labour in his vocation. As for the third place, 1 Cor. 11. 2. your owne vulgar Latine Tranſlatour both teacheth us how to tranſlate it, and alſo dischargeth our tranſlation of hereſie and corruption, for hee calleth παραδόσεις in that place præcepta, præcepts, or inſtructions, or commaundements, or ordinances; I ſee no great difference in theſe words: by which his tranſlation hee ſheweth, that in the other places, 2 Theſſ. 2. & 3. hee meaneth the ſame thing by Traditiones, Traditions, that wee doe by ordinances or inſtructions, and might as well have uſed the word præcepta in thoſe two places, as hee did in this one, if it had pleaſed him.

Mart. 3. Here wee ſee plaine mention of S. Pauls Traditions, and conſequently of Apoſtolicall Traditions, yea and Traditions by word of mouth, delivered to the ſayd Churches without writing or Scripture. In all which places looke (gentle reader) and ſeeke all their Engliſh tranſlations, and thou ſhalt not once finde the word* Tradition, but in ſtead thereof, ordinances, inſtructions, preachings, inſtitutions, and any word elſe rather then Tradition: inſomuch that Beza their maſter tranſlateth it traditam doctrinam, the doctrine delivered, putting the ſingular number for the plurall, and adding (doctrine) of his owne; ſo framing the text of holy Scripture according to his falſe commentarie; or rather putting his commentarie in the text, and making it the text of Scripture. Who would thinke their malice and partialitie againſt Traditions were ſo great,

* Yet M. Fulke ſayth, it is found there, p.153. againſt D.Saunders Rocke. If hee give not us an inſtance, let him give himſelfe the lie.
2 Theſſ.& 3. παραδόσεις.

[illegible] that they ſhould all agree with one conſent ſo duly and exactly in theſe and theſe places to [illegible], which in other places doe ſo gladly uſe it, the Greeke word being all one in all the ſaid places?

Fulk. 3. There is no queſtion but the Apoſtles by word of mouth, that is, by preaching and teaching, delivered the doctrine of the Goſpell to the Churches; but that they preached, taught, or delivered any doctrine, as neceſſary to ſalvation, which they prooved not out of the holy Scriptures, and which is not contained in the new Teſtament or the old, this is not yet proved, neither ever can it bee proved. Such matters of ceremonies, order, and diſcipline, which are mutable, no man denies, but they might and did deliver, but yet in them nothing but agreeable to the generall rules ſet downe in the Scripture. But in all theſe places the word Tradition cannot once bee found. Yet M. Fulke ſaith it is found. Who doth? Where ſaith hee ſo? You anſwer, pag. 153. againſt D. Saunders Rocke: therefore if hee give not an inſtance, let him give himſelfe the lie. But hee that chargeth Fulke to ſay it is found, lieth the more: for ſo he ſaith not; reade the place who will. Hee ſpeaketh againſt Saunder, who affirmed that the very name of Tradition uſed in the better part, cannot bee ſuffered to bee in the Engliſh Bible; as though there were ſome decree of the Synod, or Act of Parliament againſt it, and ſaith, it may bee and is ſuffered in that ſenſe which the holy Ghoſt uſeth it, but not to bring prayer for the dead, or any thing contrary to the Scripture under the name of Traditions Apoſtolike. By which words I meane, that there is no prohibition or edict to the contrary, but if any man will uſe the word Tradition in tranſlation of the Bible, hee is permitted ſo to doe, I doe not affirme it is ſo found. But as if I ſhould ſay, The Papiſts in England are ſuffered to live as becommeth good ſubjects, I affirme not that they are, or ſhall bee found ſo to live. But to omit this fooliſh quarrell, Beza our Maſter is ſaid to have tranſlated παραδόσεις the doctrine delivered, putting the ſingular number for the plurall, and adding (doctrine) of his owne. What an hainous matter here is. The word doctrine is a collective, comprehending many precepts or traditions, and in the next chapter the Apoſtle uſeth the ſame word in the ſingular number. Againe, 1 Theſſ. 4. v. 2. he calleth the ſame παραγγελίας, precepts or documents, which word ſignifieth the ſame that παραδόσεις, witneſſe your vulgar Latine Tranſlator, which gives one word for both, præcepta, 1 Cor. 11. & 1 Theſſ. 4. And that the word doctrine is added to the text, it is a fond cavill: for the word doctrine is contained in παράδοσις, which ſignifieth a deliverie, but whereof, if not of doctrine? Our Saviour Chriſt alſo, Matth. 15. v. 9. by the teſtimonie of Eſay, reproveth the Tradition of the Phariſees, teaching the doctrines, precepts of men, which teſtimonie of Eſay could take no hold of them, if Traditions were not doctrines and precepts. So that in this tranſlation of Beza (cry out as loud as you can) there is neither fraud nor corruption, malice nor partialitie, but a prudent declining of that tearme, which might give occaſion of error, and the Apoſtles meaning truely and faithfully delivered. To ſhew that one word may bee diverſly tranſlated, eſpecially when it ſignifieth divers things, to wiſe men is needleſſe. I have ſaid before, you your ſelues tranſlate, or elſe you ſhould bee taken for mad men, the Latine word Tradere (of which Tradition is derived) ſometimes to deliver, ſometimes to betray, and yet the Greeke and Latine word being all one in all the ſaid places.

Mart. 4. Yea they doe elſewhere ſo gladly uſe this word Tradition, when it may tend to the diſcredit thereof, that they put the ſaid word in all their Engliſh Bibles, with the like full conſent as before, when it is not in the Greeke at all: As when they tranſlate thus, If yee bee dead with Chriſt from the rudiments of the world, why as though living in the world, ARE YE LEAD WITH TRADITIONS? And as another Engliſh tranſlation of theirs rendeth more heretically,* Why are yee burdened with Traditions? Tell us ſincerely, you that profeſſe to have skill in the Greeke, and to tranſlate according to the Greeke, tell us wee beſeech you, whether this Greeke word δόγμα doe ſignifie Traditions, and δογματίζεσθε, to bee lead or burdened with Traditions. You cannot bee ignorant that it doth not ſo ſignifie, but as a little before in the ſame chapter, and in other places, your ſelues tranſlate, δόγματα, ordinances, decrees; ſo τί δογματίζεσθε, muſt bee (as in the vulgar Latine it is) Quid decernitis? Why doe you ordaine or decree? or, why are you lead with decrees?

* Of the yeere 1579.
Col.2.14. Epheſ.2.15. δόγμασιν. τοῖς δόγμασιν.

Fulk. 4. It grieveth you that Tradition ſhould bee mentioned ſo often in the ill part as it is. And it ſeemeth you would defend the Coloſſians againſt S. Paul, who reproveth them becauſe they were led with ordinances, according to the precepts and doctrines of men. But you ſeeme to make light of ſuch Traditions, and therefore you count that the more hereticall tranſlation, which ſaith, why are you burdened with Traditions? Wherefore (I pray you) is that more hereticall? Doe you not thinke that ſuch Traditions, as are the commandements and doctrines of men, are burdenous to mens conſciences?

enceſ? But they that haue ſkill in the Greeke tongue muſt tell you ſincerely, whether this word δόγμα doe ſignifie tradition, and δογματίζεσθαι to bee lead or burdened with traditions. I anſwere you, if δόγματα (as you confeſſe) ſignifie ordinances and decrees, or doctrines, and the word tradition ſignifieth the ſame, why ſhould not δογματίζεσθαι ſignifie to bee lead or burdened with traditions, as well as with ordinances, cuſtomes, or decrees? Theſe words differ much in ſound, but not greatly in ſignification. Dogmata Pythagorea, that might never bee put in writing, what were they but the traditions of Pythagoras? Such were the Philoſophicall decrees called δόγματα, whereof Tully ſpeaketh in his booke de finibus, which were dictata, taught by word of mouth, which to ſet foorth, among them was counted an haynous offence: might not thoſe rightly bee called Traditions?

MART.5. Iuſtifie your tranſlation if you can, either out of Scriptures, Fathers, or Lexicon: and make us a good reaſon why you put the word traditions here, where it is not in the Greeke; and would not put it in the places before, where you know it is moſt evidently in the Greeke. Yea you muſt tell us, why you tranſlate for tradition, ordinance; and contrary for ordinance, tradition; ſo turning cat in pan (as they ſay) at your pleaſure; and wreſting both the one and the other to one end, that you may make the very name of Traditions odious among the people, be they never ſo authenticall, even from the Apoſtles; which your conſcience knoweth; and you ſhall anſwer for it at the dreadfull day.

FVLK.5. Firſt out of Scripture I juſtifie it thus: Thoſe dogmata againſt which the Apoſtle writeth, were according to the precepts and doctrines of men: but ſuch the Scripture calleth traditions, *Math.*15. Therefore theſe were traditions. Secondly, out of the Fathers: Chryſoſtome upon this place ſaith, Traditiones Græcorum taxat, hee reproveth the traditions of the Greekes, ſaying all is but a humane doctrine. Second, Saint Ambroſe upon this text: Loue not the world, ſaith hee, nor thoſe errours quos humana adinvenit traditio, which the tradition of men hath invented. And afterward: Sagina enim carnalis ſenſus humana traditio eſt: For the tradition of man is the pampering of carnall ſenſe, by which hee ſaith men are ſo burdened, that they cannot bee joyned to the head which is aboue. Yet burdening with traditions is called of you the more hereticall tranſlation. Say as much to Ambroſe, that hee maketh an hereticall commentarie. The Interpreter of Theodoret, printed at Collen 1573. hath tranſlated in the very text, for δογματίζεσθε, traditiones hominum, traditions of men. You ſee now this matter is not ſo void of teſtimonie of the Fathers, as you ſuppoſed. The reaſon you require us to make, is made often before. Wee thought it not meet to expreſſe the Greeke word in both places by the ſame Engliſh word, becauſe the Engliſh word as it [illegible]ed by you, is not ſo indifferent to ſignifie the doctrine of God delivered out of the Scriptures, as to ſignifie doctrines of men diviſed beſide the Scriptures. If wee muſt anſwer why wee call tradition ordinance, and ordinance tradition; let your vulgar Latine Interpreter anſwer us, or you for him, why hee calleth tradition precept, and uſage or precept, tradition. The one hee doth, 1 Cor. 11. *v.*2. the other *Act.*6. *v.*14. where the Greeke is ἔθη, ſignifying there precepts or obſervations commanded, hee tranſlateth traditiones, as in the other place the Greeke being παραδόσεις, hee tranſlateth præcepta. If this bee lawfull for him, why ſhould it bee counted corruption or falſe tranſlation in us? ſeeing wee are moved with as good reaſon as can bee yeelded for him. As for authenticall and Apoſtolicall Traditions, that are grounded upon the doctrine of the Apoſtles expreſſed in their writings, wee ſhall bee ready to receiue them whenſoever they ſhall bee brought forth. If they cannot bee proved by the Scriptures, which are written that wee might beleeue, and beleeving haue eternall life, and which are able to make us wiſe unto ſalvation, wee haue nothing to doe with them, wee may well ſpare them, nay wee dare not admit them, leſt wee ſhould anſwer for blaſphemie againſt the holy Scriptures, in that dreadfull day, if by admitting of ſuch traditions, wee ſhould profeſſe, that the doctrine contained in the holy Scriptures is unperfect or inſufficient to ſalvation.

MART.6. Somewhat more excuſable it is, but yet proceeding of the ſame hereticall humour, and on your part (that ſhould exactly follow the Greeke) falſly tranſlated, when you tranſlate in Saint Peters Epiſtle thus: You were not redeemed with corruptible things from your vaine converſation received by the tradition of the Fathers: where the Greeke is thus rather to bee tranſlated, from your vaine converſation delivered by the Fathers: But your fingers itched to foiſt in the word tradition, and for delivered, to ſay received, becauſe it is the phraſe of the Catholike Church, that it hath received many things by tradition, which you would here controll by likeneſſe of words in this falſe tranſlation.

ἐκ τῆς ματαίας ὑμῶν ἀναστροφῆς πατροπαραδότου.

FVLK.6. I marvell why you ſhould count it an hereticall humour, to uſe the word tradition alſo in the evill part, which the holy Ghoſt ſo uſeth, and your owne vulgar Tranſlator alſo: but but that you are more partiall in allowing the traditions of men, then wee in avoiding the tearme ſometimes, onely for doubt that traditions of men ſhould creepe into the place of Gods commandements. But how is it falſly tranſlated on our part, that profeſſe to follow the Greeke, which is truely tranſlated in your vulgar Latine text, which profeſſeth to tranſlate the Greeke, as well as wee? belike becauſe wee ſay, received by the tradition of the fathers, which according to the Greeke ſhould bee, delivered by the fathers, but that our fingers itched to foyſt in the word tradition. What I pray you? hath your vulgar tranſlator foyſted in that word? did his fingers itch againſt ſuch Catholike phraſes, that hee would controule them by a falſe tranſlation? doe you not perceiue that while you raile upon us, you revile your owne vulgar Latine tranſlation, which hath the ſame word tradition, for which you ſtorme againſt us? But for, delivered, wee haue ſaid, received. See whither frowardneſſe driveth you, the Apoſtle ſaith, they were delivered from the vaine converſation of their fathers tradition. Doe you then underſtand, that it was delivered by the fathers, but not received by their ſonnes? Certainely they were delivered from that vaine converſation which they had received. For receiving doth neceſſarily import delivering. And becauſe you called for a Lexicon in the next Section before, Scapula will teach you, that πατροπαράδοτος doth ſignifie, as indifferently, à patre, traditus, as à patre acceptus, delivered by the father, and received by the father. What wrangling then is this, about the Moone ſhine in the water, to cry out falſe tranſlation, foyſting, itching fingers, and I know not what?

MART.7. But concerning the word tradition, you will ſay perhaps the ſenſe thereof is included in the Greeke word, delivered. Wee grant. But would you bee content, if wee ſhould alwayes expreſly adde, tradition, where it is ſo included? then ſhould wee ſay 1 Cor.11.2. I pray you that as I haue delivered you (by tradition) you keepe my precepts or traditions. *And againe v.*23. For I received of our Lord, which alſo I delivered unto you (by tradition) &c. And Luc.1.v.2. As they (by tradition) delivered unto us, which from the beginning ſaw &c. And ſuch like, by your example, wee ſhould tranſlate in this ſort. But wee uſe not this licentious manner in tranſlating holy Scriptures, neither is it a tranſlators part, but an interpreters, and his that maketh a commentarie: neither doth a good cauſe neede other tranſlation than the expreſſe text of the Scripture giveth.

Tradit. παραδόσεις.

FVLK.7. Wee will ſay it is contained in the Greeke word πατροπαραδότου which ſignifieth received by tradition or deliverie from the Fathers, and not in the verbe παραδίδωμι which ſignifieth otherwiſe many times, than ſimply to deliver, and when it ſignifieth to deliver, it doth not alway ſignifie to deliver by word of mouth, without writing, as you underſtand tradition: but as well by writing, as by preaching. As when S. Paul ſaith, I received of the Lord, that which I delivered unto you, ſpeaking of the inſtitution of the Supper, hee meaneth that which the Evangeliſts had written, and hee himſelfe doth write. So 2 *Theſſ.*2. when hee willeth them to hold the traditions; which they had learned of him, hee ſpeaketh not onely of ſuch as they learned by his preaching: but ſuch alſo as they learned by his Epiſtle. Wherefore if you ſhould expreſly adde the word tradition in your partiall ſignification, whereſoever you finde the word delivered, you ſhould not onely tranſlate ridiculouſly, but alſo heretically and falſly. Words in derivation and compoſition, doe not alwayes ſignifie according to their primitiue.

MART.8. And if you will yet ſay, that our vulgar Latine tranſlation hath here the word, tradition: *wee grant it hath ſo, and therefore wee alſo tranſlate accordingly. But you profeſſe to tranſlate the Greeke, and not the vulgar Latine, which you in England condemne as Papiſticall, and * ſay it is the worſt of all, though * Beza your Maſter pronounce it to bee the very beſt: and will you notwithſtanding follow the ſaid vulgar Latine, rather than the Greeke, to make traditions odious? Yea ſuch is your partialitie one way, and inconſtancie another way, that for your hereticall purpoſe you are content to follow the old Latine tranſlation, though it differ from the Greeke, and againe another time you will not follow it, though it bee all one with the Greeke moſt exactly, as in the place before alledged, where the vulgar Latine tranſlation hath nothing of tradition, but* Quid decernitis, as it is in the Greeke: you tranſlate, Why are yee burdened with traditions?

fat. in nouum Teſt.1556.

FVLK.8. You may bee ſure wee will ſay, that wee know to bee true, and ſufficient to diſcharge our tranſlation from your fooliſh and malicious quarrelling. But wee profeſſe (you ſay) to tranſlate the Greeke, and not the vulgar Latine. And I pray you, what doth your vulgar Latine Interpreter profeſſe to tranſlate, but the Greeke? If hee then tranſlating out of Greeke, could finde tradition in the Greeke word, why ſhould not wee finde the ſame, eſpecially being admoniſhed by him: who if hee tranſlated truely, why are wee blamed for doing as hee did: if his tranſlation bee falſe, why is it allowed as the onely authenticall text. Wee follow not therefore the Latine tranſlation, but joyne with it whereſoever it followeth the Greeke, as wee doe in ten thouſand places more than this, and willingly depart not from it, but where it departeth from the Greeke, or elſe uſeth ſuch words as would bee offenſiue, if they were tranſlated into Engliſh, or occaſion of errour, as you doe likewiſe, when you depart from the proper and uſuall ſignification of words, which your Latine tranſlator uſeth: as when you call fænerator, a creditor, which ſignifieth an Vſurer, Luk.7. Stabulum, an Inne, and ſtabularius, an hoſt, Luc. 10. Vna Sabathi, the firſt of the Sabbaoth, Iohn 2. Eccleſia, the aſſembly, Act.7. Baptiſmata, waſhings, Marc. 7. and ſuch like. But wee in England (you ſay) condemne the Latine tranſlation, as papiſticall. Wee accuſe it as not true, in many places, and wee ſay it is the worſt of all, though Beza, our Maſter, pronounce it to bee the very beſt. This toucheth mee ſomewhat, for in the margent is noted Diſcoverie of the Rocke, pag. 147. where in deede ſpeaking of the Hebrew text, of the old Teſtament, and the Greeke of the new, the Greeke tranſlation of the Septuaginta, and the common Latine tranſlation, I ſay the Tridentine Councell alloweth none for authenticall but the common Latine tranſlation, that is, the worſt of all. Now what ſaith Beza contrary to this? ſpeaking of the divers Latine tranſlations of the new Teſtament onely, hee ſaith of the vulgar Latine, that hee followeth it for the moſt part, and preferreth it before all the reſt, maxima ex parte amplector & cæteris omnibus antepono. So that I ſpeake of the whole Bible, Beza of the new Teſtament onely. I ſpeake of the vulgar Latine text, in compariſon of the originall Hebrew and Greeke, and the Septuagintaes tranſlation: Beza of the Latine tranſlation of the new Teſtament, in compariſon of all other Latine tranſlations, that were before him, as Eraſmus, Caſtallion, and ſuch like. According to your olde manner therefore, you rehearſe out of my writings, either falſifying the words, or perverting the meaning. Theſe things conſidered, you haue no cauſe to accuſe us of partialitie and inconſtancie, for following, or leauing your Latine text, which wee never did but upon good ground, and reaſon ſufficient.

MART. 9. So that a blinde man may ſee, you frame your tranſlations to bolſter your errours and hereſies, without all reſpect of following ſincerely either the Greeke or the Latine. But for the Latine no marvell, the Greeke at the leaſt, why doe you not follow? Is it the Greeke that induceth you to ſay ordinances for traditions, traditions for decrees, ordinances for iuſtifications, Elder for Prieſt, graue for hell, image for idoll? tell us before God, and in your conſcience, whether it be, becauſe you will exactly follow the Greeke: nay tell us truely, and ſhame the Devill, whether the Greeke words doe not ſound, and ſignifie moſt properly that, which you of purpoſe will not tranſlate, for diſadvantaging your hereſies? And firſt let us ſee concerning the queſtion of Images.

FVLK. 9. A blinde man may ſee, that you cavill, and ſlaunder, quarrell and raile, without reſpect either of conſcience towards God, or honeſty toward the world: in ſo much, that moſt commonly, you forget the credit of your owne vulgar Latine tranſlation, ſo you may haue a colour to finde fault with ours. And yet againe you aſke, whether it be the Greeke, which induceth us to ſay, for παραδόσεις ordinances, and for δόγματα, traditions, &c. I tell you, the Greeke alloweth us ſo to ſay, which is ſufficient, when other godly cauſes moue us beſide, ſo to tranſlate. Is it the Latine that induceth you to ſay, for an Vſurer, a Creditor: for a ſtable, an Inne? for, what was done, what was chaunced: for, faſtening to, crucifying: for, bee you ſaved, ſaue your ſelues: for creature, creation: for, confeſſed, promiſed: for a boate, a ſhippe: for a ſhippe, a boate: for ſinging, piping: for hay, graſſe: for refection, refectorie: for fooliſhneſſe, madneſſe: for an image, an Idoll, &c. I blame not all theſe as falſe tranſlations, yet every man may ſee, they are neither uſuall, nor proper: yet as for ſome of theſe (though not for all) I know you may giue good reaſon, ſo may wee, for any ſhew of alteration, or departing from the uſuall ſignification of the Greeke word, that you are able to alledge againſt us.

CHAP. III.

Hereticall tranſlation againſt ſacred IMAGES.

I Beſeech you, what is the next and readieſt, and moſt proper Engliſh of Idolum, idololatra, idololatria? is it not idoll, Idolater, Idolatrie? are not theſe plaine Engliſh words, and well knowen in our language? VVhy ſought you further for other tearmes and words, if you had meant faithfully? What needed that circumſtance of three words for one, Worſhipper of Images, and, worſhipping of Images? whether (I pray) is the more naturall and convenient ſpeech, either in our Engliſh tongue, or for the truth of the thing, to ſay as the holy Scripture doth, Covetouſneſſe is idolatrie, and conſequently, The covetous man is an Idolater: or as you tranſlate, Covetouſneſſe is worſhipping of Images, and, The covetous man is a worſhipper of images.

εἴδωλον. εἰδωλολάτρης. εἰδωλολατρεία. Bib 1577. Eph. 5. Col. 3.

FVLKE.

IF you aske for the readieſt and moſt proper Engliſh of theſe words, I muſt needes anſwere you, an image, a worſhipper of images, and worſhipping of images, as we haue ſometimes tranſlated. The other, that you would haue, Idoll, Idolater, and idolatrie, bee rather Greekiſh than Engliſh words: which though they bee uſed of many Engliſh men, yet are they not underſtood of all, as the other bee. And therefore I ſay, the more naturall, and convenient ſpeech for our Engliſh tongue, and as convenient for the truth of the thing it is to ſay, covetouſneſſe is the worſhipping of images, and the covetous man is a worſhipper of images: as to ſay covetouſneſſe is idolatrie, and the covetous man is an Idolater, as I haue proved before. Seeing Idolum by your owne interpreter is called Simulachrum, and Simulachrum ſignifieth as much as Imago an Image, Cap. 1. numb. 5.

MART. 2. Wee ſay commonly in Engliſh, Such a rich man maketh his money his God: and the Apoſtle ſaith in like manner of ſome, Whoſe belly is their God, Phil. 3. and generally every creature is our idoll, when wee eſteeme it ſo exceedingly that wee make it our God. But who ever heard in Engliſh, that our money, or belly, were our images, and that by eſteeming of them too much, we become worſhippers of Images? Among your ſelues are there not ſome even of your Superintendents, of whom the Apoſtle ſpeaketh, that make an idoll of their money and belly by covetouſnes and belly cheere? Yet can wee not call you therefore in any true ſenſe, worſhippers of images, neither would you abide it. You ſee then that there is a great difference betwixt Idoll & image, idolatrie and worſhipping of images: and even ſo great difference is there betwixt Saint Pauls words and your tranſlation.

FVLK. 2. Before you can ſhew that abſurditie of this tranſlation, a covetous man is a worſhipper of images, you muſt defend your owne vulgar Latine tranſlation, which calleth εἰδωλολατρεία ſimulachrorum ſervitus, which I haue proved to ſignifie the ſeruing or worſhipping of images, cap. 1. numb. 5. Now to our Engliſh phraſe, a rich man maketh his money his God, a Glutton his belly, and ſo of other Creatures honoured aboue meaſure. I ſay the worſhipping of Images may bee after two ſorts, either when they are worſhipped as gods, (as among the groſſer ſort of the Gentiles and Papiſts) and then it is againſt the firſt commaundement, Thou ſhalt haue none other gods but mee: or elſe when men pretend to worſhippe God by them, as the Iſraelites did in the Calfe, Exod. 32. and in Ieroboams calues, and in the brazen Serpent, as the wiſer ſort of the Gentiles and Papiſts pretend to doe in worſhipping their images: and then it is a ſinne againſt the ſecond commaundement. Thou ſhalt make to thy ſelfe no graven images, Thou ſhalt not fall downe to them nor worſhip them. By ſimilitude therefore of them that truſted in images as their gods, and ſo honoured them, which were not able to helpe them, the Apoſtle calleth the covetous man a worſhipper of images, and covetouſneſſe worſhipping of images: and not properly: but becauſe their money is the ſame occaſion of departing from God, that the images was to the worſhipper of them. So if we will ſpeake unproperly, as the Apoſtle ſaith, their bellie is their God, wee may ſay, it is their Idoll, or their image, which they worſhippe as God: not that the bellie, or any ſuch thing is God, or an idoll, or an image properly, but that it is ſo tearmed, for that to ſuch vile creatures, is given that divine honour, which is due to God: but by worſhippers of idols, and images, is given to idols or images. I confeſſe the uſe of the Engliſh tongue, in theſe ſpeeches, is rather to call them idols, than images, and to extend the name idoll (which is alwayes taken in the evill part) to that which the word image cannot ſo aptly ſignifie: yet in truth of the thing there is no difference betweene idoll and image, worſhipping of idols, and worſhipping of images, whether you ſpeake of ſuch as bee idols and images ſo properly called, or of ſuch as bee onely by ſimilitude, figuratiuely ſo named. If any of our Superintendents bee ſuch as you ſpeake of, I wiſh them amended or elſe remooved. For my part I know none to bee ſuch, although I wiſh to the beſt, encreaſe of Gods grace, to deſpiſe the world, and to bee more earneſt in ſetting foorth Gods glory. As for the great difference you ſpeake of, betwixt Saint Pauls words, and our tranſlation, I ſee none as yet.

MART.3. Will you ſee more yet to this purpoſe? In the Engliſh Bible printed in the yeere 1562, you reade thus: How agreeth the Temple of God with images? Can we be ignorant of Satans cogitations herein, that it was tranſlated of purpoſe to delude the ſimple people and to make them beleeue that the Apoſtle ſpeaketh againſt ſacred images in the Churches, which were then in plucking downe in England, when this your tranſlation was firſt publiſhed in print? Whereas in very truth you know, that the Apoſtle here partly interpreteth himſelfe to ſpeake of men, as of Gods Temples wherein he dwelleth, partly alludeth to Salomons Temple, which did very well agree with images (for it had the Cherubins, which were the repreſentations of Angels, and the figures of Oxen to beare up the lavatorie) but with idols it could not agree: and therefore the Apoſtles words are theſe, How agreeth the Temple of God with idols?

2 Cor.6.

Salomons Temple did well agree with images, but not with idols.

FVLK. 3. Wee had need to ſee more, before wee bee convicted of corruption: for hitherto wee haue ſeene nothing, but a fooliſh cavill, grounded upon the common uſe of the word idoll in Engliſh, in which ſpeech it is taken onely for unlawfull images, although in the Greeke it ſignifieth as generally, as Imago in Latine, and by Tully himſelfe is uſed for the ſame. But in the Engliſh Bible printed 1562. we reade thus 2 *Cor.*6. How agreeth the Temple of God with images? Here you cannot bee ignorant of Satans cogitations, that it was tranſlated of purpoſe to make the ſimple people beleeue, that the Apoſtle ſpeaketh againſt ſacred images in Churches, which were then in plucking downe in England when this tranſlation was firſt publiſhed in print. You are ſo cunning in Satans cogitations, that hee hath inſpired into you a manifeſt vntruth: for this text was ſo tranſlated, and printed neere 30. yeeres before 1562. in King Henry the eights time, when images were not in plucking downe. And when it was printed againe 1562. which was the fifth yeere of her Maieſties reigne (God bee thanked) there was no neede to plucke downe images out of Churches, which were pluckt downe in the firſt and ſecond yeeres of her reigne. Wherefore that purpoſe is vainely imagined of you, for the Tranſlatours purpoſe was the ſame that the Apoſtles, to ſhew that the religion of God, hath nothing to doe with images, made by mans deviſe, to honour them as Gods, or to honour God by them. And where you ſay that the Apoſtle alludeth to Salomons temple, which did well agree with images, but not with idols; I anſwere you, Salomons temple did not agree with images made by the deviſe of man, to honour God by them, or in them. For the Cherubins were not of mans deviſe: but of Gods commandement: the Oxen to hold up the lavatory, the pomegranats, and other ornaments, were not for any uſe of religion to worſhippe God in them, or by them, but for vſe and garniſhing of the houſe appointed by God in his law, and by direction of his ſpirit in Salomon. For the commandement, Thou ſhalt not make to thy ſelfe, is no reſtraint unto God, but unto men of their owne braine, or private intent, to make images to ſerue in religion. Therefore the Apoſtle ſpeaking of ſuch images as were forbidden by Gods law, is not otherwiſe to bee vnderſtood, and no more is our tranſlation.

MART.4. When Moſes by Gods appointment erected a brazen Serpent, and commanded the people that were ſtung with the ſerpent, to behold it, and therby they were healed: this was an image only, and as an image was it erected and kept and uſed by Gods commandement. But when it grew to bee an idoll (ſaith S. Auguſtine*) that is, when the people began to adore it as God, then king* Ezechias brake it in peeces to the great commendation of his pietie and godly zeale. So when the children of Iſrael in the abſence of Moſes made a calfe, and ſaid, Theſe are thy Gods ô Iſrael that brought thee out of Egypt, was it but an Image which they made? was that ſo hainous a matter, that God would ſo haue puniſhed them as he did? No they made it an idoll alſo ſaying, Theſe are thy Gods ô Iſrael. And therefore the Apoſtle ſaith to the Corinthians, Bee not idolaters,

FVLK.4. The braſen ſerpent firſt and laſt was an image, holy when it was commanded by God to bee made as a ſacrament of our redemption by Chriſt, lawfull when it was reſerved onely for memory of that excellent miracle; unlawfull, curſed, and abominable, when it was worſhipped, and therefore juſtly broken in peeces by the godly King Ezechias. You cite Auguſtine as it pleaſeth you, to follow your owne context: Quem ſanè ſerpentem propter facti memoriam reſervatum, cùm poſtea populus errans, tanquam idolum colere cœpiſſet, Ezechias, &c. Which ſerpent truely being reſerved for the memory of the fact, when afterward the people going aſtray, began to worſhip as an Idoll, Ezechias the King ſerving God with religious power, with great praiſe of his pietie, brake in peeces. Here it is certaine, that Auguſtine (as moſt Eccleſiaſticall writers) uſeth the word Idolum for an image abuſed. But, that the people began to adore it as God, hee ſaith not, for they onely worſhipped God by it, falſly indeed, and ſuperſtitiouſly, but yet not beleeving that image to bee God himſelfe, but a holy repreſentation of his power, which was ſhewed by it in the dayes of Moſes. That Ezechias by religious or Eccleſiaſticall power and authoritie, did put downe idolatrie, you paſſe it by, as though you ſaw it not in Saint Auguſtine. But you bring another example, to proue that images, except they bee worſhipped as gods, bee no Idols. In truth, ſeeing all religious worſhip is due onely to God, although the Idolaters intend not to worſhip their images as Gods, yet by worſhipping of them, they make unto themſelues Gods of them, and ſo offend both againſt the firſt and ſecond commandements. Yet how proue you, that the Iſraelites made a God of their Calfe? Becauſe they ſaid, Theſe are thy gods, O Iſrael, that brought thee out of the land of Ægypt. But even by that ſame ſpeech it is manifeſt, that they worſhipped not the Calfe, as beleeving it to bee God; but contrariwiſe proteſted thereby, that they meaned not to change their God, but to worſhip the ſame God which brought them out of the land of Egypt, by that image, which they could not bee ignorant that it was made but yeſterday, of their earings, and therefore could not thinke it was the ſame God that brought them out of the land of Egypt, but that they would worſhip God by that viſible ſhape which they ſaw before them. And Aaron by his proclamation confirmeth the ſame: To morrow (ſaith hee) ſhall bee holy day to Iehoua, that is, to the onely true God, whom they diſhonoured, pretending to worſhip him by that image. So hainous a thing it is, to make images to repreſent God, and worſhip them for his honour, although the worſhipper doe not beleeue them to be Gods. Therefore where wee haue in ſome tranſlations, 1 Cor. 10. called thoſe Idolaters worſhippers of Images, wee haue not erred: for an Image it was they worſhipped, thinking to worſhip God thereby. But if either Image, or Idoll, worſhippers of Images, or Idolaters, would pleaſe you, wee haue both in our tranſlations, the one expreſſing what wee meane by the other, that theſe cavillations were needleſſe, but that malice againſt the truth incenſeth you to picke quarrels, and that tranſlation which uſeth the tearmes of Idols and Idolaters, was then in printing at Geneua, when Images were in pulling downe in England, namely the firſt and ſecond yeeres of the Queenes raigne, being finiſhed the 10. of April 1560. which notably confuteth the fond purpoſe that you ſlaunder our Tranſlators to haue had.

MART.5. Wee ſee then that the Iewes had Images without ſinne, but not idols: Againe, for having idols, they were accounted like unto the Gentiles, as the Pſalme ſaith, They learned their workes, and ſerved their graven idols. But they were not accounted like unto the Gentiles for having images, which they had in Salomons Temple, and in the braſen ſerpent. S. Hierome writeth of the Ammonites and Moabites (who were Gentiles and Idolaters) that comming into the Temple of Hieruſalem, and ſeeing the Angelicall images of the Cherubins covering the Propitiatorie, they ſayd, Loe, even as the Gentiles; ſo Iuda alſo hath idols of their Religion. Theſe men did put no difference betweene their owne idols, and the Iewes lawfull Images. And are you not aſhamed to bee like to theſe? They accuſed Salomons Temple of idols, becauſe they ſaw their lawfull images: you accuſe the Churches of God of idolatrie, becauſe you ſee there the ſacred images of Chriſt and his Saints.

The Proteſtants are like to the Ammonites and Moabites.

FVLK.5. Wee know that the Iewes had images without ſinne, and ſo haue wee: but to haue images in any uſe of religion, without Gods expreſſe commandement, neither is it lawfull for them nor us, becauſe wee haue a generall commandement to the contrary. They were accounted like the Gentiles therefore, for having images contrary to Gods commandement, of their owne appointment, and worſhipping them; not for having images appointed by God, which yet it was not lawfull for them to vvorſhip. But the Proteſtants (you ſay) are like to the Ammonites and Moabites, of whom S. Hierome writeth, that comming into the Temple, and ſeeing the Cherubins covering the Propi-torie, they ſaid, Loe, even as the Gentiles, ſo Iuda alſo hath idols of their religion; as we accuſe the Church of God of idolatrie, becauſe we ſee there the ſacred images of Chriſt and his Saints.

This that you ſay Saint Hierome writeth, hee onely reporteth it, as a ridiculous fable of the Iewes. Ridiculam verò in hoc loco Hebræi narrant fabulam: The Hebrewes in this place tell a ridiculous fable. But fables are good enough to bolſter falſe accuſations. Secondly, hee reporteth them to ſay, Sicut cunctæ gentes colunt ſimulachra, ita & Iuda habet ſua religionis Idola: As all nations worſhip images, ſo hath Iuda alſo idols of their religion. By which words you ſee, that hee calleth images and idols the ſame things. For ſimulachrum to bee taken as largely as imago, I haue proved before, inſomuch that man is called ſimulachrum Dei, the image, not the idoll of God, as idoll is taken in the evill part. But neither are you like to Iuda, nor wee to Ammon and Moab in this caſe: for Iuda had Gods commandement to warrant their images, ſo haue not you, but his commandement againſt your images. Againe Moab and Ammon (if the tale were true) had idolatrous images of their owne, ſo haue not wee.

MART. 6. But tell us yet (I pray you) doe the holy Scriptures of either Teſtament ſpeake of all manner of images, or rather of the idols of the Gentiles? Your conſcience knoweth that they ſpeake directly againſt the idols, and the idolatrie that was among the Pagans and Infidels: from the which as the Iewes in the old Teſtament, ſo the firſt Chriſtians in the new Teſtament were to bee prohibited. But will you haue a demonſtration that your owne conſcience condemneth you herein, and that you apply all tranſlation to your hereſie? What cauſed you, being otherwiſe in all places ſo ready to tranſlate images, yet Eſay 31. and Zachar. 13. to tranſlate idols in all your Bibles with full conſent? Why in theſe places ſpecially, and ſo adviſedly? No doubt becauſe God ſaith there, ſpeaking of this time in the new Teſtament, In that day every man ſhall caſt out his idols of ſilver and idols of gold: And, I will deſtroy the names of the idols out of the earth, ſo that they ſhall no more bee had in remembrance. In which places if you had tranſlated images, you had made the prophecie falſe, becauſe images haue not beene deſtroyed out of the world, but are and haue beene in Chriſtian Countries with honour and reverence, even ſince Chriſts time. Marry in the idols of the Gentiles we ſee it verified, which are deſtroyed in all the world ſo farre as Gentilitie is converted to Chriſt.

The holy Scripture ſpeaketh againſt the idols of the Gentiles, not againſt all manner of images.

FVLK. 6. Verily the commandement of God, being a commandement of the firſt Table, unto which whatſoever is ſaid in the Scriptures of images, or the worſhip of them forbidden, muſt bee referred, ſpeaking generally of all manner images, made by the deuice of man, for any uſe of religion, whether they bee of Iewes, Pagans, or falſe Chriſtians. But we are offered a demonſtration, that our owne conſcience condemneth us herein, and that wee apply all tranſlation to our hereſie; and that is this: in Eſay 31. and Zachar. 13. with one conſent all tranſlate Idols, becauſe God ſpeaketh of the time of the new Teſtament, where if they had tranſlated Images, they had made the prophecie falſe, becauſe Images in Chriſtian Countries are with honour, but Idols of the Gentiles are deſtroyed out of the world ſo farre as Gentilitie is converted to Chriſt. A goodly demonſtration I promiſe you. That the Tranſlators had no ſuch reſpect, it is plaine, for that they doe not underſtand the 31. of Eſay of the time of Chriſt, but of the reformation made by Ezechias. But in Eſay 44. which is a manifeſt prophecie of the Church of Chriſt, they all uſe the word Image. Alſo Mich. 5. and in divers other places, where the deſtruction of Idolatrie is propheſied, by the religion of Chriſt, which is verified onely in true Chriſtians: for otherwiſe both the Idolatrie of Pagans, and of falſe Chriſtians, hath remained in many places, and yet remaineth to this day.

MART. 7. And what were the Pagans idols, or their idolatrie? S. Paul telleth us, ſaying, They changed the glory of the incorruptible God, into the ſimilitude of the image of a corruptible man, and of birds and beaſts, and creeping things, and they ſerved (or worſhipped) the creature more then the Creator. Doth hee charge them for making the image of man or beaſt? Your ſelues haue hangings and clothes full of ſuch paintings and embroderings of imagerie. Wherewith then are they charged? VVith giving the glory of God to ſuch creatures, which was to make them Idols, and themſelues Idolaters.

Rom. 1. What were the Idols of the Pagans.

FVLK. 7. That the Pagans changed the glory of God into the ſimilitude of the image of man, &c. it was the extremitie of their madneſſe; but that they made images of man or beaſt, if you will not confeſſe, that Iupiter, Mars, &c. were men. Iſis a cow or beaſt, yet remember that they made images of their Emperours, and committed idolatrie to them, otherwiſe to make images out of religion, was not the offence of idolatrie in them, nor us, that haue them in hangings, and paintings, and other lawfull images.

MART. 8. The caſe being thus, why doe you make it two diſtinct things in S. Paul, calling the Pagans, Idolaters; and the Chriſtians doing the ſame, Worſhippers of Images; and that in one ſentence, whereas the Apoſtle uſeth but one and the ſelfe ſame Greeke word, in ſpeaking both of Pagans and Chriſtians: It is a marvellous and wilfull corruption, and well to bee [illegible] and therefore I will put downe the [illegible] ſentence, as it is in your Engliſh tranſlation: I [illegible] to you, that you ſhould not company with fornicators; and I meant not at all of the fornicators of this world, either of the covetous, or extortioners, either * the idolaters, &c. But that yee company not together, if any that is called a brother, bee a fornicator, or covetous, or * A WORSHIPPER OF IMAGES, or an extortioner. In the firſt ſpeaking of Pagans, your Tranſlator nameth idolater, according to the text; but in the latter part ſpeaking of Chriſtians, you tranſlate the very ſelfe ſame Greeke word, worſhipper of images. Why ſo? Forſooth to make the Reader thinke that S. Paul ſpeaketh here not only of Pagan Idolaters, but alſo of Catholike Chriſtians, that reverently kneele in prayer before the Croſſe, the holy Roode, the images of our Saviour Chriſt and his Saints; as though the Apoſtle had commanded ſuch to bee avoyded.

1 Cor 5. Bib. 1562.

* [illegible]

FVLK. 8 The reaſon is, becauſe wee count Idolators and worſhippers of Images to bee all one. But it is a marvellous wilfull corruption, that in one ſentence, 1 Cor. 5. wee call the Pagans Idolaters, and the Chriſtians worſhippers of Images, and yet the ſame Greeke word in both. If this were a fault, it were but of one tranſlation of the three, for the Geneua Bible hath Idolater in both, the other worſhipper of Idols in the latter place. And wee thinke the latter to bee underſtood of idolatrous Papiſts, which worſhip Idols made with hands of men, as Croſſes, Roodes, and other Images, to as great diſhonour of God, and danger of their ſoules, as Pagans did. So that if it had beene worſhippers of Images in both, the tranſlation had not beene amiſſe.

MART. 9. Where if you haue yet the face to deny this your malicious and hereticall intent, tell us why all theſe other words are tranſlated and repeated alike in both places, covetous, fornicators, extortioners, both Pagans and Chriſtians; and onely this word (Idolaters) not ſo, but Pagans, Idolaters, and Chriſtians, worſhippers of Images. At the leaſt you cannot deny but it was of purpoſe done, to make both ſeeme all one, yea and to ſignifie that the Chriſtians doing the foreſaid reverence before ſacred Images (which you call worſhipping of Images) are more to bee avoyded than the Pagan Idolaters: whereas the Apoſtle ſpeaking of Pagans and Chriſtians that committed one and the ſelfe ſame hainous ſinne whatſoever, commandeth the Chriſtian in that caſe to be avoyded for his amendment, leaving the Pagan to himſelfe and to God, as having not to doe to judge of him.

FVLK. 9. I thinke the cauſe was, that Chriſtians might underſtand who was an Idolater, and what the word Idolater ſignifieth, which was uſed in the former part of the ſentence. And if the Tranſlators purpoſe was by this explication, to diſſwade the Readers from worſhipping of Popiſh images, I ſee not what cauſe hee hath to bee aſhamed thereof, ſeeing the Greeke word ſignifieth as much as he ſaith; not as though Idols were proper only to the Gentiles and images to Chriſtians, for in other places hee uſeth the name of Images, ſpeaking both of the Pagans, and the Chriſtians, 1 Cor. 8. Although for my part I could wiſh he had uſed one word in both places, and either called them both Idolaters, or both worſhippers of Images.

MART. 10. But to this the anſwer belike will bee made, as one of them hath already anſwered in the like caſe, that in the Engliſh Bible appointed to bee read in their Churches, it is otherwiſe, and even as wee would haue it corrected: and therefore (ſaith hee) it had beene good before we entred into ſuch hainous accuſations, to haue examined our grounds that they had beene true. As though we accuſe them not truely of falſe tranſlation, unleſſe it bee falſe in that one Bible which for the preſent is read in their Churches: or as though it pertained not to them how their other Engliſh Bibles be tranſlated: or as though the people read not all indifferently without prohibition, and may bee abuſed by every one of them: or as though the Bible which now is read (as wee thinke) in their Churches, haue not the like abſurd tranſlations, yea more abſurd, even in this matter of Images, as it before declared: or as though wee muſt firſt learne what Engliſh tranſlation is read in their Church (which were hard to know, it changeth ſo oft) before wee may be bold to accuſe them of falſe tranſlation: or as though it were not the ſame Bible that was for many yeeres read in their Churches, and is yet in every mans hands, which hath this abſurd tranſlation whereof wee haue laſt ſpoken.

cauill, it was not onely ſufficient, but alſo proper. And therefore this is a vaine ſuppoſall, As though wee accuſe them not truely of falſe tranſlation, vnleſſe it bee falſe in that one Bible which for the preſent is read in their Church: for we grant you not the other to be falſe, becauſe this is true, and ſo are all the reſt. As though it pertained not to them how their other Engliſh Bibles be tranſlated. It pertaineth ſo farre, that if there were a fault in the former, wee haue amended it in the later. But in the text for which I anſwered, I acknowledge yet no fault, neither is that mine onely anſwer, for I proue that Image, and idoll with the Apoſtle ſignifieth the ſame thing. Or as though the people reade not all without prohibition, and may bee abuſed by euery one of them. There is no ſuch falſe tranſlation in any of them, that the people can bee abuſed thereby, to run into hereſie. Yet againe: Or as though the Bible which now is read (as wee thinke) haue not the like abſurd tranſlation, yea more abſurd, euen in this matter of Images, as is declared before. As though you haue proued whatſoeuer you prate of. Once againe: Or as though wee muſt firſt learne what Engliſh tranſlation is read in their Church (which were hard to know, it changeth ſo often) before wee may bee bold to accuſe them of falſe tranſlation. If you will accuſe that tranſlation which is read in our Church, as Howlet doth, reaſon would you ſhould firſt learne which it is, and that is no hard matter, ſeeing there was neuer more appointed than two, as oft as you ſay wee change. Or (at laſt) as though it were not the ſame Bible that was for many yeeres read in their Churches, and is yet in euery mans hands, which hath this abſurd tranſlation, whereof wee laſt ſpake. As though I could propheſie, when I anſwered Howlet, for the Bible appointed to bee read in the Church, in 1 Iohn 5. that you would finde fault with another text in that tranſlation, that ſometime was read in the Church, and yet is in many mens hands: which although it bee well altered in that point which you quarrell at, in the two latter tranſlations, yet I ſee no abſurditie in the firſt, which for one Greeke word giueth two Engliſh words, both of one ſignification, yea and the latter being plainer, explicating the former, which to Engliſh eares is more obſcure, and leſſe vnderſtood.

MART. 11. Surely the Bible that wee muſt accuſe, not onely in this point, but for ſundry other moſt groſſe faults and hereticall tranſlations, ſpoken of in other places, is that Bible which was authorized by Cranmer their Archbiſhop of Canterburie, and read all King Edwards time in their Churches, and (as it ſeemeth by the late printing thereof againe, Anno 1562.) a great part of this Queenes raigne. And certaine it is, that it was ſo long read in all their Churches, with this venomous and corrupt tranſlation of images, alwayes in ſtead of idols; that it made the deceiued people of their ſect to deſpiſe, contemne, and abandon the very ſigne and image of their ſaluation, the croſſe of Chriſt, the holy Roode, or Crucifix, repreſenting the manner of his bitter paſſion and death, the ſacred images of the bleſſed Virgin Mary, the mother of God, and of Saint Iohn Euangeliſt, repreſenting their ſtanding by the Croſſe, at the very time of his paſſion. Inſomuch that now by experience wee ſee the foule inconuenience thereof, to wit, that all other images and pictures of infamous harlots, and heretikes, of heathen tyrants, and perſecutors, are lawfull in England at this day, and their houſes, parlours, and chambers, are garniſhed with them: onely ſacred images, and repreſentations of the holy myſterie of our redemption, are eſteemed idolatrous, and haue beene openly defaced in moſt ſpightfull manner, and burned, to the great diſhonour of our Sauiour Chriſt and his Saints. Bib.1562. Ioh.19.v.26.

FVLK. 11. That Bible perhaps you miſlike more than the other tranſlations, becauſe Archbiſhop Cranmer allowed it by his authoritie. But howſoeuer it bee, (as I thinke there bee more imperfections in it than in the other) it is not your accuſation, without due and ſubſtantiall proofe, that can make it leſſe eſteemed with any indifferent or wiſe man. If it haue cauſed the people to contemne and abandon all Popiſh Idols, there is cauſe that wee ſhould giue God thankes for it. Albeit not the tranſlation onely, but preaching of the Goſpell, and Chriſt crucified eſpecially, by which Chriſt hath beene truely and liuely painted forth vnto them, and euen crucified among them, hath made them contemne, yea and abhorre all carnall and humane deuices of the image of our ſaluation, or repreſentation of his paſſion, by vaine and dead images, to bee any helpes of faith, religion, or the worſhip of God. Where you ſay it is ſeene by experience, that all other images of infamous harlots, and heretikes, of heathen Tyrants, and perſecutors, are lawfull in England, to garniſh houſes, when ſacred images are eſteemed idolatrous, defaced, and burned; I know not well your meaning: for if you haue any true images of the Patriarkes, Prophets, Apoſtles, or other holy perſons, I thinke they bee as lawfull to garniſh priuate houſes, as the other you ſpeake of. Yea the ſtories of the whole Bible painted, both of the old Teſtament, and the new, are not forbidden, but in many places uſed. Prouided alwayes, that in the places appointed for the publike ſeruice of God, ſuch things are not lawfull, for danger of idolatrie, nor in priuate places to bee abuſed, as they are of Papiſts, but rather, though they were as ancient, and as goodly monuments as the braſen ſerpent was, which no images at this day, can bee, it is to the great honour of God, that they ſhould bee deſpiſed, defaced, burned, and ſtamped to powder, as that was, which ſometime was erected by the commandement of God, by which not onely great miracles were wrought, but the wonderfull myſterie of our ſaluation through faith in Chriſt, was perfigured.

MART. 12. And concerning the Bible, that at this day is read in their Churches, if it be that of the yeere 1577. it is worſe ſometime in this matter of images then the other. For where the other readeth, Couetouſneſſe, which is worſhipping of Idols: there this later (whereunto they appeale) readeth thus, Couetouſneſſe, which is worſhipping of images: And Epheſ. 5. it readeth as abſurdly as the other, A couetous man, which is a worſhipper of images. Loe, this is the Engliſh Bible, which they referre us vnto, as better tranſlated, and as correcting the fault of the former. But becauſe it is euident by theſe places, that this alſo is partly worſe, and partly as ill as the other, therefore this great confuter of Maſter Iohn Howlet, flieth once more to the Geneua Engliſh Bible, ſaying, Thus wee reade, and, ſo we tranſlate: to wit, a couetous perſon, which is an Idolater. Where ſhall wee haue theſe good fellowes, and how ſhall wee bee ſure that they will ſtand to any of their tranſlations? from the firſt read in their Churches, they flee to that that is now read, and from this againe, to the later Geneua Engliſh Bibles, neither read in their Churches (as wee ſuppoſe) nor of greateſt authoritie among them: and wee doubt not but they will as faſt flee from this, to the former againe, when this ſhall be proued in ſome places more falſe and abſurd, than the other. Col W. fur.fol.33. Fol. 36. Bib.1579.

FVLK. 12. It pleaſeth you worſe perhaps, that leſſe fauoureth your pelting diſtinction of images, and idols, but it is neuer the worſe to bee liked of them, that are wiſe and learned, which know that εἰκὼν, and εἴδωλον, in Greeke, doe ſignifie the ſame thing, which you cannot deny. And where you ſay, in your ſcornefull mood, loe, this is the Bible, which they referre us vnto, as better tranſlated and as correcting the fault of the former, you follow your accuſtomed vaine of lying. For I acknowledge no fault of the former, in this point of images, but confute the frowardneſſe of that fooliſh reaſon, which accuſeth our ſeruice, of reading the Bible in ſhameleſſe tranſlations, in that text 1 Iohn 5. whereas in the Bible appointed for the ſeruice, it is not as hee ſaith, but euen as hee would haue us to ſay. I flie not therefore (as it pleaſeth your wiſedome to ſay) from that tranſlation alſo, to the Geneua Bible, neither doe I alledge the Geneua tranſlation for that cauſe you pretend, but to ſhew that albeit wee tranſlate in ſuch words, as you cannot miſlike, yet your venomous ſlaundering pennes, and tongues, can neuer giue ouer your peeuiſh quarrelling. In the place by you quoted, I defend both as true, and anſwerable to the Greeke, and of one ſenſe and meaning, where the ſound of words onely, is diuers, the ſignification of matter, one, and the ſame. And yet you muſt haue your fooliſh floriſh in roperipe tearmes. Where ſhall wee haue theſe good fellowes, &c.? You ſhall haue us, by the grace of God, ready to iuſtifie all our tranſlation, from ſhameleſſe falſification, and hereticall corruptions, which is your impudent charge againſt us. And if in matter of leſſer moment, you can deſcrie the leaſt errour, in any, or in all of our tranſlations, wee ſhall bee willing to confeſſe the ſame, and ready to reforme it. For truth is dearer to us, than credit: although wee thinke it better credit, to reforme a fault, than being admoniſhed, wilfully to continue it, or defend it.

MART. 13. But what matter is it how they reade in their Churches, or how they correct their former tranſlations by the later: when the old corruption remaineth ſtil, being ſet of purpoſe in the top of euery doore within their Churches, in theſe words: Babes keepe your ſelues from images? why remaineth that written ſo often and ſo conſpicuouſly in the wals of their Churches, which in their Bibles they correct as a fault? their later Bibles ſay, Keepe your ſelues from idols: their Church wals ſay, Keepe your ſelues from images. S. Iohn ſpeaking to the lately conuerted Gentiles, biddeth them beware of the idols from whence they were conuerted: they ſpeaking to the old inſtructed Chriſtians, bid them beware of the ſacred image of Chriſt our Sauiour, of the holy Crucifixe of the croſſe, of euery ſuch repreſentation and monument of Chriſts paſſion, and our redemption. And therefore in the very ſame place where theſe holy monuments were wont to ſtand in Catholike times, to wit, in the roode loft, and partition of the Church and chancell: there now ſtand theſe words as confronting and condemning the foreſaid holy monuments, Babes keepe your ſelues from images. Which words whoſoeuer eſteemeth as the words of Scripture, and the words of Saint Iohn, ſpoken againſt Chriſts image, is made a very babe indeed, and ſottiſhly abuſed by their ſcribled doores, and falſe tranſlations, to count that idolatrie, which is indeede to no other purpoſe, than to the great honour of him whoſe image and picture it is. 1 Ioh. 5.

FVLK. 13. Still you harpe upon the old untuneable ſtring, that the former is a corruption, which ſaith, Babes keepe your ſelues from images, which ſentence ſore grieueth you, to bee written in the toppe of Church doores, or in place where the roode loft ſtood. And you aſke why it remaineth on the wals, which wee correct as a fault in the Bibles? The who told you that they correct it as a fault in the Bibles? Is every alteration with you a correction? The one explicateth the other, that Idols of which S. Iohn ſpeaketh, bee images abuſed in religion. Not that all images bee idols (as the word Idoll in the Engliſh ſpeech is taken) nor that all idols bee images, but as images that are worſhipped. But S. Iohn (you ſay) ſpeaking to the converted Gentiles, biddeth them beware of the Idols from whence they were converted. That is true, but not onely from them, but from all other idols. Except perhaps you thinke, that Chriſtians by that text ſhould not abhorre the images of Simon Magus and Selene, and the images of the Valentinians, and Gnoſtikes, and other Heretikes, which worſhipped the image of Chriſt, and of S. Paul as Irenæus and Epiphanius doe teſtifie. And it ſeemeth you ſo thinke indeed. For you ſay ſoone after, whoſoever eſteeme thoſe words, as the words of Scripture (if images bee put for idols ſpoken againſt Chriſts image) is made a very babe. Such babes were Irenæus and Epiphanius, that they condemned this worſhipping of images for hereſie. Such a babe was Epiphanius, that finding the image of Chriſt painted in a vaile hanging in a Church at Anablatha, hee judged it to bee contrary to the Scriptures, and rent it in peeces. Such a babe was Tertullian that ſpeaking of that very text of Saint Iohn, little children keepe your ſelues from idols, hee writeth, Non iam ab idolatria quaſi ab officio, ſed ab idolis, id eſt ab ipſa effigie eorum. Indignum enim ut imago Dei vivi, Imago Idoli & mortui fiat: Hee biddeth them take heede, not now from idolatrie, as from the ſervice, but from the idols themſelues, that is to ſay, from the very images, or ſhapes of them. »

For it is unworthy that the image of the living God, ſhould bee made the image of an » idoll, and that being dead. Finally, ſuch a babe was your vulgar Tranſlatour, that hee » ſaith. Filioli cuſtodite vos a ſimulachris, which is all one, as if hee ſhould haue ſaid ab imaginibus (as I haue plentifully proved) children keepe your ſelues from images. As for the purpoſe you pretend to haue in honouring Chriſt by images contrary to his commaundement, is indeede nothing but diſhonouring of him and deſtruction of your ſelues.

Irenæus lib. 1. cap. 20. 23. 24. Epiphan. lib. 1. Tom. 2. H. 27.

MART. 14. But the gay confuter with whom I beganne, ſaith for further anſwere: Admit that in ſome of our tranſlations it bee, Children keepe your ſelues from images (for ſo hee would haue ſaid if it were truely printed) What great crime of corruption is here committed? And when it is ſaid againe, this is the crime and fault thereof, that they meane by ſo tranſlating to make the ſimple beleeue that idols and images are all one, which is abſurd: hee replieth that it is no more abſurditie, than in ſteed of a Greeke word, to uſe a Latine of the ſame ſignification. And upon this poſition hee graunteth that according to the propertie of the Greeke word a man may ſay, God made man according to his idoll, and that generally, idolum may as truely bee tranſlated an image, as Tyrannus a King (which is very true, both being abſurde) and here hee cited many authours and dictionaries idly, to proue that idolum may ſignifie the ſame that Image.

W. Fulke. Fol. 35.

Gen. 1. κατ' εἰκόνα. εἴδωλον. εἰκών.

FVLK. 14 But this ſcornefull replier with whom I haue to doe, is ſo accuſtomed, to falſe and unhoneſt dealing, that hee can never report any thing that I haue written truely, and as I haue written, but with one forgerie or another, hee will cleane corrupt and pervert my ſaying. As here, hee ſhameth nothing to affirme, that I graunt, that according to the propertie of the Greeke word, a man may ſay. God made man according to his idoll. I will report mine owne words, by which every man may perceive how honeſtly hee dealeth with mee.

But admit that in ſome tranſlation it bee as you ſay: Children keepe your ſelues from » images: what great crime of corruption is here committed? You ſay that it is to make » ſimple men beleeue that idols and images are all one which is abſurde. This is no more » abſurditie, than in ſteede of a Greeke word to uſe a Latine of the ſame ſignification. But » you reply, that then where Moſes ſaith that God made man according to his owne » image, wee ſhould conſequently ſay, that God made man according to his idoll. I an- » ſwere, howſoever the name of idols in the Engliſh tongue for the great diſhonour that » is done to God in worſhipping of images, is become ſo odious that no Chriſtian man » would ſay, that God made man according to his idoll, no more than a good ſubject would » call his lawfull Prince a Tyrant, yet according to the Greeke word εἴδωλον may bee as truely » tranſlated an image, as τύραννος, a King. »

Here if I were diſpoſed to giue the raine to affection, as you doe often being unprovoked by mee, were ſufficient occaſion offered, to inſult againſt your falſhood. But I will forbeare, and in plaine words tell you, that if you bee ſo ſimple, that you cannot underſtand the difference of theſe two propoſitions, εἴδωλον whereſoever it is reade in Greeke, may bee truely tranſlated an image: and this: whereſoever the word image is uſed in En-

gliſh, you may uſe the word idoll, you are unmeete to reade a Divinitie Lecture in England, howſoever you bee advanced in Rhemes. If not of ignorance, but of malice, you haue perverted both my words and meaning, let God and all godly men bee judge betweene you and mee. My words are not obſcure nor ambiguous, but that every childe may underſtand my meaning to bee no more but this. That this word idoll is by uſe reſtrained, onely to wicked images. The Greeke word εἴδωλον ſignifieth generally all images, as τύραννος did all Kings, untill Kings that were ſo called, became hatefull for crueltie, which cauſed even the name tyrannus to bee odious.

MART. 15. But I beſeech you Sir, if the Dictionaries tell you that εἴδωλον may by the originall propertie of the word ſignifie an image, (which no man denieth) doe they tell you alſo that you may commonly and ordinarily tranſlate it ſo, as the common uſuall ſignification thereof? or doe they tell you that image and idoll are ſo all one, that whereſoever you finde this word image, you may truely call it, idoll? for theſe are the points that wee ſhould defend in your anſwere. For an example, doe they teach you to tranſlate in theſe places thus, God hath predeſtinated us to be made conformable to the idoll of his ſonne. And againe, As wee haue borne the idoll of the earthly (Adam.) ſo let us beare the idoll of the heavenly (CHRIST.) And againe, Wee are transformed into the ſame idoll, even as our Lords ſpirit. And againe, The law having a ſhadow of the good things to come, not the very idoll of the things. And againe, Chriſt who is the idoll of the inviſible God? Is this, (I pray you a true tranſlation? yea ſay you, according to the propertie of the word: but becauſe the name of idols, in the Engliſh tongue, for the great diſhonour done to God in worſhipping of images, is become odious, no Chriſtian man would ſay ſo.

Rom 8 Imagine. 1 Cor. 1 Imaginem. 2 Cor. 3. Heb. 10. Col. 1. 2 Cor. 4.

FVLK. 15. No man denieth (you ſay) that εἴδωλον may by the originall propertie of the word ſignifie an image. It is well, that being convicted by all Dictionaries, old and new, you will at length yeeld to the truth. But you doe demaund whether the Dictionaries doe tell mee that I may commonly and ordinarily tranſlate it ſo, as the common uſuall ſignification thereof. Sir I meddle onely with the tranſlations of the Scripture, and the Dictionaries tell mee that ſo it uſually ſignifieth, and therefore ſo I may tranſlate in the Scripture, or any other ancient Greeke writer, that uſeth the word according to the originall propertie thereof. Peradventure ſome later Greeke writers reſtraining it onely to wicked images, may ſo uſe the tearme, as the generall ſignification thereof will not agree to the meaning in ſome odde place or other. But that is no matter to plead againſt our tranſlation of the Scripture, when in that time it was written, the word was indifferent, to ſignifie any image. Further than this, you aſke of mee, if the Dictionaries doe tell mee, that image and idoll are all one, and whereſoever I find the word Image, I may truely call it Idoll? No forſooth ſir, they teach mee no ſuch thing: neither doe I ſay that the word image and idoll may bee confounded. But the cleane contrary, if your Maſterſhippe had not miſtaken mee, becauſe it was not your pleaſure to take mee either according to my words, or according to my meaning. Why Sir, Theſe are the points you ſhould defend in your anſwere, for an example, doe they teach you to tranſlate in theſe places thus: God hath predeſtinated us to bee made conformable to the idoll of his ſonne. And againe, wee haue borne the idoll of the earthly, &c. I pray you ſir, pardon mee to defend that I never ſaid, never thought, you your ſelfe confeſſe in the end, that I ſay, that no Chriſtian man would ſay ſo: wherefore when you ſay that I affirme: this is a true tranſlation according to the propertie of the word: can I ſay leſſe? Then you lye like a Popiſh Hypocrite.

MART. 16. Firſt note how fooliſhly and unadviſedly hee ſpeaketh here, becauſe hee would confound images and idols, and make them falſly to ſignifie one thing: when hee ſaith, the name of idoll, is become odious in the Engliſh tongue becauſe of worſhipping images, He ſhould haue ſaid, The diſhonour done to God in worſhipping Idols, made the name of Idols odious. As in his owne example of Tyrant, and King: he meant to tell us that Tyrant ſometime was an uſuall name for every King, and becauſe certaine ſuch Tyrants abuſed their power, therefore the name of Tyrant became odious. For hee will not ſay (I trow) that for the fault of Kings, the name of Tyrant became odious. Likewiſe the Romanes tooke away the name of Manlius, for the crime of one Manlius, not for the crime of Iohn at Nokes, or for any other name. The name of Iudas is ſo odious that men now commonly are not ſo called. Why ſo? becauſe he that betraied Chriſt, was called Iudas: not becauſe he was alſo Iſcariote. The very name of Miniſters is odious and contemptible. Why? becauſe Miniſters are ſo lewd, wicked, and unlearned, not becauſe ſome Prieſts be naught. Even ſo the name of idoll grew to bee odious, becauſe of the idols of the Gentiles, not becauſe of holy images. For if the reverence done by Chriſtians to holy images were evill, as it is not, it ſhould in this caſe haue made the name of image odious; and not the name of Idols. But God be thanked, the name of Images is no odious name among Catholike Chriſtians, but onely among Heretikes, and Image-breakers, ſuch as the ſecond generall Councell of Nice hath condemned therefore with the ſentence of Anathema. No more than the Croſſe is odious, which to all good Chriſtians is honorable, becauſe our Saviour Chriſt died on a Croſſe.

FVLK. 16. Nay firſt note how falſly, and then how fooliſhly, and yet how impudently hee continueth a ſlaunder againſt mee, of his owne deviſing, that I would confound thoſe Engliſh words, images, and idols. For firſt hee will teach mee to ſpeake Engliſh, that where I ſaid the name of idoll is become odious in the Engliſh tongue, becauſe of worſhipping of images; I ſhould haue ſaid. The diſhonour done to God in worſhipping of idols, made the name of idols odious. And what I pray you were thoſe idols, the worſhipping of which made the name odious, but images? May I not bee ſo bold, under your correction, to uſe the generall name images, which you ſay are not idols, untill they bee abuſed. When the image of Iupiter, King of Creete, was firſt made, and nothing elſe done unto it, would you call it an image, or an idoll. Sure I am, you called the brazen Serpent, firſt an image, and then an idoll. Even ſo I truſt I may without offence of Engliſh men ſay, that the abuſe of images, called firſt without note of infamie εἴδωλα, idols, made the name idols to bee odious, and therefore not applied, but to ſuch abuſed images: and the example I brought of Tyrannus, which firſt did ſignifie a King, is very plaine and like, but that you are diſpoſed to play the peeviſh quarreller. And trow you, I will not ſay, that for the fault of Kings, the name of Tyrant became odious. Yes verily, I will not ſpare to ſay, and ſo I ſaid before, that for the fault of ſuch cruell Kings, as were called Tyranni, though the name it ſelfe firſt ſignified not ſo, that name of Tyrant became odious. As for your ſomblitudes of Manlius, and Iudas, two proper names, compared with image, and idoll, King and Tyrant, which bee common names, I will not vouchſafe to anſwere them. But the name of Miniſters (you ſay) is odious, for the faults of Miniſters, and not for the faults of Prieſts. Popiſh Prieſts are odious enough, for their owne faults, ſo that they neede not bee charged uniuſtly, with the faults of our evill Miniſters. Which, I would wiſh, were fewer, than they bee, but I truſt there are not ſo many evill of them, as your Popiſh Prieſts haue beene, and are daily found to bee. And whoſoever of our Miniſters hath beene found worſt, I thinke there may bee found, not a Prieſt, but a Pope of your ſide, as evill, or worſe than hee. But if reverence done by Papiſts, (which you call Chriſtians) to images, had beene evill, (ſay you,) it ſhould haue made the name of images, odious alſo. No ſir, that followeth not, ſo long as that reverence was accounted good, and lawfull, and now that it is found to bee abhominable, the people having the other odious vvord of idols, in uſe, neede not abandon the name of images, except they had an other, to ſignifie lavvfull, and good images. The curſe of the idolatrous Councell of Nice the ſecond, no Chriſtian man regardeth, vvhich knovveth that by Gods owne mouth in the Scriptures, all makers and worſhippers of idolatrous images are accurſed.

MART. 17. But to omit this mans extraordinarie and unadviſed ſpeeches, which bee too many and too tedious (as when hee ſaith in the ſame ſentence, Howſoever the name idoll is growne odious in the Engliſh tongue, as though it were not alſo odious in the Latine and Greeke tongues, but that in Latine and Greeke a man might ſay according to his fond opinion, Fecit hominem ad idolum ſuum, and ſo in the other places where is imago) to omit theſe raſh aſſertions I ſay, and to returne to his other words, where he ſaith, that though the originall propertie of the words hath that ſignification, yet no Chriſtian man would ſay, that God made man according to his idoll, no more than a good ſubiect would call his lawfull Prince, a Tyrant. Doth hee not here tell us that, which hee would haue, to wit, that wee may not ſpeake or tranſlate, according to the originall property of the word, but according to the common vſuall, and accuſtomed ſignification thereof? As wee may not tranſlate, Phalaris tyrannus, Phalaris the King, as ſometime Tyrannus did ſignifie, and in auncient authors doth ſignifie: but, Phalaris the Tyrant, as now this word tyrannus is commonly taken, and underſtood. Even ſo wee may not now tranſlate, My children, keepe your ſelues from images, as the word may, and doth ſometime ſignifie, according to the originall property thereof, but wee muſt tranſlate, keepe your ſelues from idols, according to the common uſe and ſignification of the word, in vulgar ſpeech, and in the holy Scriptures. Where the Greeke word is ſo notoriouſly and vſually peculiar to idols, and not unto images: that the holy fathers of the ſecond Nicene Councell, (which knew right well the ſignification of the Greeke word, themſelues being Grecians) doe pronounce Anathema, to all ſuch as interpret thoſe places of the holy Scripture, that concerne idols, of images, or againſt ſacred images, as now theſe Calviniſts doe, not onely in their commentaries upon the holy Scriptures, but even in their tranſlations of the text.

Ab idolis. ἀπὸ τῶν εἰδώλων. 1 Ioh. 5.

FVLK. 17. Wee cannot yet be rid of this mans extraordinary, and unadviſed ſurmiſes, which are too many, and tedious, as where I ſay, the name Idoll is odious in the Engliſh tongue, hee gathereth, that I meane it to bee odious onely in the Engliſh tongue, and not in the Latine and Greeke. I haue ſhewed before, that in Tullies time it was not odious in Latine, and it is not long ſince M. Martin confeſſed the Greeke word, according to the originall propertie, to ſignifie as generally, as εἰκὼν, an image, which is not odious. Although in latter times, among Chriſtians, both of the Greeke and the Latine Church, the name of Idolum became odious, as well as the word Idoll in Engliſh. Therefore it is not my fond opinion, but M. Martins fooliſh collection, that a man may ſay in Latine, Fecit hominem ad idolum ſuum: and yet I am charged with raſh aſſertions, when nothing is reproved that I affirme, but that which hee himſelfe doth imagine.

But now you will returne to thoſe words of mine, where I ſay, that though the originall proprietie of the words hath that ſignification; yet no Chriſtian man would ſay, that God made man according to his idoll, no more than a good ſubiect would call his lawfull Prince a Tyrant. Theſe words (you ſay) doe tell us, that wee may not ſpeake, or tranſlate, according to the originall propertie of the word, but according to the common, uſuall, and accuſtomed ſignification thereof. For ſpeaking I grant, as the words are vſed in our time: but for tranſlating, I ſay you muſt regard how the words were vſed in time of the writer, whoſe words you tranſlate. As if you would tranſlate out of Euripides, τίς γῆς τύραννος, would you ſay, Who is Tyrant of this land? or rather, Who is King? Or in Ariſtophanes, Ζεὺς θεῶν τύραννος, would you tranſlate, Iupiter Tyrant of the gods, or King of the gods? I thinke not. But in Saint Iohn, ſeeing at that time that hee wrote, εἴδωλον ſignified an image generally, it may bee tranſlated an image generally; and ſeeing he ſpeaketh of the unlawfull uſe of images, it may alſo bee tranſlated an idoll, as the word is now taken to ſignifie. How the late pettie Prelates of the ſecond Nicene Councell were diſpoſed to uſe the word, to colour their blaſphemous Idolatrie, it is not materiall. The ancient Dictionaries of Suidas, Phavorinus, Heſychius, with the examples of Homer, Plato, and other ancient Greeke Authors, are of more credit for the true and ancient ſignification of that word.

MART. 18. This then being ſo, that words muſt bee tranſlated as their common uſe and ſignification requireth, if you aske your old queſtion, what great crime of corruption is committed in tranſlating, keepe your ſelues from images, the Greeke being εἴδωλα, you haue anſwered your ſelfe that in ſo tranſlating, idoll and image are made to ſignifie one thing, which may not bee done, no more than Tyrant and King can be made to ſignifie all one. And how can you ſay then, that this is no more abſurditie, than in ſtead of a Greeke word to uſe a Latine of the ſame ſignification? Are you not here contrary to your ſelfe? Are Idoll and Image, Tyrant and King, of one ſignification? Said you not, that in the Engliſh tongue idoll is growne to another ſignification, than image, as Tyrant is growne to another ſignification than King? Your falſe tranſlations therefore, that in ſo many places make Idols and Images all one, not onely forcing the word in the holy Scriptures, but diſgracing the ſentence thereby, (as Epheſ. 5. and Col. 3.) are they not in your owne iudgement very corrupt, and as your owne conſciences muſt confeſſe, of a malicious intent corrupted, to diſgrace thereby the Churches holy Images, by pretence of the holy Scriptures, that ſpeake onely of the Pagans Idols.

Loco citato, fol. 35.

Eph. 5. A covetous man is a worſhipper of images, and Col. 3. Covetouſneſſe is worſhipping of images.

FVLK. 18. Againe, I repeat, that words muſt, or may bee tranſlated, according to that ſignification they had in time of the writer, whom you tranſlate. And to my queſtion, what abſurditie is it in that text of S. Iohn, for εἴδωλα, to tranſlate image? your anſwer, by that meanes, idoll and image are made to ſignifie one thing. But that is not ſo; for image ſignifieth more generally, than idoll in Engliſh, and image anſwereth properly to the Greeke word εἴδωλα, idoll, to the meaning of Saint Iohn, that is, of wicked images, ſo that the tranſlation is good. Even as τύραννος, may bee tranſlated a King generally, according to the word; and if the Author meane of a cruell King, it may bee tranſlated a Tyrant: for King is a generall word, applied to good Kings, and to evill, as image is to lawfull, and unlawfull images. Therefore our tranſlations, that for εἴδωλα, ſay an image, are not falſe, much leſſe any malicious corruptions. And if the Tranſlators in ſo doing, intended to diſgrace Popiſh Images, I thinke they did well, and according to the meaning of the holy Ghoſt, who forbidding generally all images that may bee had in religious reverence, did not reſtraine the ſignification of the word εἴδωλα, to the wicked idols of the Gentiles, but left it at large, to comprehend all ſuch images, and all kindes of worſhipping them, as are contrary to the law and Commandement of God.

MART. 19. But of the uſuall and originall ſignification of words (whereof you take occaſion of manifold corruptions) wee will ſpeake more anon, if firſt wee touch ſome other your falſifications againſt holy images: as where you affectate to thruſt the word image into the text, where there is no ſuch thing in the Hebrew or Greeke, as in that notorious example, 2 Par. 35. (Bib. 1562.) Carved images that were laid to his charge. Againe, Rom. 11. To the image of Baal. And τῇ Βάαλ. ſubaud. [illegible] Num. c. 22.

Act. 19. τὸ διοπετές.

Act. 19. The image that came downe from Iupiter. Where you are not content to underſtand image, rather than idoll, but alſo to thruſt it into the text, being not in the Greeke, as you know very well.

FVLK. 19. Three places you note, where the word Image is thruſt into the text, being neither in the Hebrew, nor Greeke. The firſt, 2 Par. 36. Bib. 1562. which I confeſſe is a fault but I marvell how it crept in: for Thomas Matthewes Bible, which was printed before it, hath not the word, Carved Images. It is reformed alſo in both the tranſlations that followed.

The ſecond, Rom 11. is no corruption; for ſeeing you acknowledge, that a ſubſtantive muſt bee underſtood, to beare up the feminine article, what reaſon is there, why wee ſhould not underſtand εἰκόνι, rather than στήλῃ, ſeeing it is certaine, Baal had an image, that was worſhipped in his Temple? 2 Reg. 10. The third place is, Act. 19. where the word image is neceſſarily to bee underſtood, which fell downe from Iupiter, as it was fained. Hereunto Plinie beareth witneſſe, lib. 16. cap. 40. and ſheweth by whom it was made, and of what matter: of the like ſpeaketh Herodianus. And the ſimilitude of this Image is yet to bee ſeene in thoſe ancient Coines that yet remaine, which were called ναοὺς, temples. Wherefore your vulgar tranſlation which turneth τὸ διοπετὲς, Iovis prolis, is not right, and therefore is corrected by Iſidorus Clarius, à Iove delapſi ſimulachri, with the conſent of the Deputies of the Councell of Trent.

MART. 20. Of this kinde of falſification is that which is crept as a leproſie throughout all your Bibles tranſlating Sculptile, and conflatile, graven image, molten image, namely in the firſt Commandement, where you know in the Greeke it is idoll, and in the Hebrew, ſuch a word as ſignifieth onely a graven thing, not including this word image: and you know that God commanded to make the images of Cherubins, and of oxen in the Temple, and of the braſen ſerpent in the deſert, and therefore your wiſedomes might have conſidered, that he forbade not all graven images, but ſuch as the Gentiles made and worſhipped as Gods; and therefore Non facies tibi ſculptile, concurreth with thoſe words that goe before, Thou ſhalt have none other Gods but mee: for ſo to have an image, as to make it a God, is to make it more than an image; and therefore when it is an Idoll, as were the Idols of the Gentiles, then it is forbid by this Commandement. Otherwiſe, when the Croſſe ſtood many yeeres upon the Table in the Queenes Chapell, was it againſt this Commandement? Or was it Idolatrie in the Queenes Maieſtie and her Counſellors, that appointed it there, being the ſupreame head of your Church? Or doe the Lutherans your pue-fellowes, as this day commit Idolatrie againſt this Commandement, that have in their Churches the Crucifix, and the holy Images of the Mother of God, and of S. Iohn the Evangeliſt? Or if the whole ſtorie of the Goſpell concerning our Saviour Chriſt, were drawne in pictures and images in your Churches, as it is in many of ours, were it (trow you) againſt this Commandement? Fie for ſhame, that you ſhould thus with intolerable impudencie and deceit abuſe and bewitch the ignorant people, againſt your owne knowledge and conſcience: For wot you not, that God many times expreſly forbade the Iewes, both mariages and other converſation with the Gentiles; leſt they might fall to worſhip their Idols, as Salomon did, and as the Pſalme reporteth of them? This then is the meaning of the Commandement, neither to make the Idols of the Gentiles, nor any other like unto them, and to that end, as did Ieroboam in Dan and Bethel.

3 Reg. 11. Pſal. 105. v. 35.

FVLK. 20. This is a ſore complaint, that wee have falſified the Scripture, as it were with a leproſie, in tranſlating ſculptile and conflatile, a graven and a molten Image, and namely in the firſt Commandement, where there is no word of Image, or Imagerie: but indeed in the ſecond Commandement, wee tranſlate the Hebrew word Peſel, a graven image. You ſay it ſignifieth a graven thing, not including the word image: I anſwer, you are not able to bring a place in the Bible, where it ſignifieth any other graven thing, but onely an Image; and yet it is derived of a verbe, that ſignifieth to grave or hew, as the word Piſilim, Iud. 3. taken for quarries of ſtone doth declare. Beſide this, the word next following, ſignifying a ſimilitude or image, ſufficiently ſheweth, that it is not taken generally for any graven worke, but for ſuch, wherein the likeneſſe or ſimilitude of God, or any creature, is meant to bee reſembled: and the ſame doth alſo the Greeke word εἴδωλον teſtifie. As for the Cherubins, Oxen, Braſen ſerpent, or any thing which God commandeth, is not forbidden by this precept, but that which man maketh of his owne head, to honour as God, or to worſhip God by it. Wherefore very abſurdly, to cloake ſuch abominable Idolatrie, you ſay that this Commandement, Non facies ſculptile, doth concurre with thoſe words, Thou ſhalt have none other Gods but meê. By which not onely two ſeverall Commandements are confounded, but alſo a vaine tautologie committed: or elſe that added for interpretation, which is more obſcure than the text interpreted.

ſoever is againſt that Commandement neither is the having of any Images in the Church (which are had in no uſe of religion) contrary to this Commandement. And although wee will not accuſe the Lutherans of Idolatrie, neither can wee, becauſe they worſhip no Images; yet will wee not excuſe them, for ſuffering of Images to bee in their Churches, whereof may enſue danger of Idolatrie, but that in ſome part they goe againſt this Commandement, deceived in their iudgement, and of us not to bee defended in their errour. After you have railed a fit, with fie for ſhame, and ſuch like Rhetorike, you ſeeme to make the prohibition of Images none other, but ſuch as the prohibition of mariage, and other converſation with the Gentiles, which was onely for feare of Idolatrie. But when you can ſhew the like abſolute Commandement, to forbid mariage, and converſation with the heathen, as this is for Images in Religion, and worſhipping of them, wee may have ſome regard of your ſimilitude: otherwiſe the meaning of this Commandement, is generally to forbid all Images of God, and of his creatures, to honour God by them: for to honour them as God, is a breach of the firſt Commandement, as properly as of the ſecond.

MART. 21. This being a thing ſo plaine, as nothing more in all the holy Scriptures, yet your itching humour of deceit and falſhood, for the moſt part doth tranſlate ſtill, images, images, when the Latine, and Greeke, and Hebrew, have divers other words, and very ſeldome that which anſwereth to Image. For when it is image in the Latine, or Greeke, or Hebrew texts, your tranſlation is not reprehended: for wee alſo tranſlate ſometimes images, when the text of the holy Scripture requireth it. And wee are not ignorant, that there were images which the Pagans adored for their gods; and wee know that ſome idols are images, but not all images idols. But when the holy Scriptures call them by ſo many names, rather than images, becauſe they were not only images, but made idols; why doe your tranſlations, like cuckoes birds, ſound continually, images, images, more than idols, or other words equivalent to idols, which are there meant?

FVLK. 21. Indeede there is nothing more plaine in all the holy Scriptures, than that the worſhipping of Images of all ſorts is forbidden: but that our itching humour of deceit and falſehood (as it pleaſeth you to ſpeake) hath corrupted the text, to eſtabliſh any falſe opinion of the uſe of Images, it is not yet proved. But now you ſet upon us with 13. Hebrew words, and 9. Greeke words at once, which wee for the moſt part doe tranſlate ſtill images, Images: and you ſay wee ſound with Cuckowes birds continually Images, Images, more than Idols or rather words equivalent to Idols. How many times the word image is founded, I never had care to ſeeke, and now I have no leiſure to number, but I am ſure Idols and Idolatrie, in that tranſlation in which leaſt, are named above fortie or fiftie times. But to a conſcience guiltie of worſhipping of Images, contrary to the expreſſe Commandement of God, the very name of Images muſt needs ſound unpleaſantly. That wee have no greater change of words to anſwer ſo many of the Hebrew tongue, it is of the riches of that tongue, and the povertie of our mother language, which hath but two words, Image, and Idoll, and them both borrowed of the Latine and Greeke. As for other words equivalent, wee know not any, and wee are loth to make any new words of that ſignification, except the multitude of Hebrew words of the ſame ſenſe comming together, doe ſometimes perhaps ſeeme to require it. Therefore as the Greeke hath fewer words to expreſſe this thing than the Hebrew, ſo hath the Latine fewer than the Greeke, and the Engliſh feweſt of all, as will appeare if you would undertake to give us Engliſh words for the 13. Hebrew words; except you would coine ſuch ridiculous inkhorne tearmes, as you doe in the new Teſtament, Azymes, Prepuce, Neophyte, Scandale, Paraſceue, and ſuch like.

Gen. 28. v. 22.
Eſa. 19. v. 19.

FVLK. 22. Seeing you aske why wee tranſlate the Hebrew word Matſebah ſo often an image; it had beene reaſon you ſhould have told us how often wee doe ſo, or at leaſt noted ſome place, where it cannot ſignifie an image. Wee know the word being derived of the verbe Iatſab, that ſignifieth to ſtand, may bee taken for ſome thing erected, that is no image, but a pillar, or as your Latine text calleth it, a title, in both the places by you noted, Gen. 28. Eſay 19. and elſewhere, Gen. 25. 2 Sam. 18. But whenſoever wee tranſlate it an Image, the circumſtance of the place ſo requireth, as 2 Reg. 10. where it is ſaid, that Baals Images were taken out of his Temple, broken and burnt. For they were Images of Baal, that were worſhipped in his Temple; and not titles or pillars. Likewiſe 2 Reg. 17. where it is ſaid, that the Iſraelites made unto themſelves Statuas, Images, and groves under every high hill, and under every thicke tree, as appeareth by Ezechiel 6. where they bee called Gillulim, Idols, which had the ſimilitude of men, as Baalim, and ſuch other.

MART. 23. Secondly, wee demaund, why your very laſt Engliſh Bible hath (Eſa. 30. 22.) for two Hebrew words, which are in Latine Sculptilia and Conflatilia, twice, Images, Images; neither word being Hebrew for an Image, no more than if a man would aske what is Latine for an Image, and you would tell him Sculptile. Whereupon he ſeeing a faire painted image in a Table, might happily ſay, Ecce egregium ſculptile; which every boy in the Grammer Schoole would laugh at. Which therefore wee tell you, becauſe wee perceive your tranſlations endevour, and as it were affectate, to make Sculptile, and Image all one: which is moſt evidently falſe, and to your great confuſion appeareth, Abac. 2. v. 13. where for theſe words, Quid prodeſt ſculptile? quia ſculpſit illud fictor ſuus, conflatile & imaginem falſam, which is according to the Hebrew and Greeke; your later Engliſh tranſlation hath, What profiteth the image? for the maker thereof hath made it an image, and teacher of lies.

FULK. 23. If it had ſaid, the graven images of ſilver, and the molten or caſt images of gold, I know not what advantage it had beene to you, or loſſe to us. But neither the word (you ſay) is Hebrew for an image. Alacke this is poore ſophiſtrie, when all the world of Hebricians know, they are Hebrew for nothing elſe, but for graven or caſt images, and by the figure Synecdoche, are taken generally for images of what making or matter ſoever they bee. And the queſtion is not, by what Art images are made, but to what uſe, and how they bee vſed, that they may bee condemned for unlawfull. This I take to bee the cauſe, why the Interpreter neglected the difference of the Hebrew words, which ſometimes is not obſerved, and in Engliſh unpoſſible alwayes, and unprofitable to bee kept. As for your owne conceit, whereat you thinke boyes might laugh, I leave it to your ſelfe. For if wee were asked, what is Latine for an Image, wee could anſwere ſomewhat elſe than Sculptile. But if a boy ſhould aske what Peſilim, or Maſſecath in this place of Eſay doth ſignifie, wee would not anſwer, a graven thing, or a molten thing, leſt hee might ſhew us the mantle-tree of a chimney, and a braſſe pot hanging over the fire, and demand further whether Eſay in this text ſpake of them, and all ſuch things as they are. But it is moſt evidently falſe (you ſay) that Sculptile, and Image are all one, and this appeareth to our great confuſion, Abacuk the ſecond, &c. But I ſay to your ſhame, it will appeare by this very text, that Peſel and Maſſecah, ſignifie one and the ſame thing, and that moſt evidently: for thus the text is, What profiteth the Image? (Peſel) for his maker (Iotſero) hath made it, or (as you will have it) hath graven it, Peſalo: what followeth now, but Maſſecah, an Image? You had rather ſay Conflatile, a molten Image. But then you muſt remember, that the maker of it by graving made it a molten Image, which is a ſtrange peece of worke; except you will ſay, that firſt hee did caſt it, and then hee did grave it: but ſay which way you will, the ſame Image is called Peſel and Maſſecah, without difference. The laſt words are umoreh ſhaker, and a teacher of lies; which words your tranſlation hath Imaginem falſam, a falſe Image, whereas Moreh never ſignifieth an Image. But of that afterward.

MART. 24. I would every common Reader were able to diſcerne your falſhood in this place. Firſt you make Sculpere ſculptile, no more than to make an Image; which being abſurd you know (because the Painter or Embroderer making an image, cannot bee ſaid ſculpere ſculptile) might teach you that the Hebrew hath in it no ſignification of image, no more than ſculpere can ſignifie to make an Image: and therefore the Greeke and the Latine preciſely (for the moſt part) expreſſe neither more nor leſſe, than a thing graven, but yet meane alwayes by theſe words, a graven idoll, to which ſignification they are appropriated by uſe of holy Scripture, as Simulacrum, Idolum, Conflatile, and ſometime Imago. In which ſenſe of ſignifying Idols, if you alſo did repeate Images ſo often, although the tranſlation were not preciſe, yet it were in ſome part tolerable, becauſe the ſenſe were ſo: but when you doe it to bring all holy Images into contempt, even the Image of our Saviour Chriſt crucified, you may juſtly bee controlled for falſe and hereticall Tranſlators.

Sculptile. γλυπτόν.

FULK. 24. I would every common Reader were able to diſcerne your fooliſh malice in this place. For firſt, while you cavill at the Etymologie of the words, which the Prophet regardeth not, you make him ſay, that the faſhioner thereof hath graven a graven thing, a molten thing. Secondly, where you ſay, that the Hebrew word Peſel, hath no ſignification of an Image in it, leaning to the bare derivation from the verbe Paſal, you controll the onely uſe of it, which is to ſignifie an image, or idoll, whether it bee graven, or molten, or by what workemanſhip ſoever it bee made, which you confeſſe to be the ſenſe of it. But when wee doe it (you ſay) to bring all holy images into contempt, wee may juſtly bee controlled, for falſe and hereticall tranſlatours. Firſt wee know no holy images, made with hands at this time ſo accompted, but they are all prophane and abominable idols. Secondly, if the tranſlatours purpoſe were evill, yet ſo long as the words and ſenſe of the originall tongue will beare him, hee cannot juſtly bee called a falſe and hereticall tranſlatour, albeit hee have a falſe and hereticall meaning. As you Papiſts have in your late tranſlation of the new Teſtament: yet where you tranſlate, either according to the words, or according to the ſenſe, no equitie can condemne you for falſe tranſlatours.

MART. 25. As in this very place (which is an other falſhood like to the other) conflatile, you tranſlate image, as you did ſculptile, and ſo here againe in Abacuck (as before in Eſay is noted) for two diſtinct words, each ſignifying an other divers thing from image, you tranſlate, images, image. Thirdly, for imaginem falſam, a falſe image, you tranſlate an other thing, without any neceſſary pretenſe either of Hebrew or Greeke, avoiding here the name of image, becauſe this place telleth you that the holy Scripture ſpeaketh againſt falſe images, or as the Greeke hath, falſe phantaſies, or as you tranſlate the Hebrew, ſuch images as teach lies, repreſenting falſe Gods which are not, as the Apoſtle ſaith, Idolum nihil eſt, And Non ſunt Dij qui manibus fiunt. Which diſtinction of falſe and true images you will not have, becauſe you condemne all images, even holy and ſacred alſo, and therefore you make the holy Scriptures to ſpeake herein accordingly to your owne fanſie.

Abac. 2. φαντασίας ψευδῆ 1 Cor. 8. Act. 19.

FULK. 25. Seeing the Prophet regardeth not the Etymologie of the words, but uſeth both for one and the ſame Image; no nor regardeth the matter whereof it is made, as appeareth in the next verſe, where hee calleth this Idoll wood, and ſtone, which cannot bee molten, every reaſonable man may ſee, that the word Maſſecah doth in this place ſignifie generally an Image, which is made to bee a teacher of lies. And whereas you repeate, that the two words doe ſignifie each an other divers thing from Image, becauſe the one ſignifieth a graven thing, the other a molten thing, you ſpeake without all ſhame, and ſenſe of honeſty: for Peſel ſignifieth not every graven, carved, or hewen thing, but onely an image. For who would ſay, that a morter, or a gutter of hewen ſtone were in Hebrew to bee ſignified by the word Peſel, or a pewter pot, or a diſh, by the word Maſſecah: Seeing the uſe of the Hebrew tongue therefore hath appropried theſe names onely to Images, it is great frowardneſſe, and no learning to quarrell about the Etymologie or derivation of them. As this name building in Engliſh, is taken onely for houſes: as when wee ſay here are goodly buildings, which if a man would extend according to the derivation, and ſhewing nothing elſe but walles of bricke or other matter, praiſe them for goodly buildings, hee ſhould bee thought to ſpeake ſtrangely in our tongue, and yet according to the derivation, building may ſignifie any thing that is builded. But for Imaginem falſam, a falſe image, you charge us to tranſlate an other thing, without any neceſſary pretence, either of Hebrew, or Greeke. Such affirmations will make us thinke meanely of your knowledge, in the Hebrew tongue. For what I pray you elſe, can Moreh in this place ſignifie, but a teacher? or where is it ever taken for an image, as your Latine text hath, or a fantaſie, as the Greeke readeth? Turne over your Dictionarie, and Hebrew concordance, and ſee if you can finde it uſed for an image, or an idoll. At leaſt wiſe, give credit to Iſidorus Clarius, who thus writeth in his notes upon the text. Quod ait imaginem falſam, in Heb. eſt docens, vel annuncians mendacium. That hee ſaith a falſe image, in the Hebrew it is teaching or ſhewing forth a lye. The diſtinction you make of true and falſe images, is vaine for this purpoſe: for all images that are vſed in religion, are falſe, and teachers of falſhood, which you with Gregory ſay are Lay-mens bookes; but what ſhall they teach ſaith Abacuck and Ieremy, but lies and vanitie? where note that Ieremy calleth the image wood, by Synecdoche, ſignifying all images made with hands, of any matter. Againe hee ſaith, every artificer is confounded in his image, becauſe it is falſe which hee hath made, and there is no breath in it. In which verſe it is to bee obſerved, that hee vſeth firſt the word Peſel, ſaying Mippeſel and afterward Niſco, for the ſame image made by the artificer, without diſtinction of graving or melting, at leaſtwiſe for the ſenſe, though the words bee divers. Even ſo your vulgar Latine tranſlator uſeth Sculptile, conflatile, imaginem & ſimulachrum, for one and the ſame thing. The Scripture therefore telling us that all images are falſe, becauſe they being voide of life, are ſet up to repreſent the living, it is not our fantaſie, but the authoritie of Gods word, that cauſeth us to reject your fantaſticall diſtinction, of true and falſe images.

made with hands, leauing out the word idols altogether, as though hee had ſaid, nothing made with hand, were to bee adored, not the Arke, the propitiatorie, no, nor the holy Croſſe it ſelfe, that our Sauiour ſhed his blood upon. As before you added to the text, ſo here you diminiſh and take from it at your pleaſure.

FVLK. 26. That (thing) is put for idoll, I confeſſe it to bee a fault in ſome tranſlations, but in the Geneua Bible it is reformed. Contempt of the authoritie of that Apocryphall chapter (as it ſeemed) did breede that negligence. Where you write, that hee ſhould by ſaying, I worſhip not things made with hands, haue denied the Arke, and the propitiatorie to bee worſhipped, it is very true, for neither of both was to bee worſhipped, as they were made with hands, but God was to bee worſhipped where they were, and thoſe things to bee reuerently eſteemed, as the Sacraments, of Gods preſence. As for the croſſe whereon Chriſt died, I ſee no cauſe why it ſhould bee worſhipped, if it were to bee had, but rather, if it were worſhipped, it ſhould bee ſerued as the braſen Serpent was. None of the Apoſtles made any account of it: Nicodemus and Ioſeph of Arimathea, if there had beene any matter of religion in it, might haue preſerued it, and not haue ſuffered it to bee buried in the earth, with the two other croſſes, as the ſtorie of the inuention ſaith, if it bee true. At the finding whereof, Helena, as Saint Ambroſe writeth, Regem adorauit, non lignum utique, quia hic gentilis eſt error & vanitas impiorum. Shee worſhipped the King, not the tree verily, for this is an Heatheniſh errour and vanity of ungodly men. De obit. Theodoſij.

MART. 27. But concerning the word image, which you make to bee the Engliſh of all the Latine, Hebrew and Greeke words, bee they neuer ſo many and ſo diſtinct, I beſeech you, what reaſon had you to tranſlate γλυπτὰ, images, Sap. 15. verſ. 13. doth the Greeke word ſo ſignifie? doth not the ſentence following, tell you that it ſhould haue beene tranſlated, grauen idols? for thus it ſaith, They iudged all the idols of the nations to bee Gods. Loe, your images, or rather, loe, the true names of the Pagans Gods, which it pleaſeth you to call, images, images.

FVLK. 27. I thinke you are not able to proue, that wee make, image the Engliſh to all the Hebrew words, though you boldly affirme it. But in the place by you mentioned, I ſuppoſe they tranſlated the Greeke word grauen or carued images, rather than idoll, becauſe the writer in that place, Sap. 15. 13. ſpeaketh of the firſt framing and faſhioning of thoſe images, which though the purpoſe of the workeman bee neuer ſo wicked, yet can not properly bee called idols, before they bee abuſed by them that worſhip them.

MART. 28. But (to conclude this point) you might, and it would haue well becommed you, in tranſlating or expounding the foreſaid words, to haue followed Saint Hierome, the great famous Tranſlator, Comment. in Abac. 2. and Interpreter of the holy Scriptures? who telleth you two ſenſes of the foreſaid words: the one literall, of the Idols of the Gentiles: the other myſticall, of Hereſies and errours. Sculptile, ſaith he, and conflatile: I take to bee perverſe opinions, which are adored of the Authors that made them. See Arius, that graued to himſelfe this idoll, that Chriſt was onely a creature, and adored that which hee had grauen. Behold Eunomius, how hee molted and caſt a falſe image, and bowed to that which hee had molten. Suppoſe hee had exemplified of the two condemned Heretikes, Iouinian, and Vigilantius alſo: had hee not touched your idols, that is, the old condemned Hereſies, which you at this day adore?

FVLK. 28. It becommeth us beſt in tranſlation, to follow the originall text, and as neere as we can, the true meaning of the holy Ghoſt. As for the two ſenſes, which Hieronym telleth, ſtand whole and untouched, for our tranſlation: There is a difference betweene a tranſlation, and a commentarie. In commenting upon the text, they that ſee it conuenient, may apply the Idols of the Gentiles, and the worſhip of them, to the hereſies of our times, of the Papiſts, Anabaptiſts, Libertines, and ſuch like, as the Apoſtle doth by ſimilitude to couetouſneſſe. As for old condemned hereſies, which you charge us to worſhip, as idols, you are able to proue none, whatſoeuer you babble of Vigilantius, and Iouinian, neither of both doe wee follow in any errour, much leſſe in any hereſie.

MART. 29. Theſe onely (I meane hereſies and heretikes) are the idols and idolaters (by the ancient Doctors iudgement) which haue beene among Chriſtians, ſince the idolatrie of the Gentiles ceaſed, Zach. 13. according to the Prophets. Therefore Saint Hierome ſaith againe: If thou ſee a man that will loco citato. not yeeld to the truth, but when the falſhood of his opinions is once ſhewed, perſeuereth ſtill in that hee began: thou maieſt aptly ſay, Sperat in figmento ſuo, and hee maketh dumme Oſee. 11. or deafe idols. And againe, All Heretikes haue their gods: and whatſoeuer they haue forged, they adore the ſame as Sculptile, and Conflatile: that is as a grauen and molten Oſee. 12. idoll. And againe, Hee ſaith well, I haue found unto my ſelfe an idoll: For, all the forgeries of Heretikes are as the Idols of the Gentiles: In 5. Amos. neither doe they much differ in impietie, though in name they ſeeme to differ. And againe, Whatſoeuer according to the letter is ſpoken againſt the Idolatrie of the Iewes, doe thou referre all this unto them, which under the name of Chriſt worſhippe idols, and forging to themſelues perverſe opinions, cary the Tabernacle of their King the Deuill, and the image of their idols. For they worſhip not an Idoll, but for varietie of their doctrine, they adore diuers Gods. And hee put in very well, which you made to your ſelues: for they receiued them not of God, but forged them of their owne minde. And of the idoll of Samaria, hee ſaith, wee alwayes In 8. Amos. underſtand Samaria, (and the idoll of Samaria) in the perſon of Heretikes, the ſame Prophet ſaying, WOE BE TO THEM THAT DESPISE SION AND TRVST IN Chap. 6. THE MOVNT OF SAMARIA. For Heretikes deſpiſe the Church of God, and truſt in the falſhood of their opinions, erecting themſelues againſt the knowledge of God: and ſaying, when they haue diuided the people (by ſchiſme) wee haue no part in Dauid, nor inheritance in the ſonne of Ieſſe.

FVLK. 29. Not theſe onely, but the idols of the Simoniſts, Valentinians, Gnoſtici, Carpocratites, Collyridians, and ſuch like, made with hands, of Chriſt, and his mother, of Paul, and Simon, and Selene, and Pythagoras, &c. and ſuch other, were idols of falſe Chriſtians, ſince the idolatrie of the Gentiles gaue place, by the iudgement of Ireneus, Epiphanius, and other ancient Doctors. And whatſoeuer you cite, or can cite out of Saint Hierome, againſt the idols of hereſies, agreeth moſt aptly to your ſelues, the Papiſts, who worſhip not onely idols made with hands, but alſo the idols of your braines, which are abhominable hereſies.

MART. 30. Thus the Reader may ſee, that the holy Scriptures which the aduerſaries falſly tranſlate againſt the holy images of our Sauiour Chriſt, and his Saints, to make us idolaters, doe indeed concerne their idols, and condemne them as idolaters, which forge new opinions to themſelues, ſuch as the ancient fathers knew not, and adore them, and their owne ſenſe and interpretation of Scriptures, ſo farre and ſo vehemently, that they preferre it before the approued iudgement of all the generall Councels and holy Doctors, and for maintenance of the ſame, corrupt the holy Scriptures at their pleaſure, and make them ſpeake according to their fancies, as we haue partly ſhewed, and now are to declare further.

FVLK. 30. Thus the Reader may ſee, that when you haue cauilled, quarrelled, falſified, and ſlaundered, as much as you can, to charge us with falſe tranſlation of the Scripture, concerning images, you can finde nothing worth the noting: but if ſome ſmall overſight through negligence, or perhaps the Printers fault, hath eſcaped, you make a great matter of it, although it bee corrected by our ſelues in other tranſlations, and when all other matter faileth, you returne to your accuſtomed veine of rayling, and reuiling, which in no wiſe mans iudgement, deſerveth any anſwer, becauſe it is ſo generall.

MARTIN.

CHAP. IIII.

The ECCLESIASTICALL uſe of words turned into their ORIGINALL and PROFANE ſignification.

WE ſpake a little before of the double ſignification of words, the one according to the originall propertie, the other according to the uſuall taking thereof in all vulgar ſpeech and writing. Theſe words (as by the way, wee ſhewed before upon occaſion of the Aduerſaries graunt) are to bee tranſlated in their vulgar and uſuall ſignification, not as they ſignifie by their originall propertie. As for example: Maior in the originall ſignification, is greater. But when wee ſay, The Maior of London, now it is taken and ſoundeth in every mans eare, for ſuch an Officer: and no man will ſay, The greater of London, according to the originall propertie of it. Likewiſe, Epiſcopus, a Greeke word, in the originall ſenſe, is every Overſeer, as Tully uſeth it, and other prophane writers: but among Chriſtians, in Eccleſiaſticall ſpeech, it is a Biſhop. And no man will ſay, My Lord Overſeer of London, for my Lord Biſhop. Likewiſe wee ſay, Seauen Deacons, S. Steuen a Deacon. No man will ſay, Seauen Miniſters, S. Steuen a Miniſter, Although that bee the originall ſignification of the word Deacon. But by Eccleſiaſticall uſe and appropriation being taken for a certaine degree of the Clergie, ſo it ſoundeth in every mans eares, and ſo it muſt bee tranſlated. As wee ſay, Nero made many Martyrs: not, Nero made many witneſſes: and yet Martyr by the firſt originall propertie of the word, is nothing elſe but a witneſſe. Wee ſay, Baptiſme is a ſacrament: not, waſhing is a ſacrament. Yet Baptiſme and waſhing, by the firſt originall propertie of the word is all one.

Chap. 3. num. 17. 18. See alſo M. Whitaker pag. 209. and the 6. ch. of this booke (num. 6. 7. 8. & num. 13. &c.) much more of this matter.

FVLKE.

WE haue alſo anſwered before, that words muſt not bee alwayes tranſlated, according to their originall and generall ſignification, but according to ſuch ſignification, as by uſe they are appropried to bee taken. Wee agree alſo that words taken by cuſtome of ſpeech into an Eccleſiaſticall meaning, are not to bee altered into a ſtrange or prophane ſignification. For ſuch vanities and novelties of words, the Apoſtle prohibiteth, whereof the popiſh tranſlation of the new Teſtament is fraught full. Notwithſtanding our meaning is not, that if any Greeke tearmes, or words of any other language, haue of long time beene uſurped in our Engliſh tongue, the true underſtanding of which, is unknowen at this day, to the common people: but that the ſame tearmes may bee either in tranſlation, or expoſition, ſet out plainely, to enforme the ſimplicitie of the ignorant, by ſuch words, as of them are better underſtood. Alſo when thoſe tearmes are abuſed by cuſtome of ſpeech, to ſignifie ſome other thing, than they were firſt appointed for, or elſe bee taken ambiguouſly for divers things: wee ought not to bee ſuperſticious in theſe caſes, but to *avoide miſunderſtanding, wee may uſe words according to their originall ſignification, as they were taken in ſuch time, as they were written by the inſtruments of the holy Ghoſt. As for example, if a Biſhop bee miſtaken by the people, either for ſuch an idoll as the Papiſts uſed to make of their Saint Nicolas Biſhops, or elſe for a great Lord onely, that rideth about in a white rochet, they may bee told, that the name of a Biſhop deſcribeth his office, that is, to bee an overſeer of the flocke of Chriſt, committed to his charge. Likewiſe if the word Deacon, bee taken for ſuch an one, as at a popiſh maſſe ſtandeth in a diſguiſed tunicle, holding a patten, or ſome other Idolatrous bable vſed of them: the people muſt bee taught, that this name ſignifieth a Miniſter, which was ordained not to ſerue the Popiſh altar, but the poore mens tables, that is, to provide for the poore, and to ſee the Churches almes beſtowed upon them. Alſo if the name of Martyrs bee not underſtood, but taken onely for them that are tormented and rent in body, as the common ſpeech is to ſay, of men and beaſts, that they are martyred, when their bodies are wounded and mangled: here it is needfull to ſhew, that the Saints that ſuffered for Chriſt, had their name of their witneſſe or teſtimony, not of their paines and torments. The name of Baptiſme is ſo common to Chriſtians, that it neede not to bee changed into waſhing: but yet it may and ought to bee explicated unto the unlearned, what this word doth ſignifie, which is no prophane ſignification, but a true and generall underſtanding of the word, which is vſed of the Evangeliſt for other waſhings than the Sacrament of Baptiſme, and ſo, you are inforced to tranſlate it, Mark.7.

MART. 2. Now then to come to our purpoſe, ſuch are the abſurd tranſlations of the Engliſh Bibles, and altogether like unto theſe. Namely, when they tranſlate congregation for Church, Elder for Prieſt, Image for Idoll, diſſenſion for ſchiſme, Generall for Catholike, ſecret for Sacrament, overſeer for Biſhop, * meſſenger for Angell, embaſſadour for Apoſtle, Miniſter for Deacon, and ſuch like: to what other end bee theſe deceitfull tranſlations, but to conceale and obſcure, the name of the Church, and dignities thereof mentioned in the holy Scriptures: to diſſemble the word ſchiſme (as they doe alſo * hereſie and Heretike) for feare of diſgracing their ſchiſmes and hereſies, to ſay of Matrimonie, neither Sacrament which is the Latine, nor myſterie which is the Greeke, but to goe as farre as they can poſſibly from the common uſuall and Eccleſiaſticall words ſaying, This is a great ſecret: in favour of their hereſie, that Matrimonie is no Sacrament.

Gal.5. Tit 3. 1 Cor.11. Bib.1562. Eph.5.v.32.

FVLK. 2. Abſurd tranſlations of the Engliſh Bibles, you ſay, are congregation for Church, Elder for Prieſt, Image for Idoll and ſuch like. The word Church being ambiguouſly taken of the people for the place of aſſembly, and the aſſembly it ſelfe, it was as lawfull for us to call congregation, as for you to call it aſſembly, Act.7. This word Prieſt, commonly taken for a Sacrificer, and the ſame that Sacerdos, and ſo by you tranſlated: there was good occaſion to uſe the word Elder, for which you uſe Senior, or aunciene in your tranſlation, which is a name of authoritie, as over-ſeer is of diligence, Miniſter of ſervice, Paſtor of feeding: all which names ſet foorth a true Biſhoppe, Paſtor, and Elder, and if you will needs haue it, of a true Prieſt. Of Image for Idoll is ſaid enough, in the next Chapter before. Schiſme I know not how Engliſhmen ſhould underſtand, except it were engliſhed by diſſenſion, diviſion, rending or ſome ſuch like. Of generall for Catholike, wee ſhall ſpeake anon. Secret for Sacrament, wee uſe, becauſe wee would retaine the Eccleſiaſticall uſe of this word Sacrament which is to ſignifie the ſeales of Gods

Gods promiſes, and not confound it with every holy or unholy ſecret thing. The Greeke word myſterie, which you would enjoyne us to uſe, was in the time of the firſt tranſlation more unknowen, than that wee could well haue uſed it, except wee would haue followed your veine, in vanitie and noveltie of tearmes, Prepuce, neophyte, gratis, depoſitum, &c. or elſe made generall and common the proper uſe of this Eccleſiaſticall tearme Sacrament, to every myſterie, and called the Sacrament of preaching, of publiſhing the Goſpell to the Gentiles, of the ſeven ſtarres, as you doe, and yet in the Sacrament of the whore of Babylon, you leaue it, and call it myſterie, Apoc.17.v.7. as you ſhould bee enforced to doe, if you would tranſlate the old Teſtament out of Latine, Dan.2. divers times, except you would call Nabuchadonoſors dreame, a Sacrament, and Dan.4. where the King ſaith, that to Daniel no ſecret is impoſſible, meaning unknowne, or not underſtood, you would ſay, no Sacrament; and Tob.12. you would tranſlate, Sacramentum Regis abſcondere bonum eſt, It is a good thing to hide the Kings Sacrament, where you ſhould ſay ſecret, and where the Engliſh phraſe would hardly beare you to ſay the Kings myſterie. Of the other tearmes, in the places by you quoted, it ſhall bee ſufficient to ſpeake. But I haue rendred reaſonable cauſes of theſe tearmes hitherto: ſo that no man, but mad with malice, would thinke wee conceale the name of Church, and dignities thereof, in hatred of them, or doe diſſemble the names of ſchiſme and hereſie, in favour of thoſe abominations, which are as well ſet forth to their deteſtation, in the tearmes of diſſention and ſects. As for the name Sacrament, wee finde not in the Greeke; but myſterium wee tranſlate a ſecret or a myſterie, as the word ſignifieth, which nothing favoureth the pretended Sacrament of Matrimonie.

MART.3. Saint Paul ſaith as plaine as hee can ſpeake, I beſeech you brethren that you all ſay one thing, and that there bee no ſchiſme among you. They tranſlate for ſchiſmes, diſſentions, which may bee in prophane and worldly things, as well as in matters of religion. But ſchiſmes are thoſe that divide the unitie of the Church, whereof they know themſelues guiltie. S. Paul ſaith as plainely as is poſſible, A man that is an heretike avoid after the firſt and ſecond admonition. They tranſlated in the Bible of the yeere 1562. A man that is an Author of ſects. And where the Greeke is hereſie, reckoned among damnable ſinnes, they ſay, Sects, favouring that name for their owne ſakes, and diſſembling it, as though the holy Scriptures ſpake not againſt Hereſie or Heretikes, Schiſme, or Schiſmatikes.

1 Cor.1.v.

Tit.3. αἱρετικὸν ἄνθρωπον. αἱρέσεις. Gal.5

FVLK. 3. Saint Paul indeed ſpeaketh plainely in Greeke, but if you ſpeake Engliſh, and ſay ſchiſmes, 40000. of the people in England will ſweare they underſtand you not. But ſchiſmes (you ſay) are thoſe that divide the vnitie of the Church; diſſentions may bee in prophane and worldly things. Verily all ſchiſmes divide not the Church, for they were not all the Church, of whom it is ſaid in Saint Iohn 9. There was a ſchiſme among them: For I thinke the beſt of the Phariſees were ſcarce good members of the Church. Againe, where Saint Paul doth ſay, leſt there ſhould bee a ſchiſme in the body, 1 *Cor.*12. hee ſpeaketh of the naturall body, whereunto hee compareth the Church. Saint Paul alſo ſaith as plainely as he can ſpeake in Greeke, 1 *Cor.*11.*v.*18. I heare that there bee ſchiſmes among you; yet your vulgar Latine Tranſlator is bold to ſay Sciſſuras, cuttings or rendings, where you are bold to goe from your Latine text, and call them ſchiſmes. And for explicating the Greeke name of hereſie, by ſects, why ſhould wee bee more blamed, than the vulgar Latine Tranſlator, who commonly tranſlateth it Sectas, and namely *Gal.*5. 2 *Pet.*2. *Act.*24. divers times, 26. and 28. in all which places you your ſelues tranſlate ſects. Is it becauſe hee or you favour hereſies and heretikes? Will you never leaue this fooliſh wrangling, which alwayes turneth you to the greater diſcredit?

MART. 4. As alſo they ſuppreſſe the very name Catholike, when it is expreſly in the Greeke, for malice toward Catholikes and Catholike Religion, becauſe they know themſelues never ſhall bee called or knowne by that name. And therefore their two Engliſh Bibles accuſtomed to bee read in their Church (therefore belike moſt authenticall) leaue it cleane out in the title of all thoſe Epiſtles, which haue beene knowne by the name of Catholicæ Epiſtolæ ever ſince the Apoſtles time: and their latter Engliſh Bible (dealing ſomewhat more honeſtly) hath turned the word Catholike into Generall, ſaying, The Generall Epiſtle of Iames, of Peter, &c. As if a man ſhould ſay in his Creede, I beleeue the Generall Church, becauſe hee would not ſay, the Catholike Church: as the Lutheran Catechiſmes ſay for that purpoſe, I beleeue the Chriſtian Church. So that by this rule, when Saint Auguſtine telleth that the manner was in Cities where there was liberty of Religion, to aske, Qua itur ad Catholicam? wee muſt tranſlate it, Which is the way to the Generall? And when Saint Hieroime ſaith, If wee agree in faith with the Biſhop of Rome, ergo Catholici ſumus, wee muſt tranſlate it, Then wee are Generals. Is not this good ſtuffe? Are they not aſhamed thus to invert and pervert all words againſt common ſenſe, and uſe, and reaſon? Catholike and Generall or univerſall (wee know) is by the originall pro- pertie of the word all one: but according to the uſe of both, as it is ridiculous to ſay, A Catholike Councell, for a Generall Councell; ſo is it ridiculous and impious to ſay, Generall for Catholike, in derogation thereof, and for to hide it under a buſhell.

Fvlk. 4. I doe not know where the name of Catholike is once expreſſed in the text of the Bible, that it might bee ſuppreſſed by us, which are not like to beare malice to the Catholike Church, or Religion, ſeeing wee teach even our young children to beleeue the holy Catholike Church. But not finding the word Catholike in the text, you runne to the title of the ſeven Epiſtles, called as commonly Canonicall as Catholike or Generall. But Euſebius belike teſtifieth that they haue beene ſo called ever ſince the Apoſtles time, lib. 2. cap. 22. I marvell you are not aſhamed to avouch ſuch an untruth. Euſebius ſpeaking of his owne time, ſaith, they are ſo called, but that they haue beene ſo called ever ſince the Apoſtles time, hee ſaith not. And ſo farre off hee is from ſaying ſo, that hee pronounceth the Epiſtle of Saint Iames in the ſame place, to bee a baſtard, and ſpeaketh doubtfully of the Epiſtle of Saint Iude. But whereas in one tranſlation wee uſe the word Generall for Catholike, you make a great May-game of it, ſhewing your wit and your honeſty both at once. For theſe 5. of Iames, 2. of Peter, one of Iude, and the firſt of Iohn, which are properly and rightly ſo intituled, haue that title, becauſe they are not ſent to any particular Church, or perſons, but to all in generall, as the Greeke Scholiaſt truely noteth. And Oecumenius before the Epiſtle of Saint Iames ſaith expreſly, Catholicæ, id eſt, univerſales, dicuntur hæ, &c. Theſe Epiſtles are called Catholike, that is to ſay, Vniverſall or Generall, becauſe not diſtinctly to one Nation or Citie (as Saint Paul to the Rommes, or Corinthians) this company of our Lords Diſciples doth dedicate theſe Epiſtles, but generally to the faithfull, or to the Iewes that were diſperſed, as alſo Peter: or elſe to all Chriſtians living under the ſame faith. For otherwiſe, if they ſhould bee called Catholike, in reſpect of the ſoundneſſe of the doctrine contained in them, what reaſon were there more to call them ſo, than to call all the Epiſtles of Saint Paul? Wherefore in this title, which yet is no part of the holy Scriptures, it is rightly tranſlated Generall. The other Tranſlators ſeeing ſeven to bee called generall, where onely fiue are ſo indeede, and ſeeing them alſo called canonicall, which ſhould ſeeme to bee a controlling of Saint Pauls Epiſtles, left out that title altogether, as being no part of the text, and word of God, but an addition of the Stationers or writers.

Mart. 5. Is it becauſe they would follow the Greeke, that they turne καθολικὴ, generall? Even as iuſt, as Catholica. and when they turne εἴδωλον image, παράδοσιν inſtruction, δικαίωμα ordinance, σχίσμα diſſention, αἵρεσιν ſect, μυστήριον ſecret, and ſuch like, where they goe as farre from the Greeke as they can, will bee glad to pretend for anſwer of their word ſect, that they follow our Latine tranſlation. Alas poore ſhift, for them that otherwiſe pretend nothing but the Greeke, to bee tryed by that Latine which themſelues condemne. But wee honour the ſaid text, and tranſlate it ſects alſo, as wee there finde it, and as wee doe in other places follow the Latine text, and take not our advantage of the Greeke text, becauſe wee know the Latine tranſlation is good alſo and ſincere, and approved in the Church by long antiquity, and it is in ſenſe all one to us with the Greeke, but not ſo to them, who in theſe dayes of controverſie about the Greeke and Latine text, by not following the Greeke, which they profeſſe ſincerely to follow, bewray themſelues that they doe it for a malicious purpoſe.

Fvlk. 5. It is becauſe wee would haue the Greeke underſtood, as it is taken in thoſe places, when wee turne Catholike generall, Idolum image, παράδοσιν inſtruction, δικαίωμα ordinance, σχίσμα diſſention, αἵρεσιν ſect, μυστήριον ſecret, and ſuch like. And where you ſay, wee would be glad for our word ſect, to pretend to follow your Latine tranſlation, it is a fable: for in tranſlating ſect, wee follow the Greeke as truely, as your Latine tranſlation doth, which if it be true and ſincere, as you confeſſe, what devilliſh madneſſe poſſeſſeth your malicious minde, to burden us with ſuch purpoſes, as no reaſonable man would once imagine or thinke of, that wee ſhould uſe that terme in favour of hereſie, and heretikes, whom wee thinke worthy to ſuffer death, if they would not repent, and ceaſe to blaſpheme, or ſeduce the ſimple.

Chap. V.

Hereticall tranſlation againſt the Chvrch.

AS they ſuppreſſe the name Catholike, even ſo did they in their firſt Engliſh Bible the name of Church it ſelfe, becauſe at their firſt revolt and apoſtaſie from that, that was univerſally knowne to be the only true Catholike Church, great objection againſt their ſchiſmaticall proceedings, and it ſtucke much in the peoples conſciences, that they forſooke the Church, and that the Church condemned them. Whereupon very wilily they ſuppreſſed the name Church in their Engliſh tranſlation, ſo that in all that Bible ſo long read in their congregations, wee cannot once finde the name thereof. Iudge by theſe places which ſeeme of moſt importance for the dignity, preheminence, and authority of the Church. Bib. 1562.

FVLKE.

HOw can we ſuppreſſe the name Catholike, which the holy Scripture never uſeth? As for the name Church, I have already ſhewed diverſe times, that for to avoyd the ambiguous taking of that tearme, it was at the firſt leſſe uſed, but never refuſed, for doubt of any objection of the Catholike church againſt us; the profeſſion of which being contained in our Engliſh Creed, how could wee relinquiſh, or not acknowledge to bee contained in the Scripture, in which wee taught, that all Articles of faith neceſſary to ſalvation are comprehended? But we are contented to be judged by thoſe places which ſeeme of moſt importance for the dignity, preheminence and authority of the Church.

Mart. 2. Our Saviour ſaith, Vpon this Rocke I will build my Church, and the gates of hell ſhall not prevaile againſt it: They make him to ſay, Vpon this Rocke I will build my congregation. Againe; If hee heare not them, tell the Church; and if he heare not the Church, let him be to thee as an Heathen, and as a Publicane: They ſay, Congregation. Againe, who would thinke they would have altered the word Church in the Epiſtle to the Epheſians? Their Engliſh tranſlation for many yeares read thus, Yee husbands love your wives as Chriſt loved the Congregation, and cleanſed it to make it unto himſelfe a glorious Congregation, without ſpotte or wrinkle. And, This is a great ſecret, but I ſpeake of Chriſt and of the Congregation. And to Timothy, The houſe of God, which is the Congregation of the living God, the Pillar and ground of trueth. Here is no word of Church, which in Latine and Greeke is, Eccleſia Dei vivi, Columna et firmamentum veritatis. Likewiſe to the Epheſians againe, He hath made him head of the Congregation, which is his body. And to the Hebrewes they are all bold to tranſlate, The Congregation of the firſt borne, where the Apoſtle nameth heavenly Hieruſalem, the Citie of the living God, &c. Matt. 16. Matt. 18. Eph. 5. 1 Tim. 3. Eph. 1. Heb. 12. v. 23.

Fvlk. 2. In the firſt Engliſh Bible printed, where it was thus tranſlated, Mat. 16. Vpon this Rocke I will build my Congregation, the note in the margent is thus, "upon this Rocke, that is, as ſaith S. Auguſtine, upon the confeſſion which thou haſt made, acknowledging mee to bee Chriſt, the Sonne of the living God, I will build my congregation or Church. Was not this Tranſlatour (thinke you) ſore afrayd of the name of the Church? What other thing ſhould he underſtand by the word Congregation, in all places by you noted, or in any like, but the Church, as he doeth here expound himſelfe? And this tranſlation almoſt word for word doeth the Bible you call 1562. follow.

Mart. 3. So that by this tranſlation, there is no more Church militant and triumphant, but congregation; and he is not head of the Church, but of the Congregation: and this congregation at the time of the making of this tranſlation, was in a few new Brethren of England, for whoſe ſake the name Church was left out of the Engliſh Bible, to commend the name of congregation, above the name of Church. Whereas Saint Auguſtine telleth them, that the Iewes Synagogue was a Congregation, the Church a convocation; and that a congregation is of Beaſts alſo, a convocation of reaſonable Creatures onely; and that the Iewes congregation is ſometimes called the Church, but the Apoſtles never called the Church Congregation. Doe you ſee then what a goodly change they have made, for Church, to ſay congregation; ſo making themſelves a very Synagogue, and that by the property of the Greeke word, which yet (as S. Auguſtine telleth them moſt truely) ſignifyeth rather a convocation? In Pſal. 81. in initio. συναγωγή. ἐκκλησία.

FVLK. 3. A ſtrange matter that the Church militant and triumphant ſhould bee excluded, by uſing the word congregation, when by it nothing is ſignifyed, but the congregation or Church militant and triumphant; and that Chriſt ſhould no more bee head of the Church, when hee is head of the congregation, where the difference is onely in ſound of wordes, not in ſenſe or meaning. Your vaine and ridiculous ſurmiſe, why the name of Church ſhould bee left out of the Bible, I have before confuted, ſhewing that in every Bible it is either in the text, or in the notes. But Saint Auguſtine telleth us (ſay you) that the Iewes Synagogue was a congregation, the Church a convocation; and that a congregation is of beaſtes alſo, a convocation of reaſonable creatures onely. But Saint Luke in the perſon of Saint Steven telleth us, and Auguſtine telleth us as much, that the Synagogue of the Iewes is called alſo Eccleſia, which ſignifyeth the Church and congregation. That Congregatio the Latine word may bee of beaſtes alſo, it skilleth not, for the Church of Chriſt is called alſo a flocke, and ſheepe of his paſture. But hee that ſhould ſay in Engliſh a congregation of beaſtes, might bee taken for as wiſe a man, as hee that ſayd an audience of ſheepe. And whereas Saint Auguſtine telleth you, that the Iewes congregation is ſometimes called the Church, what is the cauſe that you tranſlate it the aſſembly, Act. 7. even as you doe the congregation of the idolatrous Epheſians, Act. 19. But further (you ſay) Auguſtine telleth us, that the Apoſtles never called the Church congregation. It is a world to ſee what fooliſh fetches you have to deceive the ignorant. Auguſtine ſayth the Apoſtles never called our aſſembly Synagoga, but always Eccleſia; and yet hee is a little deceived: for S. Paul calleth our gathering together unto Chriſt ἐπισυναγωγὴ, but Congregatio, a congregation, hee ſayth not. And although hee make a nice diſtinction betweene the wordes Congregation and Convocation, yet all men which know the uſe of theſe wordes, will confeſſe no neceſſity of a Iewiſh Synagogue, to bee implyed in the word congregation, more then in the word ἐκκλησία, which of the holy Ghoſt is uſed for an aſſembly or gathering together, either of Iewes, Chriſtians, or Gentiles. And therefore it ſeemeth the Tranſlatour uſed the word congregation, which is indifferent for all, even as the word Eccleſia is uſed both in the Greeke and vulgar Latine.

MART. 4. If they appeale here to their latter tranſlations, wee muſt obtayne of them to condemne the former, and to confeſſe this was a groſſe fault committed therein: and that the Catholike Church of our Country did not ill to forbid and burne ſuch Bookes, which were ſo tranſlated by Tyndall and the like, as being not indeed Gods booke, word, or Scripture, but the Divells word. Yea they muſt confeſſe, that the leaving out of this word Church altogether, was of an hereticall ſpirit againſt the Catholike Romane Church, becauſe then they had no Calviniſticall Church in any like forme of religion and governement to theirs now. Neither will it ſerve them to ſay after their manner. And if a man ſhould tranſlate Eccleſiam, congregation; this is no more abſurdity, then in ſtead of a Greeke word, to uſe a Latine of the ſame ſignification: This (wee trowe) will not ſuffice them in the judgement of the ſimpleſt indifferent Reader.

Confut. of Mr. Howlet, fol. 35

FVLK. 4. Wee neede not to appeale to the latter tranſlations, for any corruption or falſification of the former, no nor for any miſ-tranſlation. For ſeeing the ſpirit of God (as I have ſaid before) uſeth the word Eccleſia generally for a company of Chriſtians, Iewes, and Gentiles, the Tranſlatour hath not gone from the trueth, and uſe of the Scriptures, to uſe the word congregation, which ſignifyeth indifferently all three. Wherefore there needeth no condemnation, nor confeſſion of any groſſe fault herein committed, except you will count it a groſſe fault in Saint Luke, to uſe the word ἐκκλησία without any ſcrupuloſity for all three, as the Tranſlatour doeth the word congregation, and you in two ſignifications the word aſſembly. Neither can your heatheniſh and barbarous burning of the holy Scriptures ſo tranſlated, nor your blaſphemy in calling it the Devils word, bee excuſed, for any fault in the tranſlation which you have diſcovered as yet, or ever ſhall bee able to deſcry. That ſtinking cavill of leaving out of the Bible this word Church altogether, being both fooliſh and falſe, I have anſwered more then once already. It is not left out altogether, that in contents of bookes and chapters, and in notes of explication of this word congregation, is ſet downe. Neither could there bee any purpoſe againſt the Catholike Church of Chriſt, in them that tranſlated and taught the Creede in Engliſh, profeſſing to beleeve the holy Catholike Church. As for our hatred of the malignant Anti-chriſtian Church of Rome, wee never diſſembled the matter, ſo that wee were afrayd openly to profeſſe it; what neede had wee then after ſuch a fantaſticall manner (as is fondly imagined) to inſinuate it?

MART. 5. But, my Maſters, if you would confeſſe the former faults and corruptions never ſo plainly, is that enough to juſtify your corrupt dealing in the holy Scriptures? Is it not an horrible fault ſo wilfully to falſify and corrupt the word of God written by the inſpiration of the holy Ghoſt? May you abuſe the people for certaine yeares with falſe tranſlations, and afterward ſay, Loe we have amended it in our latter tranſlations? Then might the Heretike Beza be excuſed for tranſlating in ſtead of Chriſts ſoule in hell; his carcaſſe in the grave. And becauſe ſome friend told him of that corruption, and he corrected it in the latter editions, he ſhould neverthe leſſe in your judgement, bee counted a right honeſt man. No (be yee ſure) the diſcreet Reader cannot be ſo abuſed, but he will eaſily ſee, that here is a great difference in mending ſome overſight which may eſcape the beſt men: and in your groſſe falſe tranſlations, who at the firſt falſify of a prepenſed malice, and afterwards alter it for very ſhame. Howbeit, to ſay the trueth, in the chiefeſt and principall place that concerneth the Churches perpetuitie and ſtability, you have not yet altered the former tranſlation, but it remaineth as before and is at this day read in your Churches thus, upon this Rocke I will build my congregation. Can it be without ſome hereticall ſubtiltie, that in this place ſpecially and (I thinke) onely you change not the word congregation into Church? Give us a reaſon and diſcharge your credite.

See his new Teſt. in … of the yeare 1556. prin… by Robert Steven in fol. Act. 2. v. 27.

FVLK. 5. You are very hardly, and in very deede maliciouſly bent againſt us, that you will accept no confeſſion of faults eſcaped, never ſo plainely made. As for corrupt dealing in the holy Scriptures, and falſifying of the word of God, you are not able, no not if you would burſt your ſelfe for malice, to convict us. And therefore looke for no confeſſion of any ſuch wickedneſſe, whereof our conſcience is cleare before God, and doeth not accuſe us. As for Bezaes correction of his former tranſlation, Act. 2. verſ. 27. if your dogged ſtomach will not accept, hee ſhall notwithſtanding with all godly learned men bee accounted, as hee deſerveth, for one who hath more profited the Church of God, with his ſincere tranſlation, and learned annotations, then all the Popiſh Seminaries, and Seminariſts, ſhall bee able to hinder it, jangle of groſſe and falſe tranſlations, as long as you will. But the chiefeſt and principall place that concerneth the Churches perpetuitie, is not yet reformed to your minde, For in the Bible 1577. wee reade ſtill Math. 16 upon this Rocke I will build my congregation. If Chriſt have a perpetuall congregation, builded upon the foundation of the Prophets, and Apoſtles, himſelfe beeing the corner ſtone, his Church is in no danger ever to decay. Yet you aske, whether it can bee without ſome hereticall ſubtiltie, that in this place ſpecially, and (as you thinke) onely, the word congregation, is not changed into Church. It is an homelie, but a true Proverbe: the good-wife would never have ſought her daughter in the oven, had ſhee not beene there firſt her ſelfe. You are ſo full of hereticall ſubtilties, and trayterous devices, that you dreame of them in other mens doings, whatſoever commeth into your handes: yea, where you your ſelfe can have no probable imagination what to ſuſpect. And therefore wee muſt give you a reaſon, in diſcharge of our credite. For my part, I know not with what ſpeciall reaſon the Tranſlatour was moved, but I can give you my probable conjecture, that hee thought it all one, (as indeede it is) to ſay my congregation, or my Church. For what is Chriſts congregation, but his Church? or what is Chriſts Church, but his congregation? And yet to put you out of all feare, the Geneva tranſlation hath the word Church, that you make ſo greate account of, as though it were not an indifferent word to the true Church, of true Chriſtians, and the falſe Church of malignant Heretikes: beeing uſurped firſt to ſignify the congregation of Chriſtians, by a Metonymie of the place containing, for the people contained. For the etymologie thereof is from the Greeke word κυριακὴ, which was uſed of Chriſtians for the place of their holy meetings, ſignifying the Lords houſe, therefore in the northerne, which is the more ancient Engliſh ſpeech, is called by contraction Kyrke, more neere to the ſound of the Greeke word. ×

MART. 6. What ſhall I ſay of Beza, whom the Engliſh Bibles alſo follow, tranſlating actively that Greek word, (which in common uſe, and by Saint Chryſoſtomes, and the Greeke doctors expoſition, is a plaine paſſive:) to ſignify, as in his annotations is cleere, that Chriſt may bee without his Church, that is, a head without a body. The words bee theſe in the hereticall tranſlation. Hee gave him to bee the head over all things to the Church, which (Church) is his body, the fulneſſe of him that filleth all in all. Saint Chryſoſtome, ſaith Beza, (hee might have ſaid, all the Greeke and Latine auncient Fathers) taketh it paſſively, in this ſenſe, that Chriſt is filled all in all, becauſe all faithfull men as members, and the whole Church as the body, concurre to the fulneſſe and accompliſhment of Chriſt the head. But this (ſaith he) ſeemeth unto mee a forced interpretation. Why ſo Beza?

Eph. 1. 22. 23. τοῦ πληρουμένου.

FVLK. 6. That Beza tranſlateth the participle τοῦ πληρουμένου, actively, it is plaine, both in the text of his tranſlation, and in his annotations. But that hee doeth it to ſignify, that Chriſt may bee without his Church, that is a head without a body, it is a ſhameleſſe ſlaunder. His wordes, upon which you weave this cobweb, are theſe, Omnino autem hoc addidit Apoſtolus, ut ſciamus Chriſtum per ſe non indigere hoc ſupplemento: ut qui efficiat omnia in omnibus revera: nedum ut ſuppleatur à quoquam, niſi quatenus pro immenſa ſua bonitate Eccleſiam dignatur dignatur ſibi quaſi corporis inſtar adjungere. This the Apoſtle hath added altogether for this end, that wee may know that Chriſt of himſelfe hath no neede of this ſupply: as hee which worketh in trueth all things in all, ſo farre it is, that hee ſhould bee ſupplyed by any body, but that of his infinite goodneſſe, hee vouchſafeth to adjoyne his Church unto himſelfe, as his body. Who but the Devill, would finde fault with this godly and Catholike ſaying? wherein it is affirmed, that Chriſt, which according to the perfection of his divine nature, needeth no ſupply, yet of his infinite mercy, vouchſafeth to become head of his Church, as of his body: ſo that hee will not bee counted perfect without it. Is this to ſay Chriſt may bee a head without a body? or is it for his benefit, or the benefit of his Church, that hee is the head thereof? But the more to lay open this malicious ſlaunder, and impudent falſifying of Bezaes wordes, and meaning, I will ſet downe his ſaying, going immediately before, upon the word πλήρωμα, which hee calleth complementum ſive ſupplementum, a fulfilling or ſupplying. Is enim eſt Chriſti in Eccleſiam amor, &c. For ſuch is the love of Chriſt toward his Church, that whereas hee performeth all things, to all men, unto the full: yet hee eſteemeth himſelfe as an unperfect head, and maymed of the members, unleſſe hee have his Church adjoyned to him as his body. Hereof it commeth that Chriſt is taken ſometimes collectively for the whole Church, adjoyned to her head, as 1 *Cor.*12. *verſ.*12. & 13. and Gal. 3.16. Hereof commeth alſo that phraſe, (in Chriſt) ſo often repeated, which ſignifyeth ſomewhat more expreſly, then with Chriſt, or by Chriſt. Hereof that voyce of Chriſt, Saul, Saul, why doeſt thou perſecute mee? whither alſo pertaineth that which is written, *Col.*1. *verſ.*24. Finally, hereof proceedeth all our hope and conſolation. How thinke you, is not this man willing to ſeparate the Church from Chriſt, the head from the body? O monſtrous malices of godleſſe Papiſts. His expoſition of the place beeing ſuch, as you ſee, let us now examine what can bee ſaid againſt this tranſlation. For a man muſt not tranſlate falſely, to make a true ſenſe. It is alledged againſt him, that Chryſoſtome, and all the Greeke and Latine Fathers take the participle paſſively. Beza confeſſeth it of Chryſoſtome, whom the latter Greeke writers commonly doe follow. But the participle, beeing derived of the meane verbe, may have either paſſive or Active ſignification. But why doeth Beza ſay, that the expoſition of Chryſoſtome is forced, which taketh it paſſively? hee ſayth not in reſpect of Chryſoſtomes ſenſe, which hee himſelfe followeth, and it is contained in the word πλήρωμα, but in reſpect of the Grammar, that πάντα ſhould bee put abſolutely without any word to governe it, ſeeing the participle of the meane verbe, may bee taken actively, and governe πάντα, beeing the accuſative caſe.

MART. 7. Marke his Doctours whom hee oppoſeth to the Fathers, both Greeke and Latine. Becauſe Xenophon (ſaith hee) in ſuch a place, and Plato in ſuch a place, uſe the Greeke word actively. I omit this miſerable match, and unworthy names of Xenophon and Plato, in triall of Saint Pauls words, againſt all the glorious Doctours: this is his common cuſtome. I aske him rather of theſe his owne Doctours, how they uſe the Greeke word in other places of their workes? how uſe they it moſt commonly? yea how doe all other Greeke writers, either prophane, or ſacred, uſe it? What ſay the Greeke Readers of all Univerſities? Surely, not onely they, but their Schollers for the moſt part, cannot be ignorant that the uſe of this word, and the like, is paſſive, though ſometime it may alſo ſignifie actively: but that is ſo rare in compariſon of the other, that no man lightly will uſe it, and I am well aſſured, it would be counted a fault, and ſome lacke of ſkill, if one now in his writings that would expreſſe this in Greeke, God filleth all things with his bleſſing, ſhould ſay, πληροῦται πάντα: and, the wine filleth the cuppe, ὁ οἶνος πληροῦται τὸ ποτήριον. Aske them that have ſkill and controle mee. Contrarywiſe, if one would ſay paſſively, All things are filled with Gods bleſſings, The cuppe is filled with wine, Such a prophecie is fulfilled. *What meane Gr*æ*cian would not ſay, as Saint* Chryſoſtome here expoundeth this word, πληροῦται, uſing it paſſively?

FVLK. 7. Marke how malice carryeth this man almoſt into madneſſe. For who but a madde man would thinke, that Beza oppoſeth prophane writers to Eccleſiaſticall Doctors, for underſtanding of the Scripture? The meane verbe πληροῦσθαι, which the meaneſt Grammarian in the world knoweth to bee taken both actively and paſſively by the Grammar rule De verbo medio, Beza prooveth out of Xenophon, and Plato, that it is and may bee uſed actively. Why not therefore in this place of Saint Paul, where both the ſenſe requireth, that one thing bee not repeated twiſe without neceſſary cauſe, and the conſtruction of the word πάντα calleth for it, which otherwiſe is left at randome, without any governement? Seeing therefore wee have the common rule of Grammar, and the example of eloquent writers for uſe, I marveile what Maſter Martine meaneth to waſte ſo many wordes about ſo cleare a matter. No man that knoweth any thing, doubteth but that πληροῦσθαι may bee, and is often taken paſſively: But ſeeing it is alſo found to bee a verbe meane, who neede to bee afrayd to uſe it actively (having Xenophon and Plato for his warrant) yea even in thoſe examples you put of Gods bleſſing filling all things, or the wine filling the cuppe, if any man would ſpeake ſo. But if becauſe the word is more uſually taken paſſively, men would refrayne ſo to ſpeake, yet why ſhould wee thinke that Saint Paul did not uſe it actively? when the Active ſignification is more agreeable, both with his wordes, and with his meaning. But leaſt you ſhould thinke Beza is alone, which taketh it actively, what ſay you to Philippus Montanus one of your owne profeſſion, which in his animadverſions upon Theophylacts tranſlation, by him corrected, ſayth upon this place πληρουμένου qui adimplet, vel adimpletur, verbum enim eſt medium, paſſive autem videtur accipere Theophylactus. Which filleth, or which is filled: for it is a verbe of indifferent ſignification, active or paſſive, but Theophilact ſeemeth to take it paſſively. What ſay you to Iſidorus Clarius, who although in his text hee readeth paſſively, yet in his note, confeſſeth it may bee taken either paſſively or actively. For this is his note. Plenitudo ejus] per omnia enim membra adimpletur Corpus Chriſti, quia omnia in omnibus implet, dum ipſe agit in omnibus, vel per omnes homines hæc implet membra. Sive plenitudinem & complementum omne ſuum habet ipſa Eccleſia ab illo, qui omnia in omnibus adimplet. That is the fulneſſe of him] for by all the members the body of Chriſt is filled, becauſe hee filleth all in all, while hee worketh in all, or throughout all men filleth theſe members. Or elſe the Church her ſelfe hath all her fulneſſe and accompliſhment of him, which filleth all in all. Theſe men both Papiſts, were as good Græcians (I warrant you) as Maſter Gregorie Martine is, or ever will bee, by whom if hee will not bee controuled, it were folly to preſſe him with the judgement of our Greeke Readers, which hee requireth.

MART. 8. Yet (ſaith Beza*) this is a forced interpretation, becauſe* Xenophon foreſooth and Plato (once perhaps in all their whole workes) uſe it otherwiſe. O hereticall blindneſſe or rather ſtubborneſſe, that calleth that forced, which is moſt common and uſuall: and ſeeth not that his owne tranſlation is forced, becauſe it is againſt the common uſe of the word. But no marveil. For hee that in other places thinketh it no forced interpretation, to tranſlate δέχεσθαι, to bee contayned. Which neither Xenophon, nor Plato, nor any Greeke Authour will allow him to doe, and ψυχὴν carcaſſe and πρόγνωσιν, providence, and μετανοοῦντας, them that amend their lives, may much more in this place diſſemble his forced interpretation of πληρουμένου. But why he ſhould call S. Chryſoſtomes interpretation forced, which is the common and uſuall interpretation, that hath no more reaſon then if a very thiefe ſhould ſay to an honeſt man: Thou art a theefe, and not I.

FVLK. 8. I have ſhewed how it is inforced, becauſe in taking the participle paſſively, you muſt either bee inforced to admitt a plaine ſolœciſme, where none needeth: or elſe you muſt hardly underſtand the prepoſition κατ' to governe the accuſative πάντα, as Montanus telleth you in Theophilact, and as Oecumenius doeth, and the ſenſe will bee no more then is contained in the word Complementum. Whereas by taking it actively, the wonderfull goodneſſe of Chriſt ſhineth toward his Church, who although he needeth nothing to make him perfect, as Chryſoſtome ſayth, but ſupplyeth all things in all things, yet it is his gracious pleaſure, to account himſelfe imperfect without his Church, which hee hath united to him as his body, in which hee is not perfect without all his members.

As for your vaine and tædious repetition, like the Cuckowes ſong, of Bezaes miſpriſions. I will not ſtand ſo often to anſwere, as you are diſpoſed to rehearſe them: Onely I muſt admoniſh the Reader, of a piece of your cunning, that in repeating the participle, you change the tempes, and for πληρουμένου, you ſay πεπληρωμένου, as though it were the preterperfect temps, which cannot bee taken, but onely paſſively. I know the Printer ſhall beare the blame of this overſight, but in the meane time it maketh a little ſhew, to a young Græcian, that conſidereth it not.

MART. 9. Is it forced Beza, that Chriſt is filled all in all by the Church? doeth not Saint Paul in the very next words before, call the Church the fulneſſe of Chriſt, ſaying, Which is the fulneſſe of him that is filled all in all? If the Church be the fulneſſe of him, then is hee filled or hath his fulneſſe of the Church, ſo that hee is not a maymed head without a body. This would Saint Paul ſay, if you would give him leave, and this hee doeth ſay, whether you will or no. But what is the cauſe that they will not ſuffer the Apoſtle to ſay ſo? becauſe (ſayth Beza*)* Chriſt needeth no ſuch complement. And if hee needeth it not, then may he be without a Church, and conſequently it is no abſurditie, if the Church hath beene for many yeares not onely inviſible, but alſo not at all. Would a man eaſily at the firſt imagine or conceive, that there were ſuch ſecret poyſon in their tranſlation?

FVLK. 9. You ſhould urge Beza with a Latine Epiſtle, ſeeing you are ſo earneſt in the matter. I have told you that the ſenſe of Chryſoſtome is true, but not flowing eaſily from the wordes of Saint Paul. That Chriſt hath his fulneſſe of the Church, it is granted by Be-ta upon the word Plenitudo or Complementum, as you cannot be ignorant, if you have read Bezaes Annotations, as you pretend. But you charge Beza to ſay, that Chriſt needeth no ſuch complement. Bezaes wordes are as I have ſet them downe before, Vt ſciamus Chriſtum per ſe, non indigere hoc ſupplemento, that wee may know that Chriſt of himſelfe, needeth not this ſupply. Is this all one, with that you report him to ſay? No, his ſaying was too long for your theeviſh bedde, and therefore you cut off Per ſe, of himſelfe, or by himſelfe. What ſay you? Dare you affirme that Chriſt of himſelfe, in reſpect of his divine nature hath neede of any complement? That Chriſt hath alwayes a Church ſince the beginning of the world, and ſhall have to the end, Beza doeth plainely in an hundred places confeſſe: neither can it bee otherwiſe prooved by this tranſlation, nor yet (by Bezaes words that Chriſt of himſelfe is perfect and needeth no ſupply) but that it pleaſeth him to become the head of the Church, as of his body, which his divine and mercifull pleaſure, ſeeing it is immutable, Chriſt cannot bee without his Church, nor the Church without him. Yea as Beza in plaine wordes affirmeth, this is our whole hope and conſolation, that Chriſt eſteemeth himſelfe an imperfect head, and maymed of his members, except hee have his Church adjoyned to him as his body.

ART. 10. Againe, it commeth from the ſame puddle of Geneva, that in their Bibles ſo called, the Engliſh Bezites tranſlate againſt the unitie of the Catholike Church. For whereas themſelves are full of ſects and diſſentions, and the true Church is knowne by unity, and hath this marke given her by Chriſt himſelfe, in whoſe perſon Salomon ſpeaking ſaith, Vna eſt columba mea, that is, One is my Dove, or, My Dove is one. Therefore in ſtead hereof, the foreſaid Bible ſayth, My Dove is alone: Neither Hebrew nor Greeke word having that ſignification, but beeing as proper to ſignifie one, as unus in Latine.

Bib. 1579.
Cant.6.v.8.
μία אחת

FVLK. 10. He that hath any noſe may ſmell, that this cenſure commeth from the ſtinking puddle of Popiſh malice. For hee that ſayth my Dove is alone, Cant. 6. 8. doeth a great deale more ſtrongly advouch the unity of the Church, then he that ſaith my Dove is one. For whereas Salomon ſaith in the verſe going immediately before: There are threeſcore Queenes, and foureſcore Concubines, and of the Damſells without number, if you adde thereto my Dove is one: it may bee thought ſhee is one of thoſe laſt mentioned. But if you ſay as the Geneva Bible doeth, but my Dove is alone, and my undefiled is the onely daughter of her mother: Now the Church is excepted from all the reſt of the Queenes, Concubines, and Damſels. And where you ſay, the Hebrew hath not that ſignification, I pray you goe no further, but even to the ſame verſe, and tell mee whether the ſenſe bee, that ſhee is one of her mothers daughters, or the onely daughter of her mother? Here therefore (as almoſt every where) you doe nothing but ſeeke a knot in a ruſh.

MART. 11. But wee beſeech every indifferent Reader, even for his ſoules health to conſider that one poynt ſpecially before mentioned, of their abandoning the name of Church for ſo many yeares out of their Engliſh Bibles, thereby to defeate the ſtrongeſt argument that might and may poſſibly bee brought againſt them and all other Heretikes: to wit, the authority of the Church which is ſo many ways and ſo greatly recommended unto all Chriſtians in holy Scriptures. Conſider (I pray you) what a malicious intention they had herein, Firſt, that the name Church ſhould never ſound in the common peoples eares out of the Scriptures: Secondly, that as in other things, ſo in this alſo it might ſeeme to the ignorant a good argument againſt the authority of the Church, to ſay, Wee finde not this word (Church) in all the holy Scriptures. For as in other articles they ſay ſo, becauſe they finde not the expreſſe word in the holy Scripture, ſo did they well provide, that the word (Church) in the holy Scriptures ſhould not ſtay or hinder their ſchiſmaticall and hereticall proceedings, as long as that was the onely Engliſh tranſlation, that was read and liked among the people: that is, ſo long till they had by preaching taken away the Catholike Churches credite and authority altogether, among the ignorant by oppoſing the Scriptures thereunto; which themſelves had thus falſely tranſlated.

FVLK. 11. Wee truſt every indifferent Reader will conſider, that they which tranſlated the Greeke word Eccleſia, the congregation, and admoniſhed in the notes that they did by that word meane the Church, and they which in the Creede might have tranſlated Eccleſiam Catholicam, the univerſall congregation, taught all Children to ſay, I beleeve the Catholike Church, could have no ſuch devilliſh meaning, as this malicious ſlaunderer, of his owne head doeth imagine. For who ever heard any man reaſon thus. This word Church is not found in the Scripture, therefore the Church muſt bee deſpiſed, &c. Rather it is like (beſide other reaſons before alleadged) that thoſe firſt Tranſlatours, having in the old Teſtament out of the Hebrew tranſlated the wordes Cahal Hadath, and ſuch other for the congregation (where the Papiſts will not tranſlate the Church, although their Latine text bee Eccleſia, as appeareth, Act. 7. where they call it aſſembly) thought good to retaine the word congregation, throughout the new Teſtament alſo, leaſt it might bee thought of the ignorant, that God had no Church in the time of the old Teſtament. Howſoever it was, they departed neither from the word, nor meaning of the holy Ghoſt, nor from the uſage of that word Eccleſia, which in the Scripture ſignifyeth as generally any aſſembly, as the word congregation doeth in Engliſh.

MARTIN.

CHAP. VI.

Hereticall tranſlation againſt PRIEST and PRIESTHOOD.

BVt becauſe it may be they will ſtand here upon their latter tranſlations, which have the name Church, (becauſe by that time they ſaw the abſurditie of changing the name, and now their number was increaſed, and themſelves beganne to challenge to bee the true Church, though not the Catholike; and for former times when they were not, they deviſed an inviſible Church) if then they will ſtand upon their latter tranſlations, and refuſe to juſtifie the former; let us demand of them concerning all their Engliſh tranſlation, why and to what end they ſuppreſſe the name Prieſt, tranſlating it Elder, in all places where the holy Scripture would ſignifie by Presbyter and Presbyterium, the Prieſts and Prieſthood of the new Teſtament?

FVLKE.

IF any errour haue eſcaped the former tranſlations, that hath beene reformed in the latter, all reaſonable men ought to bee ſatisfyed with our owne corrections. But becauſe wee are not charged with overſights and ſmall faults, committed either of ignorance, or of negligence, but with ſhameleſſe tranſlations, wilfull and hereticall corruptions, wee may not acknowledge any ſuch crimes, whereof our conſcience is cleere. That wee deviſed an inviſible Church, becauſe wee were few in number, when our tranſlations were firſt printed, it is a lewd ſlaunder: for beeing multiplyed (as wee are, God bee thanked) wee hold ſtill that the Catholike Church, which is the mother of us all, is inviſible, and that the Church on earth may at ſome times bee driven to ſuch ſtreites, as of the wicked it ſhall not bee knowne. And this wee held always, and not otherwiſe. Now touching the wordes Presbyter, and Presbyterium, why wee tranſlate them not Prieſt and Prieſthood of the new Teſtament, wee have given ſufficient reaſon before: but becauſe wee are here urged afreſh, wee muſt anſwer as occaſion ſhall bee offered.

MART. 2. Vnderſtand (gentle Reader) their wily policy therein is this: To take away the holy Sacrifice of the Maſſe, they take away both Altar, and Prieſt, becauſe they know right well that theſe three (Prieſt, Sacrifice, and Altar) are dependents and conſequents one of another, ſo that they cannot be ſeparated. If there bee an externall Sacrifice, there muſt bee an externall Prieſthood to offer it, an Altar to offer the ſame upon. So had the Gentiles their Sacrifices, Prieſts, and Altars: ſo had the Iewes: So Chriſt himſelfe, beeing a Prieſt according to the order of Melchiſedech, had a Sacrifice, his body; and an Altar, his croſſe upon which hee offered it. And becauſe hee inſtituted this Sacrifice to continue in his Church for ever, in commemoration and repreſentation of his death, therefore did hee withall ordaine his Apoſtles Prieſts at his laſt ſupper, there and then inſtituted the holy order of Prieſthood and Prieſts (ſaying, Hoc facite, Doe this) to offer the ſelfe-ſame Sacrifice in a myſticall and unbloudy manner, untill the worldes end.

Luk c.22.v.19.

FVLK. 2. In denying the blaſphemous Sacrifice of the Popiſh Maſſe, with the Altar, and Prieſthood that thereto belongeth, wee uſe no wilie policie, but with open mouth at all times, and in all places, wee cry out upon it. The Sacrifices, Prieſts, and Altars of the Gentiles, were abominable. The Sacrifices of the Iewes, their Prieſts, and Altars, are all accompliſhed and finiſhed in the onely Sacrifice of Chriſt our high Prieſt, offered once for all upon the Altar of the Croſſe, which Chriſt our Saviour, ſeeing hee is a Prieſt according to the order of Melchiſedech, hath an eternall Prieſthood, and ſuch as paſſeth not by ſucceſſion, Heb. 7. Therefore did not Chriſt at his laſt ſupper inſtitute any externall propitiatory Sacrifice of his body and bloud, but a Sacrament, joyned with the ſpirituall ſacrifice of praiſe and thankſgiving: which Sacrament beeing adminiſtred by the Miniſters thereto appoynted, the ſacrifice is common to the whole Church of the faithfull, who are all ſpirituall Prieſts, to offer up ſpirituall ſacrifices, as much as the Miniſter of the word and Sacraments.

RT. 3. To defeate all this, and to take away all externall Prieſthood and Sacrifice, they by corrupt tranſlation of the holy Scriptures, make them cleane dumbe, as though they had not a word of any ſuch Prieſts, or Prieſthood, as wee ſpeake of. Their Bibles (wee graunt) have the name of Prieſts very often, but that is when mention is made either of the Prieſts of the Iewes, or of the Prieſts of the Gentiles (ſpecially when they are reprehended and blamed in the holy Scriptures) and in ſuch places our adverſaries have the name Prieſts in their tranſlations, to make the very name of Prieſt odious among the common ignorant people. Againe they have alſo the name Prieſts, when they are taken for all manner of men, women, or Children, that offer internall and ſpirituall Sacrifices, whereby our adverſaries would falſely ſignify, that there are no other Prieſts, as one of them of late freſhly avoucheth, directly againſt S. Auguſtine, who in one briefe ſentence diſtinguiſheth Prieſts properly ſo called in the Church, and Prieſts as it is a common name to all Chriſtians, lib.20.de Civit. Dei.cap.10. This name then of Prieſt and Prieſthood properly ſo called (as S. Auguſtine ſayth) which is an order diſtinct from the Laytie and vulgar people, ordayned to offer Chriſt in an unbloudy manner in ſacrifice to his heavenly Father for us, to preach and miniſter the Sacrament, and to bee the Paſtors of the people, they wholly ſuppreſſe in their tranſlations, and in all places where the holy Scripture calleth them Presbyteros, there they never tranſlate Prieſts, but Elders: and that they doe obſerve ſo duely and ſo warily, and with ſo full and generall conſent in all their Engliſh Bibles, as the Puritanes doe plainely confeſſe, and Maſter Whitgift denyeth it not, that a man would wonder to ſee how carefull they are, that the people may not once heare the name of any ſuch Prieſt in all the holy Scriptures.

K. 3. Now you have gotten a fine nette to daunce naked in, that no ignorant blinde buzzard can ſee you. The maskes of your nette bee the ambiguous and abuſive ſignifications of this word Prieſt, which indeed according to the originall derivation from Presbyter, ſhould ſignify nothing elſe but an Elder, as wee tranſlate it, that is, one appoynted to governe the Church of God according to his word, but not to offer ſacrifice for the quicke and the dead. But by uſurpation it is commonly taken to ſignify a Sacrificer, ſuch as ἱερεὺς is in Greeke, and Sacerdos in Latine, by which names the Miniſters of the Goſpel are never called by the holy Ghoſt. After this common acception, and uſe of this word Prieſt, wee call the Sacrificers of the old Teſtament, and of the Gentiles alſo, becauſe the Scripture calleth them by one name Cohanim, or ἱερεῖς; but becauſe the Scripture calleth the Miniſters of the new Teſtament by diverſe other names, and never by the name of ἱερεῖς, wee thought it neceſſary to obſerve that diſtinction, which wee ſee the holy Ghoſt ſo preciſely hath obſerved. Therefore where the Scripture calleth them πρεσβυτέρους, wee call them according to the etymologie, Elders, and not Prieſts, which word is taken up by common uſurpation, to ſignify Sacrificers of Iewes, Gentiles, or Papiſts, or elſe all Chriſtians, in reſpect of ſpirituall Sacrifices. And although Auguſtine, and other of the auncient Fathers, call the Miniſters of the new Teſtament, by the name of Sacerdotes, and ἱερεῖς, which ſignify the Miniſters of the old Teſtament, yet the authority of the holy Ghoſt, making a perfect diſtinction betweene theſe two appellations, and functions, ought to bee of more eſtimation with us. The Fathers were content to ſpeake in Latine and Greeke, as the tearmes were taken up by the common people newly converted from Gentility, but yet they retayned the difference of the ſacrificing Prieſthood of the one, and the miniſteriall office of the other. This may ſuffice therefore to render a reaſon why wee uſe not the word Prieſt for Miniſters of the new Teſtament; not that wee refuſe it in reſpect of the etymologie, but in reſpect of the uſe and common ſignification thereof.

MART. 4. As for example in their tranſlations: When there fell a queſtion about Circumciſion, They determined that Paul and Barnabas ſhould goe up to Hieruſalem unto the Apoſtles and ELDERS, about this queſtion, Act.15. And againe: They were received of the * congregation, and of the Apoſtles and ELDERS. Againe: The Apoſtles and ELDERS came together to reaſon of this matter. Againe; Then pleaſed it the Apoſtles and ELDERS with the whole congregation to ſend, &c. Againe: The Apoſtles, and ELDERS, and brethren, ſend greeting, &c. Againe: They delivered them the decrees for to keepe, that were ordayned of the Apoſtles and ELDERS. If in all theſe places they had tranſlated Prieſts (as indeede they ſhould have done according to the Greeke word) it had then diſadvantaged them thus much, that men would have thought both the dignity of Prieſts to bee great, and alſo their authority in Councels, as beeing here ioyned with the Apoſtles, to be greatly reverenced and obeyed. To keepe the people from all ſuch holy and reverent cogitations of Prieſts, they put Elders, a name wherewith our holy Chriſtian forefathers eares were never acquainted, in that ſenſe.

πρεσβυτέρους. Presbyteros. * The latter Bibles reade Church. Act.16.

FULK. 4. In all thoſe places by you rehearſed, Act. 15, and 16. your owne vulgar Latine text hath Seniores, which you had rather call Auncients (as the French Proteſtants call the Governours of their Churches) then Elders, as wee doe. That Popiſh Prieſts ſhould have any dignity or authority in Councels, wee doe flatly deny: but that the Seniors, Auncients, Elders, or Prieſts (if you will) of the new Teſtament, ſhould have as much dignitie and authority as Gods word doeth afford them, wee deſire with all our hearts. That our Chriſtian forefathers eares were not acquainted with the name of Elders, it was becauſe the name of Prieſt in their time ſounded according to the Etymologie, and not according to the corruption of the Papiſts: otherwiſe I thinke their eares were as much acquainted with the name of Elders, which wee uſe, as with the name of Auncients and Seniors, that you have newly taken up, not for that they differ in ſignification from Elders, but becauſe you would differ from us.

MART. 5. But let us goe forward. Wee have heard often, and of old time, of making of Prieſts; and of late yeares alſo of making Miniſters: but did ye ever heare in England of making Elders? Yet by theſe mens tranſlations it hath beene in England a phraſe of Scripture this thirty yeares: but it muſt needs bee very ſtrange, that this making of Elders hath not all this while beene practiſed and knowne, no not among themſelves in any of their Churches within the Realme of England. To Titus they make the Apoſtle ſay thus, For this cauſe left I thee in Creta, that thou ſhouldeſt ordaine Elders in every Citie, &c. Againe of Paul and Barnabas: When they had ordained Elders by election, in every congregation, Act. 14. If they had ſaid plainely, as it is in the Greeke, and as our forefathers were wont to ſpeake, and the trueth is, Titus was left in Creta, to ordaine Prieſts in every Citie; and, Paul and Barnabas made Prieſts in every Church; then the people would have underſtood them, they know ſuch ſpeeches of old, and it had beene their ioy and comfort to heare it ſpecifyed in holy Scriptures. Now they are told another thing, in ſuch newneſſe of ſpeeches and words, of Elders to bee made in every City and congregation, and yet not one Citie nor congregation to have any Elders in all England, that wee know not what is prophane noveltie of words, which the Apoſtle willeth to bee avoyded, if this bee not an exceeding prophane noveltie.

Tit. 1. πρεσβυτέρους. presbyteros. Bib. an. 15[illegible]

1 Tim. 6.

FULK. 5. When you have gotten a bable, you make more of it then of the Tower of London, for you have never done playing with it. It muſt needes bee a clarkly argument, that is drawne from the vulgar ſpeeches of making Prieſts, and making Miniſters. Thoſe Prieſts or Miniſters that are made among us, are the ſame Elders that the Scripture in Greeke calleth πρεσβυτέρους, and the Biſhops letters of orders, teſtifying of their ordination, call them by none other name, but by the name of Presbyteri, which the Scripture uſeth which tearme, though in Engliſh you ſound it Prieſts, Elders, Auncients, Seniors, or Miniſters, which is the common peoples word, it is the ſame office which is deſcribed by the holy Ghoſt, Tit. 1. and in other places of Scripture. As for the prophane noveltie, wherewith this word Elder is changed, wee will conſider of it in the next Section.

MART. 6. That it is noveltie to all Engliſh Chriſtian eares, it is evident: and it is alſo prophane, becauſe they doe ſo Engliſh the Greeke word of ordaining (for of the word Presbyter wee will ſpeake more anon) as if they ſhould tranſlate Demoſthenes, or the Lawes of Athens concerning their chuſing of Magiſtrates, which was by giving voyces with lifting up their handes. So doe they force this word here, to induce the peoples election, and yet in their Churches in England, the people elect not Miniſters, but their Biſhop. Whereas the holy Scripture ſaith, they ordained to the people: and whatſoever force the word hath, it is here ſpoken of the Apoſtles, and pertaineth not to the people, and therefore in the place to Titus it is another word, which cannot bee forced further, then to ordaine or appoynt. And they might know (if malice and hereſie would ſuffer them to ſee and confeſſe it) that the holy Scriptures, and Fathers, and Eccleſiaſticall cuſtome, hath drawne this and the like wordes from their prophane and common ſignification, to a more peculiar and Eccleſiaſticall ſpeech: as Epiſcopus, an overſeer in Tullie, is a Biſhop in the new Teſtament.

χειροτονήσαντες [illegible] Tit. 1.

FULK. 6. The name Elders uſed in our tranſlation, is neither more novel to Engliſh eares, nor more prophane to Godly eares, then the name Auncients, which your tranſlation uſeth. And yet I thinke the Apoſtle 1 Tim. 6. ſpake not of noveltie to Engliſh eares, but of that which was new to the eares of the Church of God. But the word Elders (I weene) muſt bee prophane becauſe wee Engliſh the Greeke word of ordaining, as if wee ſhould tranſlate Demoſthenes, or the Lawes of Athens concerning the chuſing of Magiſtrates. Doeth not this cavill redound more againſt the holy Ghoſt, to accuſe his ſtile of prophaneneſſe, which uſeth the ſame wordes for the ordaining of Prieſts, that Demoſthenes or the Lawes of Athens might uſe for chuſing of their Magiſtrates? But this word wee enforce (you ſay) to induce the peoples election, and yet the Biſhop, not the people, elect our Miniſters. Wee meane not to enforce any other election, then the word doeth ſignify. Neither doe our Biſhops (if they doe well) ordaine any Miniſters or Prieſts without the teſtimony of the people, or at leaſtwiſe of ſuch as be of moſt credit where they are knowne. Where you urge the pronoune αὐτοῖς, to them, as though the people gave no conſent nor teſtimony, it is more then ridiculous; and beſide that, contrary to the practiſe of the Primitive Church, for many hundred yeares after the Apoſtles: as alſo that you would enforce upon the word καταστῆσαι, uſed by S. Paul Tit. 1. as though that word of conſtitution did exclude election. That the word χειροτονία by the Fathers of the Church ſince the Apoſtles, hath beene drawne to other ſignification then it had before, it is no reaſon to teach us how it was uſed by the Apoſtles. Election is an indifferent thing, the election of Biſhops, Elders or Prieſts, is an holy thing, the holineſſe whereof is not included in the word χειροτονεῖν, but in the holy conſtitution of Chriſt, and authoritie by his appoyntment delivered, by impoſition of the hands of the Eldership.

MART. 7. And concerning χειροτονία, which wee now ſpeake of, S. Hierome telleth them (in cap. 58. Eſai) that it ſignifyeth Clericorum ordinationem, that is, giving of holy orders, which is done not onely by prayer of the voyce, but by impoſition of the hand, according to S. Paul unto Timothy, Manus citò nemini impoſueris, Impoſe or put hands quickly upon no man: That is, Be not haſty or eaſy to give holy orders. Where theſe great Etymologiſts, that ſo ſtraine the originall nature of this word to prophane ſtretching foorth the hand in elections, may learne another Eccleſiaſticall Etymologie thereof, as proper and as well deduced of the word as the other, to wit, putting forth the hand to give orders: and ſo they ſhall finde it is all one with that which the Apoſtle calleth impoſition of hands, 1 Tim. 4. 2 Tim. 1. and conſequently, for ordayning Elders by election, they ſhould have ſayd, ordayning or making Prieſts by impoſition of handes; as elſewhere S. Paul, 1 Tim. 5, and the Acts of the Apoſtles (Act. 6. and 13.) doe ſpeake in the ordaining of the ſeven Deacons, and of S. Paul and Barnabas.

Greg. Nazian. in tit. Ser. 1. 4. 5. ἐπὶ τῇ τῶν πρεσβυτέρων χειροτονίᾳ. & ἐπίσκοπος ἐχειροτονήθη. Ignat. ep. 10. ſaith of Biſhops. βαπτίζουσι, ἱερουργοῦσι, χειροτονοῦσι, χειροθετοῦσι.

VLK. 7. The teſtimonie of S. Hierome whom you cite, you underſtand not; for ſpeaking there of the extenſion of the finger, which the Septuaginta tranſlate χειροτονίαν and God requireth to bee taken away, hee ſayth, Many of our Interpretours doe underſtand it of the ordination of Clerkes, which is performed not onely at the imprecation of voyce, but alſo at the impoſition of handes, leſt as wee have laughed at in ſome men, the ſecret imprecation of the voyce ſhould ordaine Clerkes, beeing ignorant thereof. And ſo proceedeth to inveigh againſt the abuſe of them that would ordaine Clerkes of their baſeſt officers and ſervitours, yea at the requeſt of fooliſh women. By which it is manifeſt, that his purpoſe is not to tell what χειροτονία properly doeth ſignifie, but that impoſition of handes is required in lawfull ordination, which many did underſtand by the word χειροτονία, although in that place it ſignifyed no ſuch matter. And therefore you muſt ſeeke further authoritie to prove your Eccleſiaſticall Etymologie, that χειροτονία ſignifyeth putting foorth of the handes to give orders. The places you quote in the margent, out of the titles of Nazianzens Sermons, are to no purpoſe, although they were in the text of his Homilies. For it appeareth not, although by Synecdoche the whole order of making Clerkes were called χειροτονία, that election was excluded where there was ordination by impoſition of handes. As for that you cite out of Ignatius, prooveth againſt you, that χειροτονεῖν differeth from impoſition of handes, becauſe it is made a diſtinct office from χειροθετεῖν, that ſignifyeth to lay on handes; and ſo χειροτονία and ἐπίθεσις τῶν χειρῶν by your owne Authour doe differ.

χειροτονία. ἐπίθεσις τῶν χειρῶν. In Eſa. cap. 58. „ „

MART. 8. But they are ſo prophane and ſecular, that they tranſlate the Greeke word πρεσβύτερος in all the new Teſtament, as if it had the old prophane ſignification ſtill, and were indifferent to ſignifie the Ancients of the Iews, the Senatours of Rome, the Elders of Lacedamonia, and the Chriſtian Clergie. Inſomuch that they ſay, Paul ſent to Epheſus, and called the Elders of the Church, Act. 20. and yet they were ſuch as had their flockes, and cure of ſoules, as followeth in the ſame place. They make S. Paul ſpeake thus to Timothie: Neglect not the gift (ſo they had rather ſay then grace, leſt holy orders ſhould bee a Sacrament) given thee with the laying on of the handes of the Eldership, or by the authority of the Eldership, 1 Tim. 4. What is this companie of the Eldership? Somwhat they would ſay like to the Apoſtles word, but they will not ſpeak plainely, leſt the world might heare out of the Scriptures, that Timothie was made Prieſt or Biſhop even as the uſe is in the Catholike Church at this day. Let the fourth Councell of Carthage ſpeake for both parts indifferently, and tell us the Apoſtles meaning: A Prieſt when he taketh his orders, the Biſhop bleſſing him, and holding his hand upon his head, let all the Prieſts alſo that are preſent, hold their handes by the Biſhops hand upon his head. So doe our Prieſts at this day, when a Biſhop maketh Prieſts: and this is the laying on of the handes of the company of Prieſts, which S. Paul ſpeaketh of, and which they tranſlate, the company of the Eldership. Only their former tranſlation of 1562. in this place (by what chance or conſideration we know not) let fall out of the pen, by the authority of Prieſthood.

τοὺς πρεσβυτέρους. χάρισμα. Bib. 1579. 1577. τοῦ πρεσβυτερίου, Presbyterij

Can. 3. in the yeare 436. Where S. Auguſtine was preſent and ſubſcribed.

FVLK. 8. We deſire not to be more holy in the Engliſh tearmes, then the holy Ghoſt was in the Greeke tearms. Whom, if it pleaſed to uſe ſuch a word, as is indifferent to ſignify the auncients of the Iewes, the Senators of Rome, the Elders of Lacedæmonia, and the Chriſtian Clergie, why ſhould we not truely tranſlate it into Engliſh?

But I pray you in good ſadneſſe, are wee ſo prophane, and ſecular, Act. 20. in calling thoſe whom Saint Paul ſent for out of Epheſus, Elders? What ſhall wee ſay then of the vulgar Latine text, which calleth them Majores natu? as though they obtayned that degree by yeares, rather then by any thing elſe? and why doe you ſo prophanely, and ſecularly call them the Auncients of the Church? Is there more prophaneneſſe and ſecularitie in the Engliſh word Elders, then in the Latine word Majores natu, or in your French-engliſh tearme, Auncients. *S*urely you doe nothing but play with the noſes of ſuch as bee ignorant in the tongues, and can perceive no ſimilitude or difference of theſe wordes, but by the ſound of their eares. But now for the word πρεσβυτέριον uſed by Saint Paul, 1 Tim. 4. which wee call the Eldership, or the company of Elders, I have ſhewed before, how it is uſed by Saint Luke, in his Goſpell, cap. 22, and Act. 22. You ſay, wee will not ſpeake plainely, leaſt the world ſhould heare, that Timothie was made Prieſt, or Biſhop even as the uſe is in the Catholike Church at this day. And then you tell us out of the Councell of Carthage 4. cap. 3. that all the Prieſts preſent ſhould lay their handes on the head of him that is ordayned, together with the Biſhop. Wee know it well, and it is uſed in the Church of England, at this day. Onely the tearme of Eldership diſpleaſeth you, when wee meane thereby the company of Elders. But whereas the Tranſlatours of the Bible, 1562. call it Prieſthood, either by Prieſthood they meant the ſame that wee doe by Eldership: or if they meant by Prieſthood the office of Prieſts, or Elders, they were deceived. For πρεσβυτέριον ſignifyeth, a company of Elders, as it is twiſe uſed by Saint Luke, and oftentimes by the auncient writers of the Church, both Greekes and Latines.

MART. 9. Otherwiſe in all their Engliſh Bibles, all the bells ring one note, as. The Elders that rule wel are worthy of double honour. And, Againſt an Elder receive no accuſation, but under two or three witneſſes, 1 Tim. 5. And, If any bee diſeaſed among you, let him call for the Elders of the Church, and let them pray over him, and anoynt him with oyle, &c. Iacob. 5. Whereas Saint Chryſoſtome out of this place, proveth the high dignity of Prieſts in remitting ſinnes, in his booke intituled, Of Prieſthood, unleſſe they will tranſlate that title alſo, Of Eldership. Againe, they make Saint Peter ſay thus: The Elders which are among you, I exhort, which am alſo an Elder, feede yee Chriſts flocke, as much as lyeth in you, &c. 1 Pet. 5.

τοὺς πρεσβυτέρους τῆς ἐκκλησίας. Lib. 3. de Sacerdotio. περὶ ἱερωσύνης

FVLK. 9. In theſe three texts you triumph not a little, becauſe your vulgar Latine text hath the Greeke word Presbyter. The high dignity of Prieſts, or Elders, in remitting ſinnes, wee acknowledge with Chryſoſtome, in his booke intituled of Prieſthood: which ſeeing it is περὶ ἱερωσύνης, wee will never tranſlate Eldershippe. But wee may lawfully wiſh, that both Chryſoſtome, and other auncient writers, had kept that diſtinction of tearmes, which the Apoſtles and Evangeliſts did ſo preciſely obſerve. In the laſt text, 1 Pet. 5. your vulgar Latine ſayth, Seniores and Conſenior, your ſelves in Engliſh, Seniors, and fellow Senior. What treſpaſſe then have wee committed, in ſaying Elders, and fellow-Elder, or an Elder alſo?

MART. 10. Where if they will tell us (as alſo in certaine other places) that our Latine tranſlation hath Seniores, and majores natu: we tell them, as heretofore we have told them, that this is nothing to them, who profeſſe to tranſlate the Greeke. Agayne wee ſay, that if they meant no worſe then the old Latine tranſlatour did, they would be as indifferent as he, to have ſayd ſometime Prieſts, and Prieſthood, when hee hath the wordes Presbyteros & Presbyterium: as wee are indifferent in our tranſlation, ſaying Seniors and Auncients, when we finde it ſo in our Latine: being well aſſured that by ſundry wordes he meant but one thing, as in Greeke it is but one, and as both Eraſmus, and alſo Beza himſelfe always tranſlate it, keeping the name Presbyter & Presbyteri: of whom by reaſon they ſhould have learned, rather then of our Latine Tranſlatour, whom otherwiſe they condemne. And if they ſay, they doe follow them, and not him, becauſe they tranſlate not Senior, and major natu, but the word Presbyter, or πρεσβύτερος, an Elder, in all places; wee tell them, and herein we convent their conſcience, that they doe it to take away the externall Prieſthood of the new Teſtament, and to ſuppreſſe the name Prieſt, againſt the Eccleſiaſticall, and (as now ſince Chriſt) very proper and uſuall ſignification thereof, in the new Teſtament, Councels and Fathers, in all common writing and ſpeaking: ſpecially the Latine Presbyter, which grew to this

S. Hierom readeth Presbyteros, ego compresbyter. Ep. 85. ad Evag. & in 1 ad Gal. proving the dignitie of Prieſts. and yet in 4. Gal. hee readeth according to the vulgar Latine text, Seniores in vobis rogo conſenior et ipſe. Whereby it is evident, that Senior here, in the Acts, is a Prieſt, and not contrary, Presbyter an Elder.

this ſignification out of the Greeke, in the foreſayd places of holy Scripture.

FVLK. 10. I have told you already, and you could not but know, that it ſhould be told you, that ſeeing we tranſlate none otherwiſe, then your vulgar Latine Tranſlatour, we are no more to be blamed of falſhood, corruption, prophaneneſſe, novelty, then he is, who profeſſed to tranſlate the Greeke as much as we doe. But if we had meant no worſe (ſay you) then he, we would have beene as indifferent to have ſayd ſometimes Prieſt and Prieſthood, where hee hath the word Presbyteros and Presbyterium. I anſwer, Presbyterium he hath but once, and for that you have Prieſthood once, as you confeſſed before. And if the name Prieſt were of the ſame underſtanding in common Engliſh, that the word Presbyter is, from whence it is derived, we would never have ſought more words for it, then we do for the words Biſhop, Deacon, and ſuch like.

The wordes Presbyter and Presbyterium, you confeſſe, that Beza doeth always uſe, and, ſo doe wee, when wee write or ſpeake Latine, but wee cannot uſe them in Engliſh, except wee ſhould bee as fond as you in your gratis depoſitum, and ſuch phantaſies. And to tell you plainely, as our conſcience beareth us witneſſe, wee will never diſſemble, that wee avoyde that word Prieſt, as it is uſed to ſignify a Sacrificer, becauſe wee would ſhew a perfect diſtinction, betweene the Prieſthood of the Law, and the Miniſtery of the Goſpel: betweene Sacerdos, and Presbyter, a Sacrificer, and a governour of the Church. And I appeale to your owne conſcience, whether if the Engliſh word Prieſt, were as indifferent as Presbyter, and ſounded no more towards a Sacrifice, then either Presbyter, or your owne Engliſh wordes, Auncient, and Senior, whether (I ſay) you would make ſo much adoe about it, for to have it in all places of the new Teſtament, where πρεσβύτερος is in the Greeke. But ſeeing your Popiſh ſacrificing power, and blaſphemous Sacrifice of your Maſſe, hath no manner of ground at all in the holy Scriptures, either in the originall Greeke, or in your owne Latine tranſlation, you are driven to ſeeke a ſeely ſhaddow for it, in the abuſive acception and ſounding of the Engliſh word, Prieſt, and Prieſthood. And therefore you doe in the ſecond ſection of this Chapter, in great earneſt affirme, that Prieſt, Sacrifice, and Altar, are dependents, and conſequents, one of another, ſo that they cannot bee ſeparated. If you ſhould ſay in Latine Sacerdos, Sacrificium, Altare, or in Greeke ἱερεύς, θυσία ἢ προσφορά, καὶ θυσιαστήριον bee ſuch conſequents, we will all ſubſcribe unto you: but if you will change the firſt word, and ſay Presbyter, Sacrificium, Altare, or πρεσβύτερος, θυσία, θυσιαστήριον, every learned mans eares will glow, to heare you ſay, they are dependents and conſequents inſeparable. Therefore wee muſt needes diſtinguiſh of the word Prieſt, in your Corollarie, for you meane thereby Sacerdotem, wee grant the conſequence of Sacrifice and Altar, but if you meane Presbyterium, wee deny that ever God joyned thoſe three in an unſeparable band, or that Presbyter in that hee is Presbyter, hath any thing to doe with Sacrifice, or Altar, more then Senior, or Major natu, or Auncient, or Elder.

MART. 11 Inſomuch that immediately in the firſt Canons and Councels of the Apoſtles and their ſucceſſors, nothing is more common then this diſtinction of Eccleſiaſticall degrees and names, Si Epiſcopus, vel Presbyter, vel Diaconus, &c. If any Biſhop, or Prieſt, or Deacon doe this or that. Which if the Proteſtants or Calviniſts will tranſlate after their manner thus, If a Biſhop or Elder, or Deacon, &c. they doe against themſelves, which make Presbyter or Elder a common name to all Eccleſiaſticall perſons: and not a peculiar degree, next unto a Biſhop. So that either they muſt condemne all antiquity for placing Presbyter in the 2. degree after a Biſhop, or they muſt tranſlate it Prieſt as wee doe, or they muſt make Elder to bee their ſecond degree, and ſo put miniſter out of place.

See cant. Apoſt. Conc. 1. Nic. Epiſt. Ignat. Conc. Carth. 4. Beza in 1 pet. 5.

FVLK. 11. The diſtinction of Epiſcopus and Presbyter to ſignify ſeverall offices, wee graunt to bee of great antiquity, albeit wee may not admit the counterfeit Canons of the Apoſtles, nor the Epiſtles of Ignatius, for ſuch mens writings as they beare the name to bee. Wee make Presbyter, or Elder, a common name to all Eccleſiaſticall perſons, none otherwiſe, then you doe this word Prieſt. For Deacons with us, are not called Presbyteri, or Elders. As for the diſtinction of Biſhoppes and Elders names, which the Scripture taketh for the ſame, doeth no more condemne all antiquity in us, then in you, who acknowledge that the Scripture uſeth thoſe names without diſtinction, in your note upon Act. 20. verſ. 28. where they are called Biſhops, which before verſ. 17. are called πρεσβύτεροι, which you tranſlate Auncients, and expound Prieſts: and thus you write. Biſhops or Prieſts (for thoſe names were ſometimes uſed indifferently, Governors of the Church of God, and placed in that roome and high function by the holy Ghoſt. But it ſeemeth you have ſmall regard to defend your owne notes, ſo you might finde occaſion to quarrell at our words.

MART. 12. And here wee muſt aske them, how this name Miniſter came to bee a degree diſtinct from a Deacon, Deacon, whereas by their owne rule [illegible] tranſlation, Deacon is nothing elſe but a Miniſter: and [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] ſuall Eccleſiaſticall name of Deacon in tranſlating Diaconus, and not the name of Prieſt, in tranſlating Presbyter? Doth not Prieſt come of Presbyter? as certainely and as agreeable as Deacon of Diaconus? Doth not alſo the French and Italian word for Prieſt come directly from the ſame? Will you alwayes follow fancie and not reaſon, doe what you liſt, and tranſlate as you liſt, and not as the truth is, and that in the holy Scriptures, which you boaſt and vaunt ſo much of? Becauſe your ſelues haue them whom you call Biſhops, the name Biſhops is in your Engliſh Bibles, which otherwiſe by your owne rule of tranſlation, ſhould bee called an Overſeer or Superintendent: likewiſe Deacon you are content to uſe as an Eccleſiaſticall word ſo vſed in antiquitie, becauſe you alſo haue thoſe whom you call Deacons: Onely Prieſts muſt be turned contemptuouſly out of the text of the holy Scriptures, and Elders put in their place, becauſe you haue no Prieſts, nor will none of them, and becauſe that is in controverſie betweene us. And as for Elders, you haue none permitted in England, for feare of overthrowing your Biſhops office and the Queenes ſupreame government in all ſpirituall things and cauſes. Is not this to follow the humour of your hereſie, by Machiavils politike rules without any feare of God.

FVLK. 12. Here muſt I anſwere you, that wee haue no degree of Miniſters diſtinct from Deacons, both by vulgar and popular uſe of ſpeaking, which wee are curious to controule. Otherwiſe in truth, wee account Biſhops, Elders, and Deacons, all Miniſters of the Church. It is no more therefore, but the common ſpeech of men, which vſeth that word, which is common to all Eccleſiaſticall perſons, as peculiar to the Elders, or Prieſts. Why wee keepe the name of Deacons in tranſlating Diaconus, rather than of Prieſts, in tranſlating Presbyter, I haue tolde you often before. The name Prieſt being by long abuſe of ſpeech applied to ſignifie Sacrificers of the old Teſtament, called ἱερεῖς, wee could not giue the ſame name to the Miniſters of the new Teſtament, except wee had ſome other name whereby to call the Miniſters of the old Teſtament, wherein wee follow reaſon, and not fanſie, for it is great reaſon, wee ſhould retaine that difference in names of the Miniſters of both the Teſtaments, which the holy Ghoſt doth alwayes obſerue. But you follow fanſie altogether, imagining that Prieſts onely are put out of the text, becauſe wee haue no Prieſts. Whereas wee haue Prieſts as well as wee haue Biſhops, and Deacons, and ſo are they called in our booke of common prayer indifferently Prieſts, or Miniſters. And where you ſay, wee haue no Elders permitted in England, it is falſe, for thoſe that are commonly called Biſhoppes, Miniſters, or Prieſts, among us, bee ſuch Elders as the Scripture commendeth unto us. And although wee haue not ſuch a conſiſtorie of Elders, of government, as in the Primitiue Church they had, and many Churches at this day haue: yet haue wee alſo Elders of governement to exerciſe diſcipline, as Archbiſhops, and Biſhops, with their Chauncellours, Archdeacons, Commiſſaries, Officials, in whom if any defect be, wee wiſh it may bee reformed according to the word of God.

MART. 13. Apoſtles you ſay for the moſt part in your tranſlations (not alwayes) as wee doe, and Prophets, and Evangeliſts, and Angels, and ſuch like; and whereſoever there is no matter of controverſie betweene you and us, there you can pleade very gravely for keeping the auncient Eccleſiaſticall words, as your Maſter Beza for example, beſide many other places where hee bitterly rebuketh his fellow Caſtaleons tranſlation, in one place writeth thus: I cannot in this place diſſemble the boldneſſe of certaine men, which would God it reſted within the compaſſe of words onely. Theſe men therefore concerning the word Baptizing, though vſed of ſacred writers in the myſterie or Sacrament of the new Teſtament, and for ſo many yeeres after, by the ſecret conſent of all Churches, conſecrated to this one Sacrament, ſo that it is now growne into the vulgar ſpeeches almoſt of all nations, yet they dare preſume raſhly to change it, and in place thereof to uſe the word waſhing. Delicate men forſooth, which neither are mooved with the perpetuall authoritie of ſo many ages, nor by the daily cuſtome of the vulgar ſpeech can bee brought to thinke that lawfull for Divines, which all men grant to other Maſters and profeſſors of artes: that is, to retaine and hold that as their owne, which by long uſe and good faith they haue truely poſſeſſed. Neither may they pretend the authoritie of ſome auncient writers, as that Cyprian ſaith, TINGENTES, for BAPTIZANTES, and Tertullian in a certaine place calleth SEQUESTREM for MEDIATOREM. For that which was to thoſe auncients as it were new, to us is olde: and even then, that the ſelfe ſame words which wee now uſe were familiar to the Church, it is evident, becauſe it is very ſeldome that they ſpeake otherwiſe. But theſe men by this noveltie ſeeke after vaine glory, &c.

Beza in cap. 3. Mat. num. 25. & c. 10. num. 2. In 3 cap. Mat. num. 11. Baptizo. Baptiſme. Baptizo. Mediator.

FVLK. 13. If in any place wee uſe not the name of the Apoſtles, Prophets, Evangeliſts, Angels, and ſuch like, wee are able to giue as ſufficient a reaſon, why wee tranſlate thoſe words according to their generall ſignification, as you for tranſlating ſometime Baptiſmata, waſhings, ings, and not baptiſmes, Eccleſia the aſſembly and not the Church, with ſuch like. Therefore as Caſtaleo and ſuch other Heretikes, are juſtly reprehended by Beza, for leauing (without cauſe) the vſuall Eccleſiaſticall termes, ſo when good cauſe or neceſſitie requireth not to vſe them, it were ſuperſtition, yea and almoſt madneſſe ſometimes in tranſlating to vſe them, as to call the Phariſees waſhings Baptiſmes; or the aſſembly of the Epheſian Idolaters the Church, yet both in Greeke and Latine the words are Baptiſmata, Eccleſia.

Mart. 14. Hee ſpeaketh againſt Caſtaleo, who in his new Latine tranſlation of the Bible, changed all Eccleſiaſticall words into prophane and Heatheniſh, as Angelos into genios, Prophetas into Fatidicos, Templum into fanum, and ſo foorth. But that which hee did for fooliſh affectation of fineneſſe and ſtile, doe not our Engliſh Calviniſts the very ſame when they liſt, for furthering their Hereſies? When the holy Scripture ſaith idols according as Chriſtians haue alwayes underſtood it for falſe gods, they come and tell us out of Homer and the Lexicons, that it may ſignifie an image, and therefore ſo they tranſlate it. Doe they not the like in the Greeke word that by Eccleſiaſticall vſe ſignifieth penaunce, and doing penaunce, when they argue out of Plutarch, and by the prophane ſenſe thereof, that it is nothing elſe but changing of the mind or amendment of life? Whereas in the Greeke Church, Pœnitentes, that is, they that were in the courſe of penance, and excluded from the Church, as Catechumeni, and Energumeni, till they had accompliſhed their penaunce, the very ſame are called in the Greeke οἱ ἐν μετανοίᾳ ὄντες.

Fvlk. 14. That Caſtaleo did for fooliſh affectation of fineneſſe, you ſlaunder us to doe for furthering of hereſie. And here againe with lothſomneſſe, you repeate your rotten quarrell of idols, tranſlated images, which was to diſcover your abhominable idolatrie, cloaked under a blinde and falſe diſtinction of images and idols. The word μετάνοια, wee tranſlate repentance, as you doe ſometimes, when you cannot for ſhame vſe your popiſh tearme penance, by which you underſtand ſatisfaction for ſinne, which in divers places you are enforced to giue over in the plaine field, and to vſe the tearme repentance: as in the fift of the Acts. This Prince and Saviour, God hath exalted with his right hand, to giue repentance to Iſrael and remiſſion of ſinnes, likewiſe Act. 11. where the Scripture ſpeaketh of God giving repentance to the Gentiles. And when you ſpeake of Iudas, you ſay alſo repenting him, ſo that the repentance of Iudas, and that which God gaue to Iſrael, and to the Gentiles is uttered in one tearme, whereas elſe you haue almoſt every where penance, and doing of penance. Where you ſay wee make repentance nothing but changing of the minde, or amendment of life, you ſpeake untruely, for not every changing of the minde is godly repentance, neither is onely amendment of life all repentance: but there muſt bee contrition, and ſorrow for the life paſt. That in the Greeke Church they that were Catechumeni, and Energumeni, were called οἱ ἐν μετανοίᾳ ὄντες, ſuch as are in repentance, it maketh nothing againſt the true vſe of the Greeke word, as it is vſed in the Scriptures. Wee know the diſcipline of the Church appointed an outward exerciſe of praying, faſting, and other humbling, for a triall, and teſtimonie of true and heartie repentance, which was ſometimes called by the name of repentance by a Metonymia ſigni, which hee that will enforce by that name to bee parts of true and inward repentance, is as wiſe as hee that will contend the Iuy buſh to bee a part of wine, becauſe ſome men ſeeing it hang over the houſe, will ſay, loe here is wine.

Mart. 15. They therefore leaving this Eccleſiaſticall ſignification, and tranſlating it according to Plutarch, doe they not much like to Caſtaleo? Doe they not the ſame, againſt the famous and ancient diſtinction of Latrîa, and Dulîa, when they tell us out of Euſtathius upon Homer, and Ariſtophanes the Grammarian, that theſe two are all one? Whereas wee proue out of Saint Auguſtine in many places, the ſecond Councell of Nice, Venerable Bede, and the long cuſtome of the Church, that according to the Eccleſiaſticall ſenſe & vſe deduced out of the Scriptures, they differ very much. Doe they not the like in Myſterium, and Sacramentum; which they tranſlate a ſecret in the prophane ſenſe, whereas they know how theſe words are otherwiſe taken both in Greeke and Latine, in the Church of God? did they not the like in the word Eccleſia, when they tranſlated it nothing elſe but congregation? doe they not the like in χειροτονία, which they tranſlate, ordaining by election, as it was in the prophane Court of Athens: whereas Saint Hierome telleth them, that Eccleſiaſticall writers take it for giving holy orders by impoſition of hands? Doe they not the like in many other words, whereſoever it ſerveth their hereticall purpoſe? And as for profane tranſlation, is there any more prophane then Beza himſelfe, that ſo often in his annotations, reprehendeth the old tranſlation, by the authority of Tully, and Terence, Homer, and Ariſtophanes, and the like prophane authors? yea ſo fondly and childiſhly, that for Olfactum, which Eraſmus vſeth as Plinies word, he will needes ſay, odoratum, becauſe it is Tullies word.

Latria. Dulia. Beza in 4. Mat. num. 10. λατρεύω & λατρεία in the Scriptures almoſt alwayes, vſed for the ſervice and honour proper to God. Auguſt. de civ. Dei lib. 10. c. 1. Bib. an. 1562.

Fvlk. 15. In tranſlating the Scripture, wee vſe the word repentance, in the ſame ſignification, that the Scripture vſeth μετάνοια. In other Eccleſiaſticall writers, wee can nevertheleſſe underſtand it as they meane it. Concerning that unlearned diſtinction of Latria and Dulia, wee doe rightly, to ſhew out of prophane writers, that it is vaine, and that the tearmes ſignifie all one; and you your ſelfe confeſſe in your marginall note, that ſometimes in the Scripture, λατρεύω and λατρεία doe not ſignifie the ſervice and honour that is proper to God: as for δουλεύω, is in more than an hundred places vſed for the ſervice and honour proper to God. Saint Auguſtine you confeſſe afterward, knew well but one tongue, and therefore hee is no meet Iudge of diſtinction of Greeke words. Bede followeth Auguſtines error. The Idolaters of the ſecond Nicene Councell were glad of a cloake for the raine, contrary to the propertie of their tongue; as is proved by Euſtathius, Ariſtophanes, Xenophon, Suidas, and by latter writers, no Proteſtants, Laurentius Valla, and Ludouicus Vives. Myſterium we tranſlate a ſecret, or a myſterie, indifferently, the word ſignifying no more an holy ſecret, than a prophane and abominable ſecret, as the myſterie of iniquitie, the myſterie of Babylon. For the words Eccleſia and χειροτονία, wee haue ſaid ſufficiently, and very lately. To vſe Tullies words, when they anſwer the Greeke, as properly as any barbarous words, or leſſe commendable words, I know not why it ſhould bee counted blame-worthy in Beza, or in any man, except it bee of ſuch a Sycophant as liketh nothing, but that which ſavoureth of his owne ſpittle.

Mart. 16. But to returne to our Engliſh Tranſlators: doe not they the like to prophane Caſtaleo, and doe they not the very ſame that Beza their Maſter ſo largely reprehendeth, when they tranſlate Presbyterum, an Elder? Is it not all one fault to tranſlate ſo, and to tranſlate as Caſtaleo doth, Baptiſmum, waſhing? Hath not Presbyter beene a peculiar and vſuall word for a Prieſt, as long as Baptiſmus for the Sacrament of regeneration, which Caſtaleo altering into a common and prophane word, is worthily reprehended? Wee will proue it hath, not for their ſake, who know it well enough, but for the Readers ſake, whom they abuſe, as if they knew it not.

Fvlk. 16. If it be as great a fault in us to tranſlate Presbyterum an Elder, as for Caſtaleo to tranſlate Baptiſmum waſhing, your vulgar Tranſlator muſt bee in the ſame fault with us, which ſo often tranſlateth Presbyteros, Seniores, or Maiores natu, which ſignifie Elders, and not Prieſts. It is a vaine thing therefore that you promiſe to proue, that Presbyter hath beene a peculiar and vſuall word for a Prieſt, as long as Baptiſmus for the Sacrament of regeneration: for peculiar you can never proue it, ſeeing it is vſed in the Scripture ſo often, for ſuch Elders and Ancients, as you your ſelfe would not call Prieſts. So that if you did tranſlate the whole Bible out of your owne vulgar Latine, you muſt tranſlate Presbyter thrice an Elder or Ancient, for once a Prieſt.

Mart. 17. In the firſt and ſecond Canon of the Apoſtles wee reade thus: Epiſcopus a duobus aut tribus Epiſcopis ordinetur, Presbyter ab vno Epiſcopo ordinetur, & Diaconus, & alij Clerici: that is, Let a Biſhop be conſecrated or ordained by two or three Biſhops; Let a Prieſt be made by one Biſhop. See in the fourth Councell of Carthage the divers manner of conſecrating Biſhops, Prieſts, Deacons, &c. Where Saint Auguſtine was preſent and ſubſcribed. Againe: Si quis Presbyter contemnens Epiſcopum ſuum, &c. If any Prieſt contemning his Biſhop, make a ſeverall congregation, and erect another altar, (that is, make a Schiſme or Hereſie) let him bee depoſed. So did Arius being a Prieſt, againſt his Biſhop Alexander. Againe: Prieſts and Deacons, let them attempt to doe nothing without the Biſhop. The firſt Councell of Nice ſaith, The holy Synode by all meanes forbiddeth, that neither Biſhop, nor Prieſt, nor Deacon, &c. haue with them any forraine woman, but the mother, or ſiſter, &c. in whom there is no ſuſpicion. Againe: It is told the holy Councell, that in certaine places and Cities, Deacons giue the Sacraments to Prieſts. This neither rule nor cuſtome hath delivered, that they which haue not authoritie to offer the ſacrifice, ſhould giue to them that offer, the body of Chriſt. The third Councell of Carthage, wherein Saint Auguſtine was, and to the which hee ſubſcribed, decreeth, That in the Sacraments of the body and blood of Chriſt, there bee no more offered than our Lord himſelfe delivered, that is, bread and wine mingled with water. Which the ſixt generall Councell of Conſtantinople repeating and confirming, addeth; If therefore any Biſhop or Prieſt doe not according to the order given by the Apoſtles, mingling water with wine, but offer an unmingled ſacrifice, let him bee depoſed, &c. But of theſe ſpeeches all Councels bee full; where wee would gladly know of theſe new Tranſlators, how Presbyter muſt bee tranſlated, either an Elder, or a Prieſt.

That presbyter hath ſignified a prieſt, from the Apoſtles time, not an Elder. Can. 2. 3. 4. Can. Apoſt. 32. Can. 40. Can. 3. Can. 14. Can. 24. εἴ τις ἢ ἐπίσκοπος, ἢ πρεσβύτερος.

Fvlk. 17. I thinke you haue cleane forgotten your promiſe ſo lately made, that this word Presbyter hath alwayes beene peculiar for a Prieſt: you bring many teſtimonies, ſome counterfet, ſome authenticall, in which the name of πρεσβύτερος, and Presbyter is found, but that in all them it is peculiar for a Prieſt, you ſhew not at all. Some colour it hath of that you ſay, in the 14. Canon of the Nicene Councell, and Carth. 3. can. 24. repeated Conſt. 6. where mention is made of ſacrifice and offering, for ſo they did unproperly call the adminiſtration of the Lords Supper, in reſpect of the ſacrifice and thankſgiving that was offered therein. After which phraſe alſo they called the Miniſters ἱερεῖς, and Sacerdotes, ſacrificers. So they called that which indeed was a Table of wood, an Altar, and the inferior Miniſters Levites: by which it appeareth, they did rather allude to the names vſed in the old Teſtament, than acknowledged a ſacrificing Prieſthood, that might as properly bee ſo called, as the Prieſthood after the order of Aaron was. Sometime they vſed the name of ſacrifice and Sacerdos generally, for religious ſervice, and the Miniſters of religion, as the Gentiles did. And hereof it is that wee reade often of the ſacrifices of bread and wine, and in the Canon of Carthage by you cited, Nec amplius in ſacrificijs offeratur quàm de vuis & frumentis: And let no more bee offered in the ſacrifices than that which is made of grapes and corne. This was bread and wine, not the naturall b oa nd blood of Chriſt. Wherefore theſe unproper ſpeeches proue not a ſacrificing prieſthood, whereby the naturall body and blood of Chriſt ſhould bee offered in the Maſſe, which is the marke you ſhoot at.

MART. 18. Doe not all the Fathers ſpeake after the ſame manner, making alwayes this diſtinction of Biſhop and Prieſt, as of the firſt and ſecond degree? Saint Ignatius the Apoſtles ſcholer, doth hee not place Presbyterium as hee calleth it, and Presbyteros (Prieſts, or the College of Prieſts) next after Biſhops, and Deacons in the third place, repeating it no leſſe than thrice in one Epiſtle, and commending the dignitie of all three unto the people? Doth not Saint Hierome the very ſame, ſaying, Let us honour a Biſhop, doe reverence to a Prieſt, riſe up to a Deacon? And when hee ſaith, that as Aaron and his ſonnes, and the Levites were in the Temple, ſo are Biſhops, Prieſts, and Deacons in the Church, for place and degree. And in another place, ſpeaking of the outrages done by the Vandals and ſuch like, Biſhops were taken, Prieſts ſlaine, and divers of other Eccleſiaſticall orders: Churches overthrowne, the Altars of Chriſt made ſtables for horſes, the reliques of Martyrs digged up, &c. When hee ſaith of Nepotian, Fit Clericus, & per ſolitos gradus Presbyter ordinatur; He becommeth a man of the Clergie, and by the accuſtomed degrees is made, what? a Prieſt, or an Elder? When he ſaith, Mihi ante Presbyterum ſedere non licet, &c. Doth hee meane hee could not ſit aboue an Elder, or aboue a Prieſt, himſelfe as then being not Prieſt? When hee and Vincentius (as Saint Epiphanius writeth) of reverence to the degree, were hardly induced to bee made Presbyteri, did they refuſe the Eldership? What was the matter that Iohn the Biſhop of Hieruſalem ſeemed to bee ſo much offended with Epiphanius and S. Hierome? was it not becauſe Epiphanius made Paulianus, S. Hieromes brother, Prieſt within the ſaid Iohns Dioceſſe?

Ep. 2. ad Trallianos. τὸ πρεσβυτέριον. οἱ πρεσβύτεροι. Côment in c. 7. Micheæ. Ep 85. ad Evagrium. Epitaph. Nepotiani, c. 9. Ep. 60. apud Hiero. ca. 1. Ep. 1. ad Heliod.

FVLK. 18. Before the blaſphemous hereſie of the popiſh ſacrifice of the Maſſe was eſtabliſhed in the world, the Fathers did with more libertie uſe the tearmes of ſacrifice, and ſacrificing Prieſts: which improper ſpeeches, ſince they haue given occaſion in the time of ignorance, to maintaine that blaſphemous hereſie, there is good reaſon that wee ſhould beware how wee uſe any ſuch tearmes, eſpecially in tranſlation of the Scriptures. All the reſt of the authorities you cite in this ſection, and 500. moe ſuch as they are, ſpeake of Presbyter or πρεσβύτερος, which words wee embrace: but of the Engliſh word Prieſt, as it is commonly taken for a ſacrificer, or againſt this word Elder, they ſpeake nothing, for in all thoſe places wee may truly tranſlate for Presbyter an Elder.

MART. 19. When all antiquitie ſaith, Hieronymus Presbyter, Cecilius Presbyter, Ruffinus Presbyter, Philippus, Iuvencus, Heſychius, Beda, Presbyteri: and when S. Hierome ſo often in his Catalogue ſaith, Such a man Presbyter: is it not for diſtinction of a certaine order, to ſignifie that they were Prieſts, and not Biſhops? namely when he ſaith of S. Chryſoſtome, Ioannes Presbyter Antiochenus, doth hee not meane, he was as then but a Prieſt of Antioche? VVould he haue ſaid ſo, if hee had written of him after he was Biſhop of Conſtantinople.

FVLK. 19. All this while here is nothing for the Engliſh word Prieſt, in that reſpect wee avoyd it in tranſlation, nor againſt the word Elder, which wee uſe; by which wee meane none other thing, than the Scripture doth giue us to underſtand by the word πρεσβύτερος. As for the diſtinction of Epiſcopus and Presbyter, which came in afterward, you your ſelfe confeſſed as wee heard of late, that it is not obſerved in the Scriptures, but the ſame men are called Epiſcopi, which before were called Presbyteri. And according to that diſtinction, you can allow but one Biſhop of one Citie at once: yet the Scripture in divers places ſpeaketh of many Biſhops of one Citie, as Act. 20. the Biſhops of Epheſus, called before Presbyteri, Elders: alſo hee ſaluteth the Biſhops and Deacons of Philippi, Phil. 1. where your note ſaith, that in the Apoſtles time there were not obſerved alwayes diſtinct names of either function of Biſhop and Prieſt. Would you haue us to tranſlate the Scripture with diſtinction of names, which the holy Ghoſt maketh not, nor your vulgar Latine obſerveth, nor you your ſelfe for ſhame can obſerue? And if wee ſhould haue tranſlated for Elders, Prieſts, that diſtinction taken up after the Apoſtles times, or the writing of the Scripture, had beene never the more confirmed.

MART. 20. But of all other places, wee would deſire theſe gay Tranſlators to tranſlate this one place of Saint Auguſtine, ſpeaking of himſelfe a Biſhop, and Saint Hierome a Prieſt: Quanquam enim ſecundum honorum vocabula, quæ iam Eccleſiæ vſus obtinuit, Epiſcopatus Presbyterio maior ſit; tamen in multis rebus Auguſtinus Hieronymo minor eſt. Is not this the Engliſh thereof? For although according to the titles or names of honour, which now by uſe of the Church haue prevailed, the degree of Biſhop is greater than Prieſthood, yet in many things Auguſtine is leſſe than Hierome. Or doth it like them to tranſlate it thus: The degree of Biſhop is greater than Eldership, &c? Againe, againſt Iulian the heretike, when hee hath brought many teſtimonies of the holy Doctors, that were all Biſhops, as of Saint Cyprian, Ambroſe, Baſil, Nazianzene, Chryſoſtome; at length hee commeth to Saint Hierome, who was no Biſhop, and ſaith; Nec ſanctum Hieronymum, quia Presbyter fuit, contemnendum arbitreris: that is, Neither muſt thou thinke that Saint Hierome, becauſe hee was but a Prieſt, therefore is to bee contemned: whoſe divine eloquence hath ſhined to us from the Eaſt even to the Weſt, like a lampe: and ſo forth, to his great commendation. Here is a plaine diſtinction of an inferiour degree to a Biſhop, for the which the heretike Iulian did eaſily contemne him. Is not Saint Cyprian full of the like places? Is not all antiquitie ſo full, that whiles I proue this, mee thinketh I proue nothing elſe, but that ſnow is white?

Inter Epiſtol. Hie. Ep. 97. in fine. Li. 1. c. 2. in fi

FVLK. 20. Of all other importune and unreaſonable Iudges, you are one of the worſt, that would enforce us to tranſlate the Scriptures, which you confeſſe obſerue not the diſtinction of Biſhops and Prieſts, according to the Fathers, which doe almoſt alwayes obſerue it. If we ſhould tranſlate thoſe ſentences of Saint Auguſtine, we might uſe the word Prieſt for Presbyter, and prieſthood for presbyterium, and if wee uſe the words Elder and Eldership, what offence (I pray you) were it, when by theſe names wee underſtand nothing but the ſame function and Miniſter which Auguſtine doth? That Epiſcopus, a Biſhop, was of very old time vſed, to ſignifie a degree Eccleſiaſticall, higher than Presbyter, an Elder or Prieſt, wee did never deny, wee know it right well. Wee know what Saint Hierome writeth upon the Epiſtle to Titus, cap. 1. Idem eſt ergo Presbyter, qui Epiſcopus: The ſame man is Presbyter, or an Elder, or Prieſt, which is Epiſcopus, a Biſhop. And before that by the inſtinct of the devill, factions were made in Religion, and it was ſaid among the people, I am of Paul, I of Apollo, and I of Cephas, the Churches were governed by common counſell Presbyterorum, of the Elders. But afterward, when every one thought thoſe whom hee had baptized to bee his owne, and not Chriſts, it was decreed in the whole world, that one de Presbyteris, of the Elders, being elected, ſhould bee ſet over the reſt, to whom all the care of the Church ſhould pertaine, and the ſeeds of ſchiſmes ſhould bee taken away. This and much more to this effect, writeth Saint Hieronyme of this diſtinction, in that place, and in divers other places, which nothing proveth, that wee are bound to tranſlate Presbyter in the Scripture, a Prieſt, and leaſt of all, that wee are bound in tearmes, to keepe that diſtinction which the Scripture maketh not, and the Papiſts themſelues cannot obſerue in their moſt partiall tranſlation.

MART. 21. In all which places, if they will tranſlate Elder, and yet make the ſame a common name to all Eccleſiaſticall degrees, as Beza defineth it, let the indifferent Reader conſider the abſurd confuſion, or rather the impoſſibilitie thereof: if not, but they will grant in all theſe places, it ſignifieth Prieſt, and ſo is meant, then wee muſt beat them with Bezaes rod of reprehenſion againſt Caſtaleon: That wee cannot diſſemble the boldneſſe of theſe men, which would God it reſted within the cuſtome of words onely, and were not important matter, concerning their hereſie. Theſe men therefore touching the word Prieſt, though vſed of ſacred writers in the myſterie of the new Teſtament, and for ſo many yeeres after, by the ſecret conſent of all Churches, conſecrated to this one Sacrament, ſo that it is now growne to be the proper vulgar ſpeech almoſt of all Nations; yet they dare preſume raſhly to change it, and in place thereof to uſe the word Elder, delicate men forſooth (yea worſe a great deale, becauſe theſe doe it for hereſie, and not for delicacie) which neither are moved with the perpetuall authoritie of ſo many ages, nor by the daily cuſtome of the vulgar ſpeech, can bee brought to thinke that lawfull for Divines, which all men grant to other maſters and profeſſors of Arts, that is, to retaine and hold that as their owne, which by long uſe, and in good faith they haue truely poſſeſſed. Neither may they pretend the authoritie of any auncient writer (as that the old Latine Tranſlator ſaith, Senior, and Seniores) for * that which was to them as it were new, to us is old: and even then, that the ſelfe-ſame words which we now uſe, were more familiar to the Church, it is evident, becauſe it is very ſeldome that they ſpake otherwiſe.

Annot. in 1. Pet. 5. Bezaes words in the place aboue alledged. Prete. Preſtre. prieſt. Presbyter for a Prieſt, Baptiſmus for the Sacrament of Baptiſme.

FVLK. 21. I ſee no impoſſibilitie, but that in all places where wee reade Presbyter, wee may lawfully tranſlate Elder, as well as Prieſt, and make it ſtill in Scripture a common name to all Eccleſiaſticall degrees, at leaſt to as many as the Scripture maketh it common, without any abſurditie or confuſion. And albeit in the Fathers wee ſhould tranſlate it Prieſt, becauſe they underſtood by the name Presbyter a diſtinct degree from Epiſcopus; yet the ſaying of Beza againſt Caſtaleo, could not by any wiſe man bee applied to us: for Caſtaleo changed the name of the Sacrament Baptiſmus, by which both the Scriptures and the Fathers vniformely did uſe to ſignifie one and the ſame Sacrament; whereas the name of Presbyter in the Scripture ſignifieth one thing, and in the Fathers another. For in the Scripture it is taken indifferently for Epiſcopus, and Epiſcopus for Presbyter: but in the Fathers theſe are two diſtinct degrees. Therefore hee is worthy to bee beaten in a Grammar Schoole, that cannot ſee manifeſt difference betweene the uſe of the word Baptiſmus, which being ſpoken of the Sacrament in the Scriptures and Fathers, is alwayes one; and of Presbyter, which in the Scriptures is every Eccleſiaſticall Governor, in the Fathers one degree onely, that is ſubiect to the Biſhop.

Mart. 22. Thus wee haue repeated Bezaes words againe, onely changing the word Baptiſme into Prieſt, becauſe the caſe is all one; and ſo unwittingly Beza the ſucceſſor of Calvin in Geneua, hath given plaine ſentence againſt our Engliſh Tranſlators, in all ſuch caſes as they goe from the common received and vſuall ſenſe, to another prophane ſenſe, and out of uſe: as namely in this point of Prieſt and Prieſthood, where wee muſt needs adde a word or two, though wee bee too long, becauſe their follie and malice is too too great herein. For whereas the very name Prieſt never came into our Engliſh tongue, but of the Latine Presbyter, (for thereupon Sacerdos alſo was ſo called, onely by a conſequence) they tranſlate Sacerdos Prieſt, and Presbyter not Prieſt, but Elder; as wiſely, and as reaſonably, as if a man ſhould tranſlate, Prætor Londini, Maior of London, and Maior Londini, not Maior of London, but Greater of London: or Academia Oxonienſis, the Vniverſitie of Oxford, and Vniverſitas Oxonienſis, not the Vniverſitie, but the Generalitie of Oxford: and ſuch like.

See M. Whitgifts defence againſt the Puritans reply, pag. 721. where hee affirmeth that this word Prieſt commeth of the word Presbyter, and not of the word Sacerdos.

Fvlk. 22. Bezaes words agree to us as well as Germans lips, that were nine mile aſunder. For if this Engliſh word Prieſt, by cuſtome of ſpeech did ſignifie no more than the Greeke word πρεσβύτερος, wee would no leſſe uſe it in our tranſlations, than Biſhops and Deacons: which offices though they bee ſhamefully abuſed by the Papiſts, yet the abuſe of the words maketh no confuſion betweene the miniſters of the Law, and of the Goſpell, as this word Prieſt doth, by which the Iewiſh ſacrificers are rather underſtood, than preachers of the Goſpell, and miniſters of the Sacraments. But whereas the etymologie of this Engliſh word Prieſt commeth from Presbyter, you charge us with great follie and malice, that for Sacerdos wee tranſlate Prieſt, and for Presbyter Elder. To this I anſwer, wee are not Lords of the common ſpeech of men, for if wee were, wee would teach them to uſe their tearmes more properly: but ſeeing wee cannot change the uſe of ſpeech, wee follow Ariſtotles counſell, which is to ſpeake and uſe words, as the common people vſeth, but to underſtand and conceiue of things according to the nature and true propertie of them. Although for my part, I like well of the French tranſlation, which for ἱερεῖς, or Sacerdotes, alwayes tranſlateth Sacrificateurs, ſacrificers, and for Presbyteri, where they ſignifie the Miniſters of the word and Sacraments, Preſtres, Prieſts. But this diverſitie being onely of words, and not of matter, or meaning, reaſonable men will take an anſwer, fooles and quarrellers will never acknowledge any ſatisfaction.

Mart. 23. Againe, what exceeding folly is it, to thinke that by falſe and prophane tranſlation of Presbyter into Elder, they might take away the externall Prieſthood of the new Teſtament, whereas their owne word Sacerdos, which they doe and muſt needs tranſlate Prieſt, is as common and as vſuall in all antiquitie, as Presbyter? and ſo much the more, for that it is uſed indifferently to ſignifie both Biſhops and Prieſts; which Presbyter lightly doth not but in the new Teſtament: As when Conſtantine the great ſaid to the Biſhops aſſembled in the Councell of Nice, Deus vos conſtituit Sacerdotes, &c. God hath ordained you Prieſts, and hath given you power to iudge of us all. And Saint Ambroſe, When diddeſt thou ever heare (moſt clement Prince) that Lay-men haue iudged Biſhops? Shall wee bend by flatterie ſo farre, that forgetting the right of our Prieſthood, wee ſhould yeeld up to others that which God hath commended to us? And therefore doth Saint Chryſoſtome entitle his ſixe bookes, De Sacerdotio, Of Prieſthood, concerning the dignitie and calling not onely of meere Prieſts, but alſo of Biſhops: and Saint Gregory Nazianzene handling the ſame argument, ſaith, that they execute Prieſthood together with Christ. And Saint Ignatius ſaith, Doe nothing without the Biſhops, for they are Prieſts, but thou the Deacon of the Prieſts. And in the Greeke Liturgies or Maſſes, ſo often ὁ ἱερεύς, Then the Prieſt ſaith this, and that, *ſignifying alſo the Biſhop when hee ſaith Maſſe. And * Saint* Denys ſaith ſometime, Archiſacerdotem cum Sacerdotibus, The high Prieſt or Biſhop, with the Prieſts: whereof come the words, ἱερατεύειν, ἱερουργεῖν, ἱεράτευμα, ἱερατεία, ἱερουργία, in the antient Greeke

Mart. 24. If then the Heretikes could poſſibly haue extinguiſhed Prieſthood in the word Presbyter, yet you ſee it would haue remained ſtill in the words Sacerdos & Sacerdotium, which themſelues tranſlate Prieſt and Prieſthood: and therefore wee muſt deſire them to tranſlate us a place or two after their owne manner: firſt Saint Auguſtine ſpeaking thus, Quis unquam audivit ſacerdotem ad altare ſtantem etiam ſuper reliquias Martyrum, dicere: offero tibi Petre, & Paule, vel Cypriane? who ever heard that a Priest ſtanding at the Altar, even over the relikes of the Martyrs, ſaid, I offer to thee Peter, and Paul, or Cyprian? So (wee trow) they muſt tranſlate it. Againe, Nos vni Deo & Martyrum & noſtro, ſacrificium immolamus, ad quod ſacrificium ſicut homines Dei, ſuo loco & ordine nominantur, non tamen a ſacerdote invocantur. Deo quippe, non ipſis ſacrificat, quamvis in memoria ſacrificet eorum, quia Dei ſacerdos eſt, non illorum. Ipſum vero ſacrificium corpus eſt Chriſti. Wee thinke they will and muſt tranſlate it thus: Wee offer ſacrifice to the onely God both of Martyrs and ours, at the which ſacrifice, as men of God they (Martyrs) are named in their place and order: yet are they not invocated of the Prieſt that ſacrificeth. For hee ſacrificeth to God, and not to them (though hee ſacrifice in the memorie of them) becauſe hee is Gods Prieſt, and not theirs. And the ſacrifice it ſelfe is the body of Chriſt.

Lib. 8. cap. 27. De ciu. Dei
Lib. 22. Ciu. cap. 10.
So as he ſaid before, I offer to thee Peter, &c.

Fvlk. 24. Nay what exceeding folly is it to thinke that an externall ſacrificing office, can bee eſtabliſhed in the new Teſtament (which never calleth the Miniſters thereof, Sacerdotes, or ἱερεῖς) becauſe men of later time haue unproperly transferred thoſe termes unto the Elders or Prieſts of the new Teſtament. Certainely among ſo many names as the Scripture giveth them, if ſacrificing for the quicke and the dead, had beene the principall part of their function, as by you Papiſts hath beene accounted: is it credible, that the holy Ghoſt would never haue called them ἱερεῖς, as well, yea, and rather than the Sacrificers of the old Teſtament? Seeing therefore the holy Ghoſt had made ſuch a broad difference, betweene their names, and offices, thoſe auncient fathers that confounded thoſe names, which the ſpirit of God would haue to bee diſtinct, cannot bee excuſed: although they never dreamed of the miſchiefe that followed, that the Altar of the croſſe being overthrowne, and the onely and ſufficient ſacrifice, which Chriſt our high Sacrificer offered once for all, being iudged imperfect, a new altar, a new ſacrifice, and a new ſacrificing Prieſthood ſhould bee ſet up in the ſtead of it. Wherefore the unproper ſpeeches of the auncient writers, are no warrant for us, either to tranſlate the Scripture according to their unproper ſpeaking, or to ſet up a new ſacrifice and function of ſacrificing, contrary to their meaning. They named ſacrifice and offering, but they meant not propitiatorie ſacrifice, but onely of prayers, or praiſes and giving of thankes. They named ἱερεῖς, and Sacerdotes, but they meant according to the generall etymologie of thoſe words, ſuch as were occupied in diſtributing holy things, not ſuch as ſhould verily ſacrifice the body of Chriſt againe to his father, but offer the ſacrifice of thankſgiving in the Sacrament of the Lords ſupper, which after a certaine manner (as Saint Auguſtine ſaith) is called the body of Chriſt, when indeed it is the Sacrament of the body and blood of Chriſt. And it is called the ſacrificing of the body of Chriſt, not in truth of the thing, but a ſignifying myſterie, as Gracian citeth out of Hierome.

Mart. 25. Likewiſe when Saint Ambroſe ſaith, The conſecration (of the body of Chriſt) with what words is it, and by whoſe ſpeech? Of our Lord Ieſus. For in the reſt that is ſaid, there is praiſe given to God, prayer made for the people, for Kings, and others: but when it commeth that the venerable Sacrament muſt bee conſecrated, now the Prieſt vſeth not his owne words, but hee vſeth the words of Chriſt. And Saint Chryſoſtome in very many places ſaith, The ſacred oblation it ſelfe, whether Peter, or Paul, or any meaner Prieſt whatſoever offer it, is the very ſame that Chriſt gaue unto his Diſciples, and which now the Prieſts doe make or conſecrate. Why ſo I pray thee? becauſe not men doe ſanctifie this, but Chriſt himſelfe; which before conſecrated the ſame. And againe, It is not man that maketh the body and blood of Chriſt, but hee that was crucified for us, Chriſt: the words are uttered by the Prieſts mouth, and by Gods power and grace are the things propoſed, conſecrated. For this, ſaith hee, is my body. With this word are the things propoſed, conſecrated.

Fvlk. 25. Theſe teſtimonies are heaped up without any neede, for the unproper vſage of theſe words ἱερεύς, or Sacerdos in the auncient writers, wee doe acknowledge; but in the holy Scripture you are not able to bring one place, where Presbyteri of the new Teſtament are called Sacerdotes, or ἱερεῖς. Wherefore of the unproper applying of theſe names, to the Miniſters of the new Teſtament, can follow no conſequence of externall ſacrifice, or altar which you urge, except ſacrifice and altar bee likewiſe vſed unproperly, as were the table is called an altar, the bread and wine a ſacrifice, as in Irenæus lib.4.cap. 32. where alſo hee ſaith, that the ſacrifices doe not ſanctifie the man; but the conſcience of the man being pure, ſanctifieth the ſacrifice, and cauſeth God to accept it as of a friend, cap.34. Which cannot in any wiſe be true of the naturall body of Chriſt.

MART. 26. And ſo bee theſe places, where themſelues tranſlate Sacerdos a Prieſt, they may learne alſo how to tranſlate Presbyteros in Saint Hierome ſaying the very ſame thing, that at their praiers, the body and blood of our Lord is made. And in another place, that with their ſacred mouth, they make our Lord ſbody. Likewiſe when they read Saint Ambroſe againſt the Novatians, that God hath graunted licence to his Prieſts to releaſe and forgiue as well great ſinnes as little without exception: and in the Eccleſiaſticall hiſtorie, how the Novatian Heretikes taught that ſuch as were fallen into great ſinnes, ſhould not aske for remiſſion of the Prieſt, but of God onely: they may learne how to tranſlate Presbyteros, in Saint Hierome, and in the Eccleſiaſticall hiſtorie, where the one ſaith thus: Epiſcopus & Presbyter, cum peccatorum audierit varietates, ſcit qui ligandus ſit, qui ſolvendus: and the other ſpeaketh de Presbytero Pœnitentiario, of an extraordinary Prieſt, that heard confeſſions, and enioyned penance, who afterward was taken away, and the people went to divers Ghoſtly fathers, as before. And eſpecially Saint Chryſoſtome will make them underſtand what theſe Presbyteri were, and how they are to bee called in Engliſh, who telleth them in their owne word, that Sacerdotes, the Prieſts of the new law haue power, not onely to know, but to purge the filth of the ſoule, therefore whoſoever deſpiſeth them, is more worthy to bee puniſhed, than the rebell Dathan, and his complices.

FVLK. 26. Where Saint Hierome vſeth the word Presbyteri, wee will make no great curteſie to tranſlate Prieſts: knowing that when hee ſaith, at their prayers the body and blood of Chriſt is made, hee meaneth the Sacrament of the body and blood of Chriſt, as hee himſelfe ſaith in another place. Dupliciter ſanguis Chriſti, & caro intelligitur. The blood and fleſh of Chriſt is underſtood two manner of wayes, either that ſpirituall and divine, whereof hee himſelfe ſaid: my fleſh is meate indeed, and my blood is drinke indeede: and except yee ſhall eate my fleſh and drinke my blood, you ſhall not haue eternall life: or elſe the fleſh and blood which was crucified, and which was ſhed by the ſpeare of the ſouldier. This and ſuch other places teach us to underſtand Saint Hierome, if hee ſpeake any where obſcurely or unproperly of the myſterie of our Lords ſupper. Wee graunt with Ambroſe, that God hath given authoritie to all the Miniſters of the word, to remit all ſinnes that bee remiſſible. But this doe not you grant, for you reſerue ſome to the Byſhops, and ſome to the Pope alone to remit, wherein you goe cleane againſt Ambroſe, who favoureth you not ſo much by the tearme Sacerdos, which you ſay hee uſeth, as hee condemneth your partiall and popiſh reſervation of caſes, when hee alloweth every Prieſt to forgiue, as well great ſinnes as little, without exception. Saint Hierome you cite at large, as it ſeemeth, to inſinuate auricular confeſſion. But the whole ſaying you liked not, becauſe it ſheweth how they forgiue ſinnes. It is written in Math. lib. 3. cap. 16. upon thoſe words ſpoken to Peter, Vnto thee will I giue the keyes of the kingdome of heaven &c. Iſtum locum Epiſcopi & Presbyteri non intelligentes, &c. This place Biſhops and Prieſts not underſtanding, take upon them ſomewhat of the pride of the Phariſees: ſo that they thinke they may either condemne the innocents or loſe the guilty perſons: whereas with God, not the ſentence of the Prieſts, but the life of the perſons accuſed is inquired of. Wee read in Leviticus of the Lepers, where they are commaunded to ſhew themſelues to the Prieſts, and if they haue the Leproſie, then by the Prieſt they are made uncleane. Not that Prieſts make Lepers and uncleane perſons, but that they may haue knowledge of him that is a Leper, and him that is no Leper: and may diſcerne who is cleane or who is uncleane. Therefore even as the Prieſt doth there make the Leper cleane or uncleane: So here alſo the Biſhop and Prieſt doth bind or loſe, not them that bee innocent or guiltie, but according to his office, when hee ſhall heare the varietie of ſinners, hee knoweth who is to bee bound, and who is to bee looſed. But where you ſay, the people went to divers ghoſtly fathers, as before, when that extraordinary penitentiarie Prieſt was taken away, for the adulterie of a Deacon at Conſtantinople, you ſpeake beſide the booke, to make the ignorant beleeue that the people went to auricular ſhrift. For in Conſtantinople, where this privy confeſſion was taken away, the people were left to their owne conſciences. At Rome the ſame time, great offenders did open penance, neither were there any ſuch divers ghoſtly fathers, as you ſpeake of. That Chryſoſtome ſaith, lib. 3. de ſacerdotio, wee conceiue it, being ſo underſtood, as it bee not contrary to that I cited even now out of Hierome. But what maketh all this againſt tranſlating Presbyter, an Elder?

ſpeaketh even from Chriſts time, that teſtifie not onely for the name, but for the very principall functions of externall prieſthood, in offering the ſacrifice of Chriſts body and blood, in remitting ſinnes, and ſo foorth: what a peeviſh, malicious, and impudent corruption is this, for the defacing of the teſtimonies of the holy Scriptures tending thereunto, to ſeeke to ſcratch advantage of the word Presbyter, and to make it ſignifie an Elder, not a Prieſt: Presbyterium Elderſhip rather than Prieſthood: as if other new fangled companions that would forge an Hereſie that there were no Apoſtles, ſhould for that purpoſe tranſlate it alwayes legates: or that there were no Angels, and ſhould tranſlate it alwayes Meſſengers: and that Baptiſme were but a Iudaicall ceremony, and ſhould tranſlate waſhing: which Caſtaleo did much more tolerably in his tranſlation than any of theſe ſhould, if hee did it onely of curioſitie and folly. And if to take away all diſtinction of Clergie and laitie the Proteſtants ſhould alwayes tranſlate clerum, lotte, or lotterie, as they doe tranſlate it for the ſame purpoſe pariſh and heritage: might not Beza himſelfe controule them, ſaying, that the auncient fathers transferred the name clerus to the Colledge of Eccleſiaſticall Miniſters?

FVLK. 27. A cloude of teſtimonies indeed you haue heaped together, not as the Apoſtle did to uphold the certainety of faith: but to obſcure the light of truth. For our tranſlation of πρεσβύτερος an Elder is true, cleare, and plaine, without ambiguitie. Inſomuch as the vulgar Latine interpreter, who as it ſeemeth was a Græcian, and therefore vſeth gladly many Greeke termes, doth yet tranſlate this word almoſt twiſe as often ſenior or maior natu, as hee doth Presbyter, when hee ſpeaketh of the Miniſters of the Goſpell. How the auncient writers applied unto them improperly the name of ſacrificer, as unto the Sacrament the name of oblation or ſacrifice, I haue ſpoken already ſufficiently. Our tranſlation therefore is nothing like your vaine ſuppoſall of new fangled companions, which to deny Apoſtles, Angels, and Baptiſme, would turne the words into Legates, Meſſengers, and waſhing. Whereas wee haue no purpoſe to deny any office or function of the Church appointed by Chriſt, but to diſtinguiſh in name, as his ſpirit in the Scriptures doth alwayes, the ſacrificers of the old Teſtament, from the Miniſters of the new Teſtament. The word Clerus, 1 Pet. 5. which wee tranſlate pariſh or heritage, your ſelues in your notes of that place confeſſe, to comprehend in ſignification all Chriſtians, which you are not able to proue, that in Saint Peters time it was transferred unto the Colledge of Eccleſiaſticall Miniſters, as Beza ſaith it was afterward: wherefore it is one of your accuſtomed ſlaunders, to ſay wee tranſlate it ſo of purpoſe, to take away all diſtinction of Cleargie and Laitie, when all men know, that whereſoever our Churches are eſtabliſhed, we retaine the diſtinction, and ſo thinke it neceſſary alwayes.

MART. 28. But alas, the effect of this corruption and hereſie concerning Prieſts, hath it not wrought within theſe few yeares ſuch contempt of all Papiſts, that nothing is more odious in our countrey than that name: which before was ſo honourable and venerable, and now is, among all men? If miniſterie or Elderſhip were growne to eſtimation in ſteed thereof, ſomewhat they had to ſay: but that is yet more contemptible, and eſpecially Elders and Elderſhip, for the Queenes Maieſtie and her Counſellors will permit none in government of any Church in England, and ſo they haue brought all to nothing elſe, but prophane laitie. And no marvell of theſe horrible inconveniences, for as the ſacrifice and Prieſthood goe together, and therefore were both honourable together: ſo when they had according to Daniels prophecie, aboliſhed the daily ſacrifice out of the Church, what remained but the contempt of Prieſts and Clergie and their offices, ſo farre forth, that for the holy Sacrifice ſake, Prieſts are called in great deſpite, Maſſing Prieſts, of them that little conſider, or leſſe care, what notable holy learned fathers of all ages ſince Chriſts time, this their reproach toucheth and concerneth, as by the teſtimonies before alleaged is manifeſt, and whereof the Reader may ſee a peculiar Chapter in the late Apologie of the Engliſh Seminaries.

Chap.6.

FVLK. 28. A marvellous corruption, for us to call them Elders, whom you in your tranſlation call Auncients, and the vulgar Latine before us both called Seniores. But what is come to paſſe I pray you by this wonderfull corruption? The name of popiſh Prieſts is ſo contemptible, that nothing is more odious in England. And good cauſe why: both for their blaſphemy againſt God, and traiterous practiſes againſt the honourable ſtate of the realme, and our moſt gracious Queene. But Elder and Elderſhip (you weene) is more contemptible, becauſe the Queenes Maieſtie and her Counſellours will permit none in government of any Churches in England, and ſo they haue brought all to nothing elſe, but prophane Laity. This traiterous ſlaunder of yours, is as true, as all the reſt. For although the Queenes Maieſtie and the Councell doe not permit ſuch Conſiſtories of Elders for onely diſcipline and government, as bee in ſome other Churches, yet doe they not onely permit, but alſo mainetaine and reverence ſuch Elders, being ſignified by the Greeke word πρεσβύτεροι as are neceſſary for the government of the Church in doctrine, Sacraments, and diſcipline to the ſalvation of Gods people. The daily ſacrifice mentioned in Daniel, was the morning and Evening ſacrifice of the old Law, whereunto your blaſphemous ſacrifice of the Maſſe hath no reſemblance. You may not therefore looke to recover the credite of Maſſing Prieſts, by that ſacrifice, which being once inſtituted by God, was at length taken away by the onely ſacrifice of Chriſts death: Againſt which all the Apologies in the world ſhall never bee able to defend your Maſſing Prieſthood. As for the Chapter of Allens Apologie, whereunto you referre us, containeth certaine quotations, and a few ſentences of the auncient writers which haue beene anſwered an hundred times, to iuſtifie maſſing Prieſts, but all in vaine, for never ſhall hee proue, that any one from the Eldeſt which hee nameth unto Beda, which is the youngeſt, was ſuch a maſſing Prieſt in all points, as thoſe Traytours are, which by the Queenes lawes and edict are proſcribed and prohibited. I meane not for their manners, but for their Maſſe and all opinions incident thereunto.

MARTIN.

CHAP. VII.

Hereticall tranſlation againſt PVRGATORIE, LIMBVS PATRVM, CHRISTS DESCENDING INTO HELL.

HAving now diſcovered their corrupt tranſlations for defacing of the Churches name, and aboliſhing of Prieſt and Prieſthood: let us come to an other point of very great importance alſo, and which by the wonted conſequence or ſequell of error, includeth in it many erroneous branches. Their principall malice then being bent againſt Purgatorie, that is, againſt a place where Chriſtian ſoules be purged by ſuffering of temporall paines after this life, for ſurer maintenance of their erroneous deniall hereof, they take away and deny all third places, ſaying that there was never from the beginning of the world any other place for ſoules after this life, but onely two: to wit, heaven for the bleſſed, and hell for the damned. And ſo it followeth by their hereticall doctrine, that the Patriarches, Prophets, and other good holy men of the old Teſtament, went not after their deaths, to the place called Abrahams boſome, or Limbus patrum, but immediately to heaven: and ſo againe by their erroneous doctrine it followeth, that the fathers of the old Teſtament were in heaven, before our Saviour Chriſt had ſuffered death for their redemption: and alſo by their erroneous doctrine it followeth, that our Saviour Chriſt was not the firſt man that aſcended and entred into heaven: and moreover by their hereticall doctrine it followeth, that our Saviour Chriſt deſcended not into any ſuch third place, to deliver the fathers of the old Teſtament out of their priſon, and to bring them triumphantly with him into heaven, becauſe by their erroneous doctrine they were never there: and ſo that Article of the Apoſtles Creede concerning our Saviour Chriſt his deſcending into hell, muſt either bee put out by the Calviniſts, as Beza did in his confeſſion of his faith printed Ann. 1564. or it hath ſome other meaning, to wit, either the lying of his body in the graue, or (as Calvine and the purer Calviniſts his ſchollers will haue it) the ſuffering of hell paines and ſtreſſes upon the Croſſe. Loe the conſequence and coherence of theſe errours and hereſies.

FVLKE.

WE may be bold to ſay with Saint Auguſtine, we beleeue according to the authoritie of God that the kingdome of heaven is the firſt place appointed for Gods elect, and that hell is the ſecond place, where all the reprobate and ſuch as bee not of the faith of Chriſt, ſhall ſuffer eternall puniſhment. Tertium penitus ignoramus, imo nec eſſe in ſcripturis ſanctis invenimus. The third place we are utterly ignorant of, yea and that it is not, wee finde in the holy Scriptures. But hereof it followeth, ſay you, that the godly of the old Teſtament, went not after their deaths to Abrahams boſome, or Limbus patrum, but immediately to heaven. Of Limbus patrum, which is a border of the Popes hell, I grant it followeth, but of Abrahams boſome it followeth none otherwiſe, than if I ſhould ſay, Gregory Martin went into Chepeſide, Ergo, he went not to Londō. That the fathers of the old Teſtamēt were in heaven, before our Saviour Chriſt had ſuffered death for their redemption, it is no inconvenience: for his death was as effectual ſo [illegible] them that lived before hee ſuffered actually, as them that live [illegible] Gods ſight, hee is the Lambe that was ſlaine from the beginning of the wo[illegible] Fathers that were iuſtified by faith in his blood, received the ſame crowne and [illegible] righteouſneſſe, that wee doe being iuſtified by the ſame meanes. And yet our [illegible] that Chriſt was the firſt man, that in his whole manhood aſcended and entred into heaven, [illegible] the fulneſſe and perfection of glory, which is prepared for all Gods elect, to bee enioye[d] after the generall reſurrection. That our Saviour Chriſt deſcended into no priſon after his death, wee verily beleeue, and yet wee doe alſo conſtantly beleeue the article of our Creed, that he deſcended into hell, by ſuffering in ſoule the paines due to Gods iuſtice, for the ſinne[s] of all whom hee redeemed, and by vanquiſhing the Devill, and all the power of hell, [illegible] working the redemption of all the children of God. If Beza in his confeſſion had clean[e] left out that article, which is untrue, hee had beene no more to be blamed, than the author of the Nicene Creed, and many other Creeds, in which it is not expreſſed, becauſe it is partly contained under the article of his ſufferings, partly it is in part of the effect and vertue of his death and redemption.

MART. 2. Theſe now being the hereticall doctrines which they meane to avouch and defend, whatſoever come of it; firſt, they are at a point not to care a ruſh for all the ancient holy Doctors, that write with full conſent to the contrary, (as themſelues confeſſe, calling it their common errour.) Secondly, they tranſlate the holy Scriptures in favour thereof, moſt corruptly and wilfully, as in Bezaes falſe tranſlation (who is Calvins ſucceſſor in Geneua) it is notorious; for hee in his new Teſtament of the yeere 1556. printed by Robertus Stephanus, in Folio, with Annotations, maketh our Saviour Chriſt ſay thus to his Father, Non derelinques cadaver meum in ſepulchro, Thou ſhalt not leaue my carcaſe in the graue, Act. 2. for that which the Hebrew, and the Greeke, and the Latine, and Saint Hierome according to the Hebrew, ſay, Non derelinques animam meam in inferno, as plainely as wee ſay in Engliſh; Thou ſhalt not leaue my ſoule in hell. Thus the Prophet David ſpake it in the Hebrew, Pſal. 15. Thus the Septuaginta uttered it in Greeke: Thus the Apoſtle Saint Peter alleageth it: Thus the holy Evangeliſt Saint Luke in the Acts of the Apoſtles, cap. 2. recordeth it: and for this, Saint Auguſtine calleth him an Infidell that denieth it: yet all this would not ſuffice to make Beza tranſlate it ſo, becauſe of certaine errours ( as he heretically tearmeth them) which he would full gladly avoid hereby, namely the Catholike true doctrine of* Limbus patrum, and Purgatorie. What need wee ſay more? Hee tranſlateth animam, a carcaſe, (ſo calling our Saviour Chriſts body, irreverently, and wickedly) he tranſlateth infernum graue.

FVLK. 2. That many of the Chriſtian Fathers held this errour, that the godly of the old Teſtament were not in heaven before Chriſts death, it is no cauſe why wee ſhould bee afraid to confeſſe the truth revealed to us out of the holy Scriptures, to the glory of God. And if the wrong or ambiguous tranſlation of one Hebrew word Sheol, deceived them, that were for the moſt part ignorant of the Hebrew tongue, what reaſon were it that wee ſhould not in tranſlation reforme that errour? But as for Bezaes firſt tranſlation of the Greeke word ψυχὴ dead body, and ᾅδης, graue, I haue anſwered at large, cap. 1. ſect. 31. where alſo it is ſhewed how vainely you take hold of the Engliſh word carcaſe, to charge Beza with unreverent calling of our Saviour Chriſts body, when it was dead, becauſe hee calleth it in Latine Cadaver.

MART. 3. Need wee take any great labour to proue this to bee a foule corruption, or that it is done purpoſely, when hee confeſſeth that hee thus tranſlateth; becauſe elſe it would ſerue the Papiſts? Which is as much to ſay, as, The word of God if it bee truly and ſincerely tranſlated, maketh indeed for them. For the firſt part, wee will not ſtand upon it, partly becauſe it is of it ſelfe moſt abſurd, and they are aſhamed of it; partly becauſe it ſhall ſuffice to confute Beza, that two other as famous heretikes as he, Caſtaleo and Flaccus Illyricus, write againſt him in this point, and confute him; partly alſo, becauſe we ſpeake not here univerſally of all hereticall tranſlations, but of the Engliſh corruptions ſpecially, and therefore wee may only note here, how gladly they alſo would ſay ſomewhat elſe for ſoule, even in the text, if they durſt for ſhame: for in the margent of that Engliſh tranſlation, they ſay, or life, or perſon, thereby advertiſing the Reader, that he may reade thus, if it pleaſe him; Thou ſhalt not leaue my life in the graue, or, Thou ſhalt not leaue my perſon. As though either mans ſoule or life were in the graue, or anima might bee tranſlated perſon, which the ſelfeſame Engliſh Bible doth not, no not in thoſe places where it is evident that it ſignifieth the whole perſon. For though this word ſoule, by a figure, is ſometime taken for the whole man, yet even there they doe not, nor muſt not tranſlate it otherwiſe than ſoule, becauſe our tongue beareth that figure as well as Latine, Greeke, or Hebrew: but here, where it cannot ſignifie the whole perſon, it is wicked to tranſlate it ſo.

Act. 7. v. 14.

FVLK. 3 If you take more labour than you are well able to beare, yet ſhall you proue it no hereticall corruption. As Caſtaleo and Illyricus, the one an heretike, the other a ſchiſmatike, tike, haue inveighed againſt Beza, ſo hath he ſufficiently confuted them. But to our Engliſh tranſlation, where in the margent they ſay, life or perſon, when in the text they ſay ſoule; what doth this offend you? They render the vſuall Engliſh word for the Greeke word; but they admoniſh the Reader, that the word ſoule in this place ſignifieth not the ſoule ſeparated from the body, but either the life, or the whole perſon: becauſe that although the body onely bee laid in the graue, yet according to vulgar ſpeech and ſenſe, the whole man is ſaid to bee buried, and his life ſeemeth to bee incloſed in the graue, according to which popular and humane conceit, the Prophet in that Pſalme ſpeaketh, as appeareth in the latter part of that verſe, which is all one in ſenſe with the former, Neither wilt thou giue thy holy one to ſee corruption: where corruption which is proper onely to the body, is there ſpoken generally of the whole man. If this expoſition pleaſe you not, yet you haue no cauſe to finde fault with the tranſlation, which in that place is according to the common and ordinary ſignification of the Greeke word ψυχὴ, ſoule: which as it is ſometime taken for the whole perſon, as you note, Act. 7. 14. ſo is it here, as the latter part of the verſe doth moſt plainely declare.

Act. 2.

MART. 4. But as for the word graue, that they put boldly in the text, to ſignifie that howſoever you interpret ſoule, or whatſoever you put for it, it is not meant according to S. Auguſtine and the faith of the whole Catholike Church, that his ſoule deſcended into hell, whiles his body was in the graue; but that his ſoule alſo was in the graue, howſoever that is to be underſtood. So making it a certaine and reſolute concluſion, that the holy Scripture in this place ſpeaketh not of Chriſts being in hell, but in the graue; and that according to his ſoule, or life, or perſon, or (as Beza will haue it) his carcaſe or body: and ſo his ſoule in hell, as the holy Scripture ſpeaketh, ſhall bee his body in the graue, as Beza plainely ſpeaketh, and the Bezites covertly inſinuate: and white ſhall be blacke, and chalke ſhall bee cheeſe, and every thing ſhall be any thing that they will haue it. And all this their evident falſe tranſlation muſt bee to our miſerable deceived poore ſoules, the holy Scripture, and Gods word.

See Vigors Sermons, pag. 110. 115. & deinceps.

FVLK. 4. The Greeke word ᾅδης well beareth to bee tranſlated in ſome places a graue, and here the latter part of the verſe ſpeaketh of corruption, which cannot bee underſtood to bee but in the graue, and ſo doth Saint Peter underſtand it, ſaying, that David the Patriarke died and was buried, and his ſepulchre remaineth with us unto this day: and Saint Paul upon the ſame verſe of the Pſalme ſaith, hee ſaw corruption. Both the Apoſtles therefore interpreting this verſe of the reſurrection of Chriſt, wee thinke it indeed a reſolute concluſion, that the Scripture in this place ſpeaketh not of Chriſts being in hell, which wee acknowledge in the article of our Creede, but of his buriall and reſurrection. Your trifling of white and blacke, chalke and cheeſe, may ſeeme pleaſant Rhetorike to groſſe eares, whom you ſeeke to fill with ſuch vanities. But the wiſer ſort, that are acquainted with figuratiue ſpeeches, will thinke it nothing ſtrange, if words bee not alwayes taken in their vſuall and proper ſignification. That the Hebrew word Nepheſh, which the Prophet in that verſe of the Pſalme vſeth, is taken divers times in the Scripture for a dead body, I haue before proved more plainely, than ever you ſhall bee able to deny: where you may, if you bee diſpoſed to ſport your ſelfe, uſe your figuratiue compariſon of white and blacke, chalke and cheeſe, but you ſhall ſooner of white make blacke, of chalke cheeſe, than you can poſſibly avoid the cleare light of thoſe texts, which was ſeene even of your owne vulgar Latine Interpreters.

MART. 5. Where wee cannot but marvell, why they are afraid to tranſlate the words plainely in this place, of his ſoule being in hell: whereas in the Creed they admit the words, and interpret them, that by ſuffering hell paines upon the Croſſe, ſo he deſcended into hell, and no otherwiſe. Why did they not here alſo keepe the words for the credit of their tranſlation, and afterward (if they would needs) giue them that gloſſe for maintenance of their hereſie? This myſterie wee know not, and would gladly learne it of the Puritan Calviniſts, whoſe Engliſh tranſlation perhaps this is: for the groſſer Calviniſts (being not ſo pure and preciſe in following Calvin, as the Puritans be, that haue well deſerved that name aboue their fellowes) they in their other Engliſh Bibles haue in this place diſcharged themſelues of a falſe tranſlation, ſaying plainely, Thou ſhalt not leaue my ſoule in hell. But * in what ſenſe they ſay ſo, it is very hard to gheſſe: and perhaps themſelues cannot tell yet what to make of it, as appeareth by M. Whitakers anſwer to F. Campion. And hee is now called a Biſhop among them, and proceeded Doctor in Oxford, that could not obtaine his grace to proceed Doctor in Cambridge, becauſe hee preached Chriſts deſcending into hell: and the Puritans in their ſecond admonition to the Parliament, pag. 43. cry out againſt the politike Calviniſts for that in the Creed of the Apoſtles (made in Engliſh meeter, and ſung openly in their Churches, in theſe words, His ſpirit did after this deſcend, into the lower parts, to them that long in darkeneſſe were, the true light of their hearts) they favour his deſcending into hell very much, and ſo conſequently may thereby build Limbus Patrum, and Purgatory. And the Puritans in their ſecond reply againſt M. Whitgifts defence, pag. 7, reprehend one of their chiefeſt Calviniſticall martyrs, for affirming (as they terme it) a groſſe deſcending of our Saviour Chriſt into hell. Thus the Puritans confeſſe plainely their hereticall doctrine, againſt Chriſts deſcending into hell.

FVLK. 5. By confeſſing in our Creed, that Chriſt deſcended into hell, you might know, but that you had rather be ignorant, that you might marveile ſtill, that wee purpoſed not in tranſlating this place, to deny that article; as you falſely ſlander us; but becauſe this place, might ſeeme unto the ignorant to confirme the errour of Chriſts deſcending into Limbus Patrum, as it doeth not, if it bee rightly underſtood, it was thought good of ſome Tranſlatours, (that ſeeing this verſe muſt have the ſame ſenſe in the Greeke Sermon of Peter, that it hath in the Hebrew Pſalme of David, and the Greeke word ᾅδης, uſed by the Evangeliſt, in ſtead of the Hebrew word Sheol, may beare to ſignify a grave, as the Hebrew word doeth moſt uſually) by tranſlating it the grave, to ſhew that this verſe in Greeke, maketh no more for that errour of deſcending into Limbus, then the ſame doeth in Hebrew. As for your diſtinction of groſſe Calviniſts and Puritanes, it may be packed up among the reſt of your quarrels and ſlanders: what M. Whitaker hath written in his anſwer to Fryer Campion, hee is able to explaine unto you himſelfe, if you doe not underſtand him. That the Biſhop of Saint Aſaph did once favour your errour in ſome part, and for that was miſliked of the Vniverſity of Cambridge, it is true; as that afterward reforming his judgement at Oxford, where hee proceeded, hee was alſo incorporated Doctour at Cambridge. The Engliſh meeter upon the Creede, except it bee drawne to an Allegory, in my judgement, cannot bee defended, which judgement I declared openly at Paules Croſſe, fourteene or fifteene yeares agoe. Maſter Latimers errour of Chriſtes ſuffering torments in hell after his death, is juſtly reprehended, by whomſoever it bee. By all which, I know not what may bee rightly gathered, but that wee flatter not one another in errours, but if any among us bee deceived, of what account or credite ſoever he bee, wee ſpare not to reprove his errour, preferring Gods truth before all worldly and private reſpects, of friendſhip, countenance, credit, and whatſoever.

MART. 6. The truth is, howſoever the politike Calviniſts ſpeake, or write in this poynt, more plauſibly and covertly to the people, and more agreeably to the article of our faith, then either Calvin, or their earneſt brethren, the Puritans doe, which write and ſpeake as phantaſtically and madly, as they thinke: yet neither doe they beleeve this article of the Apoſtles Creede, or interpret it, as the Catholike Church, and auncient holy Fathers alwayes have done, neither can it ſtand with their new profeſſion ſo to doe, or with their Engliſh tranſlations in other places. It cannot ſtand with their profeſſion: for then it would follow, that the Patriarks, and other juſt men of the old Teſtament, were in ſome third place of reſt, called Abrahams boſome, or Limbus Patrum, till our Saviour Chriſt deſcended thither, and delivered them from thence, which they deny in their doctrine, though they ſing it in their meeters. Neither can it ſtand with their Engliſh tranſlations: becauſe in other places where the holy Scriptures evidently ſpeake of ſuch a place, calling it hell, (becauſe that was a common name for every place and ſtate of ſoules departed, in the old Teſtament, till our Saviour Chriſt by his reſurrection and aſcenſion, had opened heaven) there for hell they tranſlate grave.

FVLK. 6. The truth is, howſoever you ſlander vs with odious names of ſchiſme, and diverſe interpretations, wee all agree in the faith of that article, and in the true ſenſe and meaning thereof. As alſo wee conſent againſt your errours of Limbus Patrum, or any deſcending of Chriſt into that phantaſticall place. As for Abrahams boſome, wee account it no place of deſcent, or going downe, but of aſcending, even the ſame that our Saviour Chriſt upon the croſſe, called Paradiſe, Luke 23. ſaying to the penitent theefe, this day thou ſhalt bee with mee in Paradiſe, which of Saint Paul is called the third heaven, 2 Cor. 12. ſaying, that hee was taken up into the third heaven, whether in the body, or out of the body hee knew not, but hee was taken up into Paradiſe, and there heard wordes that could not bee uttered, which it is not lawfull for a man to ſpeake. And that Abrahams boſome is a place farre diſtant from hell, that onely text where it is named, Luke 16. doeth evidently declare. Firſt the Angells carry the ſoule of Lazarus into Abrahams boſome; he might as well have ſaid hell, if hee had meant hell: but Angels uſe not to goe downe into hell. Secondly, it is a place of comfort, for Lazarus was there comforted. Thirdly, there is a great Chaos, which ſignifyeth an infinite diſtance betweene Abraham and the rich glutton, which utterly overthroweth that dreame of Limbus, which ſignifyeth a border or edge, ſuppoſeth that place to bee hard adjoyning to the place of torments. Laſt of all, if the article of our faith had beene of Limbus Patrum, or of Abrahams boſome, wee ſhould have beene taught to ſay, hee deſcended into Limbo Patrum, or hee deſcended into Abrahams boſome, which all Chriſtian eares abhorre to heare. The word Sheol uſed in the old Teſtament for a common receptacle of all the dead, ſignifyeth properly a place to receive their bodies, and not their ſoules, and therefore moſt commonly in our tranſlations is called the grave.

MART. 7. As when Iacob ſaith, Deſcendam ad filium meum lugens in Infernum; I will goe downe to my ſonne into hell, mourning: they tranſlate, I will goe downe into the grave unto my ſonne, mourning: as though Iacob thought that his ſonne Ioſeph had beene buryed in a grave, whereas Iacob thought, and ſaid immediately before, as appeareth in the holy Scripture, that a wild beaſt had devoured him, and ſo could not be preſumed to be in any grave: or as though, If Ioſeph had beene in a grave, Iacob would have gone downe to him into the ſame grave: for ſo the words muſt needs import, if they take grave properly; but if they take the grave improperly, for the ſtate of dead men after this life, why doe they call it grave, and not hell, as the word is in Hebrew, Greeke, and Latine? No doubt they doe it to make the ignorant Reader beleeve, that the Patriarch Iacob ſpake of his body onely, to deſcend into the grave, to Ioſephs body: for as concerning Iacobs ſoule, that was by their opinion to aſcend immediately after his death to heaven, and not to deſcend into the grave. But if Iacob were to aſcend forthwith in ſoule, how could hee ſay, as they tranſlate, I will goe downe into the grave unto my ſonne? As if according to their opinion, he ſhould ſay, My ſonnes body is devoured of a beaſt; and his ſoule is gone up into heaven: well, I will goe downe to him into the grave.

Gen. 37.

FVLK. 7. A proper quiddity you have found out of Iacob, ſuppoſing his ſonne to bee devoured of wilde beaſts; yet ſaith, I will goe downe unto him mourning, which you thinke, cannot bee into the grave, becauſe hee did not thinke hee was buryed. But you muſt remember, it is the common manner of ſpeech, when men ſay in mourning, they will goe to their friends departed, they meane, they will dye, although their friends perhaps were drowned in the ſea, or their bodyes burned, or perhaps lye in deſolate places unburyed. So Iacobs deſcending to the grave, ſignifyeth no more but death, by which hee knewe hee ſhould bee joyned to his ſonne in ſoule, though hee were not in body. The name of grave is uſed, becauſe it is uſuall that dead men are buried, though it bee not univerſall. And that the graue is taken commonly for death, it appeareth by that phraſe, ſo often uſed in the Scriptures, He ſlept with his Fathers, and was buried, which being ſpoken indifferently of good men, and evill, cannot bee underſtood of one place of their ſoules, but of death, which is common to all, and is proper to the body, not unto the ſoule, for the ſoules of the departed ſleepe not. The like is to bee ſayd of the phraſe uſed in Geneſis of Iſmael, as well as of the godly Patriarches, hee was layd up to his people. And leaſt you ſhould pleaſe your ſelfe too much in your childiſh conceipt of Ioſephs being devoured, whereof yet his father was not certaine; you ſhall heare how Iſidorus Clarius tranſlateth the ſame place, in his Bible cenſured by the Deputies of Trent Councell, Deſcendam ad filium meum, lugens, in Sepulchrum: I will goe downe to my ſonne, mourning, into the grave. This is one of the places which hee thought meete to bee corrected, according to the Hebrew, and in other places, where hee is content to uſe the old word Infernus, hee ſignifyeth in his notes, that hee meaneth thereby Sepulchrum, the grave. And indeede this word Infernus ſignifyeth generally any place beneath, as the Greeke word ᾅδης, which the Greeke Tranſlatours uſed for Sheol: the Hebrew word ſignifyeth a place that is darke and obſcure, where nothing can be ſeene, ſuch as the grave or pit is, in which the dead are layd, which therefore of Iob is called the land of darkneſſe, and the ſhadow of death.

Iob 10.

MART. 8. Gentle Reader, that thou mayſt the better conceive theſe abſurdities, and the more deteſt their guileſull corruptions, underſtand (as we beganne to tell thee before) that in the old Teſtament, becauſe there was yet no aſcending into heaven, the way of the holies (as the Apoſtle in his epiſtle to the Hebrews ſpeaketh) being not yet made open, becauſe our Saviour Chriſt was to dedicate and beginne the entrance in his owne perſon, and by his paſſion to open heaven: therefore (we ſay) in the old Teſtament the common phraſe of the holy Scripture is, even of the beſt men, as well as of others, that dying they went downe ad Inferos, or ad Infernum; to ſignify that ſuch was the ſtate of the old Teſtament before our Saviour Chriſts reſurrection and aſcenſion, that every man went downe and not up; deſcended and not aſcended: by deſcending I meane not to the grave, which received their bodies only, but ad Inferos, that is, to hell, a common receptacle or place for their ſouls alſo departed, as well of thoſe ſouls that were to be in reſt, as thoſe that were to be in paines and torments. All the ſouls, both good and bad, that then dyed, went downward, and therefore the place of both ſorts was called in all the tongues, by a word anſwerable to this word hell, to ſignify a lower place beneath, not only of torments, but alſo of reſt.

Heb. 9. v. 8.
Heb. 10. v. 20.

FVLK. 8. Where you reaſon that there was no aſcending into heaven, becauſe the way of the holies was not yet made open, when the firſt Tabernacle was ſtanding, you abuſe the Reader, and the Scripture. For the Apoſtles meaning is, in that verſe, to ſhewe that to the great benefit of Chriſtians, that firſt Tabernacle is fallen, becauſe that now wee have more familiar acceſſe unto God, by Ieſus Chriſt. For whereas the high Prieſt onely, but once in the yeare, and then not without bloud, entred into the ſecond moſt holy Tabernacle, becauſe the way of the Holyes, that is unto the Holyeſt, or Sancta Sanctorum was not then opened, now our Saviour Chriſt having once entred into the holyeſt place, by his owne bloud, and found eternall redemption, wee have by him, without any ceremonies, Sacrifices, or mediation of any mortall Prieſt, free acceſſe unto the throne of grace, even into the holy place, by the new and living way, which hee hath prepared for us. But all this is to bee underſtood of the cleere revelation of the mercy of God in Chriſt, which was obſcurely ſet foorth unto the Fathers, of the old Teſtament; and not of the effect and fruite of his paſſion, which was the ſame for their ſalvation, that it is for ours. Neither have the ſoules of the faithfull, ſince the comming of Chriſt, any other place of reſt, then the Fathers had before his incarnation, God providing moſt wiſely, that they without all the reſt of their brethren, that ſhall bee unto the worldes end, ſhall not bee made perfect. And whereas you ſay, that all the ſoules of good and badde, then went downeward, you are controuled by the wiſe man, Eccleſ. 3, where hee ſpeaketh in the perſon of the carnall man, doubting of that which is not comprehended by reaſon, but beleeved by fayth. who knoweth whether the ſpirit of man aſcend upward? And more plainely in the laſt Chapter of that booke, where hee exhorteth to repentance, ſhewing in the end that though duſt returne to the earth from whence it was, yet the ſpirit returneth to God that gave it. It returneth to God therefore, it goeth not downe. For who would abide to heare this ſpeech, the ſoules of the faithfull went downeward to God, yea went into Hell to God. Nay returned downeward into hell to God that gave them. That common receptacle therefore of the dead was the receptacle of their bodies, which all firſt or laſt, returned to the earth from whence they were taken. And where you ſay that place was called in all tongues, by ſuch a word, as ſignifyeth a lower place beneath, it is true of the common receptacle of their bodies, but not of their ſoules. For the ſoule of Lazarus was not carryed by the Angels into hell, but into Abrahams boſome, which was not onely a place of reſt, but alſo of joy, and comfort contrary to torments: betweene which and hell was an infinite diſtance: who would call that a common receptacle, when there was an infinite diſtance, unpaſſable from one to the other.

FVLK. 9. Wee ſay in our Creede, that Chriſt deſcended into hell, which beeing an Article of our faith, muſt have relation to ſuch benefit, as wee receive by his deſcending, namely, that thereby wee are delivered from the paines of hell. But that hee ſhould deſcend into Limbus patrum, to fetch out the Fathers, which before you ſaid were in priſon, now you ſay in reſt, wee neither ſay it in our Creede, neither doeth it pertaine unto us. But Hierome is cited as a favourer of your opinion, who I confeſſe in ſome part held as you doe, but not altogether. For thus hee writeth in Epitaph. Nepot. After hee hath given thankes to Chriſt for our redemption by his death. “Quid ante miſerius homine, qui æternæ mortis terrore proſtratus, vivendi ſenſum ad hoc tantum acceperat ut periret, &c. What was more miſerable then man before, which beeing caſt downe with terrour of eternall death, received ſenſe of living for this end onely, that hee might periſh. For death raigned from Adam unto Moſes, yea upon thoſe which have not ſinned after the ſimilitude of the tranſgreſſion of Adam. If Abraham, Iſaack, and Iacob in hell, who in the kingdome of heaven? if thy friendes were under the puniſhment. If Adam, and they which ſinned not, were held guilty by other mens ſinnes, what is to bee thought of them which ſaid in their heart there is no God &c. And if Lazarus bee ſeene in the boſome of Abraham and in a place of reſt, what like hath hell and the kingdome of heaven? Before Chriſt Abraham in hell, after Chriſt the theefe in Paradiſe. In theſe wordes Hierome after his Rhetoricall manner, amplifying the benefit of our redemption by Chriſt, doeth rather touch this errour, then plainely expreſſe it. For firſt hee maketh all men miſerable before Chriſt, and caſt downe with terrour of eternall death, which is true, if yee conſider them without Chriſt, in which ſtate are all men ſince Chriſt, but of all men that lived before the time of Chriſts death, and yet imbraced their redemption by him, it is not true. As alſo that there are ſome which have not ſinned. But that all this is to bee underſtood, ſpecially of the death of their bodies, and allegorically of their ſoules, hee addeth immediately, Et idcirco in reſurrectione ejus multa dormientium corpora, &c. And therefore at his reſurrection, many bodies of them that ſlept aroſe, and were ſeene in the heavenly Hieruſalem. See you not how hee turneth all into an Allegory, to ſet foorth the vertue of Chriſts redemption? who brought all his elect by his death, from hell and the power of darkeneſſe, into the kingdome of heaven. Furthermore you bidde us ſee Auguſtine in Pſalm. 85. verſ. 13. Where in the beginning hee profeſſeth his ignorance in diſcuſſing the queſtion of the nethermoſt hell. Firſt ſuppoſing this world in which wee live, to bee Infernum ſuperius, and the place whither the dead goe Infernum inferius, from which God hath delivered us, ſending thither his Sonne, who to this Infernum or lower place came by his birth, to that by his death: hee addeth another opinion, Fortaſſis enim apud ipſos inferos eſt aliqua pars inferior, &c. Peradventure even in hell it ſelfe there is ſome part lower, in which the ungodly, which have much ſinned are delivered. For whether Abraham had beene now in certaine places in hell, wee cannot ſufficiently define. And afterward when hee hath ſpoken of the diverſe places of Lazarus, and the rich Glutton, hee concludeth as uncertainely as hee beganne. Ergo inter iſta fortaſſe duo inferna, quorum in uno, &c. Therefore peradventure betweene theſe two hells, in one of which the ſoules of the righteous reſted, the ſoules of the wicked are tormented, one attending prayeth in the perſon of Chriſt, &c. Here you may ſee, what an article of beliefe this was with Saint Auguſtine, when he hath nothing to define, but onely bringeth his conjecturall opinions and peradventures. Alſo how hee taketh Infernum for any lower place, in ſo much that hee calleth this world, Infernum. Wherefore much more may Infernum ſignify the grave, and bee ſo ſometimes tranſlated.

MART. 10. His words be theſe in effect: If a man will ſay unto mee, that Lazarus was ſeene in Abrahams boſome and a place of refreſhing even before Chriſts comming: true it is, but what is that in compariſon? Quid ſimile Infernus & regna cœlorum? What hath hell and heaven like? As if hee ſhould ſay, Abraham indeede and Lazarus (and conſequently many other) were in place of reſt, but yet in hell, till Chriſt came, and in ſuch reſt, as hath no compariſon with the joyes of heaven. And Saint Auguſtine diſputing this matter ſometime, and doubting whether Abrahams boſome bee called hell in the Scripture, and whether the name of hell be taken at any time in the good part (for of Chriſts deſcending into hell, and of a third place where the Patriarches remained untill Chriſts comming, not heaven, but called Abrahams boſome: hee doubted not, but was more aſſured) the ſame holy Doctor in another place, as being better reſolved, doubted not upon theſe wordes of the Pſalme, Thou haſt delivered my ſoule from the lower hell, to make this one good ſenſe of this place, that the lower hell is it, wherein the damned are tormented: the higher hell is that, wherein the ſoules of the juſt reſted, calling both places by the name of hell.

In Pſal.85.13.

FVLK. 10. I have ſet downe his very wordes indeede, which being well weighed, make nothing ſo clearely for your phantaſied Limbus, as you would have men weene. You ſay Auguſtine doubteth whether Abrahams boſome, in the Scripture be called hell, Eph.99.& de gen.ad lit. lib.12.cap.33. But there hee doeth utterly deny it, and in Pſal.85. as by his words cited before appeareth, he doubteth. So that where he flatly denyeth, with you he doubteth, and where he doubteth, with you he is better reſolved. Wherefore this matter of Abraham, and the faithfull being in hell, is no article of faith, except you will ſay that S. Auguſtine was not reſolved in the Articles of our faith, who touching the third place, whatſoever at diverſe times he ſpeaketh doubtingly in his Hypognoſticon, he affirmeth reſolutely, that hee findeth in the Scriptures, that there is none.

MART. 11. And ſurely of his marveilous humility and wiſedome, hee would have beene much more reſolute herein, if hee had heard the opinion of Saint Hierome, whom hee often conſulted in ſuch queſtions, and of other Fathers, who in this poynt ſpeake moſt playnely, that Abrahams boſome or the place where the Patriarches reſted, was ſome part of hell, Tertullian, (Lib. 4. adverſ. Marcion.) ſaith, I know that the boſome of Abraham was no heavenly place, but onely the higher hell, or the higher part of hell. Of which ſpeech of the Fathers, roſe afterward that other name, Limbus patrum, that is the very brimme, or uppermoſt and outmoſt part of hell, where the Fathers of the old Teſtament reſted. Thus wee ſee that the Patriarches themſelves were as then in hell, though they were there in a place of reſt: in ſo much that Saint Hierome ſaith againe, Ante reſurrectionem Chriſti notus in Iudæa Deus, & ipſi qui noverant eum, tamen ad Inferos trahebantur: that is, Before the reſurrection of Chriſt, God was knowne in Iurie, and they themſelves that knew him, yet were drawne unto hell. Saint Chriſoſtome, upon that place of Eſay, I will breake the braſen gates, and bruiſe the Iron barres in pieces, pieces, and will open the treaſures darkned, &c. So he calleth hell, ſaith he, for although it were hell, yet it held the holy ſoules, and precious veſſels, Abraham, Iſaac, and Iacob. Marke that he ſaith, though it were hell, yet there were the juſt men at that time, till our Saviour Chriſt came to deliver them from thence.

FVLK. 11. As wiſe and humble as hee was, hee was not ready to yeeld to every opinion of Hierome, as his Epiſtles written to Hierome doe declare. Neither was Hierome ſo reſolute in this matter, whereof hee ſpeaketh under a cloude, and in an Allegorie, as it is plaine, where hee ſaith, the bodyes that were rayſed at the reſurrection of Chriſt, were ſeene in the heavenly Hieruſalem, whereas it is certaine they were ſeene onely in the earthly Hieruſalem actually. But hee meaneth, the effect of Chriſts redemption, was acknowledged either in the Catholike Church, which is Hieruſalem above in one ſenſe, or elſe that they ſhall bee ſeene in the new Hieruſalem and bleſſed felicity of the Godly at the worlds end: whereof a teſtimony was given in that ſight of their appearing, and particular reſurrection knowne at Hieruſalem on earth. But you cite another place out of Tertullian lib. 4. adverſus Marcionem, and in the margent you ſay, Loco citato, but I wote not where. And theſe bee Tertullians wordes, if you bee an honeſt man, I know that the boſome of Abraham was no heavenly place, but onely the higher hell, or the higher part of hell. I ſee you will bee as bold with the auncient Doctours workes, as you are with my poore writings, whom you make to ſay even what you liſt. In the laſt Section before you ſaid Saint Auguſtine Epiſt.99. & de gen. ad lit. Lib. 12. cap. 33. doubted whether Abrahams boſome were called hell. Quod ſi nuſquam, &c. If it bee never read in the holy Scriptures (ſcilicet that hell is taken in the good part) verily that boſome of Abraham that is the habitation of a certaine ſecret reſt, is not to bee beleeved, to bee any part of hell. And agajne by reaſon of the infinite Chaos, Satis ut opinor appareat, It may appeare as I thinke ſufficiently, that the boſome of that ſo great felicity, is not a certaine part, and as it were a member of hell. In the other place hee ſpeaketh to the ſame effect, and upon the ſame ground, that hee never findeth in the Scriptures hell, taken in good part, and Cap 34. where hee prooveth that Paradiſe is heaven, hee ſaith: Quanto magis ergo. How much more then, may that boſome of Abraham, after this life bee called Paradiſe? This ſaith Auguſtine, and much more to this purpoſe, wherein I thought to have forborne you, but that you come upon us ſtill with new forgeries. Tertullian in the booke by you quoted, pag. 274. of Frob. printed 1550. thus writeth. Sed Marcion aliorſum cogit, &c. But Marcion driveth it another way, ſo forſooth, that hee determineth both the rewardes of the Creatour, either of torment, or of refreſhing, to bee layd up for them in hell, which have obeyed the Law and the Prophets. But of Chriſt, and his God, hee defineth an heavenly boſome, and heaven. Wee will anſwer, and even by this ſelfe ſame Scripture, convincing his blindeneſſe, which againſt hell diſcerneth this Abrahams boſome, to the poore man. For one thing is hell, (as I thinke) and Abrahams boſome, another thing. For a great depth he ſaith, is betweene thoſe regions, and that doeth let the paſſage too and fro. But neither ſhould the rich man have lifted up his eyes, and that truely from afarre off, but into the higher places, and that of an exceeding height, but that infinite diſtance of height and depth. Whereof it appeareth to every wiſe man, that hath ever heard of the Elyſian fieldes, that there is ſome locall determination, which is called Abrahams boſome, to receive the ſoules of his ſonnes, even of the Gentiles, hee being the Father of many nations, to bee accounted of Abrahams familie, and of the ſame faith, by which Abraham beleeved God, under no yoake of the Law, nor in the ſigne of circumciſion. That region therefore I call the boſome of Abraham, and if not heavenly, yet higher then hell, which ſhall give reſt in the meane ſeaſon, to the ſoules of the juſt, untill the conſummation of things doe finiſh the reſurrection, of all with the fullneſſe of reward. This is as much as I can finde in Tertullian, touching Abrahams boſome, which is cleane contrary to that you affirme him to ſpeake. For by this ſaying it is manifeſt, that your opinion is Marcions hereſie. Secondly, that Abrahams boſome is not hell, but higher by an infinite diſtance, although not in full perfection of heavenly glory. Thirdly, that it is not Limbus patrum, but the receptacle of all the juſt ſoules, to the end of the world. Tertullians authority therefore doeth you ſmall pleaſure, and leſſe honeſty, unleſſe you did cite him more truely. But I am unwiſe to looke for plaine dealing, and ſincerity at your handes. Well, your Limbus patrum, the very brimme, or uppermoſt, or outmoſt part of hell, wherein all the Patriarches ſhould reſt, wee have now founde from whence it came, even from your old acquaintance, the houſe of Pontus, Marcion the abhominable Heretike. The other ſaying of Hieromes, but that the opinion of the Fathers in hell, had by that time taken ſome ſtrength, might bee underſtood of the mortality, whereunto they were ſubiect, and never ſhould have beene rayſed, but by the reſurrection of Chriſt, as it ſeemeth by that which he oppoſeth of all nations, ſince the paſſion and reſurrection of Chriſt, acknowledged to ſpeake like Philoſophers, of the immortality of the ſoule, and rejoycing in the reſurrection of the dead, as the Fathers mourned at their death. Chryſoſtomes place is more apparant for your errour, although he alſo may be underſtood to ſpeake allegorically of the effect of Chriſts death and reſurrection, by which all the Patriarchs were delivered from death, and hell was ſpoyled: not that they were in priſon there, but that the juſtice of God had condemned them thither, if Chriſts death had not redeemed them: but I will not ſtand to cleare Chryſoſtome of this errour, which it is ſufficient for me to have found, that Marcion the old Heretike, was the firſt Authour thereof, by Tertullians confeſſion, howſoever it came to paſſe, that many good men afterward deceived by the word ᾅδης and Infernus, did hold it.

ART. 12. Therefore did Iacob ſay, I will goe downe to my ſonne unto hell. And againe he ſaith: If any misfortune happen to (Benjamin) by the way, you ſhall bring my gray head with ſorrow unto hell, which is repeated againe twiſe in the Chapter 44. by which phraſe the holy Scripture will ſignify, not only death, but alſo the deſcending at that time of all ſortes of ſoules into hell both good and badde. And therefore it is ſpoken of all ſortes in the holy Scripture, both of good and of badde. For all went then into hell, but ſome into a place there, of reſt, others into other places there, of torments. And therefore Saint Hierome ſaith, ſpeaking of hell, according to the old Teſtament, Hell is a place wherein ſoules are included: either in reſt, or in paines, according to the quality of their deſerts.

Aug. in Pſal. 85. v. 13.

VLK. 12. Iacob ſayd hee would bee joyned to his ſonne by death, as in the other text you bring, it is more manifeſt then the Sunne at noone dayes. For Iacob ſpeaking of his gray head, muſt needes meane of his body, and therefore of the grave, and not of hell. So in the 3. Reg. 2. which you quote, David chargeth Salomon, that hee ſuffer not the gray head of Ioab, to goe downe to the grave in peace, and that hee ſhall cauſe the hoare head of Shemei to goe downe to the grave with bloud, which by no meanes can bee underſtood of his ſoule going to hell, which goeth not with bloud, although it is plaine enough by the word hoare head, that hee meaneth his body in age, or his old body. And this text Pagnine, in his Dictionary thought neceſſary to bee underſtood of the grave, although hee make the word Sheol indifferent to ſignify Hell, and the Grave. That all went to Hell, ſome to reſt, and ſome to torments, it was firſt deviſed by Marcion, the Heretike. But Saint Hierome is once againe cited in Oſeam, cap. 13. where hee ſaith, that Hell is a place wherein ſoules are included, &c. by which you ſee that hee ſpeaketh not of Limbus, wherein ſoules were included before Chriſt, but of ſuch a place wherein they are now included, taking the word Infernus, generally for any place that receiveth the ſoules of the departed, as hee ſaith moſt plainely himſelfe, in the ſame place: Quicquid igitur ſeparat fratres, Infernus eſt appellandus. Whatſoever doeth ſeparate brethren, is to be called hell. Augustine is quoted, to multiply a lye, and for nothing elſe, as I have ſhewed before.

ART. 13. And in this ſenſe it is alſo often ſaid in the holy Scriptures, that ſuch and ſuch were gathered, or layde to their fathers, though they were buried in divers places, and dyed not in the ſame ſtate of ſalvation, or damnation: In that ſenſe Samuel being raiſed up, to ſpeake with Saul, ſaid, To morrow thou and thy ſonnes ſhall be with me. That is, dead, and in hell, though not in the ſame place or ſtate there: in this ſenſe all ſuch places of the holy Scripture as have the word Inferi, or Infernus, correſpondent both to the Greeke and Hebrew, ought to be, and may bee moſt conveniently tranſlated by the word, Hell. As when it is ſaid, Thou haſt delivered my ſoule from the lower hell, Pſal. 85. v. 13. that is, as Saint Auguſtine expoundeth it, Thou haſt preſerved me from mortall ſinnes, that would have brought me into the lower hell, which is for the damned. Which place of holy Scripture, and the like, when they tranſlate grave, ſee how miſerably it ſoundeth, Thou haſt delivered my ſoule from the loweſt grave. Which they would never ſay for very ſhame, but that they are afrayd to ſay in any place (be the holy Scriptures never ſo plaine) that any ſoule was delivered or returned from hell, leſt thereof it might follow by and by, that the Patriarches, and our Saviour Chriſt, were in ſuch a Hell.

The Scriptures ſpeake of another hell, beſides that of the damned.

Fvlk. 13. That which is ſpoken indifferently of the elect, and reprobate, muſt needes bee underſtood of that which is common to both, that is, corporall death. How can it bee veriſyed of their ſoules, that they were layd to the Fathers, when betweene the godly, and the wicked, there is an infinite diſtance: but the earth, the grave, or pitte, is a common receptacle of all dead bodies. That Samuel, which being rayſed up, ſpake to Saule, might truely ſay of his ſoule, though not of all his ſonnes, that hee ſhould bee with him in hell, for it was the ſpirit of Satan, and not of Samuel, although counterfeiting Samuel, he might ſpeake of the death of Saul, and his ſonnes. As for that verſe of the eighty and five Pſalme, whereupon you doe falſly ſo often alledge Saint Auguſtines reſolution, what what abſurdity hath it, to tranſlate it, from the loweſt grave, or from the bottome of the grave, whereby David meaneth extreame danger of death, that he was in, by the malice of his perſecuting enemies, Saul and his complices? But we are afrayd to ſay in any place, that any ſoule was delivered and returned from hell. We ſay that the ſoules of all the faithfull are delivered from hell: but of any which after death is condemned to hell, we acknowledge no returne. And theſe words are ſpoken by David while he lived, and praiſed God for his deliverance, which might be not only from the grave, but alſo from hell, ſaving that here he ſpeaketh of his preſervation from death.

Mart. 14. And that this is their feare, it is evident, becauſe that in all other places where it is plaine that the holy Scriptures ſpeake of the hell of the damned, from whence is no returne, they tranſlate there the very ſame word hell, and not grave. As for example, The way of life is on high to the Prudent, to avoyd from hell beneath. Loe, here that is tranſlated hell beneath, which before was tranſlated the loweſt grave. And againe, Hell and deſtruction are before the Lord, how much more the hearts of the ſonnes of men? But when in the holy Scriptures there is mention of delivery of a ſoule from hell, then thus they tranſlate: God ſhal deliver my ſoule from the power of the grave, for he will receive me. Can you tell what they would ſay? Doeth God deliver them from the grave, or from temporall death, whom he receiveth to his mercy? or hath the grave any power over the ſoule? Againe when they ſay, What man liveth and ſhall not ſee death? Shall he deliver his ſoule from the hand of the grave?

Fvlk. 14. I have ſhewed before diverſe times, that although the Hebrew word Sheol doe properly ſignify a receptacle of the bodyes after death, yet when mention is of the wicked, by conſequence it may ſignify hell, as the day ſignifyeth light, the night darkneſſe, fire heate, peace ſignifyeth proſperity, and an hundred ſuch like ſpeeches. But where you ſay that Proverb. 15. verſ. 24. that is tranſlated hell beneath, which before was tranſlated the loweſt grave, Pſalm. 85. verſ. 13. you ſay untruely, for although in both places there is the word Sheol, yet in that Pſalme there is Tachtijah, in the Proverbs Mattah, for which if it were tranſlated the grave, that declineth, or is downward, it were no inconvenience. In the other texts, you trifle upon the word ſoule, whereas the Hebrew word ſignifyeth not the reaſonable ſoule, which is ſeparable from the body, but the life, or the whole perſon of man, which may rightly bee ſaid to be delivered from the hand or power of the grave, as the verſe 48. doeth plainely declare, when in the latter part is repeated the ſenſe of the former, as it is in many places of the Pſalmes.

Mart. 15. If they take grave properly, where mans body is buryed; it is not true either that every ſoule, yea or every body is buryed in a grave. But if in all ſuch places they will ſay they meane nothing elſe but to ſignify death, and that to goe downe into the grave, and to dye, is all one: wee aske them why they follow not the wordes of the holy Scripture, to ſignifie the ſame thing, which call it going downe to hell, not going downe to the grave? Here they muſt needes open the myſtery of Antichriſt working in their tranſlations, and ſay, that ſo they ſhould make hell a common place to all that departed in the old Teſtament, which they will not, no not in the moſt important places of our beleefe concerning our Saviour Chriſts deſcending into hell, and triumphing over the ſame. Yea therefore of purpoſe they will not, onely for to defeate that part of our Chriſtian Creede.

Fvlk. 15. We cannot always take the word grave properly, when the Scripture uſeth it figuratively: but if we ſay, to goe downe to the grave, and to die is all one, you aske us why we follow not the words of the holy Scripture. I anſwer we doe, for the Scripture calleth it grave and not hell. Where is then your vaine clattering of the myſtery of Antichriſt, that wee muſt open? Becauſe wee will not acknowledge that hereticall common place, invented by Marcion the heretike, wee purpoſe to defeat the article of Chriſts deſcending into hell. A monſtrous ſlaunder, when wee doe openly confeſſe it, and his triumphing over hell in more triumphant manner then you determine it. For if he deſcended into that hell onely, in which were the ſoules of the faithfull, which was a place of reſt, of comfort, of joy, and felicity, what triumph was it to overcome ſuch an hell, which if you take away the hatefull name of hell, by your owne deſcription, will prove rather an heaven then an hell? But wee beleeve that he triumphed over the hell of the damned, and over all the power of darkneſſe, which hee ſubdued by the vertue of his obedience and ſacrifice, ſo that it ſhould never bee able to claime or hold any of his elect, whom he had redeemed.

Mart. 16. As when the Prophet firſt, Oſee 13. and afterward the Apoſtle, 1 Corin. 15, in the Greeke ſay thus: Ero mors tua ô mors, morſus tuus ero Inferne. Vbi eſt, mors, ſtimulus tuus? Where is, O death, thy ſting? where is, O hell, thy victory? they tranſlate in both places, O grave, in ſteade of O hell. What elſe can bee their meaning thereby, but to draw the Reader from the common ſenſe of our Saviour Chriſts deſcending into hell, and conquering the ſame, and bringing bringing out the Fathers and juſt men triumphantly from thence into heaven? which ſenſe hath alwayes beene the common ſenſe of the Catholike Church and holy Doctours, ſpecially vpon this place of the Prophet. And what a kinde of ſpeech is this, and out of all tune, to make our Saviour Chriſt ſay, O grave I will be thy deſtruction? as though he had triumphed over the grave, and not over hell; or over the grave, that is, over death: and ſo the Prophet ſhould ſay death twice, and hell not at all. See S.Hier. Comment. in 13. Oſee.

FVLK. 16. S.Hierom, whom you quote in the margent, to prove that all the Catholike Doctours vnderſtood this text of Oſee, of Chriſts deſcending into hell, and thereby reprove our tranſlation, which for hell ſaith grave, after he hath repeated the words of the Apoſtle, 1 Cor. 15. vpon this text thus he concludeth: Itaque quod ille in reſurrectionem interpretatus eſt Domini, nos aliter interpretari nec poſſumus nec audemus: Therfore that which the Apoſtle hath interpreted of our Lords reſurrection, we neither can nor dare interpret otherwiſe. You ſee therfore by Hieromes judgement, that in this text, which is proper of Chriſts reſurrection, it is more proper to uſe the word of grave, then of hell. How vainly the ſame Hierome interpreteth the laſt words of this chapter, of ſpoyling the treaſure of every veſſell, that is deſirable of Chriſts delivering out of hell the moſt precious veſſells of the Saints, &c. I am not ignorant: but we ſpeak of tranſlation of the 14. verſe, which being vnderſtood of Chriſts reſurrection, it argueth, that the grave is ſpoken of, rather then hell. As for the repetition of one thing twice for vehemency, and certainties ſake, is no inconvenient thing, but commonly uſed in the Scriptures.

MART. 17. Why, my Maſters, you that are ſo wonderfull preciſe Tranſlatours, admit that our Saviour Chriſt deſcended not into hell beneath, as you ſay, yet I thinke you will grant that hee triumphed over hell, and was conquerour of the ſame. Why then did it not pleaſe you to ſuffer the Prophet to ſay ſo at the leaſt, rather then that he had conqueſt only of death and the grave? You abuſe your ignorant Reader very impudently, and your owne ſelves very damnably, not onely in this, but in that you make grave and death all one, and ſo where the holy Scripture often joyneth together death and hell, as things different and diſtinct, you make them ſpeake but one thing twice, idly and ſuperfluouſly.

FVLK. 17. For our faith of Chriſts triumphing over hell, I have ſpoken already ſufficiently: but of the Prophets meaning beſide the wordes themſelves, the Apoſtle is beſt expounder, who referreth it to the reſurrection, and his victory over death, which hee hath gained not for himſelfe alone, but for all his elect. Where you ſay wee make grave and death all one, it is falſe: wee know they differ; but that one may bee ſignifyed by the other, without any idle or ſuperfluous repetition in one verſe, I referre mee to a whole hundred of examples, that may bee brought out of the Pſalmes, the Prophets, and the Proverbes, where wordes of the ſame, like, or neere ſignification, are twice together repeated, to note the ſame matter, which none but a blaſphemous dogge, will ſay to bee done idly or ſuperfluouſly.

MART. 18. But will you know that they ſhould not confound them, but that Mors and Infernus, which are the wordes of the holy Scripture in all tongues, are diſtinct? Heare what Saint Hierome ſaith, or if you will not heare, becauſe you are of them which have ſtopped their eares, let the indifferent Chriſtian Reader hearken to this holy Doctour, and great Interpreter of the holy Scriptures, according to his ſingular knowledge in all the learned tongues. Vpon the foreſaid place of the Prophet, after hee had ſpoken of our Saviour Chriſts deſcending into Hell, and overcomming of death, hee addeth: Betweene death and hell this is the difference, that death is that whereby the ſoule is ſeparated from the body; hell is the place where ſoules are included, either in reſt, or elſe in paynes, according to the quality of their deſerts. And that death is one thing, and hell is another, the Pſalmiſt alſo declareth, ſaying, There is not in death that is mindfull of thee, but in hell who ſhall confeſſe to thee? And in another place, Let death come vpon them, and let them goe downe into hell alive. Thus farre Saint Hierome. Hier. in Oſee cap. 13. Pſal. 6.

FVLK. 18. Hee that by the grave vnderſtandeth a place to receive the bodyes of the dead, and figuratively death, doeth no more confound the wordes of death and the grave, then hee that by a cuppe, vnderſtandeth a veſſell to receive drinke properly, and figuratively that drinke which is contained in ſuch a veſſell. Therefore that you cite out of Hierome, maketh nothing againſt us, for hee himſelfe, although deceived by the Septuagints, or rather by the ambiguity of the word ᾅδης, which they uſe, in the ſignification of the Hebrew word שאול. yet by Infernus vnderſtandeth them that bee in Inferno, and the dead, as wee doe by the word grave oftentimes. As for his opinion of the godly ſoules in happy hell before Chriſts death, or his interpretation of any other part of Scripture, wee profeſſe not to follow in our tranſlations, but as neere as wee can the true ſignification of the wordes of holy Scripture, with ſuch ſenſe (if any thing bee doubtfull) as the proper circumſtances of every place will leade us vnto, that we may attaine to the meaning of the holy Ghoſt.

MART. 19. By which differences of death and hell, (whereof wee muſt often advertiſe the Reader) are meant two things, death, and the going downe of the ſoule into ſome receptacle of hell, in that ſtate of the old Teſtament, at what time the holy Scriptures uſed this phraſe ſo often. Now theſe impudent Tranſlatours in all theſe places tranſlate it grave, of purpoſe to confound it and death together, and to make it but one thing, which S.Hierome ſheweth to bee different, in the very ſame ſenſe that we have declared. Bib. 1579.

FVLK. 19. The difference of Mors and Infernus, which Hierome maketh, cannot alwayes ſtand, as I have ſhewed of the hoare heads of Iacob, Ioab, and Shemei, which none but madde men will ſay, to have deſcended into a receptacle of ſoules; beſide other places of Scripture, where Sheol muſt of neceſſity ſignify a place for the body. And even thoſe places of the Pſalmes, that Saint Hierome calleth to witneſſe, doe make againſt his errour: for where David ſayth, Pſalm. 6. In hell who ſhall confeſſe vnto thee? how can it bee true of the ſoules of the faithfull being in that holy hell Abrahams boſome? Did not Abraham confeſſe vnto God, and acknowledge his mercy? Did not Lazarus the ſame? Did not all the holy ſoules departed, confeſſe God, in Abrahams boſome? Were all thoſe bleſſed ſoules ſo vnthankefull, that being carryed into that place of reſt and comfort, none of them would confeſſe Gods benefits? It is plaine therefore, to the confuſion of your errour, that Sheol in that place of David muſt needes ſignify the grave, in which no man doth confeſſe, prayſe or give thankes vnto God, of whom in death there is no remembrance. Therefore hee deſireth life and reſtoring of health, that hee may prayſe God in his Church or Congregation, Likewiſe in the Pſalme 54. where hee propheceyeth vnto the wicked a ſuddaine death, ſuch as befell to Chore, Dathan, and Abiram, which went downe quicke into the grave: not into hell, whither come no bodies of men living, but the ſoules of men that are dead.

MART. 20. But alaſſe, is it the very nature of the Hebrew, Greeke, or Latine, that forceth them ſo much to Engliſh it grave, rather then hell? We appeale to all Hebricians, Grecians, and Latiniſts in the world: firſt, if a man would aske, what is Hebrew or Greeke, or Latine for hell; whether they would not anſwer, theſe three words, as the very proper words to ſignifie it, even as panis ſignifieth bread: ſecondly, if a man would aske, what is Hebrew, or Greeke, or Latine for a grave; whether they would anſwer theſe words, and not three other, which they know are as proper words for grave, as lac is for milke. ᾅδης. שאול Infernus. τάφος. קבר Sepulcrum.

FVLK. 20. The very nature of the Hebrew word שאול is moſt properly to ſignify a grave, or receptacle of dead bodies, as all that bee learned in that tongue doe know. About the Greeke and Latine tearmes, is not our queſtion, and therefore you deale deceipfully, to handle them all three together. Although neither ᾅδης, nor Infernus, are ſo proper for hell, but that they may bee taken alſo ſometimes for the grave, and ſo perhaps were meant by the Greeke and Latine Tranſlatours in diverſe places. You ſpeake therefore as one voyde of all ſhame, to ſay they are as proper for hell, as panis for bread. Where you aske what is Hebrew, Greeke, or Latine, for hell: you muſt vnderſtand, that if you ſpeake of a proper word for thoſe inviſible places, wherein the ſoules departed are either in joy or torments, I anſwer, there is no proper word for thoſe places, either in Hebrew, Greeke, or Latine: for that which of all theſe tongues is tranſlated Heaven, is the proper word for the ſenſible Skie, in which are the Sunne, Moone, and Starres, and by a figure is transferred to ſignify the place of Gods glorie, in which hee raigneth with the bleſſed ſpirits of Angels and men, above this ſenſible world. Paradiſe and Abrahams boſome, who is ſo childiſh, not to acknowledge them to bee borrowed wordes, and not proper? So for the receptacle of the reprobate ſoules, in the Hebrew tongue Topheth or Gehinnom, which properly are the names of an abominable place of Idolatry, are uſed, and Sheol ſometimes figuratively may ſignifie the ſame. In Greeke and Latine Gehenna is uſed for the ſame, which is borrowed of the Hebrew. Sometimes alſo the word ᾅδης in Greeke is taken for the place of the damned, and the kingdome of darkeneſſe. The Latine word Infernus is any low place. Wherefore I cannot marveile ſufficiently at your impudencie, which affirme theſe three wordes שאול, ᾅδης, and Infernus, to bee as proper for our Engliſh word hell, as panis is for bread. That there be other wordes beſide theſe in all the three tongues to ſignify a grave, I marveile to what purpoſe you tell us, except you would have ignorant folke ſuppoſe, that there cannot bee two Hebrew, Greeke, or Latine wordes for one thing.

MART. 21. Yea, note and conſider diligently what wee will ſay. Let them ſhew mee out of all the Bible one place, where it is certaine and agreed among all, that it muſt needes ſignify grave, let them ſhew mee in any one ſuch place, that the holy Scripture vſeth any of thoſe former three wordes for grave. As when Abraham bought a place of buriall, whether hee bought Infernum: or when it is ſaid the Kings of Iſrael were buried in the monuments or ſepulchers of their fathers, whether it ſay, in infernis patrum ſuorum. So that not onely Divines by this obſervation, but Grammarians alſo and children may eaſily ſee, that the proper and naturall ſignification of the ſaid words, is in Engliſh hell; and not grave.

Fvlk. 21. Wee note well your fooliſh ſubtiltey, that will have us to ſhew you one place, where it is certaine, and agreed among all, that Sheol muſt needes ſignify grave. I am perſwaded that you and ſuch as you are, that have ſold your ſelves to Antichriſt, to maintayne his hereſies with all impudencie, will agree to nothing that ſhall bee brought, though it bee never ſo plaine and certaine, that it muſt needes ſo ſignify. I have already ſhewed you three places, where the hoare head is ſaid to goe downe into Sheol, that is, into the grave. For whither ſhould the hoare head goe but into the grave? Nothing can bee more plaine to him that will agree to trueth, that Sheol in all ſuch places is taken for the grave. But to omit theſe places, becauſe I have ſpoken of them already; what ſay you to that place, Numb. 16. where the earth opened her mouth, and ſwallowed up the Rebells with their tents, and all their ſubſtance of cattell, and whatſoever they had: where the text ſaith, They went downe, and all that they had, alive (ſheolah) into the pitte or grave. God made a greate grave or hole in the earth, to receive them all. Where no man will ſay that either the bodyes of theſe men, or their ſubſtance of tents, cattell, and ſtuffe, went into hell, as it is ſure their ſoules went into torment. And if authority doe weigh more with you then good reaſon, heare what Saint Auguſtine writeth upon the ſame text, and how hee taketh your Inferos or Infernum, which in the Hebrew is Sheol, Queſt. ſuper Num. lib. 4. cap. 29. Et deſcenderunt ipſi & omnia quæcunque ſunt eis viventes ad inferos. Notandum ſecundum locum terrenum dictos eſſe inferos, hoc eſt, &c. And they themſelves deſcended, and all that they had, alive unto Inferos, the lower partes. It is to bee noted, that Inferi are ſpoken of an earthly place, that is in the low partes of the earth: for diverſly and under manifold underſtanding, even as the ſenſe of things which are in hand requireth, the name of Inferi is put in the Scriptures, and eſpecially it is wont to bee taken for the dead. But foraſmuch as it is ſaid, that thoſe deſcended alive ad Inferos, and by the very narration it appeareth ſufficiently what was done; it is manifeſt, as I ſayd, that the lower parts of the earth are tearmed by this word Inferi, in compariſon of this upper part of the earth, in which wee live: Like as in compariſon of the higher heaven, where the dwelling of the holy Angels is, the Scripture ſaith, that the ſinfull Angells beeing thruſt downe into the darkeneſſe of this ayre, are reſerved as it were in priſons of a lower part or hell, to bee puniſhed. Saint Auguſtine here doeth not onely underſtand this place of the grave or receptacle of bodies, but alſo ſheweth that the Latine word Inferi or Infernus, doeth not alwayes ſignify hell, as you made it of late, as proper for hell, as panis for bread. But becauſe you ſhall not complaine of the ſingularity of this example, although you require but one, I will adde out of the Pſalme 141. where the Prophet ſayth, Our bones are ſcattered at the very brinke or mouth of (Sheol) the grave. How can you underſtand him to ſpeake of hell? For the grave, and not hell, is a place for dead mens bones: as hee ſpeaketh of the faithfull, by the wicked counted as good as dead and rotten, conſumed to the bones. By theſe and many other examples, it is manifeſt, that the proper ſignification of Sheol in Engliſh, is a grave, and not hell.

Mart. 22. And therefore Beza doeth ſtrangely abuſe his Reader, more then in one place, ſaying that the Hebrew word doeth properly ſignify grave, beeing deduced of a verb that ſignifyeth to crave or aske, becauſe it craveth alwayes new coarſes. As though the grave craved more then hell doth, or ſwallowed more, and were more hardly ſatisfyed and filled then hell: for in all ſuch places they tranſlate grave; and in one ſuch place they ſay, The grave and deſtruction can never bee full, whereas themſelves a little before tranſlate the very ſame wordes, hell and deſtruction: and therefore it might have pleaſed them to have ſaid alſo, Hell and deſtruction can never be full, as their pew-fellowes doe in their tranſlation: and againe, Wee ſhall ſwallow them up, like hell. The Devill (wee reade) goeth about continually like a roaring Lyon, ſeeking whom hee may devoure, who is called in the Apocalyps, Abaddon, that is, deſtruction: and ſo very aptly hell and deſtruction are joyned together, and are truely ſaid never to bee filled. What madneſſe and impudencie is it then for Beza to write thus: Who is ignorant, that by the Hebrew word rather is ſignifyed a grave, for that it ſeemeth after a ſort to crave alwayes new carcaſſes?

Fvlk. 22. Beza doeth not abuſe his Reader, to tell him, that Sheol is derived of a verbe that ſignifyeth craving or asking: but you doe unhoneſtly abuſe Beza, as you doe every man, when you take in hand to affirme that hee ſtandeth onely upon the etymologie of Sheol, to prove that it ſignifyeth the grave.

And

Mart. 23. And againe, concerning our Saviour Chriſts deſcending into hell, and delivering the fathers from thence, it is marvell, ſaith Beza, that the moſt part of the ancient Fathers were in this errour, whereas with the Hebrews the word Sheol ſignifyeth nothing elſe but grave. Before he pleaded upon the etymology or nature of the word, now alſo hee pleadeth upon the authority of the Hebrewes themſelves. If hee were not knowne to be very impudent and obſtinate, we would eaſily miſtruſt his skill in the Hebrew, ſaying that among the Hebrewes, the word ſignifyeth nothing elſe but grave.

Annot. in 2. Act. v. 24.
Nihil aliud.

Fvlk. 23. Beza ſaith that the word Sheol properly ſignifyeth nothing but grave, neverthelеſſe he ſaith, it is taken figuratively, for tribulation, which is neere to extreame deſtruction, yea and ſometime for the bottomleſſe pit of hell.

Mart. 24. I would gladly know, what are thoſe Hebrewes: doeth not the Hebrew text of holy Scripture beſt tell us the uſe of this word? Doe not themſelves tranſlate it Hell very often? doe not the Septuaginta alwayes? If any Hebrew in the world, were asked, how hee would turne theſe wordes into Hebrew, Similes eſtis Sepulchris dealbatis: you are like to whited graves: And, Sepulchrum ejus apud vos eſt: His grave is among you, would any Hebrew I ſay tranſlate it by this Hebrew word, which Beza ſaith among the Hebrews ſignifyeth nothing elſe but grave? Aske our Hebrew Readers in this caſe, and ſee what they will anſwer.

Sheolim. Sheol.

Fvlk. 24. The beſt of the Hebrewes, that either interpreted Scriptures or made Dictionaries, Iews, or Chriſtians, doe acknowledge that Sheol doeth properly ſignify the grave. That the Septuaginta doe always tranſlate it ᾅδην, it proveth not that it always ſignifyeth hell, for ᾅδης ſignifyeth not always hell, as in the place of Numb. 16. As for the turning of Latine into Hebrew, is not our controverſy, but of tranſlating Hebrew into Engliſh, Sheol may ſignify the grave, the hole, the pit, as Fovea, though it be not all one with the Latine word Sepulchrum. And yet Rabbi Salomon whom you boldly cite in the 27. Section, ſaith plainely that the true and proper interpretation of Sheol is Keber, which you ſay, is as proper for grave, as lac is for milke.

In Gen 37.

Mart. 25. What are theſe Hebrewes then, that Beza ſpeaketh of? forſooth certaine Iewes or latter Rabbines which, as they doe falſely interprete all the holy Scriptures againſt our Saviour Chriſt in other points of our beliefe, as againſt his incarnation, death, and reſurrection: ſo doe they alſo falſly interprete the holy Scriptures againſt his deſcending into Hell, which thoſe Iewiſh Rabbines deny, becauſe they looke for another Meſsias, that ſhall not die at all, and conſequently ſhall not after his death goe downe into Hell and deliver the Fathers, expecting his comming, as our Saviour Chriſt did. And therefore thoſe Iewiſh Rabbines hold as the Heretikes doe, that the Fathers of the old Teſtament were in Heaven before our Saviour Chriſts incarnation: and theſe Rabbines are they which alſo pervert the Hebrew word to the ſignification of grave, in ſuch places of the holy Scriptures as ſpeake either of our Saviour Chriſts deſcending into hell, or of the Fathers going downe into hell, even in like manner as they pervert other Hebrew wordes of the holy Scripture, as namely, alma, to ſignify a young woman, not a virgin, againſt our Saviours birth of the bleſſed Virgin Mary.

The Proteſtants in interpretation of Scriptures follow the late Iewes, rather then the auncient Fathers, and Apoſtolicall Church.
Eſay. 7.

Fvlk. 25. Beza ſpeaketh of the holy men of God, which did write the Scriptures, and ſo uſe that word Sheol, as it cannot bee taken to ſignify any thing properly, but the grave or pitte. And as for the Iewiſh Rabbines, what reaſon is there, why wee ſhould not credite them in the interpretation of wordes, of their owne tongue, rather then any auncient Chriſtians ignorant of the Hebrew tongue? And although they doe ſometimes frowardly contend about the ſignification of a word or two, againſt the trueth of the Goſpell, that is no ſufficient cauſe why they ſhould bee diſcredited in all wordes. But beſide them, Beza hath alſo the beſt Hebricians that have beene in this laſt age, among the Chriſtians, not onely Proteſtants, but Papiſts alſo, namely Pagninus, and Maſius, in their Dictionaries.

Mart. 26. And if theſe latter Rabbines be the Hebrews that Beza meaneth, and which theſe gay Engliſh tranſlatours follow, we lament that they joyne themſelves with ſuch companions, being the ſworne enemies of our Saviour Chriſt. Sure the Chriſtian Hebrewes in Rome, and elſewhere, which of great Rabbines are become zealous Doctours of Chriſtianity, and therefore honour every myſterie and article of our Chriſtian faith, concerning our Saviour Chriſt, they diſpute as vehemently againſt thoſe other Rabbines, as wee doe againſt the Heretikes, and among other things, they tell them, that Saul ſaid, Raiſe mee up Samuel, and that the woman ſaid, I ſee Gods aſcending out of the earth, and, An old man is aſcended or come up, and that Samuel ſaid, Why haſt thou diſquieted mee, that I ſhould be rayſed up? and, To morrow thou and thy ſonnes ſhall bee with mee. And the booke of Eccleſiaſticus ſaith, that Samuel dyed, and afterward lifted up his voyce out of the earth, &c. All which the holy Scripture would never have thus expreſſed, (whether it were Samuel indeede or not) if Saul and the Iewes then had beleeved, that their Prophets and Patriarches had beene in heaven above. And as for the Hebrew word,

Eccleſ. 46. 23.

they make it (as euery boy among the Iewes doth well know) as proper a word for Hell, as panis is for bread, and as improper for a graue (though ſo it may be uſed by a figure of ſpeech) as Cymba Charontis is Latine for death.

FVLK. 26. If wee followed the Iewes in expoſition of the Scriptures againſt Chriſt, wee were not ſo much to bee pittyed, as to bee abhorred: but if wee be content to learne the propriety of Hebrew words of the learned Rabbines, as Hierome was glad to doe of his Rabbine, who as it appeareth by his ſcholler in ſome places, was not excellently learned, there is no cauſe why any man ſhould pitty us, but them rather, that to cloake their ignorance in the Hebrew tongue, pretend as if it were more unlawfull to learne Hebrew of the Hebrew Rabbines, then Latine of Quintilian or Priſcian, and Greeke of Gaza, Suidas, and ſuch like. That you tell us of the Romiſh Rabbines converted from Iudaiſme, to Papiſtry, is not worth a ſtraw. For their argument of Saules and a witches opinion, that the dead might bee rayſed, proveth nothing in the world, that they were in Hell. And the ſonne of Syrach ſheweth himſelfe not to bee directed by the ſpirit of God, which affirmeth, Samuel did lift up his voyce after his death, out of the earth, contrary to the judgement of Catholike Doctors of the Church. For that the Scripture ſpeaketh of Samuel rayſed by the witch, is meant of a wicked ſpirit, counterfeiting the ſhape and ſimilitude of Samuel. For the ſoules of the faithfull, and holy Prophets, bee not at the commandements of witches, but at reſt with God; where they cannot bee diſquieted. As for the authority of thoſe unknowne Authours, that teach boyes to ſay, Sheol is as proper for Hell, as panis for bread, we may eſteeme it to bee of as good credite, as Charons boate, Plutoes pallace, and Cerberus three heads, &c.

MART. 26. But what ſpeake I of theſe? doe not the greateſt and moſt auncient Rabbines (ſo to call them) the Septuaginta alwayes tranſlate the Hebrew word, by the Greeke ᾅδης, which is properly hell? doe not the Talmudiſts, and Chaldee paraphraſes, and Rabbi Salomon Iarhi, handling theſe places of the Pſalmes, Hee will deliver my ſoule from the hand of Sheol, interprete it by Gehinum, that is, Gehenna, hell? and yet the Calviniſts bring this place for an example, that it ſignifyeth grave. Likewiſe upon this place, Let all ſinners be turned into Sheol: the foreſaid Rabbines interprete it by Gehinum, Hell. Inſomuch that in the Proverbs, and in Iobe, it is joyned with Abaddon. Where Rabbi Levi according to the opinion of the Hebrewes, expoundeth Sheol, to be the loweſt region of the world, a deepe place oppoſite to heaven, whereof it is written If I deſcended into hell, thou art preſent: and ſo doth Rabbi Abraham expound the ſame word in chap. 2. Ionæ.

Prov. 15. Iob. 26.

FVLK. 27. Although the Septuaginta doe alwayes tranſlate Sheol by the word ᾅδης, yet doe they not thereby alwayes underſtand hell: as it is manifeſt in all thoſe places, where the Scripture ſpeaketh of a receptacle of dead bodyes. But now you will beare us downe with Rabbines, Talmudiſts, and Chaldee paraphraſes. And firſt you ſay that all theſe, handling that verſe of the 49. Pſalme, Hee will deliver my ſoule from the hand of Sheol, interprete it by Gehinnom, that is, Hell. I graunt that Rabbi Ioſeph uſing the liberty of a Paraphraſt, rather then a Tranſlatour, interpreteth the word by Gehinnom, that ſignifyeth Hell fire, and ſo the ſenſe is true. For God delivered David from eternall damnation. But Rabbi David Chimchi, expounding the ſame place according to the proper ſignification of Sheol, ſaith, אמר חנביצא כראיתו &c. The Prophet ſaid when hee ſaw the deſtruction of the ſoules of the wicked in their death: In the day in which my body ſhall goe downe to (Sheol) the grave, God ſhall deliver my ſoule from the hand of (Sheol) the grave, that my ſoule ſhall not periſh with my body. You ſee therefore that all the Rabbines bee not of your ſide, no nor Rabbi Salomon Iarchi, whom you cite. For upon the 37. of Geneſis, verſe. 35. where Iacob ſaith, he will goe downe to the grave, mourning, thus he writeth, אבל שאולה: במשוםר לשון קבר חוזא וגו. Mourning to Sheol, according to the plaine and literall ſenſe, the interpretation thereof is the grave, in my mourning I will bee buryed, and I will not bee comforted, all my dayes: but after the Midraſh, or expoſition, not according to the letter, it is hell. This ſigne was delivered by handes, or by tradition, from the mouth of his power, (that is from a divine oracle) if not one of my ſonnes ſhall dye in my life time, I had confidence, that I ſhould not ſee hell. By this ſaying it is manifeſt, that this Rabbine acknowledgeth the true and proper tranſlation of this word Sheol, was to the grave, although after figurative, and ſometimes fonde expoſitions, it was interpreted for hell. Likewiſe you ſay, but untruely, of this verſe, Pſalm. 9. verſ. 18. Let all ſinners bee turned to Sheol, for there the Chaldee Paraphraſt retayneth the word Sheol, and doeth not give any other word for it, David Chimchi interpreteth it according to the [illegible] ſenſe, ישובו רשעים לקבר. Let the wicked bee turned into the grave, [illegible] as Rabbi Salomon ſaith, it may bee [illegible] in hell. [illegible]

Proverbs, and Iob is ioyned with abaddon, it hindreth it not to ſignifie the graue; where is the deſtruction and conſumption of the body. And Prov. 15. v. 11. the Chaldee Paraphraſt retaineth Sheol, which Kabmenaki expoundeth thus, ואמר, &c. It is ſaid of Sheol, and Abaddon, that Sheol is the graue, הקבר and Abaddon is hell, which is deeper than the graue, &c. And although in Iob Rabbi Levi and others expound Sheol for a ſecret place about the center of the earth, which ſhould ſeeme to bee hell: yet they ſay not that this is the proper ſignification of the word Sheol. For in the 21. of Iob. v. 13. the Chaldee Paraphraſt for Sheol, interpreteth Kebureta, the graue, and in the 14. verſe 13. beith kebureta, the houſe of the graue, and 17. v. 12. and 15. the graue. In both which places Rabbi Abraham Periſſol ioyneth Sheol, and Keber together, both ſignifying the graue; and in the later verſe, hee maketh Iob to ſay to his friends רבי ותבוביכם, The barres of lies with which you comfort mee, into the middeſt of the pit of the graue ſhall goe downe with mee when I die. By all which teſtimonies it is manifeſt, that Sheol is not the proper word for hell, the receptacle of ſoules, but for graue, the common dwelling houſe for mens bodies.

Prov. 15. Iob. 26.

בית קבורתא

But you will preſſe us yet further, with the authoritie of Rabbi Abraham upon Ionas. 2. Indeed in Abraham Aben Ezra, I read as you ſay, but this is onely his opinion of the figuratiue ſenſe of that place, for upon Hoſee. cap. 13. verſ. 14. hee expoundeth שאול מיד thus, I haue beene a Redeemer of thy fathers, now I will bee a deſtruction of death which is to thee. And ſo doe R. Shelomo Iarchi, and Rabbi David Chimchi: yea, ſo doth Saint Paul, more worth than all the Rabbines that ever were, expound it.

MART. 28. This being the opinion and interpretation of the Hebrewes, See the skill or the honeſtie of Beza, ſaying that Sheol, with the Hebrewes ſignifieth nothing but graue. Whereas indeed (to ſpeake skilfully, uprightly, and not contentiouſly) it may ſignifie graue ſometime ſecondarily, but Hell, principally and properly, as is manifeſt, for that there is no other word ſo often uſed and ſo familiarly in the Scriptures to ſignifie Hell, as this, and for that the Septuaginta doe alwayes interpret it by the Greeke word ᾅδης.

FVLK. 28. The opinion of the Hebrues being as I haue rehearſed out of their owne words, ſee the skill or honeſtie of Martin, which dare open his mouth againſt Beza in this matter, and tell us that Sheol may ſecondarily ſignifie a graue, whereas it doth firſt and principally ſo ſignifie, howſoever the Septuaginta doe interpret it by ᾅδης, which ſignifieth an obſcure darke place under the earth, and not hell properly.

MART. 29. The which Greeke word is ſo notorious and peculiar for Hell, that the Paganes uſe it alſo for Pluto, whom they feigned to be God of Hell, and not God of graues: and if they would ſtand with us in this point, wee might beate them with their owne kinde of reaſoning, out of Poets and profane writers, and out of all Lexicons. Vnleſſe they will tell us (contrary to their cuſtome) that we Chriſtians muſt attend the Eccleſiaſticall uſe of this word in the Bible, and in Chriſtian writers, and that in them it ſignifieth graue. For ſo Beza ſeemeth to ſay, that the Greeke Interpreters of the Bible, tranſlated the Hebrew word aforeſaid by this Greeke word, as ſignifying a darke place: whereas the Greeke Poets uſed it for that which the Latines called Inferos, that is, hell. Which ambiguitie (ſaith he) of the word, made many erre, affirming Chriſts deſcending into Hell. So was LIMBVS builded, whereunto afterward PVRGATORIE was laide.

Annot. in Act. 2.27.

FVLK. 29. That Pluto of the Poets is feigned to bee the God of Hell, it was hereof that they imagined Hell to bee a place under the earth, which was his pallace, as earth was his kingdome: or elſe what becommeth of the triple diviſion of all the world, If Iupiter having heaven, Neptune the Sea, Pluto ſhould not haue the earth? who had his name of the riches incloſed in the earth, and was alſo called ᾍδης, or Ἀΐδης as in Homer Il. 15. Ζεὺς καὶ ἐγώ, τρίτατος δ' Ἀΐδης ἐνέροισιν ἀνάσσων. Iupiter and I, and Pluto the third that ruleth over the dead. Whereof it is put in the Genitiue caſe, after ſuch prepoſitions as governe an Accuſatiue or Datiue, where οἶκος the houſe of Pluto is to bee underſtood. I might here cite divers places out of Nonnus the Chriſtian Greeke Poet, who ſeemeth to uſe ἅις and ἀΐδης for the graue ſpeaking of the reſurrection of Chriſt, Ioan. 2. and of Lazarus cap. 11. But of the tranſlation of the Greeke word is not our queſtion, but of the Hebrew word Sheol, which the Septuaginta turning into ᾅδης meane a place generally to receiue the dead, which ſometimes is the graue of the bodies, ſometimes hell of the ſoules.

MART. 30. I ſee Beza his wilineſſe very well in this point. For here the man hath uttered all his heart, and the whole myſterie of his craftie meaning of this corrupt tranſlation: that to avoyde theſe three things, Chriſt deſcending into Hell, Limbus patrum, and Purgatorie, hee and his companions wreſt the foreſaid words of the holy Scriptures to the ſignification of graue. But let the indifferent Chriſtian Reader onely conſider Beza his owne words in this place, point by point.

FVLK. 30. Beza vſeth no wilineſſe or craft at all; for hee doth alwayes openly deteſt the dreames of Limbus and Purgatorie, and whatſoever may depend upon them. But let us ſee what you can gather out of his words.

MART. 31. Firſt he ſaith, that the Greeke Poets were wont to vſe the Greeke word for Hell: ſecondly, that they which interpreted the Bible out of Hebrew into Greeke, vſed the very ſame word for that Hebrew word whereof we haue now diſputed: thirdly, that the auncient fathers (for of them he ſpeaketh, as a little before he expreſſeth) underſtood the ſaid Greeke word for Hell, and thereby grew to theſe errours (as hee impudently affirmeth) of Chriſts deſcending into Hell, and of the place in Hell where the fathers reſted expecting the comming of our Saviour, &c. Whereby the Reader doth eaſily ſee, that both the profane and alſo the Eccleſiaſticall uſe of the word is for Hell, and not for graue.

Ibid. v. 24.

FVLK. 31. I looked for ſome great matter, when you beganne to conſider ſo diligently from point to point: but I ſee wee ſhall haue nothing, but this cold collection, that both the prophane and Eccleſiaſticall vſe of this word ᾅδης is for hell, and not for the graue. That it is vſed for hell, no man denieth: but that it is vſed onely for hell, Beza ſaith not, and I haue proved that it is not. As alſo it may bee proved by divers other places out of the Apocryphall writings, namely Sap. 16. v. 13. where it is tranſlated for death by your owne Latine tranſlatour, being the ſame verſe, that is in the ſong of Anna, 1. Sam. 2. where ſheol is vſed, and is repeated in that ſignification Tob. 13. v. 12. likewiſe Sap. 2. v. 1. where the ungodly that profeſſe the mortalitie of the ſoule ſay, that none was knowne to returne from ᾅδης, the word can ſignifie nothing but graue. For hell it cannot ſignifie in their ſpeech, that beleeue no hell, and ſay plainely that their ſoules ſhall vaniſh like ſmoake, or light aire. Likewiſe in Baruch. 2. it is taken for the graue, where hee ſaith the dead which are in the ᾅδης, ſhall not giue honour to God, where it is certaine that by that word is meant the graue, ſeeing the ſoules of the righteous that were in Abrahams boſome, did praiſe God, and moreover, hee maketh it plaine that hee ſpeaketh of the dead bodies, when he ſaith their ſpirit is taken out of their bowels.

MART. 32. And for the Latine word, it is the like caſe for all the world: and if a man will aske but his childe that commeth from the Grammar, what is Infernus, he will ſay Hell, and not graue: what is Latine for graue? He will anſwere Sepulchrum, or monumentum. But never Infernus, vnleſſe one of theſe Calviniſticall Tranſlatours taught him ſo, to deceiue his father.

Infernum, Inferi.

FVLK. 32. I hope they that bee wiſe will beleeue Saint Auguſtine, rather than you, that the word Inferi, which is the ſame that Infernus, hath divers and manifold underſtandings in the Scripture, as I haue declared before ſect. 21. But with the Latine word Infernum, wee haue little to doe, which tranſlate not out of Latine, but out of Hebrew or Greeke.

MART. 33. Now then, to draw to a concluſion of this their corruption alſo in their Engliſh tranſlation: whereas, the Hebrew, and Greeke, and Latine words doe moſt properly and vſually ſignifie Hell: and both Greeke, and Latine Interpreters preciſely in every place uſe for the Hebrew word, that one Greeke word, and that one Latine word, which by all cuſtome of ſpeaking and writing, ſignifie Hell: it had beene the part of ſincere and true meaning tranſlatours, to haue tranſlated it alſo in Engliſh alwayes by the word Hell: and afterward to haue diſputed of the meaning thereof, whether, and when it is to bee taken for Hell, or graue, or lake, or death, or any ſuch thing. As in one place they haue done it very exactly and indifferently, namely when Ionas ſaith (c. 2 v. 2.) out of the Whales belly, Out of the belly of hell, cried I, and thou heardeſt my voice. So all tranſlate it, and well, whatſoever it ſignifie in this place. They thinke that Hell, here ſignifieth nothing elſe but the Whales belly, and the affliction of Ionas, and ſo the word may ſignifie by a Metaphoricall ſpeech, as when we ſay in Engliſh, It is a hell to liue thus: *and * therefore no doubt they did here tranſlate it ſo, to inſinuate that in other places it might as well ſignifie* graue, as here the Whales belly.

If they obiect unto us ſome Catholikes, that tranſlate it Sepulchrum, as they doe: it is a fault in them alſo, but ſo farre leſſe than in the Proteſtants, as chaunce medley is in reſpect of wilfull murder. See their marginall annot. Ionæ. 2. Bib. 1577.

FVLK. 33. Your concluſion is as good as your premiſſes, becauſe the Greeke and Latine Interpreters had before us tranſlated amiſſe, which gaue occaſion to divers errours, therefore wee alſo knowing the true ſignification of the word, muſt haue followed them in wrong and doubtfull tranſlation, and afterward debated the meaning of the ſeverall places. But in the margent, you tell us, that ſuch Catholikes as haue tranſlated the word ſheol, for a graue, haue alſo done amiſſe. Pardon us Maſter Martine, wee take you for no ſuch learned Hebritian, that you ſhould controll Pagninus, Iſidorus Clarius, and all other Hebritians of this time upon ſuch ſlender ſleeueleſſe reaſons, as you haue brought hetherto. And you ſhew an intollerable proud ſtomake, that being a man ſo little ſeene in the Hebrew tongue (as you ſhew your ſelfe to bee) you ſhould condemne ſuch graue and learned perſons of your owne ſide, of raſhneſſe, or ignorance. For you make them in the caſe of chauncemeddley, that haue tranſlated ſheol a graue. Thinke you the deputies of the Councell of Trent had no more diſcretion in peruſing Iſidorus Clarius correction of the Bible, than to ſuffer him to change life and ſafetie into chance-medly and man-ſlaughter? You may in time to come, if you apply your ſtudie, proue learned in that language, wherein as yet you are but a ſmatterer, not worthy to bee heard againſt ſo many, ſo learned, ſo famous profeſſors of the Hebrew tongue, Iewes and Chriſtians, Proteſtants and Papiſts, authors of Grammars, Dictionaries, and tranſlations. But in the ſecond of Ionas, it pleaſeth you well, that our Geneua Bible tranſlateth this word hell, out of the belly of hell, &c. but you like not that they ſhould interpret it a metaphoricall hell, or the extremitie of affliction, whereinto the Prophet was brought: where you make it no doubt what they would inſinuate, you ſhew your ſelfe more bold to affirme, than ready or able to proue.

MART. 34. But then they ſhould haue tranſlated it alſo hell in other places, as they did in this, and afterward haue interpreted it graue in their Commentaries, and not preſumptuouſly to ſtraiten and limit the word of the holy Ghoſt to their private ſenſe and interpretation, and to preiudice the ancient and learned holy Fathers, which looke farre more deeply and ſpiritually into this Prophecie, than to Ionas, *or the Whale, * our Saviour himſelfe alſo applying it to his owne perſon; and to his being in the heart of the earth three dayes and three nights. And therefore Saint* Hierome ſaith, This belly of hell, according to the ſtorie, is the Whales belly, but it may much better bee referred to the perſon of Chriſt, which under the name of David, ſingeth in the Pſalme, Thou ſhalt not leaue my ſoule in hell: who was in hell aliue, and free among the dead. And that which our Saviour ſaith, The Sonne of man ſhall bee in the heart of the earth, hee doth interpret of his ſoule in hell: for as the heart is in the midſt of the body, ſo is hell ſaid to bee in the midſt of the earth.

Comment. in 2. Ionæ.
Pſal. 15. In inferno.
Pſal. 87.

FVLK. 34. They haue in other places tranſlated it according to the proprietie of the word, and if in this place they had done ſo likewiſe, I ſee not what fault they had committed. Certaine it is, that the Whales belly did rather reſemble a graue, wherein Ionas ſeemed to bee buried, than hell the receptacle of ſeparated ſoules. It is the office of a Tranſlator not ſo much to regard what other haue written upon the place hee tranſlateth, bee they ancient, bee they godly, bee they learned, as what ſenſe the interpretation of the words will beſt beare. Without preiudice therefore of any mans credit, the truth in this caſe muſt bee ſought out.

That you report out of Hierome upon this place, ſheweth, that both the Hebrew word Sheol, and the Latine Infernus, are not proper and peculiar for hell, as in other places you tell us. That Saint Hierome interpreteth the ſaying of Chriſt, Matth. 12. v. 40. of his being in the heart of the earth, to bee meant of his being in hell, which is ſaid to bee in the middeſt of the earth, it is confuted by the words of our Saviour Chriſt, who ſaith, that hee ſhall bee there three dayes, and three nights, that is, all the time of his death, which is true of his body in the graue, but not of his ſoule in hell: for both hee ſaid hee would be that day in Paradiſe, and you your ſelues hold, that hee made no tarriance in hell. Beſide that it is a phantaſticall opinion, to limit hell into the middeſt of the earth, which is rather a place without the ſenſible world, than any dungeon within the earth.

MART. 35. Thus then preſuppoſing (as we muſt) that Ionas ſpeaketh in the perſon of our Saviour Chriſt, the principall ſenſe is not of the Whales belly, but of that hell whither our Saviour Chriſt deſcended, and from whence hee delivered the Fathers of the old Teſtament, himſelfe aſcending into heaven, as their King and generall Captaine, before them, and opening the way of heaven unto them, as is ſignified in another Prophet; and was the firſt that entred heaven.

FVLK. 35. That which Ionas ſpake, was firſt true of his owne perſon, and then of Chriſt, as Ionas was in this a reſemblance of him. But by this ſimilitude of Chriſt remaining ſo many dayes and nights in the heart of the earth, as Ionas did in the Whales belly, it is manifeſt that hee ſpeaketh of his body remayning in the graue, not of his ſoule tarrying in hell. Wherefore the deſcending of Chriſt into Limbus Patrum, hath no manner of hold, either of the ſaying of Chriſt in the Goſpell, Matth. 12. or of Ionas in his prayer, Ion. 2.

Mich. 2. 15.

MART. 36. Againſt all which truths, and every point thereof, theſe Tranſlators are ſo watchfull and warie, that where the Apoſtle ſaith, Chriſt began, and dedicated unto us the way into heaven, they ſay in their Engliſh tranſlations with full conſent, nothing elſe but Hee prepared. Why are they falſer here than their Maſters, Calvin, Beza, Illyricus, who reade, Dedicavit? Is there nothing in the Greeke word but bare preparation? Where bee theſe Etymologiſts now, that can ſtraine and wring other words to the uttermoſt advantage of their hereſie, and here are content for the like advantage, to diſſemble the force of this word, which by all uſe and propertie ſignifieth to make new, to begin a thing, to bee the firſt author, to dedicate; as Saint Auguſtine might haue taught them, and their Lexicons, and the Scriptures in many places. This tranſlation (no doubt) is not done ſincerely and indifferently of them, but for their owne deceitfull purpoſe, as is all the reſt. When S. Paul ſpeaketh of preparation onely, they know right well that hee uſeth the uſuall word word to prepare: as, Hee hath prepared them a Citie: and whereſoever is ſignified preparation onely, let them bring us one example where it is expreſſed by the other Greeke word, which now wee ſpeake of.

Heb. 10. 20.

Heb. 11. 16. ἡτοίμασε.

Fvlk. 36. I grant the tranſlation had beene more proper, and agreeable to the Greeke word, to haue ſaid, which hee hath dedicated, or by dedication prepared. But here is no fraud againſt any truth or errour of yours: for the Apoſtle ſpeaketh not of the way by which wee aſcend immediately to heaven, but of the way by which wee haue free acceſſe to God through faith, without the veiles and ceremonies of the Law, as it is manifeſt by his exhortation. And whereas you ſaid before, that Chriſt aſcended into heaven, to thoſe whom hee had brought out of hell, you muſt tell us then, where they remained all thoſe forty dayes that were betweene his reſurrection and aſcenſion, except you will make two aſcenſions of Chriſt into heaven, one in ſoule alone, the other in body and ſoule, which hath not beene heard of in the Church before. For that his ſoule was firſt received into heaven or Paradiſe immediately after his death, it proveth not an aſcenſion, ſeeing the ſame was common to him with other Saints. Againe, ſeeing the myſterie of our redemption is divided into the death and reſurrection of Chriſt, and that by his death wee are delivered from ſinnes, by his reſurrection wee are iuſtified; if you will not allow his death to haue purchaſed equall redemption to the Fathers of the old Teſtament and us, but meaſure the vertue thereof by the inſtance of time, in which it was actually performed, you muſt ſtay your priſoners from entring into the kingdome of heaven, at leaſt untill his reſurrection; for none can enter into the kingdome of heaven, but iuſtified perſons. Seeing therefore that iuſtification dependeth upon his reſurrection, you muſt either grant that it was communicated to the Fathers in their time before his incarnation, or elſe you muſt ſtay them from entring into heaven before they were iuſtified by his reſurrection. The place of Mich. 2. that you quote, is nothing to the purpoſe of Chriſts aſcending: for there the Prophet threateneth the Iſraelites with the violence of their enemies the Chaldees, whom God himſelfe would proſper againſt them, to haue the victorie, and to driue them into captivitie.

Mart. 37. But it is of more importance, which followeth, and appertaining altogether to this controverſie, Heb. 5. v. 7. your tranſlation is thus, in the very Engliſh Bible that now is read in your Churches: Which in dayes of his fleſh offered up prayers with ſtrong crying, unto him that was able to ſaue him from death, and was heard in that which hee feared. Is the Greeke here, In that which he feared? You know that no Grammar nor Lexicon doth allow you this tranſlation: but either thus, for reverence, or as one of your owne Engliſh Bibles hath it, becauſe of his reverence.

Of the yeere 1577. Againſt Chriſts deſcending into Hell.

Fvlk. 37. Your firſt quarrell againſt the trueſt tranſlation of that word ἀπὸ τῆς εὐλαβείας, Heb. 5. is that it ſaith, in that which hee feared, whereas the Greeke is from feare, or out of feare, which afterward you confeſſe, though diſtant in word, yet to bee agreeable in ſenſe. The ſecond, that in the margent our tranſlation is againſt Chriſts deſcending into hell. How ſo, I pray you? Doe you according to your tranſlation expound that word of Chriſts deſcending into hell? No verily. But wee doe expound it of his deſcending into hell, therefore our tranſlation is to proue Chriſts deſcending into hell: and if our expoſition were not true, yet even your opinion of Chriſts deſcent were nothing hindred thereby. You will ſay, that by our expoſition, wee exclude his deſcent after his death: wee doe indeed in ſuch ſort as your errour teacheth, altogether without the Scripture. For if there had beene an hiſtorie of Chriſts going into hell, and delivering the Patriarkes and others the faithfull from thence, all the Evangeliſts would not haue omitted ſo notable a matter, and that alſo an article of our beleefe.

Mart. 38. How is it then, that in your latter Engliſh Bibles you changed your former tranſlation, from better to worſe? or who taught you ſo to tranſlate it? Forſooth the Heretike Beza, whoſe tranſlation you follow for the moſt part in your latter Bibles, though here, in ſenſe rather than in word. And who taught Beza? Hee ſaith, Calvin was the firſt that ever found out this interpretation. And why? Surely for defenſe of no leſſe blaſphemy than this, that our Saviour Ieſus Chriſt upon the Croſſe was horribly afraid of damnation, that hee was in the very ſorrowes and torments of the damned, and that this was his deſcending into hell, and that otherwiſe hee deſcended not. Let the Reader note theſe new teachers upon this place, and iudge to what wicked end this tranſlation tendeth.

Calv. Catech. & Inſtit. li. 2. c. 16.

Fvlk. 38. If wee haue in the latter reformed an errour eſcaped in the former, what ſkilleth it by whom wee were admoniſhed ſo to correct it? But Beza you ſay affirmeth, that Calvin was the firſt that ever found out this interpretation. It appeareth you were never well beaten for lying, it is ſuch a common fault with you. Beza ſpeaking of the Interpreters of this age, ſaith that Calvin (as hee thinketh) was the firſt that ſhewed the true and naturall interpretation of this place; hee ſaith not, the firſt that ever found it: yea cleane contrariwiſe he ſaith, Denique [illegible] dubium ſit, &c. Finally that it ſhould not be doubtfull: but that ſome of the ancient Fathers alſo haue interpreted this place even ſo. Nazianzenus Conc. de fil. 2. doth plainely number [illegible] this feare among the infirmities of Chriſts manhood. As for that which you call a blaſphemie, is a holy and comfortable true doctrine, that Chriſt for the redemption of our ſoules, ſuffered the wrath of God in his ſoule, as thoſe teares, and that ſtrong cry declareth; in which he complained according to the ſenſe of his humanitie, that he was forſaken of God.

Mart. 39. A wonderfull thing: when all antiquitie with a generall and full conſent hath in that place of the holy Scripture read thus, that Chriſt was heard (of his Father) for his reverence, (according as our Saviour himſelfe alſo ſaith in the raiſing of Lazarus, and ſignifieth in his long prayer, Ioh. 17.) how a blaſphemous and preſumptuous heretike ſhould bee ſo malepart, thus to alter it, that hee was heard in that which hee feared, that is, that hee was delivered from damnation and the eternall paines of hell, which hee was ſore afraid of. To the maintenance of which blaſphemie, Beza will ſeeme to force the Greeke thus: Firſt (ſaith hee) εὐλάβεια doth not here ſignifie reverence or pietie, but feare, and ſuch a feare which hee calleth pavorem & conſternationem animi, that is, dreadfulneſſe and aſtoniſhment of minde, and other like words, to inſinuate an exceeding horrour and feare in our Saviour Chriſt. For confutation whereof, wee might eaſily bring the common uſe of this Greeke word in the holy Scriptures, to ſignifie not every feare, but that religious feare which is in the beſt men, ioyned with godlineſſe, holineſſe, and devotion, as when in the Acts they that buried Saint Steven, are called Viri timorati, devout men, ſuch as feared God.

Ioh. 11. 42.

ἀπὸ τῆς εὐλαβείας.

Fvlk. 39. How know you, that all antiquitie hath ſo read? If wee had the Commentaries of many of the ancient Fathers upon this text, wee might perhaps proue unto you, that they read otherwiſe. Nazianzenus (as I ſhewed before) among Chriſts infirmities, reckoneth this feare. Primaſius although hee expoundeth it of reverence, yet alleadgeth out of Caſſiodorus, that the word is taken ſometime for loue, ſometimes for feare. Theodorus alſo interpreteth this place of Chriſts feare, according to his humane nature, ſhewing that hee feared death, which Saint Paul feared not, both to ſhew himſelfe a man, and to haue experience of all our infirmities without ſinne. But where you ſay, that Calvin maketh him to feare damnation, and the eternall paines of hell, it is falſe. Calvin ſaith plainely, his feare came not of diſtruſt, but of the ſenſe of his humane nature, for bearing the iudgement of God, which without vehement endevour could not bee overcome. Therefore was the aſtoniſhment, the teares, the ſtrong crie; the drops of blood, the Angell needfull to comfort him, the laſt extreme conflict, in which hee cried, My God, my God, why haſt thou forſaken mee? As for the ſignification of the Greeke word εὐλάβεια, although it bee ſo often taken for pietie and religion, yet it is alſo taken for feare, as Act. 23. where Saint Luke ſaith, the Tribune was greatly afraid, leſt Paul ſhould haue beene rent in peeces, betweene the Phariſees and Sadduces, hee uſeth this word εὐλαβηθεὶς, for being afraid, which was of no pietie or religious feare in him, that was a Pagan, but a naturall and civill feare, leſt a priſoner being a Roman, of whom hee had charge, ſhould bee violently murdered amongſt them.

Act. 8. ἄνδρες εὐλαβεῖς.

Mart. 40. But wee need not goe farre, for Beza will helpe us himſelfe, who telleth us in another place the very ſame. His words bee theſe: εὐλάβεια ſignificat non quemvis timorem, ſed cum reverentia potius quam cum animi trepidatione coniunctum, Latini religionem vocant: That is, εὐλάβεια doth not ſignifie every feare, but that which is ioyned with reverence, rather than with aſtoniſhment of minde; the Latines doe call it religion, or religious feare. If this bee the true ſignification of εὐλάβεια, as Beza himſelfe confeſſeth, why doth hee not ſo tranſlate it in the foreſaid place to the Hebrewes? Why forſaketh hee the old approved Latine tranſlation, and generall conſent of all ancient Interpreters, and tranſlateth it, that feare or aſtoniſhment of minde, which hee ſaith the word doth not ſignifie?

Annot. in Luk. 2. v. 25.

Falk. 40. You haue great leiſure thus to trifle, or rather intolerable malice thus to cavill. Beza in the place by you cited, ſpeaketh of the word εὐλάβεια, when it is taken for religion, for then it is rather ioyned with reverence, than with aſtoniſhment.

Mart. 41. And marke that in his foreſaid annotation upon S. Luke, he telleth not a peculiar ſignification of the Greeke word in that place, as though in ſome other places it might haue another ſignification, but hee telleth generally what the very nature of the Greeke word is, that is, that it ſignifieth not every feare, but a feare ioyned with reverence. And hee ſaid truly: and they ſhall hardly giue an inſtance, where it ſignifieth that feare of aſtoniſhment, which both hee and they tranſlate in the foreſaid place of S. Paul. Such a force hath hereſie, to leade a man even contrary to his owne knowledge, to falſifie Gods holy word.

Fvlk. 41. Any reaſonable man reading the note upon the word εὐλαβὴς, religious, uſed by Saint Luke, of Simeon, will vnderſtand Beza to ſpeake of the ſignification of that word, as it is taken in that place; for hee ſpeaketh againſt the barbarous word Timoratus, vſed by the vulgar Interpreter, which ſignifieth, if it haue any ſignification, one made afraid, rather than fearing God, with loue and reuerence. But where you ſay, wee ſhall hardly giue an inſtance, where the word ſignifieth that feare of aſtoniſhment, which they tranſlate, if you would haue taken paines to reade Bezaes annotations your ſelfe, upon this text in queſtion, you ſhould haue found, that hee bringeth many inſtances out of Ariſtotle, Sophocles, Plutarch, Nazianzene, and Saint Luke, Act. 23. If you had remembred what Saint Marke writeth of our Sauiour Chriſt, Mark. 14. v. 33. it ſhould not haue beene ſo ſtrange a matter unto you, to heare that our Sauiour Chriſt with great aſtoniſhment, and terrour of minde, was afraid of death, where hee vſeth the word ἐκθαμβεῖσθαι, and ἀδημονεῖν, which was not for bodily paine, or bodily death; (which not onely thouſands of holy Martyrs haue ioyfully embraced, but infinite wicked perſons haue contemned, but for the feeling of Gods wrath, which was infinitely more heavy upon his ſoule, than any torments were upon his body.

MART. 42. But Beza ſaith further to this purpoſe (much more againſt his skill in the Greeke tongue, if hee had any at all) that ἀπὸ the prepoſition cannot beare this ſenſe, for which or in reſpect whereof, and therefore hee tranſlateth the Greeke into Latine thus, Exauditus eſt, ex metu, Hee was heard from feare, not for feare, or for his reuerence. And becauſe from feare is a hard ſpeech, and darke; that ſeemeth to bee the cauſe why our Engliſh Tranſlators ſay, In that which he feared, farre from Beza in word, but agreeably in ſenſe.

FULK. 42. When Beza hath ſhewed his skill in the Greeke tongue, not onely in his tranſlation, and annotations, but alſo in diuers Greeke Epigrams, which hee hath ſet forth, who but one ſtarke madde with malice, and blinde with conceit of his owne ſlender skill, would doubt whether Beza had any skill at all in the Greeke tongue? As for that hee ſaith of the ſignification of the prepoſition ἀπὸ, hee ſpeaketh in reſpect of the propertie of the Greeke tongue; for yet you bring no examples, but Hebraiſmes out of the Scripture, for that ſignification of the prepoſition.

MART. 43. But for this matter wee ſend them to Flaccus Illyricus, a Captaine Lutheran, who diſputeth this very point againſt the Caluiniſts, and teacheth them that nothing is more common, than that ſignification of ἀπὸ: for proofe whereof, wee alſo referre them to theſe places of the holy Scripture, Matt. 13. Luk. 22. and 24. Act. 12. Pſal. 87. and Machab. 5. 21. where ἀπὸ with a genitiue, and διὰ with an accuſatiue, ſignifie all one, which Beza denieth. Gentle Reader, beare with theſe tedious Grammatications, fitter to bee handled in Latine, but neceſſary in this caſe alſo, good for them that underſtand, and for the reſt an occaſion to aske of them that haue skill in the Greeke tongue, whether wee accuſe our aduerſaries iuſtly or no, of falſe tranſlating the holy Scriptures.

Flac. Illyric.

ἀπὸ τῆς λύπης.
ἀπὸ τῆς ταλαιπωρίας.
ἀπὸ τῆς ὑπερηφανίας.
διὰ τὸν μετεωρισμὸν τῆς καρδίας.

FULK. 43. And wee by the ſame authoritie, ſend you to Bezaes anſwer, in his laſt edition of his annotations. And yet the Reader muſt know, that Beza did not ſimply deny, that the prepoſition might haue ſuch ſenſe, but hee ſaid, Non facilè mihi perſuaſerim, I cannot eaſily perſwade my ſelfe, that any example can bee brought, wherein ἀπὸ is ſo vſed. And in all theſe examples that you haue brought, it ſignifieth rather præ, which is πρὸ than propter, διὰ, as your vulgar Tranſlator obſerveth the difference, 2 Mach. 5. v. 27. tranſlating præ ſuperbia, and propter elationem mentis. But Beza requireth an example, ἀπὸ, taken for διὰ, ὑπὲρ or κατὰ, that may anſwere to the vulgar Latine, pro reuerentia: for who would tranſlate in Saint Matthew 13. ἀπὸ χαρᾶς, pro gaudio, propter gaudium, or ſecundum gaudium, or ἀπὸ τῆς λύπης, pro dolore, and ſo of the reſt: but of theſe let Beza himſelfe giue account. As for theſe tedious Grammatications, which you confeſſe to haue beene fitter to bee handled in Latine, it ſeemeth you uttered in Engliſh, for that of many ignorant you might bee thought to bring ſome great learning out of the Hebrew and Greeke tongues againſt us, whereas the learned, if you had written in Latine, of other Nations as well as ours, might haue beene witneſſes of your fond trifling, and quarrelling againſt our tranſlations. As for the neceſſary cauſe you pretend, that the unlearned may aske them that haue skill in Greeke, is very ridiculous: for neither can they haue at hand alwayes ſuch as bee able to reſolue them, neither if they bee of your faction, will they aske any indifferent mans iudgement, but onely ſuch as will auouch before the ignorant, that all which you write is good and perfect.

MART. 44. And wee beſeech them to giue us a good reaſon, why they profeſſing to follow preciſely the Greeke, doe not obſerue truely the Greeke points, in ſuch place as concerneth this preſent controverſie. For the place in the Apocalypſe, which they alleadge of our Sauiour Chriſt ſuffering from the beginning (thereby to inferre that the iuſt men of the old Teſtament might enter heauen then, as well as after his reall and actuall death) according to the Greeke points, ſaith thus, All that dwell upon the earth, ſhall worſhippe him (the beaſt) whoſe names haue not beene written in the booke of life of the Lambe ſlaine, from the beginning of the world. Where it is evident, that the Greeke text ſaith not, the Lambe ſlaine from the beginning, but that the names of thoſe Antichriſtian Idolaters were not written in Gods eternall booke of predeſtination, from the beginning, as it is alſo moſt plaine without all ambiguitie, in the 17. Chapter, verſ. 8. If in a place of no controverſie they had not beene curious in points of the Greeke, they might haue great reaſon ſometimes to alter the ſame.

FULK. 44. How faine would you obſcure the light of that excellent teſtimonie, euen contrary to your owne vulgar Latine tranſlation? that you might not haue ſuch a faithfull witneſſe againſt your Limbus patrum? You require a reaſon, why wee keepe not the Greeke points, Apoc. 13. I anſwere, wee keepe thoſe points, which the moſt ancient written copies haue, which the Complutenſis Editio hath, and which the beſt Greeke prints now keep. If you would know a reaſon why wee follow not them that point otherwiſe, I anſwer you, the expoſition of the words, is againſt that pointing. For except Saint Iohn had meant that the Lambe was ſlaine from the beginning of the world, hee would not haue placed thoſe words, from the beginning of the world, next to thoſe words, the Lambe which is ſlaine, but next the word written. And therefore Aretas that could not underſtand how the Lambe was ſlaine from the beginning of the world is forced to imagine Hyperbaton in this text, where none needeth, the ſenſe being good and plaine without it, as the words doe lye. Whoſe names are not written in the booke of life of the Lambe, that hath beene ſlaine ſince the beginning of the world. And although it bee true, that the names of the Antichriſtian Idolaters, were not written in Gods eternall booke of predeſtination, from the beginning, as it is ſaid Apoc. 17. v. 8. Yet is that no reaſon, why this alſo ſhould not be true, that the Lambe was ſlaine ſince the beginning of the world, ſeeing without violence you can not diſtract ἀπὸ καταβολῆς κόσμου, from the lambe ſlaine whom it doth immediately follow.

MART. 45. But if in points of controverſie betweene us, they will ſay, diuers pointing is of no importance, they know the contrary by the example of ancient heretikes, which vſed this meane alſo to ſerue their falſe hereticall purpoſe. If they ſay, our vulgar Latine ſenſe pointeth it ſo, let them profeſſe before God and their conſcience, that they doe it of reuerence to the ſaid ancient latine text, or becauſe it is indifferent, and not for any other cauſe, and for this one place wee will admit their anſwere.

FULK. 45. Wee ſay that wrong pointing may greatly alter the ſenſe, but good compoſition and placing of words in a ſentence is a good rule to direct pointing, where it is either lacking, or falſly ſigned. Wee refuſe not the teſtimonie of the vulgar Latine, where it agreeth with the truth of the Greeke or Hebrew, yea before God and our conſciences, wee reuerence it, as a monument of ſome antiquity, from which wee neither doe, nor are willing to diſſent, except the ſame diſſent from the originall text. Otherwiſe the truth of this aſſertion, that Chriſt was ſlaine from the beginning of the world, hath not onely teſtimonie of the ancient fathers, but alſo may bee confirmed out of the Scripture. For by the obedience of Chriſt Saint Paul Rom. 5. teacheth that many are iuſtified, meaning all the elect of God, who except Chriſts death had beene effectuall to them, before hee ſuffered actually on the croſſe, muſt haue gone, not into Limbo patrum, but into hell Diabolorum, which is the place appointed for all them that are not iuſtified freely by the grace of God, through the redemption of Chriſt Ieſus, whom God before hath ſet foorth, to bee a propitiatorie in his blood, Rom. 3. v. 24. &c. The title of this chapter threatneth a diſcouerie of hereticall tranſlations againſt Purgatorie eſpecially: but in the whole diſcourſe thereof, which is a ſhamefull long one, containing 45. ſections, there is not one place noted againſt Purgatorie, Amphora cœpit inſtitui, currente rota cur urceus exit?

CHAP. VIII.

Hereticall tranſlation againſt IVSTIFICATION.

ABout the article of iuſtification, as it hath many branches, and their errours therein be manifold, ſo are their Engliſh tranſlations accordingly many waies falſe and hereticall. Firſt, againſt iuſtification by good workes and by keeping the commaundements, they ſuppreſſe the very name of iuſtification in all ſuch places where the word ſignifieth the Commandement or the Law of God, which is both in the old and new Teſtament moſt common and vſuall, namely in the bookes of Moſes, in the Pſalme 118. that beginneth thus, Beati immaculati: in the Pſalme 147. verſ. 19. 1 Mach. 1. verſ. 51. and cap. 2. verſ. 21. Luk. 1. verſ. 6. Rom. 2. v. 26. In all which places and the like, where the Greeke ſignifieth iuſtices and iuſtifications moſt exactly, according as our vulgar latine tranſlateth, iuſtitias & iuſtificationes: there the Engliſh tranſlations ſay ioyntly and with one conſent, ordinances, or ſtatutes. For example, Rom. 2. If the vncircumciſion keepe the ORDINANCES of the lawe, ſhall it not bee counted for circumciſion? And Luk. 1. 6. They were both righteous before God, walking in all the commaundements and ORDINANCES of the Lord, blameleſſe. Why tranſlate you it ordinances, and avoide the tearme, iuſtifications? is it becauſe you would follow the Greeke? I beſeech you is not δίκαιος, iuſt, δικαιοῦσθαι, to bee iuſtified, δικαιώματα, iuſtifications or iuſtices? In the old Teſtament you might perhaps pretend, that you follow the Hebrew word, therefore there you tranſlate, ſtatutes, or ordinances. But even there alſo, are not the ſeventie Greeke Interpreters ſufficient to teach you the ſignification of the Hebrew word: who alwayes interpret it δικαιώματα, in Engliſh, iuſtifications?

FVLKE.

THeſe matters were driven ſo thinne in the firſt chapter, that you ſhall ſooner preſſe out blood, than any more probable matter. For the old Teſtament, which wee tranſlate out of the Hebrew, you your ſelfe doe ſet forth our anſwere, that wee giue the Engliſh of Chukim, when wee ſay, ordinances or ſtatutes, and not of the Greeke word δικαιώματα, which of the Septuaginta is vſed in the ſame ſenſe for precepts, and commandements, as you your ſelfe confeſſe cap. 2. ſect. 50. that very often in the Scripture it ſignifieth commaundements. But the Septuaginta, you ſay, are ſufficient to teach us the interpretation of the Hebrew word, who alwayes interpret it δικαιώματα. If they had alwayes interpreted it ſo, it is not ſufficient to teach us: for then there needed none other tranſlation, but according to theirs, then muſt you depart from your vulgar tranſlation, which in many things departeth from them. But where, you ſay they alwayes interpret the Hebrew word Chukim, by δικαιώματα, it is falſe. For Exod. 18. v. 20. they tranſlate it προστάγματα, Precepta, which your vulgar tranſlation calleth Ceremonias, ceremonies, as it doth alſo Gen. 26. v. 5. where the Septuaginta tranſlate δικαιώματα: by which you ſee, that iuſtification, is not alwayes the Engliſh for the Greeke word, which the Septuaginta doe uſe. Alſo Num. 9. v. 3. ſo (Chukoth they tranſlate νόμον the law, which the vulgar Latine calleth Ceremonias, ceremonies, and for the Hebrew word Miſphatim, they giue σύγκρισιν, comparation, the vulgar Latine iuſtification, by which you may ſee, how your tranſlatour vſeth even the Latine word, that you make ſo much adoe about. Likewiſe in the fourteenth verſe of the ſame Chapter, the Septuaginta tranſlate Chukoth, twiſe together νόμον, and that which the vulgar Latine calleth iuſtification of the paſſeover, the Greeke calleth σύνταξιν, the order of the paſchall, Deut. 4. your vulgar Latine turneth Chukim, thriſe Ceremonias, ceremonies. And Deut. 5. twiſe, and Deut. 6. twiſe, Deut. 7. once, and ſo commonly almoſt in every chapter. But in the chap. 11. v. 32. the Greeke for Chukim hath προστάγματα, whereas in the beginning of the Chapter, hee had δικαιώματα, the Latine in both Ceremonias, ceremonies. By which it is evident what the Greekes and Latines meant by thoſe words, chap. 20. for this Hebrew word, and in another the Greeke hath nothing but ἐντολὰς commaundements. So hath hee 1. Reg. 2. v. 3. for חקי ἐντολὰς commaundements. Alſo 1. Reg. 8. verſ. 58. for Chukim, hee hath προστάγματα, and for Miſphatim, he hee hath δικαιώματα, as he hath it twiſe in the next verſe, where Salomon prayeth that God will defend his cauſe, and the cauſe of his people Iſrael, as the cauſe ſhall require. More examples might I bring, but for tediouſneſſe, to convince the bold raſhneſſe of this quarreller, but theſe may ſuffice all indifferent Readers, and anſwere ſufficiently for us: within the new Teſtament, we tranſlate δικαιώματα, ordinances, or ſtatutes, ſeeing it is proved, both by the Septuaginta which calleth the ſame Hebrew word, not onely iuſtifications, but often commandements, ſtatutes, precepts, iudgements, and by the vulgar Latine Interpreter, which commonly calleth it ceremonies or precepts.

MART. 2. But bee it, that you may controll them in the Hebrew, which none but fooles will grant unto you: in the new Teſtament, what pretenſe haue you? doe you there alſo tranſlate the Hebrew word, or rather the Greeke? the Greeke undoubtedly you ſhould tranſlate. What reaſon then can you haue, why you doe not? none other ſurely, than that which Beza giveth for himſelfe, ſaying, that hee reiected the word, iuſtifications, (notwithſtanding it expreſſed the Greeke, word for word, notwithſtanding the ſeventie Greeke Interpreters, vſed it to ſignifie the whole law, and in Latine it bee commonly tranſlated, iuſtifications) notwithſtanding all this, for this onely cauſe (ſaith hee) did I reiect it, to avoide the cavillations that might bee made by this word, againſt iuſtification by faith. As if he ſhould ſay, This word truely tranſlated, according to the Greeke, might miniſter great occaſion to prove by ſo many places of Scripture, that mans iuſtification is not by faith only, but alſo by keeping the law, and obſerving the commaundements, which therefore are called according to the Greeke and Latine, iuſtifications, becauſe they concurre to iuſtification, and make a man iuſt, as by Saint Lukes words alſo is well ſignified, which haue this alluſion, that they were both iuſt, becauſe they walked in all the iuſtifications of our Lord. Which they of purpoſe ſuppreſſe by other words.

Annot. in 1. Luc.

FVLK. 2. None but fooles conſidering what I haue brought of the vſage of that word δικαιώματα, will iudge that it ſignifieth onely iuſtifications: and all wiſe men may ſee that wee haue good warrant to tranſlate it otherwiſe in the Greeke Teſtament, where it muſt needes haue an other ſignification. The concurrence of workes with faith to iuſtification before God, which the Apoſtle doth exclude Rom. 3. wee may not admit. But iuſtification by workes, as Saint Iames teacheth, wee doe acknowledge. I hope you will not ſay, that your Latine tranſlator againſt iuſtification by workes, tranſlated the word ſo often ceremonies, or that ceremonies of the law doe concurre to iuſtification by faith. The commandements indeed are called iuſtifications, becauſe the workes of the law, if a man keepe it wholly, are able to iuſtifie. Not that every ceremony or obſervation of any peece of the law, is a iuſtification, or maketh a man iuſt: which you may better ſay, upon the etymologie of the word, than that every particular obſervation of the law, or good worke, doth concurre with faith unto iuſtification.

MART. 3. And hereof alſo it riſeth, that when hee cannot poſſibly avoyde the word in his tranſlation (as Apoc. 19. 8. Biſſinum enim iuſtificationes ſunt ſanctorum, The ſilke is the iuſtifications of Saints:) there hee helpeth the matter with this commentarie, That iuſtifications, are thoſe good workes which bee the teſtimonies of a liuely faith. But our Engliſh tranſlatours haue another way to avoide the word even in their tranſlation. For they ſay here, the righteouſneſſe of Saints: becauſe they could not ſay, ordinances of Saints: and they would not ſay, iuſtifications of Saints: knowing very well (by Bezaes owne commentarie) that this word includeth the good workes of Saints: which workes if they ſhould in tranſlating call their iuſtifications, it would goe ſore againſt iuſtification by faith onely. Therefore doe they tranſlate in ſtead thereof, ordinances, and, ſtatutes, where they can, which are tearmes furtheſt of from iuſtification: and where they cannot, there they ſay, righteouſneſſe, making it alſo the plurall number, whereas the more proper Greeke word for righteouſneſſe is δίκαιος (Dan. 6. 22.) which there ſome of them tranſlate ungiltineſſe: becauſe they will not tranſlate exactly, if you would hire them.

Beza Annot. in Apoc. 19.

FVLK. 3. When δικαιώματα Apoc. 19. are tranſlated iuſtifications, they ſignifie iuſt workes, as I haue already proved the ſignification of the word to beare, beſide that it is ſo vſed by Ariſtotle in his Ethicks, who of iuſtification before God (whereof wee ſpeake) underſtood never a whit. Therefore, if in ſteade of righteouſneſſe, which is the ſingular number, it were tranſlated righteous or iuſt workes, it were not amiſſe in mine opinion. Although by righteouſneſſe in that place, is nothing meant, but good or righteous workes, as Bezaes note doth tell you.

MART. 4. And therefore as for, iuſtice, and, iuſtifications, they ſay righteouſneſſe: ſo for, iuſt, they tranſlate, righteous, and by this meanes, Ioſeph was a righteous man, rather than a iuſt man: and Zacharie and Elizabeth were both righteous before God, rather than iuſt: becauſe when a man is called iuſt, it ſoundeth that hee is ſo indeed, and not by imputation onely: as a wiſe man, is underſtood to be wiſe indeed, and not onely ſo imputed. Therefore doe they more gladly and more often ſay, righteous men, rather than, iuſt men, and when they doe ſay, iuſt men, as as ſometime they doe leaſt they might ſeeme wilfull inexcuſably: there they vnderſtand, iuſt by imputation, and not in deed, as it to bee ſeene in Bezaes Annotations vpon the Epiſtle to the Romanes. Note alſo that they put the word, iuſt, when faith is ioyned withall, as Rom. 1. The iuſt ſhall liue by faith, to ſignifie that iuſtification is by faith. But if workes bee ioyned withall, and keeping the commandements, as in the place alleaged Luc. 1. there they ſay, righteous, to ſuppreſſe iuſtification by workes.

FVLK. 4. This is a marvellous difference, never heard of (I thinke) in the Engliſh tongue before, betweene iuſt and righteous, iuſtice and righteouſneſſe. I am ſure there is none of our tranſlatours, no nor any Profeſſor of iuſtification by faith onely, that eſteemeth it the worth of one haire, whether you ſay in any place of Scripture iuſt or righteous, iuſtice or righteouſneſſe: and therefore freely they haue vſed ſometimes the one word, ſometimes the other. Therefore, it is a monſtrous falſhood, that you faine them to obſerue this diſtinction, that they ioyne juſt with faith, and righteous with workes. Doe they not tranſlate Rom. 2. ver. 13. the hearers of the law are not righteous before God, but the doers of the law ſhall bee juſtified? Haue you not againe, the righteouſneſſe of God is made manifeſt without the law, &c. by the faith of Ieſus Chriſt? And where you read the juſt ſhall liue by faith, haue you not immediately, the righteouſneſſe of God is revealed from faith to faith, as it is written, the juſt ſhall liue by faith? Who then but the Devill, which hath his name of ſlaundering, would here invent a diſtinction of juſt and righteous.

MART. 5. And certaine it is, if there were no ſiniſter meaning, they would in no place avoide to ſay, iuſt, iuſtice, iuſtification, where both the Greeke and Latine are ſo, word for word, as for example, 2. Tim. 4. 8. In all their Bibles, Henceforth there is laide up for me a crowne of RIGHTEOVSNES, which the Lord the RIGHTEOVS iudge ſhall GIVE me at that day. And againe 2. Theſſ. 1. Reioyce in tribulation which is a token of the RIGHTEOVS IVDGEMENT of God, that you may bee counted worthy of the kingdome of God for which yee ſuffer. For it is a RIGHTEOVS THING with God, to recompence tribulation to them that trouble you: and to you that are troubled, reſt with us, in the revelation of our Lord IESVS from heaven. And againe, Heb. 6. 10. God is not VNRIGHTEOVS to forget your good worke and labour, &c. Theſe are very pregnant places to diſcover their falſe purpoſe in concealing the word, iuſtice, in all their Bibles. For if they will ſay, that iuſtice is not an vſuall Engliſh word in this ſenſe, and therefore they ſay, righteouſneſſe: yet I trow, iuſt, and uniuſt, are vſuall and well knowne. Why then would they not ſay at the leaſt, in the places alleaged, God the IVST iudge, a token of the IVDGEMENT of God, It is a IVST thing with God, God is not VNIVST to forget &c? Why is it not at the leaſt in one of their Engliſh Bibles, being ſo both in Greeke and Latine?

τ̄ δικαιοσύνης. ὁ δίκαιος κριτὴς ἀποδώσει, &c. τῆς δικαίας κρίσεως. δίκαιον ἐστι. Iuſtum eſt. οὐ γὰρ ἄδικος. Non enim iniuſtus eſt Deus.

FVLK. 5. Certaine it is, that no Engliſhman knoweth the difference betweene iuſt and righteous, uniuſt and unrighteous, ſaving that righteouſneſſe and righteous are the more familiar Engliſh words. And that wee meane no fraude betweene iuſtice and righteouſneſſe, to apply the one to faith, the other to workes, read Rom. 10. v. 34. 5. and 6. of the Geneua tranſlation, where you ſhall ſee, the righteouſneſſe of the law, and the righteouſneſſe of faith. Read alſo againſt the impudent lie, in the ſame tranſlation Luc. 1. Zacharie and Elizabeth were both iuſt, Cap. 2. Simeon was iuſt. Mathew the firſt, Ioſeph a iuſt man: and elſewhere oftentimes, and without any difference in the world, from the word righteous. Who ever heard a difference made, betweene a iuſt iudge and a righteous iudge, this trifling is too too ſhamefull abuſing of mens patience, that ſhall vouchſafe to read theſe blotted papers.

MART. 6. Vnderſtand gentle Reader, and marke well, that if Saint Pauls words were truely tranſlated thus, A crowne of IVSTICE is laide up for mee, which our Lord the IVST iudge will RENDER unto mee at that day, and ſo in the other places: it would inferre, that men are iuſtly crowned in heaven for their good workes upon earth, and that it is Gods iuſtice ſo to doe, and that hee will doe ſo becauſe hee is a iuſt iudge, and becauſe he will ſhew his Iuſt iudgement, and he will not forget ſo to doe, becauſe he is not uniuſt as the auncient fathers (namely the Greeke doctors S. Chryſoſtome, Theodoret, and Oecumenius upon theſe places) doe interpret and expound. Inſomuch that Oecumenius ſaith thus upon the foreſaid place to the Theſſalonians, ὁρᾷ ὅτι &c. See here, that to ſuffer for Chriſt procureth the kingdome of heaven according to IVST IVDGEMENT, and not according to grace. Which leaſt the Adverſarie might take in the worſe part, as though it were onely Gods iuſtice or iuſt iudgement, and not his favour or grace alſo, S. Auguſtine excellently declareth how it is both the one and the other: to wit, his grace and favour and mercy, in making us by his grace to liue, and beleeue well, and ſo to bee worthy of heaven: his iuſtice and iuſt iudgement, to render and repay for thoſe workes which himſelfe wrought in us, life everlaſting. Which hee expreſſeth thus: How ſhould hee render

FVLK. 6. Whatſoever you may cavill upon the words iuſt and iuſtice, you may doe the ſame with as great advantage, upon the words righteous and righteouſneſſe. That God as a iuſt Iudge rewardeth good workes of them that are iuſtified freely by his grace, by faith without workes, with a crowne of iuſtice, it proveth not either iuſtification by workes, or the merite or worthineſſe of mens workes, but all dependeth upon the grace of God, who promiſeth this reward of his meere mercy, and of the worthineſſe and merits of Chriſt, which is our iuſtice, whereby wee being iuſtified before God, our workes alſo, which hee hath given us, are rewarded of his iuſtice, yet in reſpect of Chriſts merits, and not in reſpect of the worthineſſe of the workes. Againe, God is not unmindfull of his promiſe, to reward our workes, for then hee ſhould bee uniuſt: hee is iuſt therefore to performe whatſoever hee hath promiſed, though wee nothing deſerue it. Neither hath Chryſoſtome, or Theodoret, any other meaning. That you cite out of Oecumenius a late writer in compariſon, is blaſphemous againſt the grace of God; neither is Saint Auguſtine, that lived 500. yeeres before him, a ſufficient Interpreter of his ſaying, to excuſe him. With Auguſtine wee ſay, God crowneth his gifts, not our merits. And as he acknoledgeth Gods mercy, and alſo his iuſtice, in rewarding our workes, ſo doe wee. Where ἀποδώσει is tranſlated, hee will giue, I confeſſe it had beene more proper, and agreeable to the Greeke, to haue ſaid, hee will render, or repay, which yet is wholly of mercy in reſpect of us, or our deſerving, but of iuſtice in reſpect of his promiſes, and of Chriſts merits, unto which is rendred and repayed that which hee deſerved for us. The Crowne therefore is due debt, becauſe it is promiſed to us for Chriſts ſake, not becauſe any workes of ours are able to purchaſe it.

In Pſal. 70. in Pſal. 102.

MART. 7. Which ſpeeches being moſt true, as being the expreſſe words of holy Scripture, yet wee know how odiouſly the Adverſaries may and doe miſconſtrue them to the ignorant, as though wee challenged heaven by our owne workes, and as though we made God bound to us: which we doe not, God forbid. But becauſe he hath prepared good workes for us (as the Apoſtle ſaith) to walke in them, and doth by his grace cauſe us to doe them, and hath promiſed life everlaſting for them, and telleth us in all his holy Scriptures, that to doe them is the way to heaven; therefore not preſuming upon our owne workes as our owne, or as of our ſelues, but upon the good workes wrought through Gods grace by us his ſilly inſtruments, wee haue great confidence (as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh) and are aſſured that theſe workes proceeding of his grace, bee ſo acceptable to him, that they are eſteemed, and be worthy and meritorious of the kingdome of heaven. Againſt which truth, let us ſee further their heretical corruptions.

Eph. 2. v. 10.

Heb. 10.

FVLK. 7. If you would abide by your firſt proteſtation, wee ſhould not need to contend much about this queſtion. But after you haue in the beginning magnified the grace and mercy of God, and abaſed your owne merits, you come backe againe with a ſubtill compaſſe, to eſtabliſh your owne freewill, the worthineſſe of your workes, and your merite of the kingdome of heaven. Firſt, you ſay God telleth us in all his holy Scriptures, that to doe good workes, is the way to heaven. Indeed to fulfill the Law, is to deſerue heaven: but whoſoever is guilty of ſinne, muſt ſeeke another way, than by good workes to come to heaven, namely to Ieſus Chriſt, who is the onely way to heaven, the truth, and the life, by whoſe blood, when hee is purged from his ſinne, and reconciled unto God; and the kingdome of heaven purchaſed for him, then hee hath the way of good workes appointed him to walke in, toward the ſame. Secondly, you ſay you preſume not upon your owne workes, as your owne, or as of your ſelues, but upon the good workes wrought by Gods grace, by you his ſilly inſtruments, you haue great confidence. Thus while you would ſeeme to flie from Pelagianiſme, you fall into flat Phariſaiſme: for you truſt that you are righteous in your ſelues, though not as of your ſelues. Such was the Phariſie of whom Chriſt telleth the parable, which aſcribing all his workes to the grace of God, had confidence in them, that hee was iuſt before God by them. God I thanke thee (ſaith the Phariſie. Hee acknowledgeth the grace of God, as author of all his workes: yet againſt ſuch as hee was, Chriſt telleth that parable. And whereas you call the Apoſtle, Heb. 10. to witneſſe of your errour, you doe him great wrong, for hee ſpeaketh not of

of any confidence to bee had upon good workes, wrought by the grace of God by us; but in the new covenant of remiſſion of ſinnes, by the ſacrifice of Chriſts death, by whom wee haue acceſſe to God, that wee may bee acceptable to him; not for any meritorious workes wrought by us, but by the onely oblation of his body once for all, by which hee hath made perfect for ever thoſe that are ſanctified.

W*Hen they tranſlate* (Rom. 8. 18.) thus, I am certainely perſwaded, that the aſſlictions of this time, ARE NOT WORTHY OF THE GLORIE which ſhall bee ſhewed upon us; doe they not meane to ſignifie to the Reader, and muſt it not needs ſo ſound in his eares, that the tribulations of this life, bee they never ſo great, though ſuffered for Chriſt, yet doe not merit nor deſerve the heavenly glory? But in the Greeke it is farre otherwiſe. I will not ſtand upon the firſt words, I am certainely perſwaded, which is a farre greater aſſeveration, than the Apoſtle uſeth, and I marvell how they could ſo tranſlate that Greeke word, [λογίζομαι. I ſuppoſe.] but that they were diſpoſed, not onely to tranſlate the Apoſtles words falſly againſt meritorious workes, but alſo to avouch and affirme the ſame luſtily, with much more vehemencie of words, than the Apoſtle ſpeaketh. Well, let us pardon them this fault, and examine the words following. Where the Greeke ſaith not, as they tranſlate with full conſent in all their Engliſh Bibles, The afflictions are not worthy of the glory, &c. but thus, The afflictions of this time, are not equall, correſpondent, or comparable to the glory to come; * becauſe the afflictions are ſhort, the glory is eternall; the afflictions ſmall and few, in compariſon; the glory great and abundant above meaſure.

FVLKE.

ALthough an invincible argument againſt merits, and deſert of good workes, may bee drawne out of this text, yet the meaning of the Tranſlatours is to ſhew no more, than the Apoſtle ſaith, that the heavenly glory is incomparably greater than all the tribulations of this life. And this the Apoſtle ſpeaketh, not doubtingly, as our Engliſh word (I ſuppoſe) doth ſignifie, when a man may bee deceived in his ſuppoſall, but hee avoucheth it conſtantly, as a thing which being well conſidered, with the reaſons thereof, hee concludeth of it with certainetie: and ſo doth λογίζομαι ſignifie in this place, and in divers other, by the iudgement of better Grecians, than Gregory Martin will bee theſe ſeven yeeres; as Rom. 3. 28. where the Apoſtle having diſcuſſed the controverſie of iuſtification by faith, or workes, concludeth, as of a certainetie, λογιζόμεθα οὖν, wee determine therefore, that a man is iuſtified by faith, without the workes of the Law. Likewiſe Rom. 6. v. 11. after hee hath proved, that iuſtification is neceſſary to all them that ſhall, or haue put on the iuſtice of Chriſt, hee ſaith with great aſſeveration unto the Romans, λογίζεσθε ἑαυτούς. Make you full account therefore, that you are dead to ſinne, and not uncertainely thinke or ſuppoſe it ſo to bee. Therefore for the tranſlation of λογίζομαι, in this place, wee will accept no pardon of you, it is better tranſlated than your wit or learning ſerveth you to underſtand. Now let us come to the other words, ἄξια πρὸς τὴν μέλλουσαν δόξαν, are not worthy of the glory: where you ſay, it ſhould bee, not equall, correſpondent, or comparable to the glory. Verily thoſe words wee uſe, haue none other ſenſe in this place, than the words which wee ſupply us withall, but our words doe expreſſe the moſt vſuall ſignification of the Greeke word ἄξια, even as your vulgar Latine doth, calling it in the ſame ſenſe condigna, which you in your owne tranſlation dare not render, equall, correſpondent, or comparable, but condigne; leſt following the ſenſe, you might bee accuſed to forſake the word: even ſo wee thinke it beſt, where the vſuall ſignification of the word will beare the ſenſe in our Engliſh, to retaine the ſame, and not to change it.

MART. 2. This is the Greeke phraſe, and the Apoſtles meaning, which wee need not greatly to proue, becauſe their owne Doctors, Calvin and Beza, doe ſo interpret it; and therefore wonder it were that the Geneva Engliſh Bibles alſo ſhould forſake their Maſters, and follow the errour of the other Engliſh Bibles, but that they thought the more vices the better. In the meane time, the people ſeeth no other tranſlation, and thinketh it is the Apoſtles very words. But Beza himſelfe telleth them the contrary, tranſlating thus: Statuo minimè eſſe paria quæ præſenti tempore perpetimur, futuræ gloriæ nobis revelandæ: that is, I am of this opinion, that the things which wee ſuffer in this preſent time, are not equall to the glory that ſhall bee revealed to us. And in his commentarie, thus: Saint Pauls diſcourſe and matter handled in this place, declare, that hee ſpeaketh not of the value or price of the afflictions which wee ſuffer for Chriſt, but rather by comparing their qualitie and quantitie, with life everlaſting, hee gathereth that wee ſhall bee infinitely more happy with Chriſt, than wee are miſerable here. Therefore did hee uſe the * Greeke word rightly, and properly, which the Grammarians ſay is ſpoken of ſuch things, as being poiſed or weighed, are found of one weight. Thus farre Beza.

FVLK. 2. Wee contend not, as it ſeemeth at this time, about the meaning of the place, but about the true tranſlation of the words. If you can proue therefore, that the Greeke word ἄξιος doth not ſignifie worthy, or that this Engliſh word worthy cannot expreſſe the meaning of the Apoſtle in this text, your accuſation is iuſt; but if you can proue neither of both, you multiply words, as your manner is, without matter, to no purpoſe, but to weary the Reader. And wiſely you tranſlate Bezaes Latine word Statuo, I am of opinion, which ſignifieth more truely, I determine, or as our tranſlation hath, I am certainely perſwaded; and not, I am of an opinion, whereof there is no certaine knowledge, for an opinion may be falſe, and is of uncertainties.

MART. 3. If then a compariſon only be ſignified, why doe they not ſo tranſlate it in Engliſh, that it may be taken for a compariſon in our Engliſh phraſe? For they know very well, that if a man ſhould ſay in Engliſh, according as they tranſlate, Good workes are not worthy of heaven, this man is not worthy of my favour, he is not worthy of ſuch a living, of ſo great praiſes; every Engliſh man underſtandeth it thus, that they deſerue not heaven, and that ſuch a man deſerveth not this or that. Even ſo muſt the Reader needs take it in this place, and they muſt needs haue intended that he ſhould ſo take it. For though the Greeke phraſe may ſignifie a compariſon, being ſo uttered, yet not the Engliſh: and if it might, yet obſcurely, and ambiguouſly: and if it might, yet here they doe falſly tranſlate ſo, becauſe here the Greeke phraſe is otherwiſe, and therefore ſhould otherwiſe bee Engliſhed: for it is not ἄξια τῆς δόξης, which is, as they tranſlate, worthy of the glory, but ἄξια πρὸς τὴν δόξαν, which cannot be ſo tranſlated. For if it might, then theſe Greeke phraſes were alone, and might be vſed indifferently. And then I muſt deſire them to turne mee this into Greeke, Hee is not worthy of thankes: and if they turne it by the Apoſtles phraſe in this place, οὐκ ἄξιός ἐστι πρὸς τὴν χάριτα, to all Grecians they ſhall bee ridiculous. And yet this is as well turned out of Engliſh into Greeke, as they haue turned the other out of Greeke into Engliſh.

FVLK. 3. Verily I cannot ſee, nor any wiſe man elſe, I thinke, what this Engliſh word worthineſſe doth ſignifie, but a compariſon of equalitie in price, value, goodneſſe, excellencie, or ſuch like. And even in thoſe Engliſh phraſes that you bring for example, Good workes are not worthy of heaven, the meaning is, There is not an equalitie of excellencie in good workes and heaven: or, good workes compared to heaven, are not equall in value. And even ſo: This man is not worthy of my favour; The goodneſſe of this man is not ſo great, as the goodneſſe of my favour. And ſo of the reſt. And where you ſay, every Engliſh man underſtandeth it thus, that they deſerue not heaven, and ſuch a man deſerveth not this, &c. I grant they may of worthineſſe gather deſert, in ſuch as may deſerue, and ſo may they of the compariſon of equalitie, conclude deſert in the like caſe. For to deſerue, is by doing, to make himſelfe equall in good or evill to that reward or puniſhment which is valued with ſuch doing. Therefore whether you ſay worthy, or equall, it is all one: and in this text by either of both, merite or deſert is neceſſarily excluded. For if the heavenly glory bee incomparably greater, than the afflictions of this life, it followeth of neceſſitie, that the afflictions of this life deſerue not, that is, make not an equalitie of excellencie with heavenly glory. But the Greeke phraſe (you ſay) is otherwiſe, for ἄξια is not ioyned with a genitiue caſe, but with an accuſatiue, and a prepoſition. Indeede this latter conſtruction of ἄξιος is not ſo vſuall, and doth more fully ſet forth the compariſon, but the ſame alſo is ſet forth by the genitiue caſe, as you your ſelfe cannot deny. Now our Engliſh phraſe would not beare, that wee ſhould ſay, worthy to the glory, and therefore wee ſaid worthy of the glory. But if that were good, you ſay, the Greeke phraſes were all one, and might bee vſed indifferently. I ſee no great difference betweene the Greeke phraſes, and yet it followeth not, that they may bee vſed indifferently: for vnvſuall phraſes, are not to bee vſed as indifferently, as common phraſes. And therefore your example of turning Engliſh into Greeke, is not all one with turning Greeke into Engliſh. If I tranſlate out of Greeke into Engliſh, I muſt obſerue the Engliſh phraſe as neere as I can; and ſo if I tranſlate into Greeke, muſt I haue reſpect to the vſuall Greeke phraſe. And to ſpeake of your ridiculous tranſlation out of Engliſh into Greeke, I thinke hee that ſhould ſay, ἄξιος χάριτος, for worthy of thankes, ſhould deſerue no great commendation; but hee that ſhould ſay, ἄξιος πρὸς τὴν χάριν τοῦ βασιλέως, for vvorthy of the Kings favour, though it be no vſuall phraſe, I ſee not why hee ſhould bee ridiculous. And if you ſhould tranſlate theſe words into Engliſh, Νέρων ἄξιος ἦν πρὸς τὴν βασιλείαν, would you not, or might you not tranſlate it thus? Nero was not worthy of the kingdome. Therefore wee haue not done amiſſe, to tranſlate, worthy of the glory.

MART. 4. Marry, if they would expreſſe a compariſon of equalitie or inequalitie betweene thing and thing, then this is the proper Greeke phraſe thereof, and much more proper for this purpoſe, than by ἄξιος, and a genitiue caſe: which notwithſtanding is often ſo vſed in Scriptures, by way of compariſon, as Proverb 3. concerning the praiſe of wiſdome, where Saint Auguſtine to expreſſe the compariſon, readeth thus; Omne pretioſum non eſt illi dignum: S. Hierome according to the Hebrew thus; Omnia quæ deſiderantur non valent huic comparari, or adæquari: and Eccleſ. 26. wee haue the very like ſpeech proceeding of the ſaid Greeke word ἄξιος, Omnis ponderatio non eſt digna continentis animæ: which the Engliſh Bibles thus; There is no weight to bee compared unto a minde that can rule it ſelfe, or with a continent minde.

πᾶν τίμιον οὐκ ἄξιον αὐτῆς ἐστι.

בל חפצים לא ישוובה

FVLK. 4. You cannot uſe the word ἄξιος, but it will include a compariſon, whether it bee with a genitiue caſe, as in the examples you bring, or with an accuſatiue, as in this text of Saint Paul: and even ſo the Engliſh word (worthy) doth comprehend an equalitie in good or evill. Wherefore the ſenſe is all one, whether you ſay in this text, equall, or worthy: but that the vſuall ſignification of ἄξιος is worthy, as no man will deny, that is not paſt all ſhame.

MART. 5. And if ἄξιος with a genitiue caſe ſignifie a compariſon, and themſelues ſo tranſlate it in all their Bibles, ſhould not ἄξιος in the Apoſtles phraſe much more bee ſo tranſlated? I appeale to their own conſciences. Againe, if here in Eccleſiaſticus they ſay not according to the Greeke words, There is no weight worthy of a continent minde, becauſe they would by an Engliſh phraſe expreſſe the compariſon; is it not more than evident, that when they tranſlate the Apoſtle by the very ſame words, worthy of the glory, &c. they know it cannot, and they meane it ſhould not, ſignifie a compariſon? I cannot ſufficiently expreſſe, but onely to the learned and skilfull Reader, their partiall and hereticall dealing. Briefly, I ſay they tranſlate, οὐκ ἄξιος ἐγκρατοῦς ψυχῆς, Not to bee compared with a continent minde, being in Greeke word for word, Not worthy of a continent minde: and contrariwiſe they tranſlate in Saint Paul, οὐκ ἄξια πρὸς τὴν μέλλουσαν δόξαν, Not worthy of the glory to come, being in the Greeke, Not to be compared to the glory to come; according to the very like Latine phraſe by dignus, Eccleſ. 6. Amico fideli nulla eſt comparatio, & non eſt DIGNA ponderatio auri & argenti CONTRA BONITATEM FIDEI, that is, according to their owne tranſlation, A faithfull friend hath no peere, weight of gold and ſilver is not to bee compared to the goodneſſe of his faith.

FVLK. 5. If the Engliſh word (worthy) did not ſignifie a compariſon, as well as the Greeke word ἄξιος, it were ſomewhat that you ſay; but ſeeing one ſignifieth as much as the other, there is no more favour in your diſputation, than in an egge without ſalt. When wee ſay, there is no weight of gold to bee compared to a continent minde, it is all one as if wee ſaid, worthy of a continent minde, for wee meant, to bee compared in goodneſſe, price, excellencie, &c. And therefore you ſpeake out of meaſure falſly and impudently, when you ſay, wee meane not that the word (worthy) in this text of Saint Paul ſhould ſignifie a compariſon, for it is not poſſible that it ſhould ſignifie otherwiſe. Doth not the Geneua note in the margent ſay, or of like value? If you bee ſo blinde, that you cannot ſee a compariſon in the word worthy, at the leaſt ſhore up your eyes, and behold it in thoſe words, of like or equall value: for all compariſon is either in quantitie, or qualitie. And where you ſay, that you cannot expreſſe your conceit, but onely to the learned, there is none ſo meanely learned, but they may well laugh at your fooliſh and unlearned trifling.

MART. 6. Now if they will ſay, though their tranſlation of S. Pauls words be not ſo exact and commodious, yet the ſenſe and meaning is all one (for if theſe preſent afflictions be not equall or comparable to the glory to come, then neither are they worthy of it, nor can deſerue or merit it) let the Chriſtian Reader marke the difference. Firſt, their Beza and Calvin telleth them, that the Apoſtle

*ſpeaketh of the one, and not of the other. Secondly, the paſſions and afflictions that Chriſt our Saviour ſuffered all his life, were not comparable to the eternall glory which hee obtained thereby: yet did hee thereby deſerue and merite eternall glory, not onely for himſelfe, but for all the world: yea by the leaſt affliction hee ſuffered, did he deſerue all this. Vnleſſe you will deny alſo that hee merited and deſerved his glory, which your opinion a man might very well gather by * ſome of your falſe tranſlations, but that you would thinke us too ſuſpicious, which perhaps we will examine hereafter. Thirdly, the preſent pleaſure of adventrie during a mans life, is not comparable to the eternall torments of hell fire: and yet it doth merit and deſerue the ſame. Fourthly, the Apoſtle by making an incomparable difference of the glory to come with the afflictions of this time, doth (as Saint* Chryſoſtome ſaith) exhort them the more vehemently and moue them to ſuſtaine all things the more willingly: but if he ſaid as they tranſlate, The afflictions are not worthy of heaven, you are never the neerer heaven for them, onely beleeue: this had not beene to exhort them, but to diſcourage them. Fiftly, the Apoſtle when hee will elſewhere encourage them to ſuffer, ſaith plainely, Our tribulation which preſently is for a moment and light, WORKETH aboue meaſure exceedingly, an eternall weight of glory in us.

FVLK. 6. Wee ſay our tranſlation, both in word, and ſenſe, is the ſame in Engliſh, that Saint Paul did write in Greeke. As for the argument, againſt merit, or deſert which doth follow thereof, wee affirme that it is as neceſſarily gathered of the words equall, or comparable, or correſpondent, as of the word, worthy. But to overthrow this argument, you haue fiue reaſons. The firſt is of the authoritie of Beza, and Calvine, which you ſay telleth us, that the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of the one, and not of the other. To this I anſwere, that they both affirme the conſequence againſt merits out of this text, although it bee not the Apoſtles direct purpoſe, to abaſe the merite of workes, by compariſon of the excellencie of the glory. To your ſecond argument, I anſwere, that though the afflictions that Chriſt our Saviour ſuffered, were not comparable in reſpect of the length of time, with the eternall glory that hee obtained thereby: yet in reſpect of the excellencie of his perſon, and the perfection of his obedience, they were comparable, and of equall value to deſerue eternall glory according to the iuſtice of God, by which one mans diſobedience was ſufficient, to eternall condemnation, Rom. 5. What the leaſt of his afflictions ſeparated from all the reſt, was in value, I haue not learned out of the Scripture, onely I thinke, hee ſuffered nothing ſuperfluouſly, nor leſſe than was needfull to anſwere the iuſtice of God. Your other fonde ſurmiſes, I omit, untill you expreſſe them. To your third argument, I ſay, that one act of adultery is worthy of damnation, and deſerveth eternall torment, not by compariſon of the ſhort pleaſure, with infinite paine: but becauſe it is a ſinne committed againſt the maieſtie of the eternall God: and therefore is worthy of eternall puniſhment. For the ſinne is to bee meaſured after the excellencie of the perſon, againſt whom it is committed. Therefore that word, which being ſpoken againſt a poore man, is a light fault, as to ſay hee is a knaue, the ſame being ſpoken againſt a Lord, is an hainous offence, and deſerveth the pillory, but being ſpoken againſt the King, is high treaſon, and is worthy of death. Seeing therefore the eternall Maieſtie of God is contemned in every ſinne, that ſinne doth iuſtly deſerue eternall torments. Fourthly, it is true, that the Apoſtle doth exhort us cheerefully to abide the ſmall and momentarie afflictions of this life, in reſpect that they ſhall bee rewarded with incomparable glory. But hereof it followeth not, that the glory is deſerved, by ſhort and ſmall ſufferings, but is given of the bountifull liberalitie of God, to them that for his ſake patiently ſuffer ſuch ſmall afflictions. Therefore, if it bee an incouragement for a man to labour, to heare that hee ſhall bee paid his hire, as much as his worke deſerveth: it is a much greater incouragement for him to heare, that hee ſhall receiue a thouſand times more than his labour deſerveth. The words you adde, (you are neuer the neerer heaven, onely beleeue) are yours, and none of ours: for wee ſay with the Apoſtle, wee muſt ſuffer with Chriſt, if wee will reigne with him, and the patient ſuffering of the faithfull, is nothing repugnant to the iuſtification before God, by faith onely. To the laſt argument of the Apoſtles authoritie, I anſwere, our patient ſuffering worketh infinite weight of glory, not by the worthineſſe, merite, or deſert of our ſuffering, but by the bountifull liberalitie of God, who hath promiſed ſo incomparable reward, to ſmall tribulation, ſuffered for his ſake. Wherefore all your fiue reaſons notwithſtanding, our tranſlation is ſound and true.

MART. 7. See you not a compariſon betweene ſhort and eternall, light tribulation, and exceeding weighty glory: and yet that one alſo worketh the other, that is, cauſeth, purchaſeth, and deſerveth the other? For, like as the little ſeede being not comparable to the great tree, yet cauſeth it & bringeth it forth: ſo our tribulations and good workes otherwiſe incomparable to eternall glory, by the vertue of Gods grace working in us, worketh, purchaſeth, and cauſeth the ſaid glory. For ſo they know very well the Greeke word importeth: though here alſo they tranſlate it moſt falſely, prepareth, Bib. ann. 1577.

See this Greeke word, 2 Cor. 7. thriſe. Where themſelues tranſlate it, cauſeth, worketh, v. 10. 11.

FVLK. 7. Wee ſee the compariſon well, but wee ſee not, that worketh or cauſeth, is all one with purchaſeth and deſerveth. Your compariſon of ſeede, and tribulation, is not like. For in the ſeede is the formall cauſe of the greate tree, ſo is not the formall cauſe of eternall glory in our tribulation. But as if an Emperour for one dayes valiant ſervice in warre, doe giue unto his ſonne one of his kingdomes, wee may truely ſay, that dayes ſervice wrought him this great reward, or cauſed him to bee advanced to this kingdome: but wee cannot ſay truely, it purchaſed or deſerved a kingdome: for then every one that ſerved as well as hee deſerved the like reward: ſo is the reward of eternall life, which is the gift of God, incomparably greater than our tribulation, not by the deſert of the ſufferer, but by liberalitie of the giver. That tranſlation, that vſeth the word of preparing, is not ſo proper, according to the word, but it differeth not much in ſenſe, ſhewing how thoſe afflictions doe worke or cauſe, namely by preparing, and making us conformable to the ſufferings of Chriſt.

MART. 8. Laſtly, for moſt manifeſt evidence, that theſe preſent tribulations and other good workes are meritorious and worthy of the ioyes to come, though not comparable to the ſame: you ſhall heare the holy Doctors ſay both in one paſſage or ſentence. Saint Cyprian thus: O what manner of day ſhall come, my brethren, when our Lord ſhall recount the merits of every one, and pay us the reward or ſtipend of faith and devotion? Eph. 56. here are merits and the reward for the ſame. It followeth in the ſaid Doctor, What glory ſhall it bee, and how great ioy, to bee admitted to ſee God, ſo to bee honoured that thou receiue the ioy of eternall life with Chriſt thy Lord God, to receiue there that which neither eye hath ſeene, nor eare hath heard, nor hath aſcended into the heart of man, for, that wee ſhall receiue greater things, than here either wee doe, or ſuffer, the Apoſtle pronounceth, ſaying, The paſſions of this time are not condigne or comparable to the glory to come. Here wee ſee, that the ſtipend or reward of the merites aforeſaid, are incomparably greater than the ſaid merits.

Ep. 56. num. 3. Singulorum merita.

FVLK. 8. For lacke of Scriptures, you flye to the Doctors, to finde merits, in whom nevertheleſſe being Catholike, and ſound Doctors, you ſhall ſooner finde the word Meritum, than your meaning of it. The place of Cyprian, I marvell why you geld, except it bee to ioyne the reward that hee ſpeaketh of, with the word merits, which hee vſeth, either generally for workes, as it is often vſed in the auncient writers; or if hee meane thereby deſerts, hee ſpeaketh but of examination onely of all mens deſerts, that hee may giue to the wicked that they haue deſerved, and to the godly that which hee hath promiſed, therefore hee calleth it the reward of their faith and devotion. His words are theſe: O dies ille qualis & quantus adveniet, fratres dilectiſſimi, cum cœperit populum ſuum dominus recenſere, & divinæ cognitionis examine ſingulorum meritum recognoſcere, mittere in gehennam nocentes & perſecutores noſtros, flammæ pœnalis perpetuo ardore damnare, nobis verò mercedem fidei & devotionis exoluere. O that day what manner a one and how great ſhall it come, my deareſt beloved brethren, when the Lord ſhall beginne to recount his people and by examination of his divine knowledge conſider the merits of every one, to ſend into hell fire the guiltie, and to condemne our perſecutors with perpetuall burning of penall flame? but unto us to pay the reward of faith and devotion. The reward of faith is not that which beliefe deſerveth: but which it looketh for, according to Gods promiſe, whereunto it leaneth. For in reſpect of deſert of Gods favour, hee ſaith, and bringeth divers texts for proofe: Fidem tantum prodeſſe, & tantum nos poſſe quantum credimus. That faith onely doth profit, and that ſo much wee can doe, how much wee beleeue. Wherefore, wee ſee not in Cyprian the incomparable glory to be a reward of deſerts.

Ad Quirin. l. 2. c. 42.

MART 9. Likewiſe Saint Auguſtine: The exceeding goodneſſe of God hath provided this, that the labours ſhould ſoone bee ended, but the rewards of the MERITES ſhould endure without end: the Apoſtle teſtifying, THE PASSIONS OF THIS TIME ARE NOT COMPARABLE &c. For wee ſhall receiue greater bliſſe, than are the afflictions of all paſſions whatſoever. Thus wee ſee plainely, that ſhort tribulations are true merits of endleſſe glory, though not comparable to the ſame: which truth you impugne by your falſe and hereticall tranſlation. But let us ſee further your dealing in the ſelfe ſame controverſie, to make it plainer that you bend your tranſlations againſt it, more than the text of the Scripture doth permit you.

Ser. 37. de Sanctis. Præmia meritorum.

FVLK. 9. A man may ſee you are driven to extreame ſhifts, when you will ſeeke Præmia meritorum, in Saint Auguſtine, and can finde it no where, but among the Sermons de ſanctis, which beare no credit of Auguſtines workes: but of ſome later gatherer. The true Auguſtine in Pſal. 70. Con. 1. thus writeth. Nihil es per te, Deum invoca, tua peccata ſunt, merita dei ſunt, ſupplicium tibi debetur, & cum præmium venerit, ſua dona coronabit non merita tua. Thou art nothing by thy ſelfe, call upon God; thine are the ſinnes, the merites are Gods, to thee puniſhment is due; and when the reward ſhall come, hee will crowne his gifts not thy merites. Finally Auguſtine in nothing is more earneſt than in denying the rewarde which is of grace, to bee due in reſpect of merite or worthineſſe of working.

MART. 10. In the booke of Wiſedome, where there is honourable mention of the merites of Saints and their rewards in heaven, you tranſlate the holy Scripture thus: God hath proved them, and findeth them MEETE FOR HIMSELFE. To omit here that you uſe the preſent tenſe, whereas in the Greeke they are preter tenſes (God knoweth why, onely this wee know, that it is no true nor ſincere tranſlation) but to winke at ſmaller faults, why ſay you here in all your Bibles, that God findeth his Saints and holy ſervants meete for himſelfe, and not, worthy of himſelfe? See your partiality, and bee aſhamed.

ἄξιυς ἑαυ… Dignos ſe. ἱκανόω. ſuper.

FVLK. 10. The booke of Wiſedome written by Philo the Iew, as Saint Hierome thinketh, is no holy Canonicall Scripture, to confirme the credite of any article of beliefe. Therefore whether hee thought that mens merites were worthy of the favour and grace of God, and the reward of eternall life, or no, it is not materiall. But ſomewhat it is that you ſay, that our tranſlatours, for ἄξιος, haue not tranſlated worthy, but meete. For my part, I wiſh they had retained the vſuall ſignification of that word, and ſaid worthy of himſelfe, onely to take away your cavill. For otherwiſe in the ſenſe, there is no difference, if that hee ſaith bee true, none is meete for God, but they that are worthy of him which are not meete or worthy of themſelues, but made ſuch by grace, not for merite of their workes, but by the righteouſneſſe of Chriſt, imputed to them by faith. This if the Wiſeman meaneth not, but that their vertues were ſuch as deſerved Gods favour and eternall life, wee may boldly reject him, as going againſt the wiſedome of God revealed in the Canonicall Scriptures.

MART. 11. In the Apoſtles places before examined, you ſaid negatiuely, that the afflictions of this time were NOT WORTHY OF the glory to come, the Greeke not bearing that tranſlation: but here, when you ſhould ſay affirmatiuely and that word for word after the Greeke, that God found them worthy of himſelfe, here you ſay, meete for himſelfe, avoyding the terme, worthy, becauſe merite is included therein. So that when you will in your tranſlation deny merits, then condignæ ad, ſignifieth worthy of: when you ſhould in your tranſlation affirme merits, then Dignus with an ablatiue caſe doth not ſignifie, worthy of. No marvell if ſuch wilfulneſſe will not ſee the word merit, or that which is equivalent thereto, in all the Scripture. For when you doe ſee it, and ſhould tranſlate it, you ſuppreſſe it by another word. But this is a caſe worthy of examination, whether the Scripture haue the word merit, or the equivalent thereof. For wee will force them even by their owne tranſlations, to confeſſe that it is found there, and that they ſhould tranſlate it accordingly often when they doe not, yea, that if wee did not ſee it in the vulgar Latine tranſlation yet they muſt needs ſee it and finde it in the Greeke.

Merit of good workes plainly proved by the Scriptures.

FVLK. 11. In the Canonicall Scripture it ſeemeth the tranſlators had a religious care, to keepe both the propertie of the words, and the true meaning of the holy Ghoſt. In the Apocryphall bookes, they had a wiſe conſideration, to tranſlate them according to the beſt meaning, that their words would beare. Now whether you ſay, worthy of God, or meete for God: you muſt underſtand this meeteneſſe, or worthineſſe, to bee of grace, and not of merite: or elſe the ſaying is blaſphemous againſt the grace of God. For merite is not neceſſarily included in worthineſſe. The Kings ſonne is worthy to ſucceede his father, by right of inheritance, not by merit of vertue alwayes. A ſtranger may bee worthy of the Kings ſervice, which never deſerved the Kings entertainement, but for ſuch good qualities, as are in him. But after this tedious trifling, it would ſomewhat awake our ſpirits, if you could (as you threaten in the margent) proue the merit of good workes plainely by the Scriptures: either by the word merit, which you can never doe, or by any thing that is equivalent unto it: and to force us by our owne tranſlations to confeſſe, that it is found there; if not in the vulgar Latine yet in the Greeke.

MART. 12. Firſt when they tranſlate the foreſaid place thus, The afflictions of this time are not worthy of the glory to come: they meane this, deſerue not the glory to come, for to that purpoſe they doe ſo tranſlate it, as hath beene declared. Againe, when it is ſaid, The workeman is worthy of his hire or wages: What is meant, but that hee deſerveth his wages? And more plainely Tob. 9. they tranſlate thus: Brother Azarias, if I ſhould giue my ſelfe to bee thy ſervant, I ſhall not deſerue thy providence. And ſuch like. If then in theſe places both the Greeke and the Latine ſignifie, to bee worthy of, or, not to bee worthy of, to deſerue, or, not to deſerue: then they muſt allow us the ſame ſignification and vertue of the ſame words in other like places. Namely Apoc. 5. of our Saviours merites, thus: The Lambe that was killed,

Non ero condignus providentiæ.

IS WORTHY to receiue power, and riches, &c. What is that to ſay, but, DESERVETH to receiue? For ſo I truſt they will allow us to ſay of our Sauiour, that hee indeed deſerued. Againe, of the damned, thus: Thou haſt giuen them blood to drinke, for they ARE WORTHY, or, THEY HAVE DESERVED, is it not all one? Laſtly of the elect, thus: They ſhall walke with me in white, becauſe they are worthy, Apoc. 3. that is, becauſe they deſerue it. And ſo in the place before by them corrupted, God found them worthy of him: that is, ſuch as deſerued to be with him in eternall glory. Thus by their owne tranſlation of ἄξιος and dignus, are plainely deduced, worthineſſe, deſert, and merite of Saints, out of the Scriptures.

FVLK. 16. Your firſt foundation is falſe, therefore all your building falleth to the ground. For when wee tranſlate that text thus: The afflictions of this time are not worthy of the glory to come, wee meane not thus: deſerue not the glory to come, but euen as you doe, they are not equall or comparable: but thereof it followeth, that they deſerue not, for, to deſerue, is to doe a thing equall unto the reward: the afflictions bee not equall, therefore they deſerue not. But when it is ſaid the workeman is worthy of his hire, wee acknowledge that hee deſerveth his wages, yet wee ſhould not doe well to tranſlate it, that hee deſerveth his hire: becauſe worthineſſe may bee where there is no deſert. Gold is worthy to bee eſteemed before ſilver, and yet there is no merite, or deſert of gold, if wee ſpeake properly. That of Tob. 9. is not in the Greeke, but in ſome Bibles tranſlated out of Latine according to the uſuall phraſe of Engliſh, rather than to the propertie of the word, where it is ſaid Apoc. 5. The Lambe, that was killed, is worthy to receiue power, and riches, though wee will not contend of the deſerts of Chriſt, yet wee may bee bold to ſay, that in reſpect of the godhead, hee was worthy of all honour and glory from euerlaſting, before hee had created any thing: and therefore worthines doth not alway import deſert, as no worthineſſe doth no deſert. Likewiſe, when it is ſaid of the wicked, Apoc. 16. they are worthy to drinke blood, it is true, that they deſerved that plague, becauſe their cruell workes were iuſtly recompenced with that puniſhment: but yet ſome may be worthy of their puniſhment, that haue not deſerved it. The ſonne of a Traytor, is worthy to beare the puniſhment of his fathers attainder; yet hee hath not alwayes deſerved it by his owne deedes. Therefore it is not all one: they are worthy, and they haue deſerved. The infants of the reprobate, as ſoone as they haue life, are worthy of eternall damnation, and yet they haue not deſerved the ſame, by their owne deedes. Therefore where it is ſaid of the Elect, They ſhall walke with mee in white, becauſe they are worthy, it is not meant, that they haue deſerved by their owne workes, to walke with Chriſt: but becauſe they are made worthy by Chriſt, who hath given them grace, not to defile their garments, who alſo ſhall giue them the reward of white garments, that is, of innocencie, which no man can deſerue, becauſe no man is cleare from ſinne, but onely by forgiueneſſe of ſinnes, in the bloud of Chriſt. Therefore you have performed nothing leſſe, than your promiſe, which was to proue the equivalent of merite, out of the Scripture, and to force us, by our tranſlation, to confeſſe the ſame. For worthineſſe doth not alwayes argue or enforce deſert, as deſert doth worthineſſe, worthineſſe being a more generall word, than merit or deſert.

MART. 13. But to proceede one ſteppe further, we proue it alſo to be in the Scriptures, thus. Themſelues tranſlate thus, Heb. 10. 29. Of how much ſorer puniſhment ſhall hee be worthy, which treadeth under foote the Sonne of God? though one of their Bibles of the yeere 1562. very falſly and corruptly, leaveth out the words, worthy of, ſaying thus, How much ſorer ſhall hee be puniſhed, &c. Fearing no doubt by tranſlating the Greeke word ſincerely, this conſequence that now I ſhall inferre, to wit, If the Greeke word here, by their owne tranſlation, ſignifie to be worthy of, or, to deſerue, being ſpoken of paines and puniſhment deſerved: then muſt they grant us the ſame word ſo to ſignifie elſewhere in the new Teſtament, when it is ſpoken of deſerving heauen, and the kingdome of God, as in theſe places, Luc. 21. Watch therefore, all times praying, that you, MAY BE WORTHY to ſtand before the ſonne of man, and chap. 20. THEY THAT ARE WORTHY to attaine to that world, and to the reſurrection from the dead, neither marry, nor are married, and 2. Theſſ. 1. That you may BE WORTHY of the kingdome of God, for which alſo yee ſuffer.

ἵνα καταξιωθῆτε σταθῆναι. οἱ καταξιωθέντες. εἰς τὸ καταξιωθῆναι ὑμᾶς τῆς βασιλείας.

FVLK. 13. You thinke to haue great advantage at our tranſlation of the word ἀξιωθήσεται, Heb. 10. ſhall bee worthy: which is true according to the ſenſe, but not ſo proper for the word, which ſignifieth rather to bee iudged, or accounted worthy, whether hee bee worthy indeed, or not. And ſo it ſhould haue beene tranſlated, if the nature of the word had beene exactly weighed. But the tranſlators looked rather to the purpoſe of the Apoſtle, which is by all meanes to terrifie ſuch contemners and backe-ſliders, of whom hee ſpeaketh. The Greeke word therefore doth not ſignifie to deſerue, but to bee iudged worthy, although though it is true, that thoſe of whom the Apoſtle there ſpeaketh, deſerved extreame paines of damnation. And even ſo it ſignifieth in all other places, as Luk. 20. καταξιωθέντες, they that ſhall bee counted worthy to attaine to that world, and Luk. 21. ἵνα καταξιωθῆτε, that you may be counted worthy, and 2. Theſſ. 1. καταξιωθῆναι, that you may bee counted worthy. And ſo the word doth ſignifie in other places, without controverſie, as Luk. 7. the Centurion ſaid, οὐδὲ ἐμαυτὸν ἠξίωσα, I account not my ſelfe worthy, and 1 Tim. 5, The Elders that governe well, ἀξιούσθωσαν, let them bee counted worthy of double honour, for it is the imperatiue mood, therefore it is a fault in our tranſlations, to make it the indicatiue: for we cannot ſay, let them bee worthy, or let them be made worthy, but let them bee iudged, reputed, or accounted worthy.

MART 14. Thus you ſhould tranſlate in all theſe places, according to your tranſlation of the former place to the Hebrewes: or at the leaſt wiſe you ſhould haue this ſenſe and meaning, as the old vulgar Latine hath, tranſlating in all theſe places, counted worthy, but meaning worthy indeed: as when it is ſaid, Abraham was reputed iuſt, it is meant, hee was iuſt indeed. If you alſo haue this meaning in your tranſlations, which here follow the vulgar Latine, then wee appeale to your ſelues, whether to bee counted worthy, and to bee worthy, and to deſerue, and to merit, bee not all one: and ſo here alſo Merit is deduced. But if you meane according to your hereſie, to ſignifie by tranſlating counted worthy, that they are not indeed worthy, then your purpoſe is hereticall, and tranſlation falſe, and repugnant to your tranſlating the ſame word in other places, as is declared, and now further we will declare.

Qui digni habebuntur. Vt digni habeamini.

FVLK. 14. I haue ſhewed you how wee ſhould tranſlate that word in any place, whereſoever it is read, even as the vulgar Latine hath in the places by you noted, and in thoſe three texts, Luk. 20. 21. 2. Theſſ. 1. wee meane not falſly counted worthy, but worthy indeed, as when it is ſaid, that Abraham was reputed iuſt, wee acknowledge that hee was truely ſo reputed, and that hee was iuſt indeed. But where you appeale to our conſciences, whether to bee counted worthy, and to be worthy, and to deſerue, and to merit, bee not all one; I anſwer you plainely, and according to my conſcience, they bee not: but euen as Abraham was reputed iuſt, and was iuſt indeed, not by deſert, but by faith; ſo in thoſe three texts, the faithfull are counted worthy, and are worthy indeed, not by their merite, and deſert, but for Ieſus Chriſts ſake: for herein your hereſie is greatly deceived, to imagine, that hee which is iuſt by Chriſt, by faith, or by imputation, is not truely iuſt, or not iuſt indeed. For Chriſt, faith, and imputation, are not contrary, or oppoſed to trueth, but to merit or deſert of the partie, that is iuſt by Chriſt, by faith, or by imputation, and ſo wee ſay of them that are accounted worthy for Chriſts ſake, and not for their owne merits.

MART. 15. They whom God doth make worthy, they are truely and indeed worthy: are they not? But by your owne tranſlation of the ſame word in the actiue voice, God doth make them worthy. Therefore in the paſſiue voice it muſt alſo ſignifie to be made, or to be indeed worthy. For example. 2. Theſſ. 1. 11. you tranſlate thus, Wee alſo pray for you, THAT OVR GOD MAY MAKE YOV WORTHY of this calling: according to which tranſlation, why did you not alſo in the ſelfe ſame chapter, a little before, tranſlate thus? That you MAY BE MADE WORTHY (and ſo be worthy) of the kingdome of God, for which alſo you ſuffer. You know the caſe is like in both places, and in the Greeke Doctors you ſpecially ſhould know (by your oſtentation of reading them in Greeke) that they according to this uſe of holy Scripture, very often uſe alſo this word, both actiuely, and paſſiuely, to make worthy, and to bee made, or to bee worthy. See the Greeke Liturgies.

ἀξιοῦν, to make worthy, ἀξιωθῆναι, to be made, or to be worthy. ἵνα ὑμᾶς ἀξιώσῃ τῆς κλήσεως. εἰς τὸ καταξιωθῆναι ὑμᾶς τῆς βασιλείας. ἀξιοῦσθαι. ἀξιωθῆναι.

FVLK. 15. They muſt needs bee worthy, whom God maketh worthy: but then are they not worthy by their merites or deſerts, but by his grace in Ieſus Chriſt, and ſo our Tranſlatours meane, when they ſay, 2 Theſſ. 1. 11. that our God may make you worthy of this calling, although the clearer tranſlation had beene, that God may account you worthy, as the vulgar Latine hath, ut dignetur, for dignor is not to make worthy, but to vouchſafe, or to account worthy. Wherefore you doe vainely here ſnatch at a word, contrary to the meaning both of the Tranſlator, and of the text: for thoſe whom God maketh worthy, are not worthy by their deſert, but by his grace accepting them. How the Greeke Doctors uſe the word, it is not now the queſtion, but how it ſignifieth in the Scripture: although I ſee not how you proue that the Doctors uſe it, to make worthy, or to bee made worthy by deſert.

MART. 16. Which S. Chryſoſtome, to put all out of doubt, explicateth thus in other words; That hee make us worthy of the kingdome of heaven, Ser. 1. de orando Deo. And upon the Epiſtle to Titus, cap. 3. in the ſame ſenſe paſſiuely, God grant wee may all BE MADE WORTHY (or be worthy) of the good things promiſed to them that loue him. And in another place of the ſaid Doctor it muſt needs ſignifie to be worthy, as when he ſaith, In Coloſſ. 1. No man liveth

liveth ſuch a trade of life, that hee is worthy of the kingdome, but all is his gift: for to ſay thus, No man ſo liveth, that hee can bee counted worthy of the kingdome of heaven, is falſe, is againſt the Proteſtants owne opinion, which (ſay they) are counted worthy, that are not. Againe, to ſay, No man ſo liveth, that hee can bee made worthy, is falſe, becauſe God can make the worſt man worthy. It remaineth then to ſay, No man ſo liveth, that hee is worthy: which a little before hee declareth thus, No man by his owne proper merites obtaineth the kingdome of heaven, that is, as his owne, and of himſelfe, without the grace of God. And yet wee muſt ſhew further out of the Scriptures, that God maketh us worthy, and ſo wee are indeed worthy, and here alſo wee muſt convince you of falſe and partiall interpretation.

FVLK. 16. Saint Chryſoſtome putteth not the matter any whit out of doubt, for your ſide: for hee doth not expound this text of 2 Theſſ. 1. but onely in the latter end of his Sermon prayeth, that God having mercy upon us all, will make us worthy of his kingdome. Where you might haue ſeene, if you had not beene blinde with frowardneſſe, that God maketh us worthy by his mercy, not by our merites. That ἀξιωθῆναι in his prayer, upon the third to Titus, is taken to bee made worthy, rather than to bee accounted worthy, you haue no proofe, but your owne authoritie: although for God to make worthy by his mercy, and to account worthy, is all one in effect. The third place, in Epiſt. ad Col. cap. 1. is altogether againſt you: where hee ſaith, no man liveth ſuch a trade of life, that hee may bee judged or accounted worthy of that kingdome, but all is the gift of God; is not his meaning plaine, that no man can bee accounted worthy by workes or merits, but altogether by the grace and gift of God?

With this diſtinction therefore, which is plaine, even by thoſe words which you cite, that Chryſoſtome maketh, ἀξιωθῆναι, without any inconvenience, may ſignifie in this place, to bee accounted worthy. No man by his owne proper merits obtaineth the kingdome of heaven (ſaith he) but even as a lot is rather by hap and chance, ſo it is here: meaning that God giveth his kingdome no more according to mans deſerts, than lots doe fall to men by chance, which yet God diſpoſeth as it pleaſeth them. Finally, the whole diſcourſe of the Doctor being againſt mans merits, uſing the word in the ſame place ſo often of Gods dignation, vouchſafing or accounting worthy, you had great ſcarcitie of examples out of the Doctors, that bring this place to proue that ἀξιωθῆναι ſignifieth to bee made worthy by merit, and not by meere mercy.

MART. 17. The Greeke word ἱκανὸς (I pray you) what doth it ſignifie? You muſt anſwer that it ſignifieth not only meet, but alſo worthy: for ſo Beza teacheth you, and ſo you tranſlate, Matt. 3. 11. and cap. 1. and 1 Cor. 15. 9. I am not worthy, in all three places. And why (I pray you) did you not likewiſe follow the old Latine Interpreter one ſtep further, ſaying, Giving thankes to God the Father, THAT HATH MADE US WORTHY, but tranſlating rather thus, which hath made us meet to bee partakers of the inheritance of the Saints in light. Here was the place where you ſhould haue ſhewed your ſinceritie, and haue ſaid that God maketh us worthy of heavenly bliſſe: becauſe you know if ἱκανὸς bee worthy, then ἱκανῶσαι is to make worthy. But you are like to Beza your Maſter, who (as though all interpretation of words were at his commandement) ſaith, here and there, and ſo forth, I haue followed the old Latine Interpreter, tranſlating it worthy: but in ſuch and ſuch a place (meaning this for one) I choſe rather to ſay, MEET. But that both hee and you ſhould here alſo haue tranſlated worthy, the Greeke Fathers ſhall teach you, if wee bee not worthy, or able to controll ſo mighty Grecians, as you pretend to bee when you crow upon your owne dunghill, otherwiſe in your tranſlations ſhewing ſmall skill, or great malice.

Annot. in 3. Matt. no. Teſt. 1556. Idoneum dicere malui.

FVLK. 17. If you bee not able to draw merit out of the word ἄξιος which properly ſignifieth worthy, you ſhall haue ſomewhat adoe to wring it out of the word ἱκανὸς, which properly ſignifieth apt or meete, and ſometime ſufficient, according to which latter ſignification, Beza in three places tranſlateth dignus, becauſe ſufficiens is no Latine word in that ſenſe to bee uſed. But now you aske, why wee went not a ſtep further, to tranſlate τῷ ἱκανώσαντι, Coloſſ. 1. verſ. 12. which hath made us worthy. I anſwer you, firſt there is no reaſon that a word which hath divers ſignifications, ſhould alwayes bee tranſlated after one. Secondly, when a word hath one moſt uſuall ſignification, and two or three other ſignifications not ſo uſuall, by tranſlating it once or twice according to the ſenſe of the place, after one of the beſt uſuall ſignifications, wee are not bound to giue over the moſt common and uſuall ſignification, when the ſenſe of the place requireth it. Thirdly, when a verbe is derived of a noune that hath divers ſignifications, it ſignifieth moſt commonly after the moſt uſuall ſignification, as ἄξιος, ſometime ſignifieth cheape, wee muſt not thereof conclude, that ἀξιόω ſignifieth to make cheape: ſo ἱκανὸς ſignifieth ſometime great, or much, you may as well ſay, that ἱκανόω ſignifieth to magnifie, to make great, or to multiply, which none but a mad man would ſay: and yet you thinke you haue made a great argument, when you ſay, if ἱκανὸς bee worthy, than ἱκανῶσαι is to make worthy. It remaineth therefore, that ſeeing the moſt uſuall ſignification of ἱκανὸς is apt or meete, the true and beſt ſignification of ἱκανόω is to make apt or meete, which wee haue followed in our tranſlation. But if you will ſtill contend that ἱκανὸς is all one with ἄξιος, then you muſt tell us, as you require us often, whether ἱκανὸς πρὸς τὸν θάνατον, bee as good Greeke, as ἄξιος τοῦ θανάτου, if you will ſay, worthy of death. Beza therefore followeth not his pleaſure, where hee chuſeth to ſay, for ἱκανὸν, idoneum, but the nature of the word, and the uſuall ſignification thereof, compared with the ſenſe of the place. And if wee ſhould follow your vulgar Latine tranſlation, and ſay, that God hath made us worthy to bee partakers of the inheritance of the Saints in light, you are never the neere for your merites: for God maketh us worthy by his grace, and by the righteouſneſſe and holineſſe of Chriſt, which is imputed to us being incorporated to him, and made liuely members of his myſticall body. How vainely you charge the Tranſlators with bragging, unskilfulneſſe, and malice, they that are learned can judge, and God will one day revenge it.

MART. 18. The Greeke Fathers (I ſay) interpret the Apoſtles word here: κατηξίωσεν ἡμᾶς, καὶ ἰσχύσατο ἡμᾶς ἱκανοὺς φανῆναι, that is, hath made us worthy, and given us the grace to bee worthy. And S. Baſil in orat. Liturg. making both Greeke words all one, ſaith THOU HAST MADE US WORTHIE to bee Miniſters of thy holy Altar. And anon after, MAKE US WORTHY for this miniſterie. And Saint Chryſoſtome upon the Apoſtles place, God doth not onely giue us ſocietie with the Saints, but maketh us alſo worthy to receiue ſo great dignitie. And here is a goodly conſideration of the goodneſſe of God toward us, that doth indeed by his grace make us worthy of ſo great things, who otherwiſe are moſt unworthy, vile, and abiect. Which making of us worthy, is expreſſed by the ſaid Greeke words, more than by the Latine mereri, becauſe it declareth whence our merit and worthineſſe proceedeth, to wit, of God. Both which S. Chryſoſtome expreſſeth excellently thus: When hee brought in Publicans to the kingdome of heaven, hee defamed not the kingdome of heaven, but magnified it alſo with great honours, ſhewing that there is ſuch a Lord of the kingdome of heaven, which hath made even unworthy perſons to bee ſo much better, that they ſhould deſerue even the glory of that dignitie. And Oecumenius ſaith, that it is Gods glory, *TO MAKE HIS SERVANTS WORTHY of ſuch good things: and that it is their glory, *TO HAVE BEENE MADE WORTHY of ſuch things, in 2 Theſſ. 1.

καταξιώσας ἡμᾶς. ἱκάνωσον ἡμᾶς.

Ho. de cruce & latrone.

Vt etiam illius dignitatis gloriam mererentur.

* ἀξιῶσαι.

FVLK. 18. If the Greeke Fathers did ſo interpret the Apoſtles words, yet your merit is to ſeeke, as I haue ſaid. For I will not contend, whether God make us worthy, but whether hee make us worthy by deſert of our good workes, or by his mercy and grace, in the redemption of his Sonne. But let us ſee what the Fathers ſay to the matter. Firſt Oecumenius words are flat againſt you, if they bee truely tranſlated, κατηξίωσεν, hee hath counted us worthy, and hath freely granted unto us to bee meete. See you not, that all our worthineſſe and meetneſſe dependeth of his grace, and free acceptation? The Liturgie intituled of Baſil, although it haue a much younger author, maketh never a whit more for you. The Miniſter prayeth that God would account him worthy, or make him meete for the miniſterie. And if you ſhould in both places tranſlate, that God maketh worthy, you cannot proue merite thereby, but contrariwiſe it foundeth againſt merite, for God maketh us not worthy by our deſerts, but by the worthineſſe of Chriſt. Chryſoſtome alſo, as I haue ſhowed before upon this place, doth utterly condemne your opinion of merites, for hee ſaith, Such are the things that are given, that hee hath not onely given them, but alſo made us able to receiue them. Againe, hee hath not onely given us the honour, but alſo ſtrength to embrace it. What is our ſtrength? What is our abilitie to receiue the gifts of God, but faith in the merites of Chriſt? The place of Chryſoſtome, Hom. de cruce & latrone, is not to bee underſtood of deſerving by workes, but by the grace of God, and remiſſion of their ſinnes, which maketh men meete and worthy of his glory; as the example of the Publican, juſtified onely by remiſſion of his ſinnes, and of the harlot ſaved by faith, which hee uſeth, doth plainely declare. And yet ſanctification, and the fruits of good life, are not excluded from the perſons juſtified and ſaved, but onely merite or deſert of workes, according to which, as the ſame Chryſoſtome ſaith, in Epiſt. Col. 1. wee muſt ſay, wee are unprofitable ſervants, when wee haue done all that is commanded us. But this is no place to handle controverſies of Religion, but tranſlations of the Scripture. The word ἀξιοῦσι, except you bring us better evidence than yet wee ſee any, in all places where wee reade it, wee may tranſlate it dignari, which is to vouchſafe or account worthy.

Luk. 18.
Luk. 7.

MART. 19. Thus wee ſee how the holy Scripture uſeth equivalent words to ſignifie merit, which you ſuppreſſe as much as you can. So likewiſe wee might tell you of other words and phraſes that doe plainely plainely import and ſignifie merit : as when it is ſaid, Eccleſ. 16. Every man ſhall finde according to his workes. Budee both your Maſter and ours in the Greeke tongue, telleth us, that the Greeke word εὑρίσκειν (to finde) is properly to receiue for the which a man hath given or laboured. And to requite you with ſome prophane authoritie (becauſe you delight much in that kinde) the whole Oration of Demoſthenes πρὸς Λεπτίνην, will tell you the ſame. Now, to receiue for that which a man hath laboured or wrought, what doth it elſe preſuppoſe, but merit and deſert? It is a common phraſe of the Scripture, that God will iudge and reward or repay according to every mans workes. Doth not this include merit and demerit of workes? But I wot not how, nor wherefore, in this caſe you tranſlate ſometime deeds, for workes, ſaying, Who will reward every man according to his deeds. And againe, You ſee then how that of deeds a man is iuſtified, and not of faith onely.

κατὰ τὰ ἔργα αὐτοῦ εὑρήσει. λαβεῖν ἀνθ' ὧν τις ἐδαπάνησεν ἢ ἐπόνησεν εὑρεῖν ἀντιλαιαν. Eccleſ. 16. Pſal. 61. Apoc. 22. κατὰ τὰ ἔργα αὐτοῦ. ἐξ ἔργων.

Fvlk. 19. Wee doe not yet ſee, that the holy Scriptures vſed any word equivalent to merit, whereby it might bee gathered, that wee are iuſtified or ſaved by merit of good workes. But you haue other words and phraſes, that doe plainely import and ſignifie merite, as in Eccleſiaſticus 16. Every man ſhall finde according to his workes. Where you put us in minde, what our Maſter Budee writeth of the proper ſignification of εὑρίσκειν, that is, to deſerue, bringing example therefore out of Demoſthenes Oration πρὸς Λεπτίνην. But I pray you doth not our Maſter affirme this to bee the onely ſignification of that verbe? Where hee bringeth you the example out of Gregory, of Saul, which ſeeking his fathers Aſſes, βασιλείαν εὗρεν, found a kingdome, doth hee meane that by ſeeking his fathers Aſſes, hee deſerved a kingdome? Againe, the example hee bringeth out of Saint Luke, Εὗρες γὰρ χάριν παρὰ τῷ Θεῷ, Thou haſt found favour or grace with God; doth hee underſtand, that the Virgin Mary deſerved the grace of God? But you obiect, that it is a common phraſe of the Scripture, that God will iudge or reward, or repay to every man according to his workes. It is true, but not to every one according to his merits, for then all ſhould bee damned, for all haue deſerved death; and no man ſhould bee ſaved, for no man meriteth ſalvation. But God rendreth to the faithfull according to their workes, when hee freely giveth for Chriſts ſake eternall life to them, that by perſeverance of good workes (as the Apoſtle ſaith) ſeeke glory, honour, and incorruption. Their workes therefore are the fruits of his grace, not the merits or deſerts of his grace, by which wee are ſaved, Epheſ. 2 But here againe, you quarrell, that for workes, wee ſay ſometimes deeds, as though they were not all one. Or if they bee not, why doe you, 1 Cor. 5. tranſlate, Qui hoc opus fecit, that hath done this deed?

Mart. 20. I know you will tell us, that you uſe to ſay deeds or workes indifferently, as alſo you may ſay, that you put no difference betweene iuſt and righteous, meet and worthy, but uſe both indifferently. To the ignorant this is a faire anſwer; and ſhall ſoone perſwade them: but they that ſee further, muſt needs ſuſpect you, till you giue a good reaſon of your doing. For, the controverſie being of faith and workes, of iuſtice and iuſtification by workes, of the worthineſſe or value of workes, why doe you not preciſely keepe theſe tearmes pertaining to the controverſie, the Greeke words being alwayes pregnant in that ſignification? Why ſhould you once tranſlate the Greeke ἔργα, deeds, rather than workes? You know it is properly workes, as πράξεις deeds. It were very good in matters of controverſie to bee preciſe. Beza maketh it a great fault in the old vulgar Latine Tranſlator, that hee expreſſeth one Greeke word in Latine divers wayes. You chop and change ſignifications here and there as you liſt, and you thinke you ſatisfie the Reader marvellous well, if ſometime you ſay Idoll, and not alwayes Images; ſometime iuſt, and not alwayes righteous: and if in other places you ſay workes, or if one Bible hath workes, where another hath deeds, you thinke this is very well, and will anſwer all the matter ſufficiently. God and your conſcience bee Iudge herein, and let the wiſe Reader conſider it deepely. The leaſt thing that we demand the reaſon of, rather than charge you with all, is, why your Church Bible ſaith in the places before alleadged, The righteous iudgement of God, which will reward every man according to his deeds; and, Man is iuſtified by deeds, and not by faith onely: whereas you know the Greeke is more pregnant for us than ſo, and the matter of controverſie would better appeare on our ſide, if you ſaid thus: The Ivst iudgement of God, which will reward every man according to his Workes: and, Man is iuſtified by workes, and not by faith onely.

Præfat. in no. Teſt. 1556. δικαιοκρισία, ἔργα. ἐξ ἔργων.

Fvlk. 20. If you could tell us what advantage our doctrine might haue, by tranſlating deedes rather than workes, it might bee ſuſpected why ſome tranſlations uſe the one, rather than the other: but ſeeing you cannot imagine, nor any man elſe, what it ſhould availe us, to uſe the one rather than the other, it may bee reaſonably thought, that the Tranſlators meant no ſubtiltie, eſpecially when in places of like apparance for our aſſertion, they uſe the word deeds alſo: as Galat. 2. v. 16. A man is not iuſtified by the deeds of the Law,

Law, but by faith of Ieſus Chriſt, where the Greeke word is ἔργων as well as in Saint Iames. But where you ſay that πράξεις is proper for deedes, you were beſt call the ſecond booke of Saint Luke, The deedes of the Apoſtles. The fault that Beza findeth with the vulgar Latine tranſlation is, that in divers places, hee tranſlateth one word divers wayes, and them differing. For otherwiſe to tranſlate for ξίφος ſometimes Gladius, and ſometimes Enſis, it were no fault, no more than it is in us to uſe the words iuſtice and righteouſneſſe, workes and deedes, faith and beliefe, truſt and confidence, &c. And you your ſelues in ſuch words doe often uſe the ſame libertie.

Mart. 21. But will you not yet ſee merite and meritorious workes in the Scripture? I marvell your skill in the Greeke teacheth you nothing in this point. Saint Iohn ſaith: Looke to your ſelues, that you loſe not the things that you haue wrought, but that you may receiue a full reward. Mee thinketh, in theſe words the equivalent of merite is eaſily ſeene of any man that is not wilfully blinde. But you ſhould ſee further than the common ſort. For you know that the Greeke here ſignifieth, not onely that which wee worke, but that which we worke for. As in the Greeke phraſe of working for a mans living, and as you tranſlate Io. 6. v. 27. Labovr Not For The Meate that periſheth, but for that meate which endureth unto life everlaſting. Such labourers God hired to worke in his vineyard, and the workeman is worthy of his hire. So that the Apoſtle in the former words exhorteth to perſeverance, that wee loſe not the reward or pay, for which we worke, and which by working wee merit and deſerue.

2. Epiſt. v. 8. ἃ εἰργασάμεθα. ἐργάζεσθαι τὸν βίον. ἐργάζεσθε τὴν βρῶσιν * ἐργάται. Math. 20. * ἐργάτης. Luc. 10.

Fvlk. 21. You fare with us, as a merry follow did with his friends, of whom Eraſmus telleth, who affirming that hee ſaw in the skie a fierie Dragon, with often asking them if they did not ſee it, hee induced them at length, every one to confeſſe they ſaw it, leaſt they ſhould haue beene thought to bee purblinde. But in good earneſt, and in my conſcience, I ſee no more merite in the Scriptures, than I did before. Yea I haue this argument more, to perſwade mee that it is not found in the Scriptures, becauſe the chiefeſt patrones thereof, having taken ſuch paines to finde it, are now as farre from it, as ever they were. But to the matter, I ſay there is no merite included in the ſaying of Saint Iohn, although you rehearſe it in the ſecond perſon, after the vulgar Latine tranſlation, and not after the Greeke, which is in the firſt perſon, and may bee referred to the reward of the Apoſtles, which ſhall bee full, if they whom they haue converted to the faith, doe perſevere unto the end. But make it as ſtrong for your part as you can, the full reward is given according to the moſt bountifull promiſe of God, to our good workes, of his meere mercy and grace, and not by deſert of our workes. And the parable of the labourers, whom God hired into his vineyard, declareth moſt evidently, that the reward is of grace, not of merite. For if it were of merite, they that came firſt earely in the morning, ſhould haue received more, as their labour was greater, than they which came at the laſt houre. Where our Saviour Chriſt ſaith, the workeman is worthy of his hire, hee teacheth his Diſciples, that they may lawfully take meate and drinke of them to whom they preach, according to the common ſaying, or Proverbe. But thereof it followeth not, that every one which worketh in Gods vineyard, is worthy for his workes ſake, and by deſert of his labour, of eternall glory, for hee promiſeth greater reward to his workemen, a thouſand folde and more, than their labour doth deſerue. So that yet wee ſee not, that wee merite and deſerue by working, although wee receiue reward for our worke, or according to our workes. Vnde mihi tantum meriti (ſaith a godly father) cui indulgentia eſt pro corona? whence ſhould I haue ſo great merite when pardon or mercy is my crowne.

Math. 20. Luc. 10.

Mart. 22. Againe Beza telleth us, that ἀντιμισθία ſignifieth mercedem quæ meritis reſpondet, that is, a reward anſwerable to the merits. And wee finde many words in the Scripture like unto this, μισθὸς, ἀπόδοσις, * μισθαποδοσία, μισθαποδότης, Which are on Gods part, who is the rewarder and recompenſer. And on our part wee haue (as the Apoſtle ſaith, Heb. 10. and 4.) great confidence, confidence (ſaith Photius a notable Greeke father) of our workes, confidence of our faith, of our tentations, of our patience, &c. Yea wee haue ἀνταπόδοσις & ἀντάμειψις in the Scripture, which muſt needs ſignifie as much as Bezaes ἀντιμισθία. By the one, it ſaid, In keeping thy commandements is great reward. Againe, You ſhall receiue The Retribvtion of inheritance, Col. 3. verſ. 24. And 2. Theſſal. 1. v. 6. Gods repaying iuſt and retribution of Hell or Heaven for good and evill deſerts, is expreſſed by the ſame word. And by the other, is ſaid, I haue inclined my heart to keepe thy iuſtifications (or commandements) alwayes For Revvard.

Ambroſ. ad virg. in exhort. Annot in Ro. c. 1 v 27. ἀντιμισθία. * Heb. 10. & 11. παρρησίαν. τὴν ἐπὶ τῶν ἔργων, &c. Phot. apud Oecum. in Heb. 10. Pſ 18. & 118. ἀνταπόδοσις πολλή. ἀνταποδώσεις δι' ἀντάμειψιν.

Fvlk. 22. If you can finde ἀντιμισθία in the Scripture, you convince us of merit by Bezaes iudgement. Therefore, tell us I pray you; in what booke and chapter wee ſhall finde it. Firſt you tell us, that you finde many words like unto it. Yea, but neither the ſame, nor any that is equivalent. For rendring of reward, which all your wordes doe ſignifie, may bee according to promiſe by grace: and not by deſert. The confidence of our workes, that Photius ſpeaketh of, muſt bee underſtood as they are teſtimonies of Gods ſanctifying ſpirit, or elſe it is contrary to the Scripture. The parable told againſt them that truſted in themſelues, that they are righteous, whereas wee muſt confeſſe, that wee are unprofitable ſervants in all our obedience, and beſt workes that wee doe. Yea but you haue ἀνταπόδοσις and ἀνταμείψις in the Scripture, which muſt needs ſignifie as much as Bezaes ἀντιμισθία. Wee will yeeld to this neceſſitie: If a man promiſe a labourer twentie ſhillings for every dayes worke, the rendring of this wages may bee called ἀνταπόδοσις or ἀνταμείψις, and yet no man will ſay, that a dayes labour deſerveth twenty ſhillings. That there is great reward promiſed for them that keepe Gods commandements, wee confeſſe, but this reward is either of merite, if they perfectly keepe all Gods commaundements, which noe man doth: or of mercie, if being iuſtified by faith through remiſſion of their ſinnes, they endeavour according to the meaſure of Gods grace, given unto them, to keepe Gods commaundements in ſome part, as God giveth ſtrength. In the teſtimonie of Saint Paul, the word of inheritance following immediately after the word of reward, or retribution excludeth merits: for the inheritance dependeth of Gods free adoption, by which hee maketh us his ſonnes, that hee may giue us that inheritance, which wee can never deſerue. In the other place the Apoſtle promiſeth reward of glory, to them that ſuffer for Chriſts name: which God having promiſed of his meere mercie to giue us, and the ſame being purchaſed for us by the merites of our Saviour Chriſt: it is as iuſt before God to render unto us, as to repay the wicked with eternall condemnation, according to their merits. So that the merits of Chriſt, and his ſatisfaction, plead for us in all rewardes, and not the merites of our good workes, which yet are not ours, but Gods gifts in us. That you alledge out of the Pſalme, followeth afterward to bee conſidered. Col. 3.

MART. 23. But all this will not ſuffice you. For whereſoever you can poſſibly, you will haue an evaſion. And therefore in this later place you runne to the ambiguitie of the Hebrew word, and tranſlate thus, I haue applyed my heart to fulfill thy ſtatutes alwayes, EVEN VNTO THE END. Alas my Maſters, are not the ſeventie Greeke Interpreters ſufficient to determine the ambiguitie of this word? Is not Saint Hierome, in his tranſlation according to the Hebrew: are not all the ancient fathers both Greeke and Latine? It is ambiguous (ſay you) and therefore you take your libertie. You doe ſo indeed, and that like Princes. For in another place, where the Greeke hath determined, you follow it with all your heart, ſaying, fall downe before his footeſtoole, becauſe hee is holy: whereas the ambiguitie of the Hebrew, would haue borne you to ſay, as in the vulgar Latine, becauſe it is holy, and ſo it maketh for holineſſe of places, which you cannot abide. עקב. ὅτι ἅγιός ἐστι. קדוש הוא.

FVLK. 23. You neede not bee halfe ſo earneſt, for the word of reward, in that verſe of the Pſalme, which wee tranſlate unto the end: for if it were granted unto you, that for which you make ſo much of it, the merite of good workes will never bee eſtabliſhed by it. For reward, as I haue often ſaid, and plainely proved, doth not of neceſſitie import the merite or deſert of him that is rewarded: but oftentimes the liberality and bountifulneſſe of the rewarder, which for ſmall labour giveth wonderfull great reward. Now concerning the tranſlation of this word jekebh, the Seventie Interpreters, nor yet Saint Hierome are ſufficient to determine the ambiguitie in this place, more than in an hundred other places, where our tranſlations depart from their iudgement. But it is ſtill free for men of every age, to uſe the gift of knowledge, and interpretation of tongues, unto the exact finding out of the true meaning of the holy Ghoſt in the Scriptures. Neither doe wee ioyne with them, onely for advantage, as you fondly charge us, but as I haue ſhewed you reaſon in the example you bring, ſo is there reaſon alſo to bee ſhewed, whereſoever wee either ioyne with them, or depart from them. Where you ſay, wee can not abide holineſſe of places, it is falſe, for wee doe acknowledge the holineſſe of all places which you can prooue, that God hath ſanctified, as hee did the Arke, the temple, the tabernacle, &c. עקב.

MART. 24. But you uſe (you ſay) the ambiguitie of the Hebrew. Take heede that your libertie in taking all advantages, againſt the common and approved interpretation of the whole Church, be not very ſuſpicious. For if it doe ſignifie alſo reward, as (you know) it doth very commonly, and your ſelfe ſo tranſlate it, (Pſal. 18. v. 11.) *when you cannot chuſe: and if the Septuaginta doe here ſo tranſlate it in Greeke, and Saint Hierome in his Latine tranſlation, according to the Hebrew, and the ancient fathers in their commentaries: what upſtart new Maſters are you that ſet all theſe to ſchoole againe, and teach the world a new tranſlation? If you will ſay, you follow our owne great Hebricians, Sanctes Pagninus. Why did you follow him in his tranſlation, rather than in his Lexicon called Theſaurus, where he interpreteth it as the whole Church did before him? Why did you follow him (or Benedictus Arias either) in this place, and doe not follow them in the ſelfe ſame caſe, a little before tranſlating that very Hebrew word, which is in this place, propter retributionem, for reward? So that you follow nothing, neither judgement nor learning, in Hebrew or Greeke, but onely your owne errour and hereſie, which is, that wee may not doe well in reſpect of reward, or for reward, and therefore becauſe the holy Prophet David ſaid of himſelfe the contrary, that he did bend his whole heart to keepe Gods Commandements for reward, you make him ſay another thing.

Pſal. 118. 112. עקב

FVLK. 24. If Sanctes Pagninus, Benedictus Arias, and Iſidorus Clarius, bee upſtart new Maſters in your judgement, becauſe they depart here from the Septuaginta, and Saint Hierome, wee poore men muſt looke for ſmall favour at your handes. But becauſe you ſay wee follow nothing, neither judgement nor learning, in Hebrew or Greeke, but onely our owne errour and hereſie: I will ſet downe the judgement of Iſidorus Clarius, upon this place, who tranſlateth it, as all the Hebricians of this age doe, and yeeldeth his reaſons in theſe wordes. Inclinavi Cor meum.] Accommodavi animum meum, ut opere præſtem præcepta tua, &c. I have inclined my heart.] I have applyed my minde, that in worke or deede I might performe thy Commaundements, even unto the end of my life. For that word, propter retributionem, for rewarde, the Hebrew wordes have not: and truely it is to bee taken away, for it is too ſervile a thing, and not worthy of ſo great a Prophet, to give diligence to Gods commaundements for reward, or hope of retribution. For that is the part of an hireling, and of him which is unworthy the name of a Sonne: neither can hee bee worthily called a Chriſtian man, that ſerveth Chriſt with his minde. For what? if God ſhould ſay ſo, that hee would not reward us with any other retribution, ſeeing for this one thing that wee are created by him, wee can never ſatisfy this debt, ſhall we refuſe to ſerve him? Therefore wee are bound to ſerve him with our whole minde, although hee had decreed to thruſt us into Hell-fire, both for that which wee owe him, and for that wee live onely that time which wee beſtow in well doing, for they which give over themſelves to all wicked workes, by no meanes can bee ſaid to live. Yet there may bee an interpretation of the Hebrew wordes, without ſuch offence, ſo that it may bee ſaid, for ever is the reward, as elſe-where wee reade, in keeping of them is great reward. For by this meanes it is ſignifyed, that the fruite indeede of keeping Gods Law is very great, but yet that retribution is not the end and ſcope, but the love of God. Let all indifferent Readers judge by this, what juſt cauſe you have thus to raile, not onely upon our Tranſlatours; but alſo upon all learned Papiſts, that have tranſlated even ſo. And let the ignorant judge, what knowledge you have in the Hebrew tongue, which urge the falſe tranſlation of the Seventy againſt the opinion and tranſlation of all the learned Hebricians of this age, both Papiſts and Proteſtants: although it were no hard thing to prove, that the Greeke text of the Pſalmes, which now wee have, is none of the Seventies tranſlation, as even Lindanus might teach you, de opt. gen. lib. 3. cap. 6.

MART. 25. And to this purpoſe perhaps it is, (for other cauſe I cannot geſſe) that you make ſuch a marvellous tranſpoſition of wordes in your tranſlation, (Math. 19.) ſaying thus: When the Sonne of man ſhall ſit in the throne of his majeſty, ye that have followed me in the regeneration, ſhall ſit alſo upon twelve ſeats. Whereas the order of theſe wordes, both in the Greeke and the Latine, is this: You that have followed me, in the regeneration, when the Sonne of man ſhall ſit in his majeſty, you alſo ſhall ſit upon twelve ſeates. To follow Chriſt in the regeneration, is not eaſily underſtood what it ſhould meane: but to ſit with Chriſt in the regeneration, that is, in the reſurrection, upon twelve ſeates, that is familiar and every mans interpretation, and concerneth the great reward that they ſhall then have, which here follow Chriſt, as the Apoſtles did.

FVLK. 25. You looke for faults very narrowly, that can eſpy but a comma wanting, although it be no impious ſenſe to follow Chriſt in the regeneration; for the world by Chriſt was after a ſort renewed, when the cauſe of the reſtauration thereof was performed; as for the reward, of which you have ſuch a ſervile care, is expreſſed in ſitting upon twelve ſeates, to judge the tribes of Iſrael. Wherefore there was no neede, that you ſhould feare the loſſe of your reward, by this tranſpoſition.

MART. 26. The like tranſpoſition of wordes is in ſome of your Bibles (Heb. 2. v. 9) thus. Wee ſee IESVS, crowned with glory and honour, which was a little inferiour to the Angells, through the ſuffering of death. Whereas both in Greeke and Latine, the order of the wordes is thus: Him that was made a little inferiour to Angells, wee ſee IESVS, through the paſſion of death, crowned with honour and glory. In this latter the Apoſtle ſaith that Chriſt was crowned for his ſuffering death, and ſo by his death merited his glory. But by your tranſlation, hee ſaith that Chriſt was made inferiour to Angells by his ſuffering death, that is; (ſaith Beza) For to ſuffer death: and taking it ſo, that hee was made inferiour to Angells, that he might die, then the other ſenſe is cleane excluded, that for ſuffering death he was crowned with glory: and this is one place place among other, whereby it may very well be gathered that * ſome of you thinke that Chriſt himſelfe did not merite his owne glory and exaltation. So obſtinately are you ſet againſt merits and meritorious workes. To the which purpoſe alſo you take away mans free-will, as having no hability to worke toward his owne ſalvation.

N. Teſt. 1580. Vt mori poſſet.

See Calvine in Epiſt. ad Philip.

FVLK. 26. Whether wee ſay, Chriſt was crowned for his ſuffering, or Chriſt was made inferiour to the Angells through his ſuffering, the ſenſe of either of both is good and godly, and may ſtand with the place, neither doeth the one of them exclude the other: although but one onely can bee the ſenſe of the place. And if this bee the place, by which you may gather, that ſome of us doe thinke, that Chriſt merited not his owne glory, it is not worth a ſtrawe. Wee hold that Chriſt for himſelfe needed not to merite, becauſe hee was the Lord of glory, but that hee merited for us, to bee exalted in our nature, for our ſalvation, it is ſo farre off that wee deny, that our whole comfort reſteth in his merites, and in his glory, which he hath deſerved for us, wee hope to bee glorifyed for ever. When you make your tranſition to the next Chapter, you ſay wee take away mans free-will, as having none ability to worke, by which it ſeemeth, that you doe not onely allow to man the freedome of his will, but alſo power to worke whatſoever hee will: ſo that hee ſhall not onely have free-will, but alſo a ſtrength by the ſame to worke towardes his owne ſalvation.

MARTIN.

CHAP. V.

Hereticall tranſlation againſt FREE-WILL.

AGainſt free-will your corruptions be theſe. Ioh. 1. 12. where it is ſaid, As many as received him, he gave them power to be made the ſonnes of God: ſome of your tranſlations ſay, hee gave them prerogative to bee the ſonnes of God. Beza dignity. Who proteſteth that whereas in other places often hee tranſlated this Greeke word, power and authority, here hee refuſed both, indeed againſt free-will, which hee ſaith the Sophiſts would proove out of this place, reprehending Eraſmus for following them in his tranſlation. But whereas the Greeke word is indifferent to ſignify dignity, or liberty, hee that will tranſlate either of theſe, reſtrayneth the ſenſe of the holy Ghoſt and determineth it to be his owne fancie. If you may tranſlate, dignity: may not wee as well tranſlate it liberty? Yes ſurely. For you know it ſignifyeth the one as well as the other both in prophane and divine writers. And you can well call to minde αὐτεξούσιος, and τὸ αὐτεξούσιον, whence they are derived, and that the Apoſtle calleth a mans liberty of his owne will, ἐξουσίαν περὶ τοῦ ἰδίου θελήματος. Now then if poteſtas in Latine, and power in Engliſh, bee words alſo indifferent to ſignify both dignity and liberty, tranſlate ſo in the name of God, and leave the text of the Scripture indifferent as wee doe: and for the ſenſe whether of the two it doeth here rather ſignifie, or whether it doeth not ſignifie both (as no doubt it doeth, and the Fathers ſo expound it) let that bee examined otherwiſe. It is a common fault with you and intolerable, by your tranſlation to abridge the ſenſe of the holy Ghoſt to one particular underſtanding, and to defeate the expoſition of ſo many Fathers, that expound it in another ſenſe and ſignification. As is plaine in this example alſo following.

No. Teſt. 1580.

Ut liceret filios Dei fieri.

1 Cor. 7. 37.

FVLKE.

SEeing you confeſſe that the Greeke word ſignifyeth not onely power, but alſo dignity, and that in this place it ſignifyeth both, it can bee no corruption, but the beſt and trueſt interpretation, to tranſlate ἐξουσίαν, dignity, for that includeth power, whereas power may bee ſevered from dignity. Where you would have us uſe a word, that is ambiguous, when the ſenſe is cleare by your owne confeſſion, you bewray your owne corrupt affection, which deſire to have the Scriptures ſo ambiguouſly or doubtfully tranſlated, that the ignorant might receive no benefit of certain underſtanding by them. When a word hath divers ſignifications, a wiſe tranſlator muſt weigh, which of them agreeth with the text in hand, and that to uſe: but not to ſeeke ambiguous wordes, that may bring the matter in doubt, when the meaning to him is certaine. As here you ſay there is no doubt but it ſignifyeth both, and yet you quarrell at our tranſlation, which comprehendeth both, and urge the word of power, from which dignity may bee ſevered, whereas from dignity, power or ability or licence cannot be divided.

MART. 2. The Apoſtle (1 Cor. 15. 10.) ſaith thus: I laboured more abundantly then all they; yet not I, but the grace of God with me. Which may have this ſenſe, not I, but the grace of God which is with mee, as S. Hierome ſometime expoundeth it: or this, not I, but the grace of God, which laboured with mee. And by this latter is moſt evidently ſignifyed, that the grace of God, and the Apoſtle, both laboured together, and not onely grace, as though the Apoſtle had done nothing, like unto a block, forced only; but that the grace of God did ſo concurre, as the principall agent, with all his labours, that his free-will wrought withall. Againſt which truth and moſt approved interpretation of this place, you tranſlate according to the former ſenſe onely, making it the very text, and ſo excluding all other ſenſes and commentaries, as your Maſters Calvin and Beza taught you, who ſhould not have taught you, if you were wiſe, to doe that which neither they nor you can juſtify. They reprehend firſt the vulgar Latine Interpreter, for neglecting the Greeke article, and ſecondly them that by occaſion thereof, would by this place prove free-will. By which their commentary, they doe plainely declare their intent and purpoſe in their tranſlation, to bee directly againſt free-will.

ἡ χάρις τοῦ θεοῦ ἡ σὺν

FVLK. 2. Saint Hierome favouring this tranſlation of ours, as he doeth in diverſe places, lib. 2. adverſus Iovin. Gratia Dei quæ in me eſt, & lib. 2. adverſus Pelag. & ad Principiam, Gratia Dei quæ mecum eſt, The grace of God which is in mee, or which is with mee. I marvell why you count it among hereticall corruptions, except you take Saint Hierome for an heretike. By the latter, you ſay it is ſignifyed, that the grace of God, and the Apoſtle, both laboured together, although it bee no proper ſpeech to ſay, the grace of God laboureth, yet that you would have, is expreſſed before, where Saint Paul ſaith, I have laboured more then they all, which none but a blocke would underſtand, that hee was forced like a block. The grace of God uſeth no violence, but frameth the will of man to obedience and ſervice of God. But that Saint Paul had of himſelfe no free-will to performe this labour, but that it was altogether of the grace of God, which gave him this will, he confeſſeth more plainely, then that it can be denyed, where he ſaith, Not I: whereby he meaneth, not that he was onely helped by the grace of God, and did it not alone; but that he did nothing by his owne ſtrength, but altogether by the grace of God, which made him willing, which of nature was unwilling to ſet forth the Goſpell, yea by froward zeale became a blaſphemer and a perſecutour thereof. Which grace gave him not onely a will to promote the Goſpel, but inſpired him alſo with divine knowledge, by revelation, without ſtudie or hearing of other men: which gave him alſo ſtrength to overcome ſo many difficulties, that no labour nor travell, nor perſecution, nor continuance of time, did make him weary, or faint in his labour. All this (I ſay) he doeth aſcribe wholly unto the grace of God. And this ſenſe doeth not make Paul a blocke, nor enforced by violence, but a willing, prompt, and painefull labourer. But if you meane that S. Paul had a free-will, and ſtrength of himſelfe, which onely was holpen by the grace of God, then is your ſenſe abominable Pelagianiſme, hereſie worthy to be trodden under feete by all Chriſtians, and of Calvine and Beza moſt juſtly reprehended, who are utter enemies to free-will, that derogateth any thing from the grace of Chriſt, without whom we can do nothing: which text always choked the Pelagians, and ſo doeth their halfe-faced brethren, the Papiſts.

Ioh. 15. v. 5.

MART. 3. But concerning the Greeke article omitted in tranſlation, if they were but Grammarians in both tongues, they might know that the Greeke article many times cannot be expreſſed in Latine, and that this is one felicity and prerogative of the Greeke phraſe, above the Latine, to ſpeake more briefely, commodiouſly, and ſignificantly by the article. What neede we goe to Terence, and Homer, as they are wont? Is not the Scripture full of ſuch ſpeeches? Iacobus Zebedæi, Iacobus Alphæi, Iudas Iacobi, Maria Cleophæ, and the like. Are not all theſe ſincerely tranſlated into Latine, though the Greeke article bee not expreſſed? Can you expreſſe the article, but you muſt adde more then the article, and ſo adde to the text, as you doe very boldly in ſuch ſpeeches throughout the new Teſtament, yea you doe it when there is no article in the Greeke, as Io. 5. 36. and 1 ep. Io. 2. 2. yea ſometime of an hereticall purpoſe, as Eph. 3. By whom wee have boldneſſe, and entrance with the confidence which is by the faith of him, or, in him, as it is in other your Bibles. You ſay, confidence which is by faith, as though there were no confidence by workes. You know the Greeke beareth not that tranſlation, unleſſe there were an article after confidence, which is not, but you adde it to the text heretically, as alſo Beza doeth the like, (Rom. 8. 2.) and your Geneva Engliſh Teſtaments after him, for the hereſie of imputative juſtice, as in his annotations hee plainely deduceth, ſaying confidently, I doubt not but a Greeke article muſt bee underſtood, and therefore (forſooth) put into the text alſo. Hee doeth the ſame in Saint Iames 2. verſe 20. ſtill debating the caſe in his annotations why hee doth ſo, and and when he hath concluded in his fancie, that this or that is the ſenſe, he putteth it ſo in the text, and tranſlateth accordingly. No marvell now if they reprehend the vulgar Latine Interpreter, for not tranſlating the Greeke article in the place which wee beganne to treat of, when they finde articles lacking in the Greeke text it ſelfe, and boldly adde them for their purpoſe in their tranſlation: whereas the vulgar Latine interpretation is in all theſe places ſo ſincere, that it neither addeth nor diminiſheth, nor goeth one jot from the Greeke.

FVLK. 3. Concerning the omiſſion of the Greeke article, which Calvine and Beza reprove in the old Tranſlatour, you make many wordes to no purpoſe: for they reprove him not for omitting it, where either it cannot, or it neede not bee expreſſed, but in this place, where both it may, and meete it is, that it ſhould bee expreſſed. But wee (you ſay) to expreſſe the article, doe adde more then is in the text: yet in trueth wee adde nothing, but that which is neceſſarily to be underſtood, as when wee ſay Iames the ſonne of Zebedee, where you had rather ſay Iames of Zebedee, as though you were ſo preciſe, that for neceſſary underſtanding, you would not adde a word to the text, and yet you doe very often, yea ſometimes where no neede is: as Act. 8 where the Latine is Curaverunt Stephanum, you tranſlate it, they tooke order for Stephens funerall. Doeth Curare ſignify to take order for a funerall? So likewiſe Luke 10. Pœniterent they had done penance. But to anſwer for our owne doings, Ioh. 5. verſ. 36. where Chriſt ſaith, I have a greater witneſſe then Iohns witneſſe, why may not the article τῆς bee referred rather to μαρτυρίαν, that is of neceſſity to bee underſtood, then to Ἰωάννου? In the other place, 1. Iohn. 2, verſe 2. the word ſinnes muſt needes be underſtood in the pronounc adjective ours. In the third text, where you accuſe the Tranſlatours of hereticall purpoſe, the ſenſe is all one, whether you adde the article or no. For when the Apoſtle ſaith, by Chriſt wee have boldneſſe, and entrance with confidence by faith, how can you underſtand confidence by workes? and whether there bee confidence by workes or no there can none be proved by this place. Where Beza underſtandeth an article, Rom 8. whom our Engliſh tranſlation doeth follow, it is onely to make that plaine, which otherwiſe is neceſſarily to bee underſtood. For there is no difference betweene theſe ſayings, The Law of the ſpirit of life in Chriſt Ieſus, and this, The Law of the ſpirit of life, which is in Chriſt Ieſus, hath delivered mee from the law of ſinne and death. The article or relative therefore declareth no more, but that the Law of the ſpirit of life is in Chriſt Ieſus, which delivereth us. For both the text ſaith, in Chriſt Ieſus, and it cannot bee in any other to deliver us: for hee ſaith not, The Law of the ſpirit of life in us, but in Chriſt Ieſus; and the next verſe following doeth manifeſtly confirme the ſame, as every man may ſee that will conſider it. Likewiſe Iames the ſecond, Wilt thou know, O thou vaine man, that faith without works is dead? If you ſay, the faith which is without good workes is dead, is not that the meaning of the Apoſtle? Where he addeth immediately that Abraham was juſtifyed by ſuch a faith, as was fruitfull of good workes. And when hee bringeth example of Devills faith, is it not manifeſt hee ſpeaketh of ſuch a faith, as is utterly voyde of all good workes? Where you ſay, that Beza putteth the article into the text, and tranſlateth it accordingly, you doe moſt ſhamefully belye him: for to the originall text hee addeth none of his owne collection, but in his tranſlation onely, where hee judgeth that according to the ſenſe of the place, it muſt of neceſſity bee underſtood: which if it bee a fault in articles, it muſt bee ſo in other wordes alſo, for like cauſe added. Then anſwer to your owne tranſlations, where beſide thoſe that I have noted before, which ſeeme to proceed of ſome Popiſh purpoſe, you have added to your Latine authenticall text: As in theſe examples, Math. 8. Quid nobis & tibi? What is betweene us? Cap. 9. Confide, have a good heart. Cap. 22. Male perdet, hee will bring to nought. Marke 2. Poſt dies, after ſome dayes. Accumberet, hee ſate at meate. Luke 17. Ab illo, more then hee. Ioh. 12. Diſcumbentibus, them that ſate at the table. Non quia de egenis pertinebat ad eum, not becauſe he cared for the poore. Act. 9. Ecce ego. Domine, Loe here I am Lord. Cap. 10. Guſtare, to take ſomewhat. Cap. 17. Colentibus, that ſerved God. Nobiliores eorum, quæ ſunt Theſſalonica, more noble then they, that are at Theſſalonica. Ro. 1. Vocatis ſanctis, called to bee Saints, &c.

MART. 4. But you will ſay in the place to the Corinthians, there is a Greeke article, and therefore there you doe well to expreſſe it. I anſwer, firſt: the article may then bee expreſſed in tranſlation, when there can be but one ſenſe of the ſame. Secondly, that not only it may but it muſt be expreſſed, when we cannot otherwiſe give the ſenſe of the place, as Mat. 1. 6 Ex ea quæ fuit Vriæ: where you ſee the vulgar Interpreter omitteth it not, but knoweth the force and ſignification thereof very well. Marry in the place of S. Paul, which wee now ſpeake of, where the ſenſe is doubtfull, and the Latine expreſſeth the Greeke ſufficiently otherwiſe, hee leaveth it alſo doubtfull and indifferent, not abridging it as you doe, ſaying, the grace of God which is with mee; nor as Calvine, Gratia quæ mihi aderat; nor as Illyricus, Gratia quæ mihi adeſt: which two latter are more abſurd then yours, becauſe they omit and neglect altogether the force of the prepoſition cum, which you expreſſe

ἡ χάρις ἡ σὺν ἐμοί.

expreſſe, ſaying, with mee. But becauſe you ſay, which is with me, you meane heretically, as they doe, to take away the Apoſtles cooperation and labouring together with the grace of God, by his free-will, which is by the article and the prepoſition moſt evidently ſignifyed.

ἡ σὺν ἐμοί.

FVLK. 4. You take upon you to preſcribe rules of tranſlation, as though you were Prince of the Critici or Areopagita. But all reaſonable men will confeſſe that the article is ſo often to bee expreſſed, as it may, and maketh any thing to the ſenſe and underſtanding of the place. But as for your rule, that it is not to be expreſſed in tranſlation, when there may be more ſenſes then one of the ſame, is ſo good a rule, that by the ſame reaſon, and by equity thereof, whenſoever any word commeth in the text, that may have more ſenſes then one, we muſt skip it over, and not tranſlate it at all, and ſo wee ſhall leave out five hundred words in the new Teſtament. A better rule I take it to be, in all ſuch caſes, to examine what is moſt agreeable to the common phraſe of the tongue, and the ſcope of the text in hand, according to which (I ſay) the verbe ſubſtantive is both more uſuall, and alſo more probable to be underſtood in this text, 1 Cor. 15: then the participle συγκοπιάσασα.

MART. 5. And here I appeale to all that have skill in Greeke ſpeeches and phraſes, whether the Apoſtles wordes in Greeke ſound not thus: I laboured more abundantly then all they: yet not I, but the grace of God (that laboured) with me. Vnderſtanding not the participle of Sum, but of the verbe going before, as in the like caſe when our Saviour ſaith, It is not you that ſpeake, but the holy Ghoſt that ſpeaketh in you. If hee had ſpoken ſhort thus, but the holy Ghoſt in you you perhaps would tranſlate as you doe here, the holy Ghoſt, WHICH IS IN YOU. But you ſee the verbe going before is rather repeated: Not you ſpeake, but the holy Ghoſt THAT SPEAKETH IN YOU. Even ſo, Not I laboured, but the grace of God labouring with me, or, WHICH LABOVRED WITH ME. So prayeth the wiſe man, Sap. 9. 10. Send wiſedome out of thy holy heavens, that ſhe may be with mee, and labour with mee, as your ſelves tranſlate, Bib. 1577.

FVLK. 5. And I likewiſe appeale not onely to all that have skill in Greeke ſpeeches and phraſes, but to all them, whoſe eares are accuſtomed to reaſonable ſpeeches, whether it bee like that the Apoſtle would underſtand that participle, whereof (perhaps) there is no verbe; for where ſhall wee reade συγκοπιῶ? Secondly, whether hee would underſtand the participle of another verbe adjective, then went before, for before hee ſaid ἐκοπίασα. Thirdly, whether he were ſo deſirous to ſet forth his owne cooperation with the grace of God, that he would expreſſe it with two prepoſitions, one in appoſition, the other in compoſition. Fourthly, whether he meant to attribute any thing to himſelfe, when as it were correcting that which hee ſaid of labouring, he ſaith, yet not I, but the grace of God. Fiftly, whether he purpoſed to chalenge any merite of the labour to himſelfe, or make his labour any thing ſeparate or ſeparable from the grace of God, when he ſaid before, by the grace of God I am that I am. Laſt of all, whether his words being reſolved, if this participle be added, they containe not a ridiculous tautology, or vaine repetition. I have laboured more then they all, yet not I, but the grace of God which laboured together with me hath laboured. To conclude in your example which you feigne: Becauſe you can find none to anſwer your phanſie; if the words were as you ſuppoſe, οὐχ ὑμεῖς ἐστε οἱ λαλοῦντες, ἀλλὰ τὸ πνεῦμα τὸ ἐν ὑμῖν, wee would and muſt, if wee did well, tranſlate it thus: It is not you that ſpeake, but the holy Ghoſt which is in you, and ſo underſtand, ſpeaketh. The ſaying of Philo, or whatſoever eloquent Iew that was, which gathered that booke of Wiſedome, is not of ſuch importance, that we need to ſeeke any interpretation thereof, although it is certaine, that by wiſedome, he meaneth not the Sonne of God, the wiſedome of the Father, but divine knowledge and underſtanding, which is a gift of his ſpirit, whereof he ſpeaketh by a rhetoricall Proſopopœia, or fiction of perſon.

MART. 6. And ſo the Apoſtle calleth himſelfe and his fellowe Preachers, Gods coadjutors, collaborers or ſuch as labour and worke with God, which alſo you falſly tranſlate, Gods labourers, to take away all cooperation: and in ſome of your Bibles moſt fooliſhly and peeviſhly, as though you had ſworne not to tranſlate the Greeke, We together are Gods labourers. As well might you tranſlate (Ro. 8. 17.) that we together are Chriſts heires, for that which the Apoſtle ſaith, coheires, or joynt heires with him; the phraſe and ſpeach (as you know) in Greeke being all one. So doeth Beza moſt falſly tranſlate, Vna vivificavit nos per Chriſtum, for that which is plaine in the Greeke, He hath quickned us together with Chriſt. Where the Engliſh Bezites leave alſo the Greeke, and follow our vulgar Latine tranſlation rather then Beza, who goeth ſo wide from the Greeke, that for ſhame they dare not follow him. Fye upon ſuch hypocriſy and pretenſed honour of God, that you will not ſpeake in the ſame tearmes that the Scripture ſpeaketh, but rather will teach the holy Ghoſt how to ſpeake, in not tranſlating as hee ſpeaketh. As though theſe phraſes of Scripture, men are Gods coadjutors, coworkers with his grace, rayſed with Chriſt, coheires with him, compartakers of glory with him, were all ſpoken to the diſhonour of God and Chriſt, and as though theſe theſe being the ſpeeches of the holy Ghoſt himſelfe, needed your reformation in your Engliſh tranſlations. Otherwiſe if you meane well, and would ſay as we ſay, that whatſoever good wee doe, wee doe it by Gods grace, and yet worke the ſame by our free-will together with Gods grace, as the mover, and helper, and director of our will; why doe you not tranſlate in the foreſaid place of S. Paul accordingly?

FVLK. 6. Saint Paul ſaith, 1 Corinth. 3. 9. that he and Apollo are Θεοῦ συνεργοί, joyned together in the worke and buſineſſe of God; hee ſaith not that they are helpers of God, for God needeth no helpe. A helper is of him that lacketh ſtrength, which is blaſphemous to ſay of God. Therefore even Faber Stapulenſis (as Beza telleth you) reproveth that tearme adjutores, which your vulgar Tranſlatour uſeth, and you your ſelfe in favour of your hereſy of free-will, doe not tranſlate, but fly to the Greeke word συνεργοί, and ſay Coadjutors, which if you would expreſſe in Engliſh, ſignifyeth fellow-helpers of God. The word Cooperarij, which Saint Auguſtine uſeth (as Beza alſo telleth you) may bee referred to the joynt labour of the Miniſters, in ſeverall offices of planting and watering, and although it bee referred to God, that hee as the Lord and Maſter, and they as the ſervants, altogether by his grace and ſtrength, doe worke together, the ſenſe is not evill, yet not proper for this place; becauſe the Apoſtle doeth not here ſet out the dignity of the Miniſters, but abaſeth their labour, and ſubmitteth all to God. For hee had to doe with them, that did attribute too much unto the Miniſters worke, with whom it was unſeaſonable to extoll their labours, and make them coadjutours or fellow-helpers of God. But contrarywiſe hee aſcribeth the fruite of all their labours to God, and to take away the Schiſmes that were among them, by depending of one Miniſter more then another, declareth that they all together are Gods labourers, Gods husbandmen, &c. In the other place, 2 Corinth. 6. verſ. 1. συνεργοῦντες, it is more proper to ſay, that the Apoſtles joyned their labours unto Chriſt offering his grace, that it ſhould not bee received in vaine. Where neverthleſſe the ſtrength of mans free-will is not avouched, but the grace of God, who worketh by his Miniſters, giving them ſtrength to labour, and fruite to their labours. Next followeth an open outcrye againſt Beza, for falſe tranſlation, and our Tranſlatours, for being aſhamed to follow him. If wee miſlike Bezaes tranſlation, are wee by and by aſhamed to follow him? and if his tranſlation bee falſe, as you affirme, and wee aſhamed to follow him in falſehood, doe wee deſerve to bee defyed as Hypocrites, becauſe wee preferre the trueth before the credite of our Maſter, as you call him? O how glad you are, when you have never ſo ſmall an occaſion to ſet abroade the ſayles of your rayling and reviling oration. But let us ſee whether Beza deſerve ſo much blame, as you charge him withall. Beza having tranſlated (as hee thought) moſt neere to the Apoſtles meaning, Epheſ. 2. verſ. 5. Convivificavit, &c. in his annotation upon the place, thus writeth: The vulgar and Eraſmus tranſlate, hee hath quickened us together with Chriſt, which ſenſe I doe in no wiſe reprehend. But yet nothing ſhall bee detracted from the ſelfe ſame matter, and perhaps it may bee ſaid more aptly, that the prepoſition σὺν, in this place, is uſed rather to declare the uniting together of the Gentiles, and Iewes in one Chriſt: after which manner, the word συνοικοδομεῖσθε, which ſignifyeth to bee builded together, is afterward uſed, verſe 22. This is Bezaes judgement, not contrary to the common tranſlation, and ours, but agreeing in the ſenſe thereof, and comprehending a further matter, whereof the Apoſtle in that Chapter ſpeaketh. But our Tranſlatours thought beſt to follow the plaine and common underſtanding, not for ſhame of Beza, or his tranſlation, but for deſire of ſincerity and plaineneſſe. Contrariwiſe, where your vulgar Tranſlatour is ſometimes ſo barbarous, that his phraſe hath no ſenſe according to the text, it may well bee thought you were aſhamed to follow him, leaſt you ſhould have beene ridiculous to all men. As you tranſlate Timoratus, religious, oftentimes: Non quia de egenis pertinebat ad eum, which in Engliſh is, not becauſe of the poore it pertayned to him, but you have tranſlated, not becauſe hee cared for the poore. Vna Sabbathi, the firſt of the Sabbath. Sabbathi habens iter, having the journey of a Sabbath, you tranſlate, diſtant a Sabbaths journey. Yea you are bold to correct your text, and for Italia, to ſay Attalia. Ad abluenda crimina, which is, to waſh away the crimes, you ſay, to cleere himſelfe of the crime. Cum multa ambitione which is, with much ambition, you ſay, with great pompe. Exhortentur, which is a deponent, you tranſlate, may bee exhorted, Ad reverentiam vobis, which is, for reverence to you, you ſay, to your ſhame: and ſuch like. I doe not blame you that you are aſhamed to follow your vulgar Latine text in theſe phraſes, but that you are not aſhamed to allow that tranſlation, as the onely authenticall text, which no man for ſhame will follow in many places. To conclude, our meaning for free-will is, that wee confeſſe it at all times to bee free from conſtraint, but never free to imbrace that which is good indeede, but onely when it is reformed by the grace of God: who alſo in all good things that wee take in hand, hand, doeth not onely make us willing, but alſo giveth all the ſtrength wee have to performe them. If this bee your meaning (as I am afrayd it is not) by your tearmes of working and helping, and directing, (as though it could goe alone with a little helpe and direction) we joyne with you: but if you thinke you can doe any thing that good is, without the grace of God, like to Pelagius Caleſtius, and other like Heretikes of the Devills blacke guard, we leave you.

MART. 7. You ſay moreover in ſome of your Bibles, thus: So lyeth it not then in a mans will or running, but in the mercy of God. Whatſoever you meane, you know this tranſlation is very diſſolute, and wide from the Apoſtles wordes, and not true in ſenſe; for ſalvation is in willing and running: according to that famous ſaying of Saint Auguſtine, He that made thee without thee will not juſtify thee without thee; that is, againſt thy will, or, unleſſe thou be willing, and the Apoſtle ſaith, No man is crowned, unleſſe he fight lawfully. And againe, So runne THAT YOU MAY obtaine. And againe, The doers of the Law ſhall be juſtifyed. And our Saviour, If thou wilt enter into life, keepe the Commandements. We ſee then, that it is in willing, and running, and doing: but to will, or runne, or doe, are not of man, but of Gods mercy, and ſo the Apoſtle ſpeaketh, It is not of the willer, nor runner, but of God that hath mercy. And it is much to be marvelled, why you ſaid not, It lyeth not in the willer, nor in the runner: which is neere to the Apoſtles wordes, but ſo farre off, in a mans will and running.

FVLK. 7. The tranſlation you reprehend, I graunt is not proper for the wordes, and therefore is reformed in the latter tranſlations, yet in ſenſe it is all one; for ſalvation lyeth not in the will, or running of man, but in the mercy of God: even as Saint Iohn ſaith, the children of God are not made of the will of the fleſh, nor of the will of man, but they are borne of God. But thus you reaſon againſt it. Wee are not ſaved, except wee will, and runne, ergo, ſalvation lyeth in willing and running. I deny your argument, which is as good as this; wee are not ſaved from ſinne, except wee have committed ſinne, ergo, ſalvation from ſinne, lyeth in committing ſinne. The famous place of Auguſtine, is a famous corruption of Papiſts, to eſtabliſh the ſtrength of free-will, cleane contrary to Saint Auguſtines minde, where a poynt interrogative is changed into a periode: for in auncient written Coppies, it is read with interrogation. Qui ergo fecit te ſine te, non te juſtificat ſine te? Hee therefore that made thee without thee, doeth he not juſtify thee without thee? And the whole diſcourſe of the Father, both before and after, requireth that reading. For thus hee writeth, Si hominem te fecit Deus, & juſtum tu te facis, melius aliquid facis, quam fecit Deus, ſed ſine te fecit Deus. Non enim adhibuiſti aliquem conſenſum, ut te faceret Deus. Quo modo conſentiebas qui non eras? Qui ergo fecit te ſine te, non te juſtificat ſine te? Ergo fecit neſcientem, juſtificat volentem, tamen ipſe juſtificat, ne ſit juſtitia tua. If God have made thee a man, and thou makeſt thy ſelfe a juſt man, thou makeſt ſome better thing then God hath made: but God made thee without thee, for thou gaveſt no conſent, that God ſhould make thee: how diddeſt thou conſent, which waſt not? Hee therefore that made thee without thee, doeth hee not juſtify thee without thee? Therefore he hath made thee not knowing, but he juſtifyeth thee being willing, yet it is he, that doeth juſtify thee, that it ſhould not be thy juſtice.

The meaning of Saint Auguſtine is, that we have no more free-will to bee juſtifyed, before wee be prevented by the grace of God, then we had will to be created. For it is Gods grace, that maketh us willing to be juſtifyed, and ſaved, not the ſtrength of mans free-will, as he proveth at large throughout the whole Homily. Now to the texts of Scripture, which you cite, I anſwere, there is not one, that proveth any ſtrength or ſway of mans free-will, toward the true goodneſſe, before, of an ungodly man, and enemy of God, he be reconciled by the grace and mercy of God, and made an obedient childe in ſome part, willing to doo the will of his father. Firſt, thoſe texts of fighting, and running, prove, that fighting and running is neceſſary for them, that are exhorted thereto, but not that fighting or running are in the free-will of man, or that ſalvation lyeth in them. Eating and drinking are neceſſary for the life of man, yet the life of man lyeth not in eating and drinking. Where the Apoſtle ſaith, the doers of the Law ſhall bee juſtifyed, hee meaneth them that fulfill the Law, and doeth our Saviour Chriſt, anſwering to the queſtion of him that asked, what he ſhould doe to obtaine, declare, that there is no way to enter into life, by doing, but onely by doing of Gods Commaundements. For the man that doeth them ſhall live by them. But if hee were asked which is the way to eternall life, as hee was by Thomas, hee will anſwere, I am the way, the trueth, and the life. Thoſe texts therefore declare not, how a man, that is a tranſgreſſour of the Law, may bee ſaved, but that to obtaine ſalvation by works, it is neceſſary for a man to keepe the whole Law and Commaundements of God, or elſe he is accurſed.

Ioh. 14.

MART. 8. Againe, touching continencie and the chaſt ſingle life, you tranſlate thus: All men cannot ὐ πάντες χωreceive this ſaying. Math. 19. v. 11. Now you wote well, that our Saviour ſaith not, All men cannot, but, all men doe not receive it: and that therefore; (as Saint Auguſtine ſaith) becauſe all will not. But when our Saviour, afterward ſaith, He that CAN receive it, let him receive it: hee addeth another Greeke word to expreſſe that ſenſe, whereas by your fond tranſlation he might have ſaid, ὁ χωρῶν χωρείτω. And againe by your tranſlation, you ſhould tranſlate theſe his latter words thus: He that can or is able to receive it, let him be able to receive it. For ſo you tranſlate χωρεῖν before, as though it were all one with δύνασθαι χωρεῖν. Doe you not ſee your folly, and falſhood, and boldneſſe, to make the Reader beleeve that our Saviour ſhould ſay, Every man cannot live chaſt, it is impoſſible for them, and therefore no man ſhould vow chaſtity, becauſe he knoweth not whether he can live ſo or no?

ὁ δυνάμενος χωρεῖν, χωρείτω.

FVLK. 8. The Greeke word χωρεῖν doeth ſignify to bee able to hold, or containe, and ſo it is uſed Mark. 2. ὥστε μηκέτι χωρεῖν μηδὲ τὰ πρὸς τὴν θύραν. Which you tranſlate, ſo that there was no place, no not at the doore. Doe you not meane that the place about the doore, was not able to hold that multitude? Your vulgar Latine is, Ita ut non caperet neque ad januam, in barbarous wordes, but in ſenſe as I have ſaid before. So Iohn 2. the ſixe pots, when they were empty are ſaid χωροῦσαι, able to receive every one of them two or three meaſures. Likewiſe Iohn 22. where the word is χωρῆσαι, you your ſelves tranſlate not able to contayne. Seeing the word therefore ſignifyeth not onely to receive, but alſo to bee able to receive, it is rightly tranſlated, Math. 19. and according to the meaning of our Saviour Chriſt, all men cannot receive this ſaying, but they to whom it is given, which hee doeth after evidently confirme, when hee addeth the participle ὁ δυνάμενος, hee that is able to receive it, let him receive it. Which were vainely ſaid, if all men were able that would, and if it were given to all that would: for then hee ſhould ſay, all men doe not receive this ſaying; but they that will, let them receive it. Where you call Auguſtine to witneſſe of your fooliſh gloſe, you doe him ſhamefull injury, for hee ſaith not all men doe not, becauſe all will not: but theſe are his wordes in the place by you quoted: Non omnes capiunt verbum hoc, ſed quibus datum eſt: quibus enim non eſt datum, aut nolunt, aut non implent quod volunt, quibus autem datum eſt, ſic volunt ut impleant quod volunt. All men receive not this word, but they to whom it is given, for they to whom it is not given, either they will not, or elſe they fulfill not that which they will: but they to whom it is given, doe ſo will, that they fulfill that which they will. Auguſtine is plaine to the contrary, that it is not in every man that will, to bee continent, but it is the ſpeciall gift of God, that any both will, and bee able to performe it, for which hee citeth alſo, the ſaying of the Wiſe man, Sapient. 8. which with you is Canonicall Scripture. When I knew that otherwiſe I could not bee continent, except God ſhould give it, and this ſame was wiſedome to know whoſe gift it is, I went unto the Lord and prayed to him. Theſe things conſidered, our tranſlation is juſtifyed, both according to the word, which ſignifyeth ſometime to bee able to receive: and according to the ſenſe, which here muſt needes require, that it ſhould bee ſo tranſlated. Wherefore it is unpoſſible for any man to live chaſt, except hee have the gift of God, whereof unleſſe a man bee certaine, hee doeth fooliſhly, and preſumptuouſly to vow that, which hee knoweth not, whether hee ſhall bee able to performe.

MART. 9. Againe in ſome of your Bibles (Gen. 4. v. 7.) where God ſaith plainely, that Caine ſhould receive according as hee did well or evill, becauſe ſinne was ſubject unto him, and he had the rule and dominion thereof, evidently declaring his free-will: you tranſlate it thus, If thou doeſt well, ſhalt thou not bee accepted? and if thou doeſt not well, ſinne lyeth at the doore: and alſo unto thee HIS deſire ſhall bee ſubject, and thou ſhalt rule over HIM. By which relatives falſly put in the maſculine gender, you exclude the true antecedent ſinne, and referre them to Abel, Caines brother, as though God had ſaid, not that ſinne ſhould bee in his dominion or ſubject unto him, but his brother Abel. But that this is moſt falſe and abſurd, wee prove many wayes. Firſt, Saint Auguſtine ſaith directly the contrary: Tu dominaberis illius: nunquid Fratris? abſit, cujus igitur niſi peccati? Thou ſhalt rule (ſaith hee) over what? over thy brother? Not ſo, over what then but ſinne? Saint Hierome alſo explicateth this place thus: Becauſe thou haſt free-will, I warne thee that ſinne have not dominion over thee, but thou over ſinne. Moreover, the text it ſelfe, if nothing elſe, is ſufficient to convince this abſurdity. For where this word, ſinne, goeth immediately before in the ſame ſentence, and not one word of Abel his brother in the ſpeech of God to Caine, how is it poſſible, or what coherence can there bee in ſaying as you tranſlate, Sinne lyeth at the doore, and thou ſhalt have dominion over him, that is, thy brother? But if wee ſay thus, Sinne lyeth at the doore, and thou ſhalt have dominion thereof: it hath this direct and plaine ſenſe, If thou doeſt ill, ſinne lyeth at the doore ready to condemne thee, becauſe it is in thee to over-rule it.

FVLK. 9. The relatives bee the maſculine gender in the Hebrew tongue, and therefore referred to Abel, and not to ſinne, which is of the fœminine gender. Againe, ſinne hath no appetite to Caine, but rather Caine to it, therefore even as it was ſaid to Eve, thy appetite ſhall bee to thy husband, ſo it is ſaid of Abel, his appetite ſhall bee to thee. Saint Auguſtine followeth the corrupt tranſlation of the Septuaginta, which for appetite reade converſion, and therefore there is the leſſe account to bee made of his authority, being alſo ignorant in the Hebrew tongue, and not regarding the Greeke relative to bee alſo of the maſculine gender. Hierome alſo in that place, interpreteth not appetite, but ſociety and phantaſie, that chataoth is the maſculine gender, and not the fœminine. Whereas it is never read but in the fœminine gender, out of this place of controverſy. But the text it ſelfe (you ſay) is ſufficient, to convince this abſurditie, becauſe in this ſpeech of God to Cain, there is no word of Abel. It is ſomewhat that you ſay, if this that Moſes reporteth were all that God ſayd to Cain, but ſeeing it is certaine, that God at large diſcourſed with him of the cauſe of his envy againſt his brother, wee may eaſily underſtand in this ſpeech, two arguments to reprove Caines envy, the one of the perſon of God, the other of the perſon of Abel. For God doeth reprove his envy by his owne juſtice, and by Abels innocencie. Which latter argument your falſe tranſlation doeth utterly ſuppreſſe. But that a Relative is referred to an Antecedent, which in the ſame verſe is not expreſſed, it is no ſtrange thing to them that reade the Scripture. Examples I will give you, Iob. 25. verſ. 6. 11. and 12. and Chap. 27. verſ. 9. and 10. yea it is very uſuall, when the Antecedent may bee eaſily underſtood, as here, both by the gender, and alſo by manner of ſpeech, which being the ſame that was ſpoken of Eves infirmitie and ſubjection to her husband, muſt needes here have the ſame ſenſe of Abel towards Caine his elder brother.

MART. 10. Now if againſt the coherence of the text, and expoſition of the holy Doctours, and of the whole Church of God, you pretend the Hebrew Grammar forſooth, as not bearing ſuch conſtruction: not to trouble the common Reader that cannot judge of theſe things, and yet fully to ſatisfy every man even of common underſtanding, wee requeſt here the Adverſaries themſelves to tell us truely according to their knowledge and skill, whether the Hebrew conſtruction or poynt of Grammar bee not all one in theſe wordes. Sinne LYETH at the doore? and in theſe, the deſire THEREOF ſhall bee ſubject to thee, and thou ſhalt rule ouer IT. If they ſay (as they muſt needes) that the Hebrew conſtruction or Syntaxis is all one, then will it follow that the Hebrew beareth the one as well as the other: and therefore when the ſelfe ſame tranſlation of theirs maketh no ſcruple of Grammar in the former, but tranſlate as wee doe, Sinne lyeth at the doore: a blinde man may ſee that in the latter wordes alſo, the Hebrew is but a fooliſh pretence, and that the true cauſe of tranſlating them otherwiſe, proceedeth of an hereticall humour, to obſcure and deface this ſo plaine and evident Scripture for mans free-will.

FVLK. 10. I have ſhewed before, the cauſe of changing the gender in the word robets to bee, for that by ſinne is meant here the puniſhment of ſinne. Sanctes Pagninus taketh the word ſinne, for an oblation for ſinne, And for the puniſhment of ſinne, it is taken, Zach. 14. 19. The Septuaginta alſo doe plainely referre theſe Relatives unto Abel, and therefore they are in the maſculine gender, αὐτοῦ, the converſion of him pertaineth to thee, and thou ſhalt rule over him.

MART. 11. And as for the Hebrew Grammar in this poynt, were it not for troubling the Reader wee could tell them that the word, ſinne, in Hebrew is not here of the fœminine gender, (as they ſuppoſe) but of the maſculine, ſo ſaith Saint Hierome expreſſely upon this place, who had as much knowledge in the Hebrew tongue, as all theſe new Doctours. Aben Ezra alſo the great Rabbine, in his Hebrew commentaries upon this text ſaith, it is a meere forgerie and fiction, to referre the maſculine relative otherwiſe then to the word, ſinne: which, though elſewhere it bee the fœminine gender, yet here it is a maſculine, according to that rule of the Grammarians, that the doubtfull gender muſt be diſcerned by the verbe, adjective, pronoune, or participle, joyned with the ſame: as the ſaid Hebrew Doctor doeth in the word Paradiſe, Gen. 2. which there by the pronounes hee pronounceth to bee a fœminine, though elſewhere a maſculine. Laſtly, if the word ſinne, were here and always only a fœminine, though never a maſculine: yet they have little skill in the Hebrew tongue, that thinke it ſtrange to match maſculins and fœminines together in very good and grammaticall conſtruction. Whereof they may ſee a whole Chapter in Sanctes Pagninus with this title Fœminea maſculeis juncta, that is, Fœminines joyned with maſculines.

FVLK. 11. Not onely the Hebrew Grammar, but the ſame phraſe uſed before, maketh plainely for our tranſlation. That Saint Hierome ſayth, the Hebrew is of the maſculine gender, as great an Hebrician as hee was, hee may not carry the matter away with his authority, except hee bring an inſtance, where it is of the maſculine gender. The Iewiſh Rabbines patrones of free-will, as ignorant of the grace of God, erre in this place, as they doe in a thouſand more, and are forced to invent ſtrange applications of the word, appetite, to make their ſenſe probable. How the gender of Hebrew wordes may bee ſound out, we are not now to learne, which becauſe you have but lately learned, you thinke all men ignorant thereof, but your ſelfe. By the Chapter of Pagninus, where he ſheweth that feminines are joyned to maſculines, you might learne that chataoth is the feminine gender, although it be joyned with a participle of the maſculine gender. Who alſo might have taught you, the difference of nounes ending in he, precedente cametz, to be this, that feminines have the accent in the laſt ſyllable, maſculines in the laſt ſave one, and therefore chataoth in this place, having the accent in the laſt ſyllable, notwithſtanding the participle, which is maſculine, muſt needs be of the feminine gender.

MART. 12. Now for the laſt refuge, if they will ſay all this needed not, becauſe in other their Bibles, it is as wee would have it: we tell them, they muſt juſtifie and make good all their tranſlations, becauſe the people readeth all, and is abuſed by all, and all come foorth with priviledge, printed by the Queenes printer, &c. If they will not, let them confeſſe the faults, and call them in, and tell us which tranſlation or tranſlations they will ſtand unto. In the meane time they muſt be content to heare of all indifferently, as there ſhall bee cauſe and occaſion to touch them.

FULK. 12. Wee tell you that we may not juſtify any fault committed in our tranſlations, but wee have reformed them (if any were eſpyed) in the latter. Neverthelesse thoſe faults are not ſo great, that wee neede call in all the Bibles in which is any fault, it is ſufficient that wee admoniſh the Reader in our latter editions of ſuch faults as are eſcaped in the former: eſpecially when the faults are ſuch, about which men are not agreed, as in this place, you ſhould rather commend our equity, that ſuffer ſuch tranſlations to bee in the peoples handes, in which is ſome colour of mayntaining your errours againſt us. But if you bee ſo rigorous, that a booke of Scripture may not bee read, in which there is any fault, I charge you call in your tranſlation of the new Teſtament, for therein are ſhamefull faults, and ſuch as you cannot defend or excuſe, except it bee by the fault of the Printer, whereof yet you have not admoniſhed the Reader. I will give you a taſt of ſome, and let all men judge whether they bee not intolerable faults. For they are no leſſe then detracting and taking away from the word of God. As 1 Corin. 14. verſ. 38. where both the Greeke and the Latine is, If they will learne. Your tranſlation is: If they will learne any thing. Likewiſe Act. 5. verſ. 4. where both the Greeke and Latine is: Feſtus anſwered that Paul is kept at Cæſarea: you tranſlate. Feſtus anſwered that Paul is in Cæſarea: leaving out the word (kept) as before you left out the word (will) or (deſire) which altereth the ſenſe very much. But in a place of greater moment, and in a matter of ſome controverſy, of Gods particular preordination, and fore-appoyntment, you leave out a whole clauſe Act. 10. verſ. 41. For where it is both in the Greeke and in the Latine, that God made the reſurrection of his Sonne manifeſt: not to all the people, but to the witneſſes choſen before of God, to us which did eate and drinke with him, &c. Your Engliſh tranſlation hath no more but thus: Not to all the people, but to us, who did eate and drinke with him, &c. Leaving cleane out that which is in your Latine text, Teſtibus præordinatis à Deo. Alſo in the Epiſtle to the Hebrewes Chap. 7. verſ. 28. where both the Greeke and your vulgar Latine hath. The Law appoynteth Prieſts, men that have infirmity, your tranſlation is, The Law appoynteth Prieſts, them that have infirmitie, leaving out Homines, a worde very materiall in this place, to obſerve the oppoſition betweene the Prieſthood of men and the Prieſthood of the Sonne of God. Theſe faults in the new Teſtament being ſome of them which I by no diligent reading have obſerved, now you be admoniſhed of them, wee ſhall ſee whether you will call in your tranſlation, or commaund your diſciples to burne their bookes: If you will not, I pray you bee good Maſters to us, and let our Bibles goe abroad ſtill, for any faults wee have our ſelves amended, and admoniſhed all diligent Readers thereof by our latter tranſlations. And becauſe you cracke ſo much of the expoſition of the Doctours and of the whole Church of God againſt us: I muſt let the Reader underſtand that the whole Greeke Church which for the moſt part knew none other text but the Septuaginta, muſt needes expound the place of Abel as wee doe, becauſe the Greeke text is manifeſtly in the maſculine gender. And ſo doeth Chryſoſtome in Geneſ. Hom. 18. expound the place in theſe wordes.

Ne putes inquit licet tuum averſatus ſim ſacrificium ob pravam mentem, fratriſque oblationem acceptam habuerim ob ſanam intentionem, quod ideo primatu te deſtituam, & primogenituræ dignitatem à te auferam. Nam licet honore ego illum proſecutus fuerim, acceptaq́; fuerint illius dona, &c. Thinke not (ſaith hee) that although I have refuſed thy Sacrifice, for thy naughty minde, and have received thy brothers oblation, for his good and ſound meaning, that therefore I will deprive thee of the primacie, and take away from thee, the dignitie of the birth-right. For although I have vouchſafed him of honour, and that his gifts have beene received, yet unto thee belongeth his converſion, and thou ſhalt rule over him. And this I permitte after thy ſinne, that thou mayſt enjoy the priviledges of thy birth-right, and I commaund him to bee under thy power and dominion. You were beſt now to rayle upon Chryſoſtome, and charge him with hereſie, and ſchiſmaticall expoſition, contrary to the holy Doctours, and the whole Church of God, againſt free-will of man. Which becauſe it is your quarrell, you have Saint Ambroſe alſo your enemy De Caine & Abel, lib. 2. cap. 7. who, although as hee read it in Latine, did thinke it muſt bee referred to him, and not to his brother, yet hee expoundeth it not of the ſtrength of free-will, but chargeth Caine to bee authour of his owne errour. Culpa ipſius ad te converſio eſt: The converſion of the fault it ſelfe is unto thee. For his brother is not added to him, but errour is aſcribed, whereof hee himſelfe is authour to himſelfe. The crime (ſaith hee) will returne upon thee, which beganne of thee. Thou haſt not whereby to accuſe neceſſity more then thine owne minde. The wickedneſſe is retorted back upon thee, thou art Prince of it. Hee ſayth well, thou art Prince of it, for impiety is the mother of ſinnes, &c. You ſee therefore, that if you could obtaine that theſe relatives were referred to him, yet your free-will were not by and by to bee builded upon the place, and that all bee not Heretikes, which draw that text to another expoſition, then ſtandeth with your good liking.

MART. 13. Againe, they tranſlate in ſome of their Bibles againſt free-will, thus: Chriſt when we were yet OF NO STRENGTH, dyed for the ungodly, Rom. 5. v. 6. The Apoſtles word doeth not ſignifie that wee had no ſtrength, but that we were weake, feeble, infirme. Man was wounded in free-will, by the ſinne of Adam (as hee that in the Goſpell went downe from Hieruſalem to Ierico, which is a parable of this thing) he was not ſlaine altogether. But I ſtand not here, or in any place, to diſpute the controverſy, that is done elſewhere. Thus onely I ſay, becauſe * they falſly hold, that free-will was altogether loſt by Adams ſinne, therefore they tranſlate accordingly, When wee had no ſtrength. But the Greeke word is well knowne, both in prophane Authours, and Eccleſiaſticall, and ſpecially in the new Teſtament it ſelfe, throughout, to ſignify nothing elſe, but weake, feeble, ſicke, infirme. Looke mee through the new Teſtament, whereſoever infirmity, feebleneſſe, languiſhing, and the like are ſpoken of, there is found this Greeke word to expreſſe it. What Grecian knoweth not (be he but ſimply acquainted with phraſes, and nature of wordes) what ἀσθενεῖν, and ἀσθενῶς ἔχειν, doe ſignify? When the Apoſtle ſaith, Quis infirmatur, & ego non uror? Who is weake and infirme, and I am not much grieved? ſhall wee tranſlate, Who is of no ſtrength, &c. Or let them give us an inſtance, where it is certaine that this word muſt needes ſignify, of no ſtrength. Will they pretend the etymology of the word? a ridiculous and abſurd evaſion. Wee aske them of ῥώμη, a word of the very ſame ſignification, which being compounded in like manner as the other, what doeth it ſignify? any thing elſe but infirmity and feebleneſſe? Yea it is ſo farre from ſignifying, no ſtrength, that the greateſt Grecians ſay, it is not ſpoken properly of him that for weakeneſſe keepeth his bed, which is νοσεῖν, but of him, that is ill diſpoſed, and diſtempered in body. Yet the etymologie is all one with that word which theſe men will have to ſignify him that hath no ſtrength. And if they will needes urge the etymologie, wee tell them, that σθένος and ῥώμη, ſignifie robur, that is, great ſtrength, ſuch as is in the ſtrongeſt and ſtouteſt champions, and ſo the etymology may take place, to ſignify a man of no great ſtrength, not, of no ſtrength. But M. Whitaker putteth us in good hope, they will not ſtand upon etymologies.

FULK. 13. This cavill is fully anſwered, Chap. 1. Sect. 26. therefore I will not ſpend many words here about it. The word ἀσθενὴς we know ſignifyeth weake, that is, of ſmal ſtrength, and ſometimes ſo weake, that there is no ſtrength: as Galat. 4. where Saint Paul calleth the ceremonies of Moſes Law, now expired, the weake and beggarly elements, that is, voyde of all ſtrength and riches. Likewiſe the Apoſtle to the Hebrewes, Chap. 7. ſaith, the commandement of the Aaronicall Prieſthood is aboliſhed, διὰ τὸ ἀσθενὲς, becauſe it was weake and unprofitable without Chriſt: as unprofitable is voyde of profit, ſo is weake voyde of ſtrength. Saint Paul, 1 Cor. 15. ſaith, our dead body is ſowed in weakeneſſe: Is there any ſtrength of a dead body? Moreover, Rom, 8. that which was unpoſſible by the Law, ἐν ᾧ ἠσθένει, by meanes it was weake, is not that voyde of ſtrength to ſave us, which hath no poſſibility to doe any thing? Theſe inſtances may ſerve to proove, that ἀσθενὴς may ſignify that which is ſo weake, that it hath no ſtrength. Upon the etymology alone wee ſtand not. But where you ſay, that man was wounded in free-will, by the ſinne of Adam, not ſlayne altogether, (grounding your aſſertion upon a fond and falſe allegory, of him that fell among theeves, which is no parable of a man in this caſe, but of a man in neceſſity to bee helped by right of neighbourhood) I pray you, how came man to bee dead altogether in ſinnes? Eph. 2. Col. 2. and in many other places of the Scripture. Beſide is there any freedome of will to godlineſſe, remaining in them that are altogether dead in ſinne? But we are not now to handle controverſies, but tranſlations, as you doe well admoniſh us.

When

MART. 14. *When they have bereaved and ſpoyled a man of his free-will, and left him without all ſtrength, they goe ſo farre in this poynt, that * they ſay, the regenerate themſelves have not free-will and ability, no not by and with the grace of God, to keepe the Commandements. To this purpoſe they tranſlate (1 Iohn 5.3.) thus:* His Commandements are not grievous, rather then thus, His Commandements are not heavy; for in ſaying, they are not heavy, it would follow, they might be kept and obſerved: but in ſaying, they are not grievous, that may be true, were they never ſo heavy, or impoſſible, through patience. As when a man cannot doe as hee would; yet it grieveth him not, being patient and wiſe, becauſe hee is content to doe as hee can, and is able. Therefore doe they chuſe to tranſlate, that the commandements are not grievous, where the Apoſtle ſaith rather, they are not heavy, much more agreeably to our Saviours wordes, My burden is light; and to the words of God by Moſes, Deut. 30. This commandement which I command thee this day, is not above thee, (that is, beyond thy reach) but the word is very neere thee, in thy mouth, and in thy heart, that thou mayſt doe it: and to the common ſignification of the Greeke word, which is, heavy. Beza would ſay ſomewhat in his Commentary, how the Commandements are heavy or light, but his concluſion is againſt free-will, and that there can bee no perfection in this life, inveighing againſt them that would prove it out of this place: which is as much to ſay, (but he is aſhamed to ſpeake plainely) that wee cannot keepe the Commandements; which the holy Doctours have long ſince condemned and abhorred, as moſt abſurd, that God ſhould command that, under paine of damnation, which is impoſſible to bee done.

FVLK. 14. Seeing our Engliſh word grievous commeth of the Latine word grave, which is not onely weighty, but alſo troubleſome, it better anſwereth both the Greeke and the Latine, then heavy, which is properly that which is of great weight, and the ſame word being both in Greeke and Latine, 2 Corin. 10. you your ſelves tranſlate ſore: his Epiſtles are ſore and vehement: but in effect there is no great difference. Wee acknowledge that his Commandements are not heavy to him that is borne of God, which overcommeth the world by faith; otherwiſe the yoake of the Law, as the Apoſtle confeſſeth, is ſuch a burden, as neither wee nor our Fathers were able to beare, but beleeve to bee ſaved by the grace of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, who having taken away the curſe of the Law, and ſatisfyed for our tranſgreſſions of the Law, hath alſo given us grace to love the Law and Commaundements of God, and in ſome weake meaſure to obſerve them. So that the curſe being taken away, our tranſgreſſions anſwered in Chriſt, and our hearts framed by his grace, to love his Commandements, and ſome ſtrength given us to keepe them, they are not heavy, they are not burdenous, or grievous. That which God ſpeaketh, Deut. 30. is of the knowledge of the Law, which was plainely revealed, and not of the ſtrength that men have to keepe it, and therefore is by the Apoſtle referred unto faith, for the obſervation thereof, Rom. 10. for by faith in Chriſt, which hath fulfilled the Law for us, wee are accounted to have fulfilled it in him. Beza ſpeaketh it Plainely enough, if you had grace to underſtand him, and therefore is nothing aſhamed to ſay; that wee cannot keepe the Commandements of God not onely without the Grace of God, but neither having the grace of God in ſuch meaſure, as God giveth it to no man but that hee ſinneth. Otherwiſe, what grace God is able to give, wee doubt not; but what hee doeth, and will give to any man in this life wee ſpeake. That God ſhould command under paine of damnation, that which is impoſſible to bee done, is no abſurdity, ſeeing for them, whom God will have to be ſaved, he provided another way of their ſalvation, then by keeping the Law, namely the redemption of Chriſt. As for the reprobate voyd of Gods grace, ſay you (if you dare) that they are able to keepe the Law without grace, or without grace have ſo much as any will to deſire to have grace.

MART. 15. Thus having taken away free-will to doe good, and poſſibility to keepe the Commandements, and all merit or value and efficacy of good workes, their next concluſion is, that wee have no true juſtice or righteouſneſſe in us, but an imputative juſtice, that is, Chriſts juſtice imputed to us, be wee never ſo foule and filthy in our ſoules, ſo that we beleeve onely, and by faith apprehend Chriſts juſtice. For this purpoſe, they corrupt the Scriptures in their Engliſh Bibles, thus.

FVLK. 15. The juſtice whereby wee are accounted juſt in the ſight of God, is not inherent in us, but in Chriſt, which is the Lord our righteouſneſſe, Ier. 23. Notwithſtanding it is the onely true juſtice, and wee are truely juſt by it. And yet wee are not voyd of the ſpirit of ſanctification, which is a fruit and conſequent of juſtification, by which wee have grace to withſtand ſinne, and to worke righteouſneſſe, not whereby we ſhould be made righteous, before God, but whereby we are declared to be righteous in part, untill the body of ſinne being aboliſhed, we ſhall be wholly renewed according to the image of God.

CHAP. XI.

Hereticall tranſlation for IMPVTATIVE IVSTICE against true inherent Iuſtice.

O*Ne place might ſuffice, in ſtead of many, where* Beza doth proteſt, that his adding or alteration of the text, is ſpecially againſt the execrable errour of inherent iuſtice, which (hee ſaith) is to bee avoided as nothing more. His falſe tranſlation, thus, our Engliſh Bezites and Calviniſts follow in their Bibles: Likewiſe then as by the offence of one, the fault came on al men to condemnation; ſo by the iuſtifying of one, the benefit abounded toward all men to the iuſtification of life. Where there are added to the text of the Apoſtle, ſix words, and the ſame ſo wilfully and voluntarily, that by the three firſt, they make the Apoſtle ſay, ſinne came on all men by Adam, and they were made ſinners indeed; by the three latter, they make him ſay, not that iuſtice or righteouſneſſe came likewiſe on all men by Chriſt, to make them iuſt indeed, but that the benefit of Chriſts iuſtice abounded towards them, as being imputed forſooth unto them. Whereas, if they would needs adde to the text, (which yet is intolerable, ſo much, and in ſo doubtfull a caſe) they ſhould at the leaſt have made the caſe equall, as the Apoſtle himſelfe teacheth them to doe, in the very next ſentence, ſaying thus: For as by one mans diſobedience many were made ſinners, ſo by the obedience of one ſhall many alſo bee made righteous. So they tranſlate, rather than, bee made iuſt: for they are the lotheſt men in the world, to ſay that wee are made iuſt, for feare of iuſtice inherent in us, though the Scripture bee never ſo plaine. As here wee ſee the Apoſtle maketh the caſe like, that we are made iuſt by Chriſt, as we were made ſinners by Adam.

Rom.5.

FVLKE.

THis one place is delivered from your vaine cavillation, Cap. 1. Sect. 23. When the ſentence is eccliptical or defective, they that will tranſlate to haue it underſtood, muſt needs ſupply the words that are wanting: and where ſhall they find what words are lacking, but in the ſame place, and in the treatie of the ſame matter? It appeareth you had rather the text had no ſenſe, than that it might ſeeme to make againſt your blaſphemy of iuſtice inherent. As for that fond quarrell of yours, that they bee not iuſt indeed, to whom the iuſtice of Chriſt (which you like an hell-hound doe ſcorne at) is imputed, deſerveth no anſwer. For who is ſuch a blocke, to ſay or thinke, that thoſe whom God doth iuſtifie, are not made iuſt indeed? Was not Abraham iuſt indeed, when God imputed his faith unto iuſtice? Is not he made rich indeed, which is made rich by another mans gift? Chriſt is given unto us of God, to bee iuſtice, wiſedome, ſanctification, and in him we are iuſt, wiſe, and holy, not in our owne righteouſnes, wiſedome, or holines. As for adding to the text, God knoweth how we abhorre it; but adding of words which doe explicate the ſenſe of the holy Ghoſt, is no addition forbidden, for then all preaching were accurſed, which is, or ought to bee nothing elſe, but an explaining and ſetting forth of the word of God, in more words, the matter whereof (though in fewer words) is contained in the Scripture. And if we ſpeake of adding of words in tranſlation, haue I not ſhewed before, that you haue added many? ſome indeed upon neceſſary cauſe, and ſome without neceſſitie. What needed you to ſay, for Pœniterent, they had done penance, Luk. 10. for in omnibus bonis, in all his goods, Gen. 6. for ſeparamini, ſeparate your ſelues, 2 Cor, 6. &c. To ſay wee are iuſtified, and to ſay wee are made iuſt, is all one: and therefore I marvell why you thinke us loth to ſay the one, rather than the other. Is any man ſo ſenſeleſſe to thinke wee can ſay, a man is made righteous, and dare not ſay, hee is made iuſt? I tell you plainely, we defie the hereſie of righteouſneſſe inherent, as much as of iuſtice inherent. We are iuſt, wee are righteous in the ſight of God, not by the iuſtice or righteouſneſſe of our workes, but by the iuſtice or righteouſneſſe of Chriſt imputed to us through faith. And wee are made iuſt by Chriſt, as wee were made ſinners by Adam, in ſome reſpect; but not in every reſpect, for the Apoſtle maketh a broad difference betweene the tranſgreſſion and the benefit, Rom. 5. v. 15. and other differences there bee, which none, but a Pelagian will deny. Nay Pelagius will not ſay, that wee are iuſt by Chriſt according to propagation, but according to faith.

MART. 2. And it is a world to ſee, how Beza ſhifteth from one ſignification of the word iuſtified, or made iuſt, to another. Sometime to be iuſtified, is to be pronounced quit from all ſinne, or declared iuſt before Gods iudgement ſeat, and ſo hee tranſlateth it in the text, Act. 13. v. 39. and as though his guiltie conſcience were afraid of a blow, he ſaith he fleeth not the tearme of iuſtifying or iuſtification, becauſe he vſeth it in other places. Hee doth ſo indeed, but then his commentarie ſuppleth the turne, as Rom. 2. v. 13. Not the hearers of the Law are RIGHTEOVS before God (ſo they delight to tranſlate, rather than IVST before God) but the doers of the Law ſhall bee IVSTIFIED, that is (ſaith Beza) ſhall be pronounced iuſt. The Apoſtle muſt needs ſay by the coherence and conſequence of his words, not the hearers are iuſt, but the doers ſhall be iuſt or iuſtified. Beza will in no caſe haue it ſo, but either in text or commentarie make the Apoſtle ſay as himſelfe imagineth. Yet in another place hee proteſteth very ſolemnly, that to be iuſtified is not to be pronounced or accounted iuſt, but rather to be iuſt indeed; and that he proveth out of S. Paul, Rom. 5. v. 19. who maketh it all one, to be iuſtified, and to bee made iuſt. And againe by this reaſon, that it ſhould bee manifeſtly repugnant to Gods iuſtice, to account him for iuſt, that is not iuſt, and therefore that man indeed is made iuſt. Thus Beza. Would you not thinke he were come to bee of our opinion? But he revolteth againe, and interpreteth all thoſe goodly words in his old ſenſe, ſaying. Not that any qualitie is inwardly giuen vnto us, of which wee are named iuſt, but becauſe the iuſtice of Chriſt is imputed to us by faith freely. By faith then at the leaſt we are truely iuſtified. Not ſo neither, but faith (ſaith he) is an inſtrument wherewith wee apprehend Chriſt our iuſtice. So that wee haue no more iuſtice in us, than we haue glory: for glory alſo we apprehend by faith.

FVLK. 2. All learned men (I hope) doe ſee that you haue no regard how vainely you cavill, ſo you may ſeeme to the ignorant to ſay ſomething againſt them that be godly and learned, Act. 13. v. 39. Beza tranſlateth δικαιωθῆναι, abſolui, that is (ſaith hee) to bee declared iuſt, or abſolved; and giveth this reaſon why hee vſeth not the word iuſtificari in that place, which hee vſeth elſewhere: Ne quis illud ab omnibus perinde acciperet, ac ſi caſus eſſet modi, aut inſtrumenti, per quod iuſtificemur, id eſt, iuſti fiamus, ac pronunciemur, aut pro iuſtis habeamur, hoc quidem loco malui abſoluendi verbum vſurpare, ut magis perſpicua eſſet oratio: Leſt any man ſhould take this word of the text, ab omnibus, as though it were the caſe of the meane, or inſtrument by which wee are iuſtified, that is, made and pronounced iuſt, or accounted for iuſt; in this place I choſe rather to vſe the word of abſolving, that the ſentence might bee more cleare. The Latine ab omnibus, may ſignifie by all things, or from all things. Therefore leſt any man ſhould miſtake the Apoſtle, as though hee ſaid wee are iuſtified by all thoſe things, where hee meaneth wee are iuſtified from all things, Beza in this place vſeth the word of abſolving or acquitting, in the ſame ſenſe that hee doth iuſtifying in other places, where hee ſpeaketh of the ſame matter, and ſaith as plainely as a man can ſpeake, that to bee iuſtified, and to bee made iuſt, or pronounced, or accounted iuſt before God, is all one. Yet our Momus findeth fault with him, for expounding to bee iuſtified, Rom. 2. v. 13. to bee pronounced iuſt, as though God will pronounce any man iuſt, which is not iuſt indeed. But Beza (hee ſaith) elſewhere proteſteth, that to bee iuſtified, is not to bee pronounced or accounted iuſt, but rather to bee iuſt indeed. If Martin had not belied Beza, wee ſhould haue had Bezaes words ſet downe, both in Latine and Engliſh. But in trueth Beza hath no ſuch words: yet in ſenſe hee hath thus much, that to bee iuſtified before God, is to bee iuſt indeede, and not to bee onely pronounced or accounted iuſt, when hee is not ſo indeede. But that wee are made truely iuſt indeede, by the iuſtice of Chriſt, which is imputed unto us freely by faith. And as for that new life or iuſtice which is called inherent in us, it is not the cauſe, but the witneſſe of that iuſtice, by imputation of which wee are ſaved, following him that is iuſtified, and not going before iuſtification: and faith indeede, is the inſtrument by which wee apprehend Chriſt our iuſtice. Neither doth Beza ſay, that wee are not truely iuſtified by faith, but that faith is not the principall efficient cauſe, which is the mercy of God, but the inſtrumentall cauſe, by which wee take hold of the mercy of God in Chriſt. In all this, Beza hath ſaid nothing contrary to himſelfe, nor to the trueth. And it is no abſurditie to ſay, that the iuſtice of Chriſt, by which wee are iuſtified, is no more inherent in us, than his glory; and yet both aſſured unto us by faith. As for that iuſtice, which is an effect of Gods ſanctifying ſpirit, and a fruite of our iuſtification before God, by which alſo wee are iuſtified, or declared iuſt before men, as Saint Iames teacheth, is inherent in us, as alſo the firſt fruites of glorification, by that peace of conſcience, and ioy that wee haue in God, being reconciled to us by Chriſt.

For,

MART. 3. For this purpoſe both hee and the Engliſh Bibles tranſlate thus: Abraham beleeved God, and it was reputed to him FOR IVSTICE, Rom. 4. v. 3. & 9. Where hee interpreteth, for iuſtice, to be nothing elſe but, in the ſteede and place of iuſtice: ſo alſo taking away true inherent iuſtice even from Abraham himſelfe. But to admit their tranſlation (which notwithſtanding in their ſenſe is moſt falſe) muſt it needes ſignifie, not true inherent iuſtice, becauſe the Scripture ſaith, it was reputed for iuſtice? Doe ſuch ſpeeches import that it is not ſo indeed, but is onely reputed ſo? Then if we ſay, This ſhall bee reputed to thee for ſinne: for a great benefit, and ſo foorth: it ſhould ſignifie, it is no ſinne indeed, nor great benefit. But let them call to minde, that the Scripture vſeth to ſpeake of ſinne and of iuſtice alike. It ſhall be ſinne in thee, or unto thee, as they tranſlate Bibl. 1577. or as Saint Hierome tranſlateth, It ſhall be reputed to thee for ſinne, Deut. c. 23. & 24. and (as themſelues tranſlate) it ſhall bee righteouſneſſe unto thee, before the Lord thy God. And againe Deut. c. 6. This ſhall bee our righteouſneſſe before the Lord our God, if wee keepe all the commandements, as hee hath commanded vs. If then iuſtice onely be reputed, ſinne alſo is onely reputed: if ſinne bee in us indeed, iuſtice is in us indeed.

FVLK. 3. Our tranſlation taketh not from Abraham true iuſtice, nor yet iuſtice inherent, but declareth that hee was not iuſtified before God by workes, that is by iuſtice inherent, but by faith which apprehendeth the iuſtice of Chriſt, which is altogether without us. And therefore you cavill in your old rotten quarrell, when you goe about to make reputed to bee contrary to truth, or indeed. Faith was reputed by God to Abraham for iuſtice indeede, but not as iuſtice inherent. And Abrahams was truely iuſtified by faith as by an inſtrumentall cauſe, not that faith was the iuſtice by which hee was iuſt in the ſight of God, excluding all other cauſes: but there was nothing in Abraham but faith which God accompted for iuſtice. But Abrahams faith embraced the mercie of God in the promiſed ſeede, in which as well hee, as all the Tribes of the earth ſhould be bleſſed. The places of Scripture that you cite ſpeaking of ſinne and iuſtice alike, bee not contrary to the imputation of iuſtice unto them in which it is not inherent. For in neither of both places the holy Ghoſt vſeth the word of imputation, howſoever Saint Hierome tranſlateth it, but the verbe ſubſtantiue. And the meaning is plaine. It ſhall bee ſinne in thee: for ſinne is indeede inherent, as perfect iuſtice alſo ſhould bee if wee could obſerue all the commandements of God, as Moſes ſaith, Deut. 6. and wee ſhould bee iuſtified thereby. But by one iuſt act whereof Moſes ſpeaketh, Deut. 24. though it proceede of iuſtice that is in us, the Scripture never ſaith that wee ſhall bee iuſtified. To conclude, wee confeſſe, that both ſinne and iuſtice are in the children of God, but not that iuſtice, whereby they are reputed iuſt or iuſtified, or made iuſt before God, but an effect or fruite thereof.

MART. 4. Againe the Greeke fathers make it plaine, that to bee reputed unto iuſtice, is to be true iuſtice indeed, interpreting Saint Pauls word in Greeke, thus: Abraham obtained iuſtice, Abraham was iuſtified. For that is, ſay they: It was reputed him to iuſtice. Doth not Saint Iames ſay the like (cap. 2. verſ. 23.) teſtifying, that in that Abraham was iuſtified by faith and workes, the Scripture was fulfilled, that ſaith, it was reputed him to iuſtice? Gen. cap. 15. v. 6. In which words of Geneſis, where theſe words were firſt written by Moſes, in the Hebrew there is not, for iuſtice, or in ſteed of iuſtice, (which Beza pleadeth upon, by the Hebrew phraſe) but thus, He (God) reputed it unto him, iuſtice, though here alſo the Engliſh Bibles adde, for. Which preciſely tranſlating the Hebrew they ſhould not doe, ſpecially when they meane it was ſo counted or reputed for iuſtice, that it was no iuſtice indeede.

FVLK. 4. I know not againſt whom you fight, but againſt your owne ſhadow. For wee ſay, that to bee iuſtified, and bee reputed iuſt, and to obtaine iuſtice, is all one in this caſe. But where Saint Iames ſaith, that Abraham was iuſtified by workes, hee meaneth, that hee was declared iuſt before men, even as hee ſaith, ſhew mee thy faith by thy workes, for Abraham was not iuſtified by a dead faith, but by a working faith: and yet hee was not iuſtified before God by workes, but the Scripture was fulfilled which ſaid, Abraham beleeved God, and it was reputed to him for iuſtice, which is as Saint Paul expoundeth it, Abraham was iuſtified before God, by faith, and not by workes. But in Gen. 15. v. 6. there is not the prepoſition (for) or (in ſteed) but ſimply iuſtice, therefore it ſhould bee tranſlated hee reputed it to him iuſtice. And will you then controule both the Apoſtles, Paul, and Iames, for adding the prepoſition εἰς which ſignifieth unto, or for? Or will not common ſenſe inforce the ſame underſtanding that both the Apoſtles doe giue it: Hee reputed it to him as iuſtice, or for iuſtice. Muſt not ſuch particles in tranſlation bee alwayes expreſſed, to make the ſenſe plaine, which in Engliſh without the particle, hath no ſenſe or underſtanding? To tranſlate preciſely out of the Hebrew, is not to obſerue the number of words, but the perfect ſenſe and meaning of them, in fewer or more words, as the phraſe of our tongue will ſerue to bee underſtood: or elſe 2. Cor. 8. qui multum, why doe you tranſlate, hee that had much? and, qui modicum non minoravit, hee that had little wanted not? you ſhould haue ſaid which much, and which little not leſſed, if you would haue given word for word, and not added any word for explication. Againe 2. Cor. 1. Supra virtutem, aboue our power, why adde you (our) which is not in the text? and indeede not neceſſarie to bee added in the tranſlation? Againe, 1 Cor. 13. Euacuaui quæ erant paruuli, I did away the things that belonged to a little one. Here for foure Latine words you haue given ten or eleven Engliſh words, which no reaſonable man can greatly miſlike, if you were not ſuch a quarreller at other mens doing, without all cauſe, or wiſe colour, but onely to bleare the eyes of the ignorant.

MART. 5. But as for either the Hebrew or Greeke word, that is here uſed, to repute, or account, they are then uſed, when it muſt needs ſignifie, that the thing is ſo indeed, and not onely ſo reputed; as Pſal. 118. octonario SAMECH. I haue reputed or accounted all the ſinners of the earth, prevaricators or tranſgreſſors. Prævaricantes reputaui. So did the Septuaginta take the Hebrew word, and read it. And Saint Paul, So let a man repute or account us as the Miniſters of Chriſt. Let them goe now and ſay, that neither they, were ſinners indeed, nor theſe, Chriſts Miniſters indeed, becauſe they were reputed for ſuch, let them ſay the children of the promiſe were not the ſeede of Abraham, becauſe the Apoſtle ſaith, Rom. 9. v. 8. they are reputed for the ſeede. But howſoever it be, the Proteſtants will haue it ſo to bee taken, at the leaſt in the matter of iuſtification.

FVLK. 5. Silence were the beſt anſwere to theſe tedious repetitions. It were ſufficient once to ſay among reaſonable men. When faith is reputed by God, or accounted for iuſtice, faith is truly and indeed the inſtrumentall cauſe of iuſtification, or apprehending the iuſtice of Chriſt, by which wee are accounted and made iuſt in the ſight of God. It is therefore a moſt ridiculous cavill of the difference betweene reputing iuſt, and being iuſt indeed. For God when he iuſtifieth the ungodly, doth both repute him, and make him iuſt indeed, by the iuſtice of Chriſt, of his owne meere mercy, and not of the mans merits, or by iuſtice inherent. For what iuſtice can be in an ungodly man? and ſuch is every one of us, whom God doth iuſtifie, and then giue us his holy ſpirit, to ſanctifie us in newneſſe of life to ſet forth his glory in our holy and blameleſſe converſation.

MART. 6. Againe, where Saint Paul ſaith, 2 Cor. 5. That wee might be made the iuſtice of God in him: they in their firſt tranſlations, intolerably corrupt it thus: That we by his meanes ſhould be that righteouſneſſe, which BEFORE GOD IS ALLOVVED. Who taught them to tranſlate ſo diſſolutely, Iuſtitia Dei, the righteouſneſſe which before God is allowed? did not their errour and hereſie, which is, that God reputeth and accounteth us for iuſt, though we be indeed moſt foule ſinners, and that our iuſtice being none at all in us, yet is allowed and accepted before him for iuſtice and righteouſneſſe?

Bib. 1562.
δικαιοσύνη Θεοῦ ἐν αὐτῷ.

FVLK. 6. There is no text in all the Bible more cleare againſt iuſtification by iuſtice inherent, than this 2. Corinth. 3. wherein not altogether cauſeleſſe you reproue our firſt interpreters to tranſlate diſſolutely. There it is certaine they had no ſuch purpoſe as you aſcribe unto them. For their tranſlation doth rather obſcure than ſet out our iuſtification by the iuſtice which is not in us, but in Chriſt. The text is therefore plaine: him that knew no ſinne, hee made ſinne for us, that wee might become the iuſtice of God in him, that is in Chriſt, and not in our ſelues. For though we be in deed moſt foule ſinners, and all our iuſtice bee (as the Prophet ſaith) as a menſtruous cloth: yet in Chriſt hee waſheth and cleanſeth us from our ſinnes, and reputing his iuſtice as ours, hee maketh us truely iuſt before him, not having our owne iuſtice which is of the Law, but the iuſtice which is by faith of Ieſus Chriſt, the iuſtice which is of God through faith. Where you charge us to affirme, that our iuſtice being none at all in us, yet is allowed and accepted before him for iuſtice and righteouſneſſe, it is no aſſertion of ours, but a dogged ſlaunder of your owne.

Philip. 3.

MART. 7. Againe to this purpoſe: they make Saint Paul ſay that God hath made us accepted, or freely accepted in his beloved Sonne as they make the Angell in Saint Luke ſay to our Lady, Haile freely beloved: to take away all grace inherent and reſident in the bleſſed Virgin, or in us: whereas the Apoſtles word ſignifieth that wee are truely made gracious or gratefull and acceptable, that is to ſay, that our ſoule is inwardly endued and beautified with grace and the vertues proceeding thereof, and conſequently is holy indeed before the ſight of God, and not onely ſo accepted and reputed, as they imagine. If they know not the true ſignification of the Greeke word, and if their hereſie will ſuffer them to learne it, let them heare Saint Chryſoſtome not onely a famous Greeke Doctor, but an excellent Interpreter of all Saint Pauls Epiſtles: who in this place putteth ſuch force, and ſignificancie in the Greeke word, that he ſaith thus by an alluſion and diſtinction of words: Hee ſaid not, WHICH HE FREELY GAVE VS, but, WHEREIN HE MADE VS GRATEFVLL, that is, not onely delivered us from ſinne, but alſo made us beloved and amiable, made our ſoule beautifull, gratefull, ſuch as the Angels and Archangels are deſirous to ſee, and ſuch as himſelfe is in loue withall, according to that in the Pſalme, THE KING SHALL DESIRE, or BEE IN LOVE WITH THY BEAVTIE. So Saint Chryſoſtome, and after him Theophylact, who with many moe wordes and ſimilitudes explicate this Greeke word, and this making of the ſoule gracious and beautifull inwardly, truely, and inherently.

FVLK. 7. Wee make Saint Paul ſay no otherwiſe, than hee ſaith in deed: ἐχαρίτωσεν, hee hath made us accepted, or hee hath freely accepted us in his beloved ſonne. And ſo wee truely ſay, the bleſſed Virgin Mary was freely accepted, or freely beloved. But this taketh not away the gracious gifts of God, which the bleſſed Virgin in moſt plentifull manner was, and wee in ſome meaſure are indued by his grace and favour, which alſo God loveth in us, becauſe they bee his gifts, and becauſe hee loveth us freely in his beloved ſonne, whom alwayes you forget, when you ſpeake of iuſtice, or acceptation before God. For that being ſanctified by his ſpirit, wee are holy indeed, though not perfectly, as ſanctification is begunne, and not conſummate in this life: for if it were, wee ſhould bee voide of ſinne, and death, wee doe thankefully acknowledge, yet thoſe vertues wherewith our ſoule is inwardly indued and beautified, are not the cauſe that iuſtifieth us, or maketh us acceptable in Gods ſight; but onely his mercy in Ieſus Chriſt, for whoſe ſake alſo, hee accepteth this unperfect holineſſe and righteouſneſſe, which is in us by his grace and gift, rewarding the ſame for his ſake alſo with everlaſting glory. And nothing elſe doth Chryſoſtome ſay, or meane in the place by you cited, about whom you make ſo many wordes, that you might bee thought, by giving him his due praiſe, to haue him as it were bound to you, to mainetaine your unrighteous cauſe. But Chryſoſtome careth not for your commendation, and that which hee ſaith, maketh nothing for iuſtice inherent, by which wee ſhould bee iuſtified: for hee ſaith not ſo much, as that our ſoule is made amiable and beautifull by vertues and good qualities infuſed by his grace, much leſſe that for ſuch qualities inherent in us, GOD ſhould iuſtifie us, but hee hath made us acceptable in Chriſt, amiable, and beautifull, and louely to the Angells: ſome effect of which grace, alſo appeareth in our life and converſation to the praiſe of God, and good example of men.

MART. 8. And I would gladly know of the Adverſaries, if the like Greeke wordes be not of that forme and nature, to ſignifie ſo much as, to make worthy, to make meete: and whether he whom God maketh worthy, or meete, or gratefull, iuſt, and holy, bee not ſo in very deede, but by acceptation onely; if not indeed, then God maketh him no better then hee was before, but onely accepteth him for better: if he be ſo indeed, then the Apoſtles word ſignifieth not, to make accepted, but to make ſuch an one as being by Gods grace ſanctified and iuſtified, is worthy to be accepted, for ſuch puritie, vertue, and iuſtice, as is in him.

χαριτῶσαι.

FVLK. 8. I haue told you before, that ἀξιῶσαι, ſignifieth not to make worthy, but to account worthy, for many a man may deſire (vſing this verbe) to bee accounted worthy of him, which cannot make him worthy, but in his owne iudgement and account. But where you demand further, whether hee whom God maketh meete, worthy, gratefull, iuſt, holy, bee not ſo indeed, but by acceptation onely: I anſwere, thoſe whom hee accepteth for worthy, meete, iuſt, holy, gratefull, are not ſo indeed: but then it is further to bee knowne, whether they bee ſuch in themſelues, or in Chriſt. Wee ſay they are not ſuch in themſelues, but in Chriſt. Then are they made nothing better (ſay you) in themſelues. Yes verily, as ſoone as they are accepted to bee Gods children, and the iuſtice of Chriſt is imputed to them through faith, they receiue the ſpirit of adoption, which renueth them in the inward man, and beginneth in them holineſſe, and iuſtice, puritie, vertue: but becauſe all theſe qualities are unperfect, they are not worthy in Gods iuſtice to be accepted for them, but the cauſe of their acceptation, is ſtill the mercy of God in Chriſt, in whom both they, and their unperfect good qualities are accepted to reward.

MART. 9. Againe, for this purpoſe (Dan. 6. 22.) they will not tranſlate according to Chaldee, Greeke and Latine, Iuſtice was found in me: but they alter it thus, My iuſtice was found out: and other of them, My vnguiltineſſe was found out: to draw it from inherent iuſtice, which was in Daniel.

זכו השתכחת לי

FVLK. 9. I can but wonder at your impudence and malice, which ſay ſo confidently, that for this purpoſe they tranſlated thus: Would any man by the iuſtice, or innocencie that was in Daniel, or in any iuſt man, feare leſt any thing ſhould bee detracted from the iuſtice of Chriſt, whereby Daniel, and all iuſt men, are iuſtified in Gods ſight? Well, let that purpoſe reſt in Gods iudgement, as Daniels iuſtice did, when hee was ſhamefully ſlaundered. But what is the fault of the tranſlation? According to the Chaldee, Greeke, and Latine, it ſhould be, Iuſtice is found in mee. For Greeke and Latine, we will not contend, becauſe wee tranſlate not Daniel out of Greeke, and Latine, but out of the Chaldee. But in good ſadneſſe, are you ſo deepely ſeene in Chaldee, that you will avouch the proper ſignification of לי to bee in mee? A hundreth boyes in Cambridge know, that it ſignifieth as well in Chaldee, as in Hebrew, to mee, rather than in mee. But moſt properly haue our tranſlators expreſſed the phraſe in Engliſh, ſaying, my iuſtice, or unguiltineſſe was found out: for of a vertue inherent, Daniel ſpeaketh otherwiſe, Dan 2. v. 30. to the King די איתי בי לא בחכמה not by wiſedome, which is in mee. So that here your quarrell bewrayeth more ſpite than wit, more malice than learning.

MART. 10. Againe it muſt needs bee a ſpot of the ſame infection, that they tranſlate thus. As David DESCRIBETH the bleſſedneſſe of the man, unto whom God imputeth righteouſneſſe, Rom. 4. 6. as though imputed righteouſneſſe were the deſcription of bleſſedneſſe. They know the Greeke doth not ſignifie, to deſcribe. I would once ſee them preciſe in following the Greeke, and the Hebrew, if not, wee muſt looke to their fingers.

FULK. 10. It muſt needs come of an high wit, to haue ſuch deepe inſight into other mens intents, and purpoſes. But why I pray you, is not righteouſneſſe imputed by God, &c. and ſo foorth, as Paul ſaith, a deſcription of mans bleſſedneſſe. If they had ſaid, defineth. where they ſay, deſcribeth, you would haue made much adoe. But can you not allow this, that the Prophet ſaith, to bee a deſcription of mans bleſſedneſſe? howſoever it is, λέγω ſignifieth not to deſcribe, but to ſpeake, to ſay, to pronounce, and in effect, there is nothing elſe meant by the word deſcribeth, here vſed, but that David pronounceth or ſetteth foorth the bleſſedneſſe of man in ſuch words. You in your tranſlation, ſay, termeth, as David termeth, which if you meane it not ſcornefully, commeth as neere a definition, as, deſcribeth, the word which wee uſe, and our, deſcribeth, is as neere the Greeke λέγω, as your, termeth, is to the Latine dicit. But looke to our fingers, and ſpare not to tell us where you ſee us goe wide from the Greeke or Hebrew, but if you doe nothing but trifle and quarrell, as you haue done hetherto, bee ſure wee will be bold to beſhrew your fingers, and hit you on the thumbes now and then alſo to your diſcredit.

MARTIN.

CHAP. XII.

Hereticall tranſlation for SPECIALL FAITH, vaine ſecuritie, and ONELY FAITH.

ALL other meanes of ſalvation being thus taken away, their onely and extreame refuge is, Onely faith, and the ſame not the Chriſtian faith of the Articles of the Creede, and ſuch like, but a ſpeciall faith and confidence, whereby every man muſt aſſuredly beleeue, that himſelfe is the ſonne of God, and one of the Elect, and predeſtinate to ſalvation. If hee bee not by faith as ſure of this as of CHRISTS incarnation, hee ſhall never bee ſaved.

FULKE.

ALL other meanes of ſalvation being taken away, and onely faith apprehending the mercie of God in the redemption of Ieſus Chriſt, being left, wee haue great and ſufficient cauſe, to account our ſelues happy, and aſſured of eternall life, becauſe hee that hath promiſed, is faithfull alſo to performe. But where you ſay that our onely faith, is not the Chriſtian faith of the Articles of the Creede you lye without meaſure impudently: for that faith, and none other doe wee beleeue, teach, and profeſſe. And that faith is a ſpeciall faith and confidence in the mercie of God, whereof every man that beleeveth, doth make a ſingular confeſſion for himſelfe, ſaying, I beleeue in God, &c. And of all things contained in that profeſſion of faith (that is, of forgiueneſſe of ſinnes, reſurrection of our bodies, and life everlaſting, by beliefe and truſt in God the Father Almighty, maker of heaven and earth, and in Ieſus Chriſt his onely Sonne our Lord, conceived, borne, ſuffered, crucified, dead, and buried, deſcended into hell, riſen againe, and aſcended into heaven, and in God the holy Ghoſt, by whoſe gracious and mighty working wee are incorporate into the body of Chriſt, and made members of his holy Catholike Church, which is the Communion of Saints) every Chriſtian man ought to bee as certainely perſwaded, as the things are moſt true, being inwardly taught by the ſpirit of truth, that hee is the childe of God, and conſequently elect, and predeſtinate unto eternall ſalvation. But that a man ſhall never bee ſaved, except hee haue ſuch certaintie of this faith, as the truth of Gods promiſes doth deſerue, none of us doth teach, none of us doth thinke. For wee know our owne infirmitie, wee know the temptation of Satan, nevertheleſſe wee acknowledge in our ſelues, and ſo ſeeke to perſwade all men, that theſe things ſtanding upon the immoveable pillars of Gods promiſes, who can neither deceiue nor be deceived, ought to bee moſt certaine unto us; and for daily confirmation and increaſe of this faith, all thoſe meanes are of us diligently to bee vſed, that God for this purpoſe in his holy Scripture hath appointed.

MART. 2. For this hereſie, they force the Greeke to expreſſe the very word of aſſurance and certaintie, thus: Let us draw nigh with a true heart, IN ASSURANCE OF FAITH, Heb. 10. v. 22. and Beza Certa perſuaſione fidei, that is, with a certaine and aſſured perſwaſion of faith: interpreting himſelfe more at large in another place, that hee meaneth thereby ſuch a perſwaſion and ſo effectuall, as by which wee know aſſuredly without all doubt, that nothing can ſeparate us from God. Which their hereticall meaning maketh their tranſlation the leſſe tolerable, becauſe they neither expreſſe the Greeke preciſely, nor intend the true ſenſe of the Apoſtle: they expreſſe not the Greeke, which ſignifieth properly the fulneſſe and complement of any thing, and therefore the Apoſtle ioyneth it ſometime with faith, elſewhere, (Heb. 5. v. 11.) with hope, with knowledge, or (* Col. 2. v. 2.) underſtanding, to ſignifie the fulneſſe of all three; as the vulgar Latine Interpreter moſt ſincerely (* Rom. 4. v. 21.) alwayes tranſlateth it, and to Timothie (* 2 Tim. 4) hee vſeth it to ſignifie the full accompliſhment and execution of his miniſterie in every point. Where a man may wonder, that Beza to maintaine his conceived ſignification of this word, tranſlateth here alſo accordingly, thus: Miniſterij tui plenam fidem facito: but their more currant Church Engliſh Bibles are content to ſay with the vulgar Latine Interpreter, Fulfill thy miniſterie; or, Fulfill thine office to the utmoſt. *And the Greeke Fathers doe finde no other interpretation. Thus, when the Greeke ſignifieth fulneſſe of faith, rather than aſſurance or certaine perſwaſion, they tranſlate not the Greeke preciſely. Againe, in the ſenſe they erre much more, applying the foreſaid words to the certaine and aſſured faith that every man ought to haue (as they ſay) of his owne ſalvation. Whereas the Greeke Fathers expound it of the full and aſſured faith that every faithfull man muſt haue of all ſuch things in heaven as hee ſeeth not, namely that Chriſt is aſcended thither, &c. adding further, and proving out of the Apoſtles words next following, that the Proteſtants * onely faith is not ſufficient, bee it never ſo ſpeciall or aſſured.*

Chryſ. Theodor. Theophyl. upon Ro. 10.

FULK. 2. Having nothing to impugne this cleare interpretation of the Greeke word πληροφορία, but the unperfect tranſlation of your vulgar Latine Interpreter, who was both an unperfect Grecian, and a very barbarous Latiniſt, you are not aſhamed to ſay, wee force the Greeke, to make it ſignifie aſſurance; which all men that are but meanely learned in the Greeke tongue, may know that it ſignifieth aſſurance, or full and certaine perſwaſion. Although for the queſtion in controverſie, the fulneſſe of faith will proue the certaintie, as much in a manner, as the aſſurance. But that the Greeke ſignifieth a full and certaine perſwaſion, I report mee not onely to the beſt Greeke Dictionaries of this time, but alſo to Budæus, who citeth Iſocrates out of Trapezuntius, for proofe that it is ſo vſed, and alſo interpreteth that of Saint Paul, Rom. 14. ἕκαστος ἰδίῳ νοῒ πληροφορείσθω, Let every man be certaine of his owne minde. But you haue a doughty argument, that it is not onely ioyned with faith, but alſo with hope, knowledge, and underſtanding, as though there could not bee a certaine perſwaſion and aſſurance of hope, knowledge, and underſtanding: yea the aſſurance of hope dependeth upon the aſſurance of faith, and the aſſurance of faith upon the certaine perſwaſion of knowledge and underſtanding. Yea your vulgar Interpreter tranſlating πληροφορηθεὶς, Rom. 4. v. 21. Pleniſſime ſciens, knowing moſt fully, may teach you, that it ſignifieth more than fulneſſe, for elſe hee ſhould haue ſaid, being fulfilled. And better doth Beza expreſſe the word πληροφόρησον, 2 Tim. 4. than ſome of our Engliſh Interpreters, which ſay, fulfill thy miniſterie: whereas the Apoſtles meaning is, that hee ſhould approue the credit and dignitie of his miniſterie unto other men. But the Greeke Fathers (you ſay) finde none other interpretation of it, and for proofe you cite Ignatius ep. ad Smyr. which although it bee not authenticall, yet I ſee no cauſe why wee may not interpret πεπληροφορημένην, being certainely perſwaded in faith and loue, and ἐν πληροφορίᾳ πίστεως, in the aſſurance of faith. And ſo is it tranſlated in Bibliotheca ſacra

Margarini de la Bigne, Plenè inſtructa in fide & charitate, & cognoui vos abſolutè perfectos in in fide ſtabili; fully inſtructed in faith and charitie, and I haue knowne you abſolutely perfect in a ſtedfaſt faith. Chryſoſtome and Theodoret, becauſe you vouch at large, I know not what you would ſhew out of them. In Theophylact I finde, that hee ſpeaketh againſt all heſitation and doubtfulneſſe of faith, but againſt the certaine perſwaſion thereof never a word. Ne aliquam inducas in animum tuum haſitationem, neque pendeas animi, dubij " quiddam cogitans: Bring not into thy minde any ſtaggering, neither bee uncertaine of thy " minde, thinking any doubtfull thing. But for the ſignification of the word πληροφορία, Saint " Baſil may bee a ſufficient witneſſe, who commonly vſeth it for aſſured and certaine perſwa-ſion. As ἠθικ. 26. Every word and deed muſt bee proved by the teſtimonie of the holy Scripture, εἰς πληροφορίαν μὲν τῶν ἀγαθῶν, to the full and certaine perſwaſion of the good, and to the ſhame of the wicked. Againe, defin. 80. what is the propertie of a faithfull man, " τὸ ἐν τοιαύτῃ πληροφορίᾳ, &c. by ſuch aſſured perſwaſion to bee diſpoſed, &c. Even ſo ἐν ἐρ. " κατ' ἐπ. 5. εἰς πληροφορίαν τῆς θεοσεβείας, to the certaine perſwaſion of godlineſſe, &c. and ſo in other places. And you your ſelfe confeſſe as much, where you ſay, the Greeke Fathers expound it of the full aſſured faith, &c. which is enough to iuſtifie our tranſlation. Now if the Fathers underſtood this full aſſured faith onely of an hiſtoricall faith (as you ſay) and not of truſt and confidence in God, it is another controverſie. Our tranſlation is not falſe, although wee had a falſe meaning, if it bee anſwerable to the words. Neither doth Chry- ſoſtome ſpeake of an hiſtoricall faith onely, by certaintie whereof wee haue acceſſe unto God; but alſo of confidence, which remiſſion of our ſinnes doth cauſe, and that wee are made coheires with Chriſt, and that wee enioy ſo great loue: neither doth hee proue that the Proteſtants onely faith is not ſufficient to iuſtifie. But the Apoſtle ſheweth (ſaith hee) that not faith alone, but alſo a vertuous life is required, and that a man bee not guiltie to " himſelfe of malitiouſneſſe. For theſe holy places doe not receiue thoſe men, with certaine " aſſurance, which are not made ſuch. This iudgement of Chryſoſtome the Proteſtants doe " allow of, better than the Papiſts: for wee know, that a godly life is neceſſary in them that beleeue to iuſtification, without which they can haue no aſſurance of faith, no nor faith indeed, but that which is by equivocation called faith, ſuch faith as the Devill and the reprobate may haue.

MART. 3. Yet doe theſe tearmes pleaſe them exceedingly, inſomuch that for the choſen gift of faith, Sap.
3.14. they tranſlate, THE SPECIALL gift of faith: and Rom. 8.38. I am ſure, that nothing can ſeparate us from the loue of God: as though the Apoſtle were certaine and aſſured not onely of his owne ſalvation, but of other mens. For to this ſenſe they doe ſo tranſlate here, whereas in * other places out of controverſie, they tranſlate the ſame word as they ſhould doe, I am perſwaded, they are perſwaded, &c. For who knoweth not that πέπεισμαι importeth onely a probable per- ſwaſion? They will ſay, that I am ſure, and I am perſwaded, is all one. Being well meant, they may indeed ſignifie alike, as the vulgar Latine Interpreter doth commonly tranſlate it; but in this place of controverſie, whether the Apoſtle were ſure of his ſalvation or no, which you ſay he was, yea without revelation, wee ſay he was not; here why would you tranſlate, I am ſure, and not as in other places, I am perſwaded, but in favour of your errour, by inſinuating the tearmes of ſure and aſſurance and ſuch like, as elſewhere you neglect the tearmes of iuſt and iuſtification. In which your ſecret things of diſhoneſties and craftineſſe (as the Apoſtle calleth it) wee cannot alwayes uſe demonſtrations to convince you: but yet even in theſe things wee talke with your conſcience, and leaue the conſideration thereof to the wiſe Reader.

FVLK. 3. Seeing they account the booke of Wiſedome to bee of no authoritie to eſtabliſh the cer-taintie of doctrine, it is not like they could haue any ſuch reſpect, as you malitiouſly ſurmiſe:
and yet the tranſlation good and true; for what is the choice gift of faith, but a ſpeciall gift?
Or dare you ſay, that faith is not a ſpeciall gift of God? They ſay not a ſpeciall faith, but a ſpeciall gift of faith. The other quarrell of the tranſlation of πέπεισμαι, I am ſure, is ſo bruitiſh, that when you confeſſe the vulgar Latine Interpreter commonly to tranſlate it, Certus ſum, and that in the end you can uſe no demonſtration to convince us, yet ſtill neverthelеſſe you charge our conſcience with the ſecret things of diſhoneſtie. That the Apoſtle was ſure of his owne ſalvation, by the teſtimonie of Gods ſpirit, which is given to all his children, wee doubt not, and that he was ſure of the ſalvation of all Gods elect, of which it is un-poſſible that any ſhould periſh. And ſeeing the ſame ſpirit of adoption is given to all the children of God, which is the earneſt of the heavenly inheritance, wee cannot affirme without blaſphemie againſt Gods truth, that any man ought to diſcredit the promiſes of God, or the teſtimonie of his ſpirit.

MART. 4. You hold alſo in this kinde of controverſie, that a man muſt aſſure himſelfe that his ſinnes bee forgiven. But in the booke of Eccleſ. cap. 5. v. 5. wee reade thus; Of thy ſinne forgiven, bee not without feare: or (as it is in the Greeke) Of forgiueneſſe and propitiation, bee not without without feare, to heape ſinne upon ſinnes: which you tranſlate falſly thus; Becauſe thy ſinne is forgiven thee, bee not therefore without feare. Is that περὶ ἐξιλασμοῦ, becauſe thy ſinne is forgiven thee? You know it is not: but that wee ſhould be afraid of the very forgiueneſſe there- of, whether our ſinne bee forgiven or no, or rather, whether our ſinne ſhall bee forgiven or no, if we heape one ſinne upon another. Which ſeemeth to bee the trueſt ſenſe of the place, by the words following; as though he ſhould ſay, Be not bold upon forgiueneſſe, to heape ſinne upon ſinne, as though περὶ ἐξιλασμοῦ μὴ ἄφοβος γίνου, προσθεῖναι ἁμαρτίαν ἐφ' ἁμαρτίαις.

FVLK. 4. Wee hold, that a man, when hee is truely penitent, ought to aſſure himſelfe that his ſinnes bee forgiven him, becauſe God hath ſo promiſed in an hundred places, without in-iury of whoſe credit, wee cannot doubt of the performance of his promiſe. But that which the ſonne of Syrach ſpeaketh of propitiation, is meant of the ſhadowie propitiation by the ſacrifices of the Law, which cannot aſſure any man of the forgiueneſſe of his ſinnes by themſelues, much leſſe them that heape ſinne upon ſinne, which are never truely repentant.
For unto true repentance, is required an hatred of ſinne, and a deſire, and purpoſe of amendment. Our tranſlation is (as your vulgar Latine) not preciſe to the words of the Greeke, but iuſt unto the meaning, for the words are, concerning propitiation, bee not without feare: and your Latine is, De propitiato peccato, of ſinne forgiven. And if you will reproue your Latine, as well as our Engliſh, and ſay, wee muſt bee afraid of the very forgiueneſſe, I haue told you, that the forgiueneſſe of God teſtified by the ſacrifices, pertained unto them that bee truely penitent, and not to hypocrites. And where you make it a doubt, whether ſinne ſhall bee forgiven or no, in them that heape one ſinne upon another; wee are out of doubt, that ſinne ſhall never bee forgiven to ſuch, as ſo continue without true conver-ſion unto God.

MART. 5. I touched before, upon another occaſion, how you adde to the text, making the Apoſtle ſay thus,
Epheſ. 3. By whom wee haue boldneſſe and entrance with THE CONSCIENCE WHICH IS by the faith of him, or (as in another Bible, which is all one) in the confidence by faith of him. The learned and ſkilfull among you in the Greeke tongue, know that this tranſlation is falſe for two cauſes; the one is, becauſe the Greeke in that caſe ſhould bee thus, ἐν τῇ πεποιθήσει τῇ διὰ τῆς πίστεως αὐτοῦ; another cauſe is, the point after πεποιθήσει: ſo that the very ſimple and ſincere tranſlation is this, Wee haue affiance and acceſſe with confidence, by the faith of him; even as elſewhere it is ſaid, wee haue confidence, if our hearts reprehend us not: we haue confidence by keeping the commandements; by tribulations and afflictions, and all good workes; hope alſo giveth us great confidence. Againſt all which, your tranſlation is preiudiciall, limiting and defining your confidence toward God, to be faith, as though we had no confidence by workes, or otherwiſe.

Bib. 1562.
Bib. 1577.
ἐν πεποιθήσει διὰ τῆς πίστεως αὐτοῦ.
1 Ioh. 3.
Heb. 10.
2 Cor. 3.

FVLK. 5. For underſtanding of the article, I haue anſwered already, and meane not here to repeate it. The point you miſſe, in the Bible 1577. is obſerved in that booke which I haue of Richard Iugs printing: By whom wee haue boldneſſe and entrance in the confidence, by faith of him. But it cannot be, the confidence (you thinke) but, confidence; becauſe the article τῇ is not put before the word, that ſignifieth confidence. But all En-gliſhmen know that our Engliſh (the) muſt bee put, and ſometime muſt bee put before nounes, without any article either in Greeke or Latine. And in this place, I would not giue a ruſh to chuſe, whether it bee in or out, for any ſenſe that it changeth. What confidence wee haue by a good conſcience, by ſuffering tribulation, and by all good workes, it skilleth not for this queſtion, ſo it bee determined, that wee haue no confidence in the merits of a good conſcience, of ſuffering, of all good workes that wee can doe, to haue boldneſſe and entrance unto God. But of merits wee haue ſpoken before in their proper place.

MART. 6. For this confidence by faith onely, Beza tranſlateth ſo wilfully and perverſly, that either you were aſhamed to follow him, or you lacked a commodious Engliſh word correſpondent to his Latine. If I haue all faith (ſaith the Apoſtle) and haue not charitie, I am nothing. Totam fi-dem (ſaith Beza*) I had rather tranſlate, than* omnem fidem, becauſe the Apoſtle meaneth not all kind of faith, to wit, the faith that iuſtifieth; but hee meaneth, that if a man haue the faith of Chriſts omnipotencie, or of any other article of the Creed, or of all wholly, and entirely, and perfectly, that is nothing without charitie. This is Bezaes tota fides, whole faith, thinking by this tranſlation to exempt from the Apoſtles words their ſpeciall iuſtifying faith, and wraſtling to that purpoſe in his annotations againſt Pighius and other Catholike Doctors. Whereas every man of ſmal skill may ſee, that the Apoſtle nameth all faith, as he doth all knowledge, and all myſterie:
comprehending all ſorts of the one and of the other, all kinde of knowledge, all kinde of myſteries, all faith whatſoever, Chriſtian, Catholike, hiſtoricall, or ſpeciall, which two latter are hereticall tearmes newly deviſed.

πᾶσαν τὴν πίστιν.
1 Cor. 13.
Annot. in n. Teſt. 1556.

FVLK. 6. When your ſpightfull and dogged malice cannot reproue our Engliſh tranſlation, then then wee must answere for Bezaes Latine, who hath sufficiently answered for himselfe, to them that understand, and list to reade him. In the place mentioned by you, hee chuseth to say totam fidem, rather than omnem, because it appeareth by the effects, that hee speaketh of faith, as it was a speciall gift of working of miracles, of which effects hee nameth one, removing of mountaines. And that πᾶσαν is so taken, namely for the perfection of one kind, not the vniversall comprehension of all kindes, hee bringeth you example. Rom. 7. v. 8. and elsewhere oftentimes. But if it should bee taken (as you say) all knowledge, and all mysteries is generally to bee taken, yet hee telleth you, this separation is but upon an impossible supposition, for iustifying faith can never bee separated from charitie, but if it might bee separated, it should not profit to iustifie. The Angels of heaven cannot preach another Gos-pell: but if they did preach another Gospell, they should bee accursed. A great argument

I promise you against iustification by faith onely, that a solitarie, dead, or barraine faith doth not iustifie.

MART. 7. And I would haue any of the Bezites giue mee a sufficient reason, why hee translated totam fidem, and not also totam scientiam: undoubtedly there is no cause, but the heresie of speciall and only faith. And againe, why he translateth, Iac. 2. 22. Thou seest, that faith was (administra) a helper of his workes: and expoundeth it thus, Faith was an efficient cause and fruitfull of good workes. Whereas the Apostles words bee plaine, that faith wrought together with his workes, yea and that his faith was by workes made perfect. This is impudent handling of Scripture, to make workes the fruit onely and effect of faith, which is your heresie.

FVLK. 7. If you dare draw forth your pen against Beza, and demand an answer of himselfe, although hee hath already given you a sufficient reason to induce, that the Apostle speaketh not of faith, as generally as of knowledge, because by an example of removing moun-taines, hee restraineth it to one kinde of faith. As for the other question, why hee translateth, συνήργει, Iam. 2. v. 22. was an helper, mee thinke you should make best answere your selfe, who not long since, by force of that word, would needs prove, that men were helpers of God, chap. 10. sect. 6. Haue you so soone forgotten your owne voice? and is this impudent handling of the Scripture, to translate, as you your selfe in another case, though impertinently, did contend the word to signifie? But workes you will not haue to bee the fruit onely and effect of faith, because the Apostle saith that faith wrought together with his workes, and by workes his faith was made perfect, as though apples are not the fruite of the tree, because the tree doth beare them, and by them, if they bee good, the tree is made a good tree.

MART. 8. Which heresie also must needs be, the cause, that, to suppresse the excellencie of charitie (which the Apostle giveth it above faith or any other gift whatsoever, in these words, And yet I shew you a more excellent way, 1 Cor. 12. v. 31.) hee in one edition of the new Testament (in the yeere 1556.) translateth this, Behold moreover also I shew you a way most diligently.
What cold stuffe is this, and how impertinent? In another edition (Ann. 1565.) hee mended it thus: And besides I shew you a way to excellencie. *In neither of both expressing the comparison of preeminence and excellencie, that charitie hath in the Apostles words, and in all the chapter following. Wherein you did well (for your credit) not to follow him (no not your Bezites themselues) but to translate after your vulgar Latine Interpreter, as it hath alwayes beene read and

καθ' ὑπερβολὴν ὁδὸν ὑμῖν δείκνυμι.

FVLK. 8. The rarenes of the phrase, καθ' ὑπερβολὴν, &c. as all indifferent men will iudge, rather than any minde to suppresse the excellencie of charitie, caused Beza to giue divers interpretations of that place, of which yet the latter more commendeth the excellencie of charitie than the vulgar Latine, or our English translation, which expoundeth it as the Latine doth: for if charitie bee the way to excellencie, it is a greater commendation thereof, than to say, it is a more excellent way than other gifts, whereof hee spake last, as of healing, of tongues, of interpretations, &c.

MART. 9. Luther was so impudent in this case, that because the Apostle spake not plainly enough for only faith, he thrust only into the text of his translation, * as himselfe witnesseth. You durst not hitherto presume so farre in this question of onely faith, though * in other controversies you haue done the like, as is shewed in their places. But I will aske you a smaller matter, which in words and shew you may perhaps easily answer, but in your conscience there will remaine a gnawing worme. In so many places of the Gospell, where our Saviour requireth the peoples faith, when he healed them of corporall diseases only, why doe you so gladly translate thus, Thy faith hath saved thee, rather than thus, thy faith hath healed thee, or made thee whole? Is it not, by ioyning these words together, to make it sound in English eares, that faith saveth or iustifieth a man? Insomuch, that Beza noteth in the margent thus, fides salvat, that is, faith saveth; and your Ge-neua Bibles, in that place where it cannot bee taken for faith that iustifieth, because it is not the parties faith, but her fathers that Christ required, there also translateth thus, Beleeue onely, and thee shall be saved. *Which translation, though very false and impertinent for iustifying faith;

as you seeme to acknowledge by translating it otherwise in your other Bibles: for indeed you must wholes maintaine, and hold it for good, whiles you alleage this place for onely faith, as is evident in your writings.*

See Goughs sermon and Tomsons answere to the L. Abbot of Westmest.

FVLK. 9 That which Luther might well doe as an Interpreter, or expounder, it was much boldnesse for him to doe as a translator: but seeing he himselfe hath redressed his owne offence, wee haue lesse to say for him, and you against him. For our additions, except such as the necessitie of our English phrase doth require for understanding, you slander us to say, that wee haue in any controversie done the like. The question you aske, is not worthy any answere, why we translate, thy faith hath saved thee, &c. seeing wee use all these words indifferently, healing, making safe, and making whole, as in Saint Iames wee say, Can faith saue him? And it is all one, to say, thy faith hath saved thee, and thy faith hath made thee whole. But you say, wee alleadge this place for onely faith iustifying, citing the answeres of Master Gough, and Master Tomson, against Feckenham. I thinke you lie, as in other places very commonly. And yet an argument, though not a plaine testimonie, may be taken out of these places for onely faith iustifying. Seeing Christ was not a Phisition for the body, but to teach men that hee was a Physition for the soule, and as hee healed the diseased in body onely by faith, so hee cureth the sickenesse of the soule by the same instrument of faith only, which by other places may be more directly proved, and here also in some sort is insinuated.

MART. 10. This then you see is a fallacie, when faith onely is required to the health of the body, as in many such places (though not in all) there by translation to make it sound a iustifying faith, as though faith onely were required to the health of the soule. Whereas that faith was of Christs omnipotencie onely and power, which Beza confesseth may bee in the Divels themselues, and is far from the faith that iustifieth. If you say, the Greeke signifieth as you translate: it doth so indeede, but it signifieth also very commonly to bee healed corporally as (by your owne translation) in these places, Mar. 5. v. 28. Mar. 6. v. 36. Luc. 8. v. 36. & v. 51. Where you translate, I shall be whole.
They were healed. Hee was healed. Shee shall be made whole. And why doe you here translate so? because you know, to bee saved, importeth rather another thing, to wit, salvation of the soule: and therefore when faith is ioyned withall, you translate rather, saved, than, healed, (though the place bee meant of bodily health onely) to insinuate by all meanes your iustification by onely faith.

[illegible] 13. 2.
Bib. 1577.

FVLK. 10. It is no fallacie: from the health of the body, to ascend higher to the health of the soule, by that direct and plaine way, by which Christ himselfe would bee knowne to bee saviour of the world, not of the body onely, but of the body and soule together. And commonly his bodily cures were ioyned with forgivenesse of sinnes, which are causes of all maladies, and with health of their soules, whose bodies were made safe. As for iustification by faith onely, wee meane none otherwise to insinuate it in this place, than Christ himselfe doth, by doing miracles, in giving health of the body, to testifie that he is the onely authour of the salvation of mens soules.

beſt, ſay, repentance, and, repent*; but none of them all once haue the words,* penance, and, doe penance. Which in moſt places is the very true tranſlation, according to the very circumſtance of the text, and vſe of the Greeke word, in the Greeke Church, and the ancient Latine tranſlation thereof, and all the fathers reading thereof, and their expoſitions of the ſame. Which foure points I thinke not amiſſe, briefly to proue, that the Reader may ſee the vſe and ſignification of theſe words, which they of purpoſe will not expreſſe, to avoide the termes of penance, and, doing penance.

FVLKE.

If by penance you meane ſatisfaction for ſinnes, by any ſuffering of ours, wee abhorre your penance, as an horrible blaſphemie againſt the blood of Chriſt. And for that cauſe, Beza, as hath beene ſhewed before, vſeth the word reſipiſcentia, rather than penitentia: becauſe the Greeke word ſignifieth, not onely a ſorrow for ſinne, but alſo a purpoſe of amendment of life. Wee in Engliſh vſe the word repentance, or amendment of life, which word of repentance, you vſe alſo ſometimes, when it pleaſeth you, or when you cannot for ſhame vſe your popiſh tearme of doing penance.

The cauſe why wee never vſe that word penance, is, for that you meane not thereby that which the Scripture calleth μετάνοιαν, but a certaine puniſhment taken upon men, for ſatisfaction of their ſinnes vnto God, which is abhominable for all Chriſtian eares to heare, which acknowledge that the blood of Chriſt onely purgeth vs from all ſinne. But in foure points you will proue, (if you can) that wee ſhould tranſlate μετανοεῖν, to doe penance.

MART. 2. Firſt, that the circumſtance of the text doth giue it ſo to ſignifie, we read in Saint Mathew, cap. 11. v. 21. If in Tyre and Sidon had beene wrought the miracles that haue beene wrought in you, they had done penance in hairecloth, or ſackecloth and aſhes long agoe. And in Saint Luke, cap. 10. v. 13. they had done penance, ſitting in ſackecloth and aſhes. I beſeech you, theſe circumſtances of ſackecloth and aſhes adioyned, doe they ſignifie penance and affliction of the body, or onely amendment of life, as you would haue the word to ſignifie? Saint Baſil ſaith, in Pſal. 29. Sackecloth maketh for penance. For the fathers in old time ſitting in ſackecloth and aſhes, did penance. Vnleſſe you will tranſlate Saint Baſil alſo after your faſhion, whom you cannot any way tranſlate, but the ſenſe muſt needes be, penance, and, doing penance, Againe Saint Paul ſaith, You were made ſorry to penance, or, to repentance, ſay which you will: and, The ſorow which is according to God, worketh penance, or, repentance vnto ſalvation. Is not ſorow, and bitter mourning, and affliction, parts of penance? Did the inceſtuous man whom Saint Paul excommunicated, and afterward abſolved him becauſe of his exceeding ſorow and teares, for feare leſt hee might be overwhelmed with ſorow, did he, I ſay, change his minde onely, or amend his life, as you tranſlate the Greeke word, and interpret repentance? did hee not penance alſo for his fault, enioyned of the Apoſtle? When Saint Iohn the Baptiſt, and Saint Paul exhorteth the like, Doe fruits worthy of penance, or as you tranſlate, meete for repentance: Doe they not plainely ſignifie penitentiall workes, or the workes of penance? which is the very cauſe why Beza rather tranſlated in thoſe places, Doe the fruites meete for them that amend their liues, or, giue vs ſome other good cauſe, O yee Bezites, why your Maſter doth ſo fowly falſifie his tranſlation.

FVLK. 2. Such is your malicious frowardneſſe, that you will not vnderſtand reſipiſcentia, repentance, or amendment of life, a ſorrow or griefe of minde for the life paſt: which is teſtified ſometimes by outward ſignes of ſackecloth and aſhes, faſting and humbling of mens bodies, as in the texts of Math. 11. and Luk. 10. and divers other, is expreſſed. But ſhew vs that the wearing of ſackecloth and aſhes, is a ſatisfaction for the life paſt, or any part of amends to Gods iuſtice, or elſe you doe but trifle, and waſt the time. But Saint Baſil ſaith, that ſackecloth maketh for penance, &c. I marvell whether you read that ſaying in Baſil, and durſt for ſinne and ſhame alledge it for your popiſh penance: where hee plainely ſheweth the vſe and end of ſackecloth. Συνεργὸς εἰς μετάνοιαν ὁ σάκκος ταπεινώσεως σύμβολον. πάλαι γὰρ ἐν σάκκῳ οἱ πατέρες καὶ σποδῷ καθήμενοι μετενόησαν. Sackecloth is an helper vnto repentance, being a ſigne of humiliation, for of old time, the Fathers repented ſitting in ſackecloth and aſhes. This ſigne of humbling, or of ſubmiſſion, you haue cleane omitted. Thus you vſe to geld the Doctors ſayings, when you rehearſe them. Sackecloth therefore ſerveth to repentance, as a teſtimonie of ſorrow, and humbling of our ſelues before God, not as any ſatisfaction or amends for our ſinnes.

The

The reſt of the places that you cite, to prove, that ſorrow is a part of repentance, are altogether needleſſe, for wee alſo doe acknowledge the ſame. Our queſtion is not of ſorrow, but of ſatisfaction, to bee a part of repentance. Likewiſe the workes worthy, or meete for repentance, doe argue the repentance to bee vnfeigned, and vndiſſembled, but they prove not that by them a ſatisfaction is made for the ſinnes committed before repentance. For a new life, new manners, new fruites, muſt follow a minde, that is truely turned vnto God, and changed from delight in ſinne, to hate and abhorre ſinne; and to ſtudy vnto amendment of life.

MART. 3. Secondly, for the ſignification of this Greeke word, in all the Greeke Church, and Greeke fathers, even from S. Denys the Areopagite S. Pauls ſcholler, who muſt needs deduce it from the Scriptures and learne it of the Apoſtles: it is moſt evident, that they vſe this word for that penance which was done in the primitive Church, according to the penitentiall Canons, whereof all antiquity of Councels and Fathers, is full: inſomuch that Saint Denys reckoning up the three ſorts of perſons, that were excluded from ſeeing and participating of the divine myſteries of Chriſts body and blood, to wit, Catechumens, Penitents, and the poſſeſſed of ill ſpirits: for, Penitents, hee ſaith in the Greeke, οἱ ἐν μετανοίᾳ ὄντες, that is, ſuch as were in their courſe of penance, or had not yet done their full penance. Which penance Saint Auguſtine declareth thus: (Ho. 27. inter. 50. ho. & ep. 108.) Eſt pœnitentia gravior, &c. There is a more grievous and more mournefull penance, whereby properly they are called in the Church, that are Pœnitentes: removed alſo from partaking the Sacrament of the Altar. And the Greeke Eccleſiaſticall hiſtory thus: In the Church of Rome there is a manifeſt and knowne place for the POENITENTS, and in it they ſtand ſorrowfull, and as it were mourning, and when the Sacrifice is ended, being not made partakers thereof, with weeping and lamentation they caſt themſelves flat on the ground, then the Biſhop weeping alſo with compaſſion lifteth them up, and after a certaine time enjoyned, abſolveth them from their penance. This, the Prieſts, or Biſhops of Rome keep from the very beginning even vntill our time.

FVLK. 3. Although Denys, whoſe bookes are now extant, were no more Saint Pauls Diſciple, then hee was Saint Paul himſelfe: yet I will grant, that the publike teſtification of repentance, in ſuch as had openly fallen, was in the primitive Church, not onely called, μετάνοια, by a metonymie, but alſo, that the word of ſatisfaction was vſed, not that they had any meaning to ſatiſfy the iuſtice of God by ſuch externall workes, but that by thoſe outward tryalls of their repentance, the Church was ſatisfyed, which by their fall was offended, and the governours of the Church by ſuch ſignes of true ſorrow, and amendment, were perſwaded to receive them againe into the Congregation, from whence, vntill ſufficient triall had of their repentance, they were ſeparated and excluded. But this proveth not, that the inward repentance which God giveth, when hee turneth vs vnto him, hath in it any ſatisfaction for our ſinnes, which no ſacrifice was able to make, but onely the Lambe of God, which taketh away the ſinnes of the world. The places you cite, as well out of Denys, as of S. Auguſtine, and Sozomene, doe prove this that I ſay, to bee vnderſtood of publike ſignes of repentance, without that any ſatisfaction vnto Gods iuſtice, in thoſe times by ſuch penance, was intended.

MART. 4. In theſe wordes and other in the ſame Chapter, and in Socrates Greeke hiſtory, likewiſe when they ſpeake of Penitents, that confeſſed and lamented their ſinnes, that were enjoyned penance for the ſame, and did it: I would demand of our Engliſh Grecians, in what Greeke wordes they expreſſe all this. Doe they it not in the words which wee now ſpeake of, and which therefore are prooved moſt evidently to ſignify penance, and doing penance? Againe, when the moſt ancient Councell of Laodicea, Can. 2. ſaith. That the time of penance ſhould bee given to offenders, according to the proportion of the fault: And againe, Can. 9. That ſuch ſhall not communicate till a certaine time, but after they have done penance, and confeſſed their fault, then to bee received: And againe, Can. 19. After the Catechumens are gone out, that prayer bee made of the Penitents, or them that are in doing penance. And when the firſt Councell of Nice ſaith, Can. 12. about ſhortening or prolonging the dayes of penance, that they muſt well examine their purpoſe and manner of doing penance. That is, with what alacrity of minde, teares, patience, humilitie, good workes, they accompliſhed the ſame, and accordingly to deale more mercifully with them, as is there expreſſed in the Councell: when Saint Bazil, Can. 1. ad Amphiloch. ſpeaketh after the ſame ſort: when Saint Chryſoſtome calleth the ſacke-cloth, and faſting of the Ninivites for certaine dayes, Tot dierum pœnitentiam, ſo many dayes penance: in all theſe places, I would gladly know of our Engliſh Grecians, whether theſe ſpeeches of penance and doing penance, are not expreſſed by the ſaid Greeke wordes, which they will in no caſe ſo to ſignify.

FVLK. 4. A matter of great weight I promiſe you, to enquire of our Engliſh Grecians, in what Greeke wordes they expreſſe all this. Verily, in the ſame Greeke wordes which ſignify repentance, pentance, or repenting, and ſo may bee expreſſed in Engliſh: neither is there any thing in any of the Councells or Doctours, by you cited or quoted, that hath any other intention, then I have before expreſſed. The words of penance, and doing penance, if you meant the ſame by them, that we and you doe by repenting and repentance, we would not ſtrive with you for tearmes: but that you have another meaning in them, appeareth by this that you tranſlate the ſame word pœnitentia, commonly penance, as when it is agere pœnitentiam, but when it is ſaid that God doeth dare pœnitentiam, then you tranſlate it repentance. Whereby it appeareth, you meane the penance which you would haue men to doe, is not that repentance which is the gift of God. Elſe why ſay you not, Acts 5. that God hath exalted Chriſt to be Prince and Saviour, to give penance to Iſrael, and remiſſion of ſinnes, if penance and repentance were all one? But you ſay repentance. Alſo, Acts 11. God then to the Gentiles hath given repentance to life, where the word is pœnitentia in both places. As alſo, 2 Tim, 2 where you ſay: leaſt ſometime God give them repentance to know the trueth. Of this repentance which God giveth unto life, and remiſſion of ſinnes withall, ſatisfaction is no part: of publike repentance ſo called, when indeede it was a publike teſtification, that God had given inward repentance, we acknowledge ſatisfaction to the Church, and to the judgement of the governours thereof to be a part.

pentance,

MART. 5. Or, I would alſo aske them, whether in theſe places they will tranſlate, repentance, and amendment of life, where there is mentioned a preſcript time of ſatisfaction, for their fault, by ſuch and ſuch penall meanes: whether there bee any preſcript times of penance or amendment of life to continue ſo long, and no longer: if not, then muſt it needes bee tranſlated, penance, and doing penance, *which is longer or ſhorter according to the fault, and manner of doing the ſame. I may repent in a moment, and amend my life at one inſtant, and this repentance and amendment ought to continue for ever. But the holy Councells and Fathers ſpeake of a thing to bee done for certaine yeares or dayes, and to bee releaſed at the Biſhops diſcretion: this therefore is penance, and not repentance onely or amendment of life, and is expreſſed by the foreſaid Greeke wordes, as alſo by * an other equivalent thereunto.*

FULK. 5. I have anſwered before, wee may in all theſe places uſe the word repentance, as well as this word repent, the noune as well as the verbe. And if wee would uſe the ſame figure, which they doe, that call ſuch externall teſtimonies of repentance, μετάνοια, wee might uſe the word amendment of life alſo. The preſcript time of ſatisfaction, I have ſaid was to the Church, which was offended and ſlaundered by their open offences, and to the judgement of the Biſhop and Elders, which had the appoynting or releaſing of ſuch time of repentance. The other Greek word, which you ſay is equivalent to μετανοεῖν, namely, ὑποπίπτω, ſignifyeth to fall downe under, or kneele before one, as Tertullian expoundeth the phraſe, Presbyteris advolui, aris Dei adgeniculari, for one to be caſt downe in humble manner before the Elders, to kneele before the Altars of God. Hereof ὑπόπτωσις is uſed, for that ſubmiſſion which publike Penitents did ſhew to teſtify their inward humility, and by a metonymie of the ſigne, is taken for that which it doeth ſignify, namely, humble and hearty repentance, which is approved before men, by ſuch outward geſtures, and tokens of inward griefe and humility of minde. So is publike faſting in token of repentance, by Tertullian called ταπεινοφρόνησις, becauſe it is a ſigne and token of humiliation and ſubmiſſion of minde, which muſt of neceſſity accompany true repentance. Wherefore it is untruely ſaid, that ὑποπίπτω is equivalent with μετανοέω, which ſignifyeth to change the minde from evil to good, whereas the other expreſſeth but an outward geſture, to ſignify inward repentance, and that in open repentance onely.

MART. 6. I omit that this very phraſe, to doe penance, is word for word expreſſed thus in Greeke, ποιεῖν μετάνοιαν: And Auſonius the Chriſtian Poet (whom I may as well alledge once, and uſe it not, as they doe Virgil, Terence, and the like very often) uſeth this Greeke word ſo evidently in this ſenſe, that Beza ſaith, he did it for his verſe ſake, becauſe another word would not ſtand ſo well in the verſe. But the Reader (I truſt) ſeeth the uſe and ſignification of theſe Greeke wordes, by the teſtimony of the Greeke Fathers themſelves, moſt auncient and approved.

Metanoea. Annot. in 3. Mat. v. 2.

FULK. 6. You may well omit that which beareth no credite of antiquity. The Liturgie is not ſo auncient as he whoſe name it beareth, the Rubrike much leſſe. That Beza ſaith of Auſonius, uſing μετανοία in that ſenſe you meane, it ſeemeth you doe not underſtand him. For he ſaith, that μετανοία is never uſed but in good part. So that in my judgement, Auſonius would have ſaid rather μεταμέλεια then μετανοία, in that his known Epigram, if the meaſure of his Pentameter verſe would have borne it.

MART. 7. Thirdly, that the auncient Latine Interpreter doeth commonly ſo tranſlate theſe words throughout the new Teſtament, that needeth no proofe, neither will I ſtand upon it (though it be greater authority then they have any to the contrary) becauſe the Adverſaries know it, and miſlike it, and for that and other like poynts it is belike, that one of them ſaith it is the worſt tranſlation of all, whereas

μετανοεῖν. Pœnitentiam agere.

FULK. 7. The Latine Interpreter (as it appeareth in many places) had no perfect underſtanding of the Greeke tongue: but in the Latine it is manifeſt, that hee was very rude, inſomuch that Lindanus thinketh hee was a Grecian, rather then a Latiniſt. Yea hee hath a whole Chapter thus intituled: That the Authours of the vulgar tranſlation of the Pſalter and the new Teſtament, were Grecians, Nec Latinè ſatis eruditos, and not ſufficiently learned in the Latine tongue. By which teſtimony it may bee gathered, what credite is to bee given to the Latine tearmes that hee uſeth, differing from the Latine phraſe uſed by them that are learned in that tongue. I could bring example of many tearmes and phraſes, that you your ſelfe are aſhamed to follow, which pretend ſo preciſe a tranſlation out of the vulgar Latine. What my miſlike is of that tranſlation, and how contrary to that which Beza ſaith thereof, I have opened elſewhere to your ſhame. Onely here I muſt tell you, that albeit in reſpect of learning, I diſdaine not to acknowledge my ſelfe Bezaes ſcholler (of whom nevertheleſſe I have learned very little) yet I would you ſhould know, I am no ſtrangers man, though you, and ſuch Traytours as you are, had rather bee the Popes men, then true ſervants to the Queene of England.

MART. 8. I come to the fourth proofe, which is, that all the Latine Church, and the glorious Doctours thereof, have alwayes read as the vulgar Latine Interpreter tranſlateth theſe wordes, and expound the ſame of penance, and doing penance. To name one or two for an example, S. Auguſtines place is very notable, which therefore I ſet downe, and may bee tranſlated thus: Men doe penance before Baptiſme, of their former ſinnes, yet ſo, that they bee alſo baptized, Peter ſaying thus; DOE YE PENANCE, AND LET EVERY ONE BE BAPTIZED. Men alſo doe penance, if after penance they doe ſo ſinne, that they deſerve to bee excommunicated and reconciled againe, as in all Churches they doe which bee called PŒNITENTES. For of ſuch penance ſpake Saint Paul, 2 Cor. 12. 21. ſaying, THAT I LAMENT NOT MANY OF THEM WHICH BEFORE HAVE SINNED, AND HAVE NOT DONE PENANCE FOR THEIR VNCLEANENESSE. Wee have alſo in the Acts, that Simon Magus being baptized, was admoniſhed by Peter TO DOE PENANCE for his grievous ſinne. There is alſo in manner a dayly penance of the good and humble beleevers, in which wee knocke our breſts, ſaying, FORGIVE VS OVR DEBTS. For theſe (veniall and dayly offences) faſts, and almes, and prayers, are watchfully uſed, and humbling our ſoules, wee ceaſe not after a ſort to doe daily penance.

Ep. 108. Agunt homines pœnitentiam, Act. 2.

Sicut agunt qui pœnitentes appellantur.

Act. 8. 18. Vt ageret pœnitentiam.

Quotidianam agere pœnitentiam.

FULK. 8. That all the Latine Church, and the glorious Doctours thereof, have alwayes read as the vulgar Latine Interpreter tranſlateth, you prove by an example of Saint Auguſtine: in which alſo it is manifeſt, that Saint Auguſtine underſtandeth the phraſe not onely for the exerciſe of publike penitents, but alſo for the inward repentance of the heart. But becauſe you challenge all the Doctours of the Latine Church, for the uſe of this word pœnitentia, I pray you conſider what Tertullian writeth againſt Marcion, who cavilled about the repenting aſcribed in Scripture to God. In Græco ſono, &c. In the Greeke ſound the name of repentance is made, not of confeſſion of an offence, but of changing of the minde. And in his book De pœnitentia, where he treateth even of publike repentance, citing the teſtimony of John Baptiſt, hee ſaith, Non tacet Iohannes; pœnitentiam initote dicens, Iohn holdeth not his peace, ſaying beginne repentance. Hilarius alſo ſheweth what pœnitentia doeth ſignify, when hee ſaith, Peccati pœnitentia eſt ab eo quod pœnitendum intellexeris deſtitiſſe: Repentance of ſinne, is to have ceaſed from that which you have underſtood that it muſt bee repented of. Likewiſe of the Novatians that deny repentance, Cùm ad pœnitentiam per quam à peccatis deſiſtitur: When unto repentance by which men ceaſe from ſinnes, the Doctrine of the Law, Prophets, Goſpells, Apoſtles, exhorteth them that have ſinned. And even your vulgar Interpreter in S. Marke ſaith Pœnitimini, for that hee ſaith in Mathew, Agite pœnitentiam, by which it is certaine, that hee meaneth one thing in both, namely, repentance of heart, and no ſatisfaction of worke.

In Pſal. 137.

MART. 9. In theſe words of S. Auguſtine it is plaine that he ſpeaketh of painfull or penitentiall works for ſatisfaction of ſinnes, that is, penance: againe, that there are three kindes of the ſame, one before Baptiſme, another after Baptiſme for great offences, greater and longer; the other daily for common and little veniall faults, which the beſt men alſo commit in this fraile nature. Againe, that the two former are ſignifyed and ſpoken of in the three places of Scripture by him alleadged. Where wee ſee, that he readeth altogether as the vulgar Interpreter tranſlateth, and expoundeth all three places of penance for ſinne, and ſo approveth that ſignification of the Greeke word. Yea in ſaying that for veniall ſinnes wee knocke our breſt, faſt, give almes, and pray, and ſo ceaſe not quotidianam agere pœnitentiam; what doeth hee meane but daily penance and ſatisfaction? Reade alſo S. Cyprian (beſide other places) epiſt. 52. numb. 6. where his citations of Scripture are acccording to the old Latine Interpreter, and his expoſition according, of doing penance, and making ſatiſfaction for ſinnes committed. But I neede not proceede further in alledging either S.Cyprian or other auncient Fathers for this purpoſe, becauſe the adverſaries graunt it. Howbeit in what tearmes they graunt it, and how malepartly they accuſe all the auncient Fathers at once for the ſame, it ſhall not be amiſſe here to put downe their wordes.

FVLK. 9. Saint Auguſtine ſpeaketh nothing of ſatiſfaction for ſinnes, but as I have ſaid, of ſuch exerciſes as were appoynted by the Church, to teſtify their repentance. The occaſion of all theſe wordes was of one that was a Novation, who ſaid that Peter was not baptized, when hee was received into repentance after his denyall. And where he uſed this word, Egiſſe pœnitentiam, Saint Auguſtine denyeth, that he did open penance, as they that wee properly called pœnitentes. Quod autem dicitur Petrum egiſſe pœnitentiam: But where it is ſaid that Peter did penance, we muſt beware that he be not thought ſo to have done it, as they doe it in the Church, which are properly called Pœnitentes. And who can abide this, that we ſhould thinke that the chiefe of the Apoſtles is to be numbred among ſuch Penitents? For it repented him that he denyed Chriſt, which thing his teares did ſhew. Theſe words declare, that agere pœnitentiam with Saint Auguſtine, ſignifyeth to be inwardly repentant, as well as to doe thoſe externall workes, which are tokens of repentance. Alſo that teares, faſtings, and ſuch like, are arguments and ſignes of repentance before God, and not any part of that repentance indeed, and much leſſe any ſatiſfaction for ſinnes. Of this penance or repentance of S.Peter, S.Ambroſe ſaith, Lachrymas ejus lego, ſatiſfactionem non lego: I reade of his teares, I reade not of his ſatiſfaction. In that Auguſtine uſeth the words of the old Interpreter, it is no matter, for he uſeth alſo his meaning, : but this uſage of his, proveth not the antiquity of the vulgar Latine tranſlation, but contrariwiſe, it is certaine that Saint Auguſtine followed another tranſlation, for in the text, 2 Cor. 12. where your vulgar Latine hath, Super immunditia & fornicatione & impudicitia quam geſſerunt: S. Auguſtine readeth, Super immunditia & luxuria & fornicatione quam egerunt. That S.Cyprian uſeth the tearme agere pœnitentiam, and ſatiſfaction alſo, ſpeaking of publike repentance, it ſhall be eaſily graunted, but in none other ſenſe then I have often declared. But where you ſay that his citations are according to the Latine Interpreter, it is falſe: for Apoc 2. your vulgar text is, Memor eſto itaque unde excideris, & age pœnitentiam, & prima opera fac. But Cyprians citation is, Memento unde cecideris, & age pœnitentiam, & fac priora opera. Likewiſe *Pſ.*88. you reade in the vulgar Latine, Viſitabo in virga iniquitates eorum, & in verberibus peccata eorum. But Cyprian citeth thus, Viſitabo in virga facinora eorum, & in flagellis delicta eorum. But that his expoſition is of any other penance, then of open penance, or of any other ſatiſfaction, then of ſatiſfaction to the Church, your adverſaries will not grant you, although they may grant you, that he aſcribed too much unto ſuch externall tokens of repentance.

In Luc.lib.10. cap.22.

MART. 10. Whereas the reverend, godly, and learned Father, Edmund Campion, *had objected in his booke, the Proteſtants accuſation of S.*Cyprian, for the matter of penance; the good man that anſwereth for both Vniverſities, ſaith thus to that poynt: But whereas Magdeburgenſes (Lutheran writers of that city) complaine that he depraved the doctrine of repentance, they doe not feigne or forge this crime againſt him, but utter or diſcloſe it: for all men underſtand that it was too true. Neither was this Cyprians fault alone, that he wrote of repentance many things incommodiouſly and unwiſely, but all the moſt holy Fathers almoſt at that time were in the ſame errour. For whiles they deſired to reſtraine mens manners by ſevere lawes, they made the greateſt part of repentance to conſiſt in certaine externall diſcipline of life, which themſelves preſcribed. In that they puniſhed vice ſeverely, they were to be borne withall: but that by this meanes they thought to pay the paines due for ſinnes, and to ſatiſfy Gods juſtice, and to procure to themſelves aſſured impunity, remiſſion and juſtice, therein they derogated not a litle from Chriſts death, attributed too much to their owne inventions, and finally depraved repentance. Thus farre the anſwerer.

If Campion was ſuch a reverend, godly, and learned Father among you, whoſe levity, treaſon, and ignorance in Divinitie, hath beene ſo lately tryed among us, wee know how to eſteeme of the whole packe of you. Whoſe learning if it had beene never ſo great, as by the time of his ſtudy in Divinity, and the trade of his travelling life, ſince he gave himſelfe thereto, no wiſe man can eſteeme that it was great: yet being ſo lately attainted of high treaſon againſt the Prince, and the ſtate, none that is honeſt, and dutifull, would have beſtowed upon him the commendation of godlineſſe. As for that which Maſter Whitaker hath anſwered againſt him, although not in the name of both the Vniverſities, by whom hee was never authorized to bee their advocate, yet ſo, as neither of both the Vniverſities neede bee aſhamed of his doing: foraſmuch as I know hee hath confuted your quarrells already, I will leave you in this matter, wholly to contend againſt him; aſſuring you of my credite, (which I know is but ſmall with you) that hee ſhall be found ſufficient cient to match with as ſtrong an adverſary, as the Seminarie of Rhemes can make out againſt him.

MART. 11. Marke how hee accuſeth the Fathers in generall, of no leſſe crime, then taking away from Chriſt the merits of his paſſion, attributing it to their owne penance and diſcipline. Which if they did, I marvell he ſhould call them in this very place, where hee beginneth to charge them with ſuch a crime, ſanctiſſimos Patres, moſt holy Fathers. The truth is, hee might as well charge Saint Paul with the ſame, when hee ſaith, Wee ſhall be the heires of God, and coheires with Chriſt, yet ſo, if we ſuffer with him, that wee may alſo be glorifyed with him. S. Paul ſaith our ſuffering alſo with Chriſt is neceſſary to ſalvation: M. Whitaker ſaith, it is a derogation to Chriſts ſuffering. Chriſt faſted for us, therefore our faſting maketh nothing to ſalvation. Hee prayed for us, was ſcourged, and dyed for us: therefore our prayer, ſcourging, and impriſonment, yea and death it ſelfe for his ſake, make nothing to life everlaſting, and if wee ſhould thinke it doth, we derogate from Chriſts paſſion. Alaſſe, is this the Divinity of England now adayes? to make the ſimple beleeve that the auncient Fathers and holy men of the primitive Church, by their ſevere life and voluntary penance for their ſinnes, and for the love of Chriſt, did therein derogate from Chriſts merites and paſsions?

Rom.1.

FVLK. 11. If the Fathers at ſome time, by attributing too much to externall diſcipline were carryed ſomewhat too farre, whereby not a little was derogated from the merites of Chriſts death, yet they are not charged directly to have impugned the dignity thereof, which, when their eyes were attentively bent upon it, they did worthily magnify and extoll. That wee muſt bee conformable to the ſuffering of Chriſt, if wee will be made partakers of his glory, it is the Divinity that is now taught in England: but that any ſufferings, or any good workes of ours whatſoever, doe merite any part of eternall glory, the Divinity preached in England doth moſt juſtly abhorre. But that the holy men of the primitive Church, by their ſevere life, and hearty repentance for their ſinnes, teſtifyed by teares, faſting, and other chaſtiſing of their fleſh, for the love of Chriſt, did derogate from Chriſts merits and paſſion, it is a lewd ſlaunder out of France, from the trayterous Seminarie at Rhemes, but no part of the Divinity of England, allowed by the Vniverſities of Cambridge, and Oxford, as you would make ſimple men beleeve that it is.

MART. 12. I may not ſtand upon this poynt, neither neede I, The principall matter is proved by the adverſaries confeſſion, that the holy Doctors ſpake, wrote, and thought of penance, and doing penance, as we doe, in the ſame tearmes both Greeke and Latine: and with Catholikes it is alwayes a good argument, and we deſire no better proofe then this. The Proteſtants grant, all the ancient Fathers were of our opinion, and they ſay it was their errour. For, the firſt part being true, it is madneſſe to diſpute, whether all the auncient Fathers erred, or rather the new Proteſtants, as it is more then madneſſe to thinke that Luther alone might ſee the trueth, more then a thouſand Auguſtines, a thouſand Cyprians, a thouſand Churches, which notwithſtanding the palpable abſurdity thereof, yet M. Whitaker avoucheth it very ſolemnly.

FVLK. 12. The confeſſion you charge the adverſaries to make, is of your owne forgery, not of their conceſſion. But for want of other proofe, it was the beſt you could doe, to feigne our grant, but you are not able to ſhew our deedes thereof in writing. As neither of the reſt, that the auncient Fathers were all of our opinion, by the Proteſtants grant, that Luther might ſee more of himſelfe alone, then &c. But whatſoever M. Whitaker hath avouched, I leave to himſelfe to anſwer.

MART. 13. And yet againe (that the Reader may ſee how they play faſt and looſe at their pleaſure) this is the man, that when hee hath given us all the Fathers on our ſide, not onely in the matter of penance, but alſo in invocation of Saints, and in divers other errours, as he calleth them: the very ſame man (I ſay) in the very next leafes almoſt, reneweth M.* Iewels old bragge, that we have not one cleare ſentence for us of any one Father, within ſixe hundred yeares after Chriſt: and againe, that the ſame faith raigneth now in England, which theſe Fathers profeſſed. What ſaith M. Whitaker? Not their faith concerning penance, or invocation of Saints (as your ſelfe confeſſe) or other ſuch like errours of theirs, as you tearme them. Why are you ſo forgetfull, or rather ſo impudent to ſpeake contraries in ſo little a roome? Such ſimple anſwering will not ſerve your adverſaries learned booke, which you in vaine goe about by fooliſh Rhetorike to diſgrace, when the world ſeeth you are driven to the wall, and either can ſay nothing, or doe ſay that which confuteth it ſelf with the evident abſurdity thereof.

Pag 114.117.

FVLK. 13. Maſter Whitaker is not ſo inconſiderate, to play faſt and looſe, as you are intemperate and untrue in accuſing him. Howbeit, there is no doubt, but hee will meete you, and handle you, according to your vertues. But ſeeing you give ſuch high commendation to Campions pamphlet, as that you call it a learned booke, (wherein beſide a little ranke Rhetorike, more meete for a boy that learneth to practiſe his figures, then for a grave Divine to uſe in ſo ſerious a cauſe, there is nothing that any learned man may thinke worthy of any anſwer) we may well perceive what you count learning, and what be the pillars of your Popiſh Religion. The bookes are both in print, let the world judge of both indifferently.

MART. 14. But to leave M. Whitaker (who is a ſimple companion to ſit in judgement upon all the ancient Doctours, and to condemne them of haynous errour in the matter of penance) I truſt the Reader ſeeth by the former diſcourſe, the uſuall Eccleſiaſticall ſignification, and conſequently both the true and falſe tranſlation of the foreſaid Greeke wordes: Not that they muſt or may alwayes be tranſlated penance, or doing penance: for in the Scriptures God is ſaid pœnitentiam agere, who cannot bee ſaid to doe penance, no more then hee can be ſaid to amend his life, as the Proteſtants commonly tranſlate this word. Therefore I conclude, that this word being ſpoken of God in the Scriptures, is no more prejudice againſt our tranſlation of doing penance, then it is againſt theirs of amendment of life. Likewiſe when it is ſpoken of the reprobate and damned in hell, who as they cannot doe penance properly, ſo much leſſe amend their lives.

FVLK. 14. M. Whitakers taketh not upon him to ſit in judgement of all the Doctours, although hee may note ſome errour or other in every one of them, whoſe writings of any ſubſtance doe remayne with us. But after all this brabling about pœnitentiam agere, you come home, and confeſſe, that it muſt not alwayes bee tranſlated doing of penance, becauſe God himſelfe (after your vulgar tranſlation) is ſaid agere pœnitentiam, which with the Septuaginta is μετανοεῖν. No man could better have confuted your vaine quarrelling, then you have done your ſelfe: for by this it is manifeſt, that the vulgar Interpreter did not meane by agere pœnitentiam, any more then wee doe by repentance. And therefore the beſt, and the moſt ſimple tranſlation is, to uſe the wordes repent, and repentance. And the Greeke word, as Tertullian telleth you, ſignifyeth changing of minde, which may bee without acknowledging of errour. Although it cannot yet bee properly ſaid of God, that hee changeth his minde, when he is ſaid to repent. As likewiſe it is not neceſſary, that they which bee in hell ſhould amend their lives, when it is ſaid they repent. Neither doe wee tranſlate the word ſimply, amendment of life, but ſhew that amendment of life muſt neceſſarily follow in them that truely repent, as the Scripture teacheth us.

MART. 15. Moreover it is purpoſely againſt penance, that they tranſlate amiſſe, both in Daniel, and Eſdras, whoſe voluntary mourning, faſting, afflicting of themſelves for their owne ſinnes, and the peoples, is notoriouſly ſet forth in their bookes. There they make the Angel ſay thus to Daniel: From the firſt day that thou diddeſt ſet thine heart TO HUMBLE thy ſelfe. What is this humbling himſelfe? Can wee gather any penance thereby? none at all: but if they had ſaid according to the Hebrew, Greeke, and Latine, from the firſt day that thou diddeſt ſet thine heart TO AFFLICT thy ſelfe, wee ſhould eaſily conceive workes of penance, and it would include Daniels mourning, faſting from fleſh, wine, and other meates, abſtaining from ointments the ſpace of the days mentioned in the beginning of the ſame Chapter.

Eſd.cap,56. Dan.10. Verſe 12. Bib.1579. κακωθῆναι. Vt te affligeres להתענות

FVLK. 15. The word humbling doeth as well comprehend all thoſe excerciſes of faſting, and mourning, which the holy men did uſe, to teſtify their repentance, and to provoke themſelves to hearty repentance for their ſinnes, and the ſinnes of the people, as the word afflicting. Another tranſlation calleth it chaſtening. The Hebrew word ſignifyeth to bring low, or caſt downe, therefore it is ſpoken of women that are carnally knowne, which is without affliction. But when it is uſed of ſuch godly exerciſes, it declareth for what end they ſerve, namely to humble and bring low our proud rebellious nature, and to bee ſignes of humiliation, as S. Baſil ſaith of ſack-cloth and aſhes, not to bee by puniſhment, ſatisfaction for our ſinnes. Your own vulgar Latine Interpreter tranſlateth the ſame word, Gen. 16.v.19. humiliate, humble thy ſelfe, or ſubmit thy ſelfe under thy Miſtris hand, and oftentimes in that ſenſe: And even in this ſenſe of humbling, by ſignes of repentance, he uſeth the word humiliatus, ſpeaking of Achab, 2 Reg.21.v.29. where the Hebrew word is otherwiſe. And Pſ.35.v.13. the ſame word vinnethi he tranſlateth humiliabam: And in their ſickeneſſe I put on ſackcloth and humbled my ſoule with faſting. So doeth he oftentimes, when ſuch bodily chaſtiſement is ſignifyed thereby. Wherefore this, as all the reſt, is a falſe and unreaſonable quarrell againſt our tranſlation, as though by it we meant to deny the uſe of afflicting or chaſtening the body, with faſting, mourning, and other like exerciſes of repentance.

MART. 16. Againe, in all their Bibles of the yeares 1562. 1577. 1579. they make Eſdras, c.9.v.5, after his exceeding great penance, ſay onely this, About the evening ſacrifice I aroſe up from my HEAVINESSE; neither tranſlating the Hebrew, which is the ſame word that is in Daniel, not the Greeke, which ſignifyeth affliction and humiliation.

ἀπὸ τῆς ταπεινώσεώς μου. מתעניתי

FVLK. 16. Firſt your Greeke text of Eſdras, confirmeth our tranſlation of Daniel. Secondly, I ſay, that by this heavineſſe, they meane all that humiliation and affliction, whereof he ſpake before, which is eaſy for every man to underſtand, that is not blinded with malice, and what other thing is affliction, but heavineſſe, griefe, and ſorrow, whereof the holy man ſpake twice before? I thinke no wiſe man can tell.

Againe,

MART. 17. Againe, in the Prophet Malachie, (c.3.14.) they tranſlate thus: Ye have ſaid it is but vaine to ſerve God, and what profit is it that wee have kept his Commandements, and walked HUMBLY before his face? What is this ſame humbly? when wee ſay in Engliſh, he goeth humbly: we imagine or conceive no more but this, that he is an humble man, and behaveth himſelfe humbly: but they know very well, that the Prophet ſpeaketh of another thing: and if it had pleaſed them to have tranſlated the Hebrew word fully, and ſignificantly, in the ſenſe of the holy Ghoſt, they might have learned by conference of other places, where the ſame Hebrew word is uſed that it ſignifyeth ſuch heavineſſe, ſadneſſe, ſorrowfulneſſe, and affliction, as men expreſſe by blacke mourning garments, the nature of the word importing blackneſſe, darkneſſe, lowring, and the like. Which is farre more then walking humbly, and which is wholly ſuppreſſed by ſo tranſlating. See the Pſalm.34.v.14. Pſal.37.v.7. Pſ.41.v.10. Where the Prophet uſeth many words and ſpeeches, to expreſſe ſorrowfull penance: and for that which in Latine is alwayes, contriſtatus, in Greeke a word more ſignificant, in Hebrew it is the ſame kinde of word that they tranſlate humbly. Whereas indeede this word hath no ſignification of humility properly, no not of that humility I meane, which is rather to bee called humiliation, or affliction, as the Greek words imply. But it ſignifyeth properly, the very manner, countenance, geſture, habite of a penſive or forlorne man: and if they will ſay, that they ſo tranſlate it in other places, the more is their fault, that knowing the nature of the word, they will notwithſtanding ſuppreſſe the force and ſignification thereof in any one place, and ſo tranſlate it, that the Reader muſt needes take it in another ſenſe, and cannot poſſibly conceive that which the word importeth, for, to walke humbly, ſoundeth in all Engliſh eares, the vertue of humility, which this word doeth never ſignifie, and not humility or humiliation by affliction, which it may ſignify, though ſecondarily, and by deduction onely.

קרו. πενθῶν κ, σκυθρωπάζων. קרו קרונ יח κακωθέντες, ταπεινωθέντες,

FVLK. 17. What a many of vaine wordes are here ſpent, to make a vaine cavill ſeeme to bee of ſome value? what the etymologie of the Hebrew word is, the Tranſlatours knew before you were borne. But what the word ſignifyeth here, Pagnine is ſufficient to teach both you, and them, who thus interpreteth it, in obſcuro, id eſt, obſcurè, id eſt, humiliter. In the darke, that is, darkely, that is humbly. Your vulgar Latine Tranſlatour calleth it, triſtes, which is as farre from your pretended penance, as humility. The Septuaginta tranſlate the word ἱκέται, which ſignifyeth ſervile or ſervants. Benedict Arias expoundeth it, ſupplices, humble. And to put all out of quarrelling, the Antitheſis or oppoſition of the proude and arrogant, in the next verſe following, proveth, that in this verſe, they ſpeake of humility, which is contrary to pride, and not of the tokens of repentance, which are mourning apparell, and ſuch like.

MART. 18. Againe, what is it elſe but againſt penance and ſatisfaction, that they deface theſe uſuall and knowne wordes of Daniel to the King, Redime eleemoſynis peccata tua, Redeeme thy ſinnes with almes: altering and tranſlating it thus, Breake off thy ſinnes by righteouſneſſe. Firſt, the Greeke is againſt them, which is word for word according to the vulgar and common reading: Secondly, the Chaldee word which they tranſlate, Breake off, by Munſters owne judgement in lexico Chald. ſignifyeth rather, and more principally, to redeeme. Thirdly, the other word which they tranſlate, righteouſneſſe, in the Scriptures ſignifyeth alſo, eleemoſynam, as the Greeke Interpreters, tranſlate it, Deut.6. and 24. and it is moſt plaine in Saint Mathew, where our Saviour ſaid (Math.6.v.1.) Beware you doe not your juſtice before men. Which is in other Greeke copies, your almes. And Saint Auguſtine proveth it by the very text. For (ſaith hee) as though a man might aske, what juſtice hee addeth? WHEN THOU DOST AN ALMES-DEEDE. He ſignifyed therefore that almes are the workes of juſtice. And in the Pſalme they are made one, Hee diſtributed, hee gave to the poore, his juſtice remaineth for ever and ever. Which Beza tranſlateth, his beneficence or liberality remaineth, &c. Againe, Saint Hierome, a ſufficient Doctour to tell the ſignification of the Hebrew or Chaldee wordes, both tranſlateth it ſo, and expoundeth it ſo in his commentary. Moreover, the words that immediately follow in Daniel, interprete it ſo unto us, And thy iniquities with mercies to the poore. Laſtly, Beza himſelfe ſaith, that by the name of juſtice with the Hebrewes, is alſo ſignifyed beneficence or beneficialneſſe to the poore, yea and that in this place of Daniel it is ſpecially taken for almes. So that wee ſee there is no impediment, neither in the Chaldee nor Greeke, why they might not have ſaid, as the Church of God alwayes hath ſaid, Redeeme thy ſins with almes, and thy iniquities with mercies to the poore: But their hereſie will not ſuffer them to ſpeake after the Catholike manner, that almes and mercifull deedes are a redemption, ranſome, and ſatisfaction for ſinnes.

Dan.4.24 ἐν ἐλεημοσύναις λύτρωσαι. בצרקה ׳ פוק δικαιοσύνην. ἐλεημοσύνην. In Pſa.49.v.5: Pſalm.111. Annot.in Math.6.v.1. 2 Cor.9.

FVLK. 18. Againſt Popiſh penance and ſatisfaction, there is no doubt, but the Tranſlatours were vehemently affected, yet in this tranſlation they have uſed no prejudice againſt repentance, and the true fruites thereof, but rather more ſtraightly have urged the ſame. For firſt, whereas in the vulgar Latine text there is no word of repenting from ſinnes: or forſaking, of ſinnes, our Tranſlatour uſing the tearme of breaking off his ſinnes, ſignifyeth that all almes, and other apparant good deedes without repentance and breaking off the cauſe of the former ſinfull life, are in vaine and unprofitable. Secondly, where the vulgar Tranſlatour uſeth the word of redeeming, or buying out, which might bring the King into vaine ſecurity, to think hee might ſatiſfy for his ſinnes, without repentance, by giving of almes, which is a ſmall penance for a King: our Tranſlatours tell him, that hee muſt breake off his ſinnes, before any thing that he doth be acceptable to God. Thirdly, whereas the vulgar Interpreter requireth of him nothing but alms, and mercy to the poore, which was a very eaſy thing for him to performe: our Tranſlators enjoyne him righteouſneſſe, which comprehendeth all vertues, and is a thouſand fold harder penance for ſuch a mighty Monarch, then giving of almes, and that to poore folkes, which hee ſhould never feele. Fourthly, the wordes are plaine for our tranſlation: for pherak the Chaldee verb ſignifyeth as properly and as principally to diſſolve פרק or breake off, as, to deliver or redeeme. Neither is Munſters judgement otherwiſe, although hee give the other ſignification firſt, which is a miſerable argument, to prove, that it ſignifyeth rather, and more principally to redeeme. But if any ſignification were more principall then other, it were more reaſon to ſay, that pherak ſignifyeth rather and more principally, to breake or diſſolve, פרק because the word ſignifyeth ſo in the Hebrew tongue, from whence the Chaldee is derived. And indeede delivering, is a kinde of diſſolving or breaking from him, to whom hee was before addict or bound. So that the verbe helpeth you nothing, but rather maketh more againſt you. The other word, although very ſeldome by Synecdoche, it bee taken for almes, yet every boy almoſt in Cambridge knoweth, that it ſignifyeth properly and principally, univerſall juſtice, or all righteouſneſſe: therefore the Chaldee text is plaine for our tranſlation, and enforced for yours of almes. Being againſt all reaſon, that the Prophet ſhould exhort the King to giving almes, before he had exhorted him to repentance, and forſaking of his ſinnes. Beſide that, it is contrary to the whole ſcope of the Scriptures, to teach any other ſatisfaction or redemption from ſinne, then the death and paſſion of Chriſt. But where you tell us of Saint Hieromes tranſlation, it were ſomewhat worth if you could ſhew it. The vulgar Latine text wee may not graunt you to bee Saint Hieroms, as for his Commentary, teacheth not the word of redeeming, which is the principall word in controverſie. And indeede it is a very abſurd kinde of ſpeech, to ſay, redeeme thy ſinnes, or deliver thy ſinnes, for pherak ſignifyeth none otherwiſe to redeeme, פרק then to deliver, whereas, if hee had meant, as you thinke, hee ſhould have ſaid rather, redeeme thy ſoule from ſinnes. Chriſt himſelfe the authour of our redemption, is not ſaid to have redeemed our ſins with his bloud, but to have redeemed us from our ſins by his bloud.

MART. 19. And what a miſerable humour is it in theſe caſes, to fly as farre as they can from the auncient received ſpeech of holy Scripture, that hath ſo many yeares ſounded in all faithfull eares, and to invent new tearmes and phraſes, when the originall text both Greeke and Hebrew favoureth the one as much or more, then the other: as, that they chuſe to ſay in the Epiſtle to Titus (where the Apoſtle exceedingly exhorteth to good workes) maintaine good workes, and ſhew forth good workes, rather then according to the auncient Latine tranſlation, bonis operibus præeſſe, to be chiefe and principall in doing good works, which is the very true and uſuall ſignification of the Greek word, and implyeth a vertuous emulation among good men, who ſhall doe moſt good workes, or excell in that kinde. But they that looke to bee ſaved by faith onely, no marvell if neither their doings, nor tranſlations tend to any ſuch excellency. προΐστασθαι καλῶν ἔργων.

FVLK. 19. What a miſerable humour is it, when the trueth is plainely revealed, by knowledge of the tongues, which was hidden from many of the auncient Fathers, to delight rather in errour which is old, then in trueth which is newly diſcovered? The word προΐστασθαι in the Epiſtle to Titus wee tranſlate alſo to excell, and it may ſignify, either to ſhew forth, to maintaine or to excell. And therefore your wrangling is vaine and without reaſon. For that Chriſtian men ought with all diligent labour to excell in good workes, it is always acknowledged of us, although they muſt not looke to bee ſaved by their workes, no nor by their faith onely, if their faith bee not fruitfull of good workes. Such collections as theſe and much better, it were no hard matter to make a great number againſt you, to prove that you are enemies to faith, to repentance, to good works, and to God himſelfe.

MARTIN.

CHAP. XIIII.

Hereticall tranſlation againſt the holy SACRAMENTS, namely, BAPTISME and CONFESSION.

ANother ſequell of their onely faith is, that the Sacraments alſo helpe nothing toward our ſalvation, and therefore they partly take them cleane away, partly deprive them of all grace, vertue, and efficacy, making them poore and beggarly elements, either worſe, or no better then thoſe of the old Law.

FVLKE.

THat the Sacraments helpe nothing toward our ſalvation, is another of Martines ſlanders, no aſſertion of ours. For ſeeing that wee hold that the Sacraments are ſeales of Gods promiſes, to confirme our faith, by which wee are juſtifyed before him, how can wee affirme, that they helpe nothing to ſalvation? But this is the property of lyars and ſlanderers, when they have nothing of trueth to charge their adverſaries, then they either invent that which was never ſaid or done by them, or elſe they violently draw out of their ſayings or doings by depraving them, ſome colour of matter to ſerve for a ſhew of their ſlanders. So doeth our wrangler in this place after a flatte lye ſolemnely advouched againſt us, that wee ſay, the Sacraments give no grace, Ex opere operato, of the worke wrought, hee frameth his ſpiders webbe, firſt that wee deprive them of all grace, vertue, and efficacy. Becauſe wee doe not include grace, vertue, and efficacy, within the externall Elements, or the miniſtery of man about them, but aſcribe the ſame to the mighty working of Gods ſpirit in his choſen Children, which worketh all his gifts in all men according to the good pleaſure of his owne will. Secondly, that wee make the Sacraments poore and beggarly Elements. And thirdly, either worſe or no better then thoſe of the old Law. The ſpirituall matter indeed of the Sacraments of both the Teſtaments, we confeſſe to be Ieſus Chriſt, of equall power unto ſalvation of his people living under both the ſtates: but the more abundant grace, and trueth, according to the revelation of Chriſt in the fleſh, we acknowledge to be teſtifyed, and exhibited in our Sacraments then was in theirs that lived under the Law.

MART. 2. For this purpoſe Beza is not content to ſpeake as the Apoſtle doeth, (Rom. 4. v. 11.) that circumciſion was a ſeale of the juſtice of faith, but becauſe he thinketh that, too ſmall a tearme for σφραγίς. the Dignity of circumciſion, as himſelfe confeſſeth, he gladly avoydeth it (I uſe his owne words) and for the Nowne putteth the Verbe, ſo diſſolutely and preſumptuouſly, that the Engliſh Bezites Libens refugi. themſelves here alſo dare not follow him in tranſlation, though in opinion they agree. The cauſe Quod obſignaret, for ſigillum. of his wilfull tranſlation hee declareth in his Annotations upon the ſame place, to wit, the dignity of circumciſion, equall with any Sacrament of the new Teſtament. His wordes be theſe. What (ſaith hee) could be ſpoken more magnificall of any Sacrament? therefore they that put a reall difference betweene the Sacraments of the old Teſtament and ours, never ſeeme to have knowne how farre Chriſts office extendeth. Which hee ſaith, not to magnify the old, but to diſgrace the new.

FVLK. 2. There was never man that had ſuch an artificiall conjecture of mens purpoſes as you pretend your ſelfe to have, which not onely where there is likelyhood to faſten a conjecture upon, but alſo when all likelyhoods are againſt you, yet can ſo confidently pronounce of every mans purpoſe. Well let the purpoſe goe, which is knowne beſt to God, and next to them that will judge of the man according to charity and good reaſon. You ſay Beza is not content to ſpeake as the Apoſtle doeth, that circumciſion was a ſeale of the juſtice of faith. Yes verily, his deſire is to expreſſe that which the Apoſtle ſaith to the full. The name of ſeale therefore hee avoydeth not, as you falſely ſlaunder him, but for want of a convenient Latine word to expreſſe the Apoſtles Greeke word, hee is content to uſe circumlocution by the verbe, and ſaith, Abraham received the ſigne of circumciſion, which ſhould ſeale up, or by ſeale confirme the juſtice of faith, &c. yet are not you aſhamed moſt impudently to ſay hee refuſed the tearme of ſeale Sigillum, and for Sigillum hath uſed quod obſignaret, Whereas the word that hee ſaith he refuſed, is ſignaculum. Signaculi nomen quod vetus interpres & Eraſmus uſurpavit libens refugi, partim quod non ſit admodum uſitatum, partim quod non ſatis videatur illam vim obſignationis, declarare. The tearme ſignaculum which the old Interpreter and Eraſmus hath uſed, I have willingly refuſed: partly becauſe it is no very uſuall word, partly becauſe it ſeemeth not ſufficiently to declare that vertue or efficacy of ſealing. You ſee therefore what word hee avoydeth, and for what cauſe, and that your eyes were not matches, or elſe they were dazled with a miſt of malice, when you read that he avoyded Sigillum, and placed quod obſignaret for Sigillum. The word ſigillum as he uſeth not, ſo doeth he make no mention of it, I thinke becauſe it being a diminutive of ſignum, and taken ſometimes for a little Image, unde ſigillares, &c. it is not proper nor full to expreſſe the Greeke word σφραγὶς. That he maketh circumciſion equall unto the Sacraments of the new Teſtament, I have ſhewed before that it is in matter ſubſtance, and end, which hee that confeſſeth not (as Beza ſaith) ſeemeth never to have knowne how farre the office of Chriſt extendeth: but that he hath any purpoſe to diſgrace the Sacraments of the new Teſtament inſtituted by Chriſt himſelfe, in a more cleare diſpenſation of grace and trueth, you affirme with the ſame credite by which you ſaid he put quod obſignaret for ſigillum.

MART. 3. Which is alſo the cauſe why not onely hee, but the Engliſh Bibles (for commonly they joyne handes, and agree together) to make no difference betweene Iohns Baptiſme and Chriſts, tranſlate thus, concerning certaine that had not yet received the holy Ghoſt: Vnto what then were yee baptized? And they ſaid unto Iohns baptiſme. Which Beza in a long diſcourſe prooveth to bee ſpoken of Iohns doctrine, and not of his baptiſme in water. As though it were ſaid, what doctrine then doe yee profeſſe? And they ſaid, Iohns. Whereas indeede the queſtion is this, and ought thus to bee tranſlated, In what then or wherein were you baptized? And they ſaid, in Iohns Baptiſme. As who ſhould ſay, wee have received Iohns Baptiſme, but not the holy Ghoſt as yet. And therefore it followeth immediately, then they were baptized in the name of Ieſus, and after impoſition of handes the holy Ghoſt came upon them. Whereby is plainely gathered, that being baptized with Iohns Baptiſme before, and yet of neceſſity baptized afterward with Chriſts baptiſme alſo, there muſt needes bee a great difference betweene the one baptiſme and the other, Iohns being inſufficient. And that this is the deduction which troubleth thoſe Bezites, and maketh them tranſlate accordingly, Beza (as commonly ſtill hee uttereth his griefe) telleth us in plaine wordes thus. It is not neceſſary, that whereſoever there is mention of Iohns Baptiſme, wee ſhould thinke it to bee the very ceremonie of Baptiſme. Therefore they that gather Iohns Baptiſme to have beene diverſe from Chriſts, becauſe theſe a little after are ſaid to bee baptized in the name of Ieſus Chriſt, have no ſure foundation. Loe, how of purpoſe he tranſlateth and expoundeth it Iohns doctrine, not Iohns Baptiſme, to take away the foundation of this Catholike concluſion, that his Baptiſme differeth and is farre inferiour to Chriſts.

Anno. in Act.19.

FVLK. 3. And is Iohns Baptiſme now made a Sacrament of the old Law? was Iohn the Baptiſt a Miniſter of the Law, or of the Goſpell? Our Saviour Chriſt, is ſufficient to teach us that the Law and the Prophets propheſyed untill Iohn: but from the dayes of Iohn the Kingdome of heaven ſuffereth violence. But if you will make Iohns Baptiſme a Sacrament of the new Teſtament, and yet differing from the Baptiſme of Chriſt, then you make two Baptiſmes of the new Teſtament, contrary to the Nicene Creede, and Chriſt himſelfe, who was baptized for us, baptized with the worſe. But concerning that place Actes the 19. which hath troubled ſo many Interpreters with the obſcurity thereof, or rather with a prejudicate opinion of a difference in the Baptiſme of Iohn and of Chriſt, I am neither of Bezaes opinion, nor yet of our Tranſlatours, for the underſtanding and tranſlation of that place. Neither doe I thinke that mention is made of any ſecond Baptiſme, the avoyding whereof, hath bred diverſe forced interpretations: But that Saint Paul inſtructed thoſe Diſciples that knew not the grace of the holy Ghoſt, that they which heard Iohns preaching to the people, that they ſhould beleeve in Chriſt Ieſus, which was comming after him, were alſo baptized in the name of Ieſus Chriſt, who had graunted thoſe viſible graces of his holy ſpirit, to bee beſtowed upon them that beleeved, by impoſition of the Apoſtles handes. Thus therefore I am perſwaded thoſe verſes are to bee tranſlated. But Paul ſaid, Iohn truely baptized with the baptiſme of repentance, ſaying to the people, that they ſhould beleeve in him that commeth after him, that is, in Ieſus: and they which heard him, were baptized into the name of our Lord Ieſus. And after Paul had layd his handes upon, &c. The argument of difference thereof grounded upon this place, is nothing worth, where the Baptiſme of Iohn is confirmed by impoſition of handes, rather then diſgraced by reiteration, which giveth ſtrength to the errour of the Donatiſts, and Anabaptiſts, for rebaptization. Whereas it can not bee proved, that any, which were once baptized by Iohn, were ever baptized againe. But the contrary may eaſily bee gathered: for ſeeing our Saviour Chriſt baptized none himſelfe, it ſhall follow, that the Apoſtles were either not baptized at all, or elſe baptized onely with Iohns baptiſme. And where there is expreſſe mention of Iohns Diſciples, that came unto Chriſt, to become his Diſciples, there is no mention of any other Baptiſme then they had already received.

MART. 4. But doth the Greeke leade him, or force him unto this tranſlation, In quid? into what? Firſt himſelfe confeſſeth in the very ſame place, the contrary, that the Greeke phraſe is often uſed in the other ſenſe, wherein, or wherewith, as it is in the vulgar Latine, and Eraſmus: but that in his judgement it doeth not ſo ſignify here, and therefore he refuſeth it. Yet in the very next verſe almoſt, where it is ſaid by the ſame Greeke phraſe, that they were baptized in the name of Ieſus Chriſt, there both hee and his ſo tranſlate it as wee doe, and not, unto the name of Chriſt. Is it not plaine, that all is voluntary, and at their pleaſure? For (I beſeech them) if it be a right tranſlation, baptized in the name of Ieſus, why is it not right, baptized in the baptiſme of Iohn? Is there any difference in the Greeke? None. Where then? In their Commentaries and imaginations onely, againſt which wee oppoſe and ſet both the text and the Commentaries of all the Fathers.

FVLK. 4. The Greeke doeth allow him ſo to tranſlate, and to be baptized in the name of Ieſus, and into the name of Ieſus, is all one: as in the name of the Father, the Sonne, and the holy Ghoſt, or into the name of the Father, the Sonne, and the holy Ghoſt, is all one. But if Beza that hath diſcovered the trueth in ſo many places, did not ſee it in this one text, as neither you, nor any of the Fathers which have written upon it, who are not many; he is rather to be pardoned of all reaſonable men, then to be railed upon by ſuch an one, who in learning is no more like him, then a Gooſe to a Swan in ſinging.

MART. 5. But no marvell if they diſgrace the Baptiſme of Chriſt, when they are bold alſo to take it away altogether, interpreting this Scripture, Vnleſſe a man bee borne againe of water and the ſpirit, hee cannot enter into the kingdome of God, which a man would thinke were plaine enough, to prove that water in Baptiſme is neceſſary: interpreting (I ſay) this Scripture, Of water and the ſpirit, thus: of water, that is, the ſpirit, making water to bee nothing elſe in this place, but the ſpirit allegorically, and not materiall water. As though our Saviour had ſaid to Nicodemus, Vnleſſe a man bee borne of water, I meane, of the ſpirit, hee cannot enter, &c. According to this moſt impudent expoſition of plaine Scriptures, Calvine tranſlateth alſo as impudently for the ſame purpoſe, in the Epiſtle to Titus, making the Apoſtle to ſay, that God powred the water of regeneration upon us abundantly, that is, the holy Ghoſt. And leſt wee ſhould not underſtand his meaning herein, hee telleth us, in his Commentary upon this place, that when the Apoſtle ſaith, water powred out abundantly, hee ſpeaketh not of materiall water, but of the holy Ghoſt. Now indeede the Apoſtle ſaith not, that water was powred upon us, but the holy Ghoſt; neither doeth the Apoſtle make water and the holy Ghoſt all one, but moſt plainely diſtinguiſheth them, ſaying, that God of his mercy hath ſaved us by the laver of regeneration and renovation of the holy Ghoſt, whom hee hath powred upon us abundantly, See how plainely the Apoſtle ſpeaketh both of the materiall water, or waſhing of Baptiſme, and of the effect thereof, which is the holy Ghoſt powred upon us. Calvine taketh away water cleane, and will have him ſpeake onely of the holy Ghoſt, which Flaccus Illyricus the Lutheran himſelfe wondreth at, that any man ſhould be ſo bold, and calleth it plaine ſacriledge againſt the efficacy of the Sacraments.

Comment. in hunc locum.

FVLK. 5. The Sacrament of Baptiſme, how farre wee are from diſgracing, or taking it away altogether, when wee affirme that the grace of Gods ſpirit is not ſo tyed unto it, but hee may worke regeneration without it, in them that by neceſſity are deprived of it, let all men of reaſon and indifferency judge. Our tranſlation of Iohn 3. verſe 5. being ſuch, as he can finde nothing to quarrell againſt it, hee beginneth a new controverſie of our interpretation, by which hee might bring in five hundred places of Scripture, in which wee differ from them in expoſition. And a great abſurdity hee thinketh hee hath found out, in that wee expound the water and ſpirit to ſignify one thing, as though in Math. 3. verſ. 11. the holy Ghoſt and fire are not put both for one thing, and hee may as well in the one place, urge the element of fire in the Baptiſme of Chriſt, as by this place prove the neceſſity of water in Baptiſme. And yet wee take not away the Sacrament of Baptiſme, or the water, the externall matter thereof, which in other places is expreſſely commanded, when wee ſay it is not ſpoken of in this text, which is of the thing ſignifyed in Baptiſme, rather then of Baptiſme, as in Iohn 6. our Saviour Chriſt ſpeaketh in like tearmes of the thing repreſented in the Sacrament of his Supper, not of the Sacrament it ſelfe. The errour of Calvines tranſlation and expoſition of Titus 3. verſe 5. wee have before confeſſed, neither doeth any of our tranſlations follow him, and yet his errour is no hereſie, while hee aſcribeth wholly to the holy Ghoſt, that which properly is his, but yet of the Apoſtle is figuratively aſcribed unto the outward element, by which he worketh.

MART. 6. And if wee ſhould here accuſe the Engliſh Tranſlatours alſo, that tranſlate it thus, by the fountaine of the regeneration of the holy Ghoſt, WHICH hee ſhed on us, &c. making it indifferent, either which fountaine, or which holy Ghoſt he ſhed, &c. they would anſwer by and by, that the Greeke alſo is indifferent: but if a man ſhould aske them further, whether the holy Ghoſt may be ſaid to bee ſhed, or rather a fountaine of water, they muſt needes confeſſe, not the holy Ghoſt, but water, and conſequently, that they tranſlating, which he ſhed, would have it meant of the fountaine of water, and ſo they agree juſt with Calvines tranſlation, and leave Beza, who in his tranſlation referreth it onely to the holy Ghoſt, as wee doe; but in his Commentarie playeth the heretike, as Calvine doeth.

Sp. Sancti, quem effudit.

FVLK. 6. When Ariſtides could bee accuſed of no crime, hee was by his envious enemies accuſed of juſtice. Even ſo this man, who is wont to preſcribe us a rule, to leave that in ambiguity, which in the Greek is ambiguous, now blameth us for tranſlating ſo, as either Calvins or Bezaes ſenſe may ſtand with it. And albeit in all other places hee is content to make us Bezaes ſchollers, yet here becauſe Calvine hath the worſe part, hee will enforce us to leave Beza, and ſticke to Calvine. Such a force hath malice, when it is ſetled in mans heart, that it carryeth him oftentimes headlong, againſt himſelfe. But ſeeing the holy Ghoſt, as the neereſt antecedent, is placed next before the Relative, why muſt wee needes confeſſe, not the holy Ghoſt, but water to bee ſhedde upon us? Is any man ſo bruitiſh, to beleeve the bold ſurmiſes, what ſaid I, ſurmiſes? nay impudent and contentious affirmations of this blinde Bayarde.

MART. 7. Of the Sacrament of penance I have ſpoken before, concerning that part ſpecially which is ſatisfaction. Here I will onely adde of Confeſſion, that to avoyd this tearme (namely in ſuch a place where the Reader might eaſily gather Sacramentall Confeſſion) they tranſlate thus, Acknowledge your faults one to another, Iacob. 5. It is ſaid a little before, If any bee diſeaſed, let him bring in Prieſts, &c. And then it followeth, Confeſſe your faults, &c. But they, to make all ſure, for Confeſſe, ſay, Acknowledge, and for Prieſts, Elders. What meane they by this? If this acknowledging of faults one to another before death, bee indifferently to bee made to all men, why doe they appoynt in their Communion-booke (as it ſeemeth out of this place) that the ſicke perſon ſhall make a ſpeciall confeſſion to the Miniſter, and hee ſhall abſolve him in the very ſame forme of abſolution that Catholike Prieſts uſe in the Sacrament of Confeſſion. Againe, if this acknowledging of faults be ſpecially to be made to the Miniſter or Prieſt, why tranſlate they it not by the word confeſſing and confeſſion, as well as by acknowledging? and why is not this confeſſion a Sacrament, where themſelves acknowledge forgiveneſſe of ſinnes by the Miniſter? Theſe contradictions and repugnance of their practiſe and tranſlation, if they can wittily and wiſely reconcile, they may perhaps in this poynt ſatisfy the Reader. But whether the Apoſtle ſpeake here of Sacramentall Confeſſion or no, ſincere Tranſlatours ſhould not have fled from the proper and moſt uſuall word of confeſſion or confeſſing, conſonant both to the Greeke and Latine, and indifferent to whatſoever the holy Ghoſt might meane, as this word acknowledge is not.

ἐξομολογεῖσθε. Whereof confeſſion is called in S. Cyprian and other Fathers. Exomologeſis. In the order of viſitation of the ſicke.

FVLK. 7. Of the word of penance, and thereupon to wring in ſatisfaction, wee have heard more then enough: but that penance is a Sacrament, wee have heard never a word to prove it. But what ſay wee againſt confeſſion? Forſooth Iames 5. we tranſlate ἐξομολογεῖσθε, acknowledge your ſelves. Why Sir? Doeth acknowledging ſignify any other thing then confeſſing? You want then nothing elſe but the ſound of confeſſion, which among the ignorant would helpe you little, which tearme your Popiſh acknowledging rather ſhrift then confeſſion, it is marvell then that you blame us not, becauſe wee ſay not, ſhrive your ſelves one to another. A miſerable Sacrament, that hath neede of the ſound of a word to helpe it to bee gathered. But how (I pray you) ſhould the Reader gather your auricular ſhrift, or Popiſh confeſſion, if the word confeſſe your ſelves were uſed by us? I weene becauſe the Prieſts are called in a little before. It is more then enough, if you might gaine your Sacrament of annealing by their comming in. But ſhrift commeth too late after extreame unction. Well, admitte the Apoſtle forgot the order, and placed it after, which ſhould come before, muſt wee needes have Prieſtly confeſſion proved out of that place? Doeth not Saint Iames ſay, confeſſe your ſelves one to another, as hee ſaith, pray one for another? Then it followeth, that the Lay-man muſt ſhrive the Prieſt, as well as the Prieſt muſt ſhrive the Lay-man. And the Prieſt muſt confeſſe himſelfe to the people, as well as the people muſt pray for the Prieſt. But you have an objection out of the Communion booke, to prove Confeſſion to bee a Sacrament, which appoynteth, that the ſicke perſon ſhall make a ſpeciall confeſſion to the Miniſter, and hee to abſolve him, &c. Will you never leave this ſhameleſſe cogging, and forging of matters againſt us? The Communion booke appoynteth a ſpeciall confeſſion onely for them that feele their conſcience troubled with any weightie matter, that they may receive counſell and comfort of the Miniſter, who hath authoritie in the name of God, to remit ſinnes, not onely to them that bee ſicke, but alſo to them that bee whole: and daily doth pronounce the abſolution to them that acknowledge and confeſſe their ſinnes humbly before God. But hereof it followeth not, that this confeſſion is a Sacrament; for by preaching, the people that beleeve, are abſolved from their ſinnes, by the miniſterie of the Preacher: yet is not preaching a Sacrament. A Sacrament muſt have an outward element, or bodily creature, to repreſent the grace of remiſſion of ſinnes, as in Baptiſme and in the Lords Supper. But where you conclude, that ſincere Tranſlators ſhould not have fled the proper and moſt uſuall word of confeſſion, you ſpeake your pleaſure, for the word of acknowledging is more proper and uſuall in the Engliſh tongue, than is the word of confeſſing. And if you can prove any Sacrament out of the text, behold, you have the Greeke and Latine untouched, and the Engliſh anſwerable to both. Make your Syllogiſme out of that place to prove Popiſh ſhrift when you dare.

CHAP. XV.

Hereticall tranſlation againſt the Sacrament of HOLY ORDERS and for the MARIAGE OF PRIESTS and VOTARIES.

AGainſt the Sacrament of Orders, what can they doe more in tranſlation, than in all their Bibles to take away the name of Prieſt and Prieſthood of the new Teſtament altogether, and for it to ſay, Elder and Eldership? Whereof I treated more at large in another place of this booke. Here I adde theſe few obſervations, that both for Prieſts and Deacons, which are two holy Orders in the Catholike Church, they tranſlate* Miniſters, to commend that new degree deviſed by themſelves. As when they ſay in all their Bibles, Feare the Lord with all thy ſoule, and honour his Miniſters; in the Greeke it is plaine thus, and honour his Prieſts, as the word alwayes ſignifieth, and in the very next ſentence themſelves ſo tranſlate, Feare the Lord, and honour the Prieſts. But they would needs borrow one of theſe places for the honour of Miniſters. As alſo in the Epiſtle to Timothie, where Saint Paul talketh of Deacons, and nameth them twice; they in the firſt place tranſlate thus, Likewiſe muſt the Miniſters bee honeſt, &c. And a little after, Let the Deacons bee the husbands of one wife; loe, the Greeke word being one, and the Apoſtle ſpeaking of one Eccleſiaſticall Order of Deacons, and Beza ſo interpreting it in both places, yet our Engliſh Tranſlators have allowed the firſt place to their Miniſters, and the ſecond to Deacons, and ſo (becauſe Biſhops alſo went before) they have found us out their three Orders, Biſhops, Miniſters, and Deacons. Alas poore ſoules, that can have no place in Scripture for their Miniſters, but by making the Apoſtle ſpeake three things for two.

* Chap. 6.

Eccleſ. c. 7. v. 31. ἱερεῖς. ἱερέα.

FVLKE.

FOr the names of Prieſt and Elder, wee have ſpoken heretofore ſufficiently, as alſo for the name of Miniſter, which is uſed for the ſame that Elder and Prieſt, although the word ſignifie more generally. That the word Miniſters is put for Prieſts, I take it rather to bee an overſight of the firſt Tranſlator, whom the reſt followed, becauſe that διάκονος commeth immediately after, than any purpoſe againſt the Order of Prieſt, or to dignifie the name of Miniſters. For ſeeing Syracks ſonne ſpeaketh of Prieſts and Miniſters of the law, his ſaying can make nothing to or fro, for the names of the Miniſters, Prieſts or Elders of the new Teſtament. That ſome tranſlations in 1 Tim. 3. for διακόνους render [illegible] it is becauſe they ſuppoſed the Greeke word to bee taken there, in the generall [illegible] is in many other places, not to make three degrees of two, as you doe fondly [illegible] the orders of Biſhops, Elders, or as you call them prieſts, and as they [illegible]

[illegible] Prieſts and Miniſters, is all one in authoritie of miniſtring the word and the Sacraments. The degree of Biſhops, as they are taken to bee a ſuperiour order unto Elders or Prieſts, is for government and diſcipline, eſpecially committed unto them, not in authoritie of handling the word and the Sacraments.

MART. 2. There are in the Scripture that are called Miniſters in infinite places, and that by three Greeke words commonly: but that is a large ſignification of Miniſter, attributed to all that miniſter, wait, ſerue, or attend to doe any ſervice, Eccleſiaſticall or temporall, ſacred or prophane. If the word bee reſtrained to any peculiar ſervice or function, as one of the Greeke words is, then doth it ſignifie Deacons onely: which if they know it, or will not beleeue mee, let them ſee Beza himſelfe in his Annotations upon S. Matthew, who proteſteth, that in his tranſlation hee vſeth alwayes the word Miniſter in the generall ſignification, and Diaconus in the ſpeciall and peculiar Eccleſiaſticall function of Deacons. So that yet wee cannot underſtand, neither can they tell us, whence their peculiar calling and function of Miniſter commeth, which is their ſecond degree under a Biſhop, and is placed in ſtead of Prieſts.

Annot c.5. v.25.

FULK. 2. What the generall word of Miniſter ſignifieth, how it is taken both generally and ſpecially, wee are not ſo ignorant, that wee neede be taught of you: and yet all learned men are not agreed, when the Greeke word διάκονος is reſtrained to the Miniſter of the poore, and when it ſignifieth generally all the officers in the Church. As for the name of Miniſter, by which Elders or Prieſts are commonly called among us, I haue even now, and divers times before ſhewed, upon what occaſion it was taken up, ſo to bee applied, which yet generally ſignifieth all that ſerue in the Church, and Common-wealth alſo.

MART. 3. Againe, what can bee more againſt the dignitie of ſacred Orders and Eccleſiaſticall degrees than to make them prophane and ſecular by their tearmes and tranſlations? For this purpoſe, as they tranſlate, Elders, and Eldership, for Prieſts and Prieſthood, ſo doe they moſt impudently tearme S. Peter and S. Iohn, * Lay men: they ſay for Apoſtle, Embaſſador, and Meſſenger, Ioh.13.v.16. and for Apoſtles of the Churches, Meſſengers of the ſame, 2. Cor.8. for Biſhops Overſeers, Act.20. Why (my maſters) doth idiota ſignifie a Lay man? Suppoſe a Lay man be as wiſe and learned as any other, is he idiota? or that one of your Miniſters be as unlearned and ignorant as any ſhepheard, is hee not idiota? So then idiota is neither Clerke nor Lay-man, but every ſimple and ignorant man. They that ſpake with miraculous tongues in the Primitiue Church, were they not Lay-men many of them? Yet the Apoſtle plainely diſtinguiſheth them from idiota. So that this is more ignorantly or wilfully tranſlated, than Neophytus, a young ſcholler in all your Bibles.

* ἰδιῶται. Act.4. Bib.1562. ἀπόστολος. For meſſenger and legate the Scripture vſeth theſe words, ἄγγελος, πρεσβευτὴς, πρεσβεύειν. 1 Cor.14. 23.24. 1 Tim.3.

FULK. 3. There can bee no greater wrangling, nor more vnprofitable, than about words and tearmes. But why, I pray you, ſhould the tearmes of Elder and Eldership bee more prophane and ſecular in Engliſh, than they bee in Greeke, yea, than the names of Ancients and Seniors, which you your ſelues in your tranſlation uſe for the ſame office? Will you never bee aſhamed of theſe vanities, which turne alwayes to your owne reproach? Yet doe they (ſay you) moſt impudently tearme Saint Peter and Iohn Lay-men. And doe not you diſhonour them as much, to ſay in your tranſlation, they were of the vulgar ſort? What ſignifieth λαϊκὸς, a Lay-man, but one of the vulgar ſort, or common people? Againe, were they of that Clergie, whereof Annas and Caiaphas were high Prieſts, or were they not as perfectly diſtinct from that ſacrificing Prieſthood, as any Lay-man at this day is from the Chriſtian Clergie? Yet you goe on whither the furie of your malice doth carry you, and ſay, that Idiota is neither Clerke, nor Lay-man, but every ſimple and ignorant man. If it bee ſo, then reforme your tranſlation, as well in this place of the Act.4. as in 1 Cor. 14. where you call Idiota, of the vulgar ſort, or the vulgar, and plucke your ſelfe firſt by the noſe for falſe tranſlating, before you finde fault with us. Againe, if the high Prieſts did take the Apoſtles for unlearned and Lay-men, what impudencie is it, to ſay that wee tearme them ſo? And touching your ſignification of Idiota, although the Prieſts knew, that they had not beene brought up in ſtudie of learning, as they themſelues were, yet hearing their bold and wiſe anſwer, they could not take them for ſimple and ignorant men, therefore it followeth, that they meant they were none of their Clergie, rather than that they were ignorant and fooliſh, for ſimple in the good part they would not acknowledge them to bee. As for the tearme Embaſſador and Meſſenger; for the Greeke word ἀπόστολος, Io. 13. v. 16. may well bee vſed in that place, ſeeing it is like hee ſpeaketh as generally of the word ἀπόστολος, as hee doth of δοῦλος, which is a ſervant. The ſervant is not greater than his Lord, nor the Embaſſador than hee that ſent him. And for the meſſengers of the Churches, when thoſe are underſtood by the word ἀπόστολοι, which are ſent on meſſage from the Churches, and not thoſe that are ſent by Chriſt to preach unto the Churches, no wiſe man can blame the tranſlation. Act. 20. where ἐπισκόπους are of us tranſlated overſeers, of you Biſhops, yet in your note you ſay, or Prieſts, as though the word may ſignifie Prieſts, which all men of skill doe know to ſignifie Overſeers, although the terme be [illegible] to them, which before are called πρεσβύτεροι, Elders or Prieſts. But it proceedeth of great ignorance, that Neophytus is tranſlated in all our Bibles, a young Scholler. O what knowledge haue wee learned of you; to tranſlate Neophytus, a Neophyte. For before, wee did take Neophytus; to ſignifie one that is newly planted, or lately ingraffed, and by a Metaphor, one that is a young and new ſcholler in the myſteries of Chriſtian religion. But becauſe your Pope vſeth to make boyes and unlearned young men Biſhops, and great Prelates in your Church, you can not abide, that a young ſcholler ſhould by Saint Pauls rule bee excluded from a Biſhopricke, and therefore you mocke the Reader with a Neophyte. Wee know, that in the ancient Church they were called Neophyti, which were lately baptiſed: but yet in the ſame ſenſe, becauſe they were young ſchollers, and therefore looke in the Homilies that are intituled, ad Neophytos, and you ſhall ſee, they are directed and ſpent almoſt or altogether in teaching the principles of Chriſtian religion plainely, wherein they were but young ſchollers, not yet perfectly inſtructed.

MART. 4. Now for changing the name Apoſtle into Meſſenger, though Beza doe ſo alſo in the foreſaid places, yet in deede he controuleth both himſelfe, and you, in other places, ſaying of the ſame word, Apoſtles: A man may ſay in Latine, Legates, but wee haue gladly kept the Greeke word (Apoſtle) as many other words familiar to the Church of Chriſt. And not onely of the principall Apoſtles, but alſo of the other Diſciples, hee both tranſlateth, and interpreteth in his commentarie, that they are notable Apoſtles, and hee proveth that all Miniſters of the word (as he termeth them) are and may bee ſo called. And for your Overſeers, hee ſaith, Epiſcopos, and not, Superintendentes. Which hee might as well haue ſaid, as you, Overſeers. But to ſay the truth, though he be too too prophane, yet hee doth much more keepe and uſe the Eccleſiaſticall received tearmes, than you doe, often proteſting it, and as it were glorying therein, againſt Caſtaleon eſpecially. As, when he ſaith, Presbyterum, where you ſay Elder: Diaconum, where you ſay, Miniſter, and ſo foorth. Where if you tell mee that howſoever hee tranſlate, hee meaneth as prophanely as you, I beleeue you, and therefore you ſhall goe together, like Maſter, like Schollers, all falſe and profane tranſlaters; for, this Beza (who ſometime ſo gladly keepeth the name of Apoſtle) yet calleth Epaphroditus legatum Philippenſium, Philip. 2.v. 15. Whereupon the Engliſh Bezites tranſlate, your Meſſenger, for, your Apoſtle. As if S. Auguſtine who was our Apoſtle, ſhould be called, our Meſſenger.

in tit.Evang. Matth.& in c.3.v.11.& c.12.v.2.& c.5.v.25.

FULK. 4. You can not leaue your old Byas, in wreſting mens ſayings, farre beyond their meaning. Therefore you alledge againſt us, the ſaying of Beza, for the terme of Apoſtles, to be retained, where mention is made of the Apoſtles of Chriſt, not onely thoſe that are ſpecially ſo called, but alſo all the Miniſters of the word. But what is this, to terme them by the honourable name of Apoſtles, which are not ſent by God, but by men, about ſome civill or Eccleſiaſticall buſineſſe. For both hee and wee call Epaphroditus, the Meſſenger, and not the Apoſtle of the Philippians, becauſe hee was ſent by the Philippians unto Paul, and not by Chriſt unto them. As for that Auguſtine which was ſent by Gregory, might better bee called Gregories Apoſtle, than our Apoſtle, for hee was not ſent by us, but to us, not immediately from God, as an Apoſtle ſhould, but from Gregorie, and by Gregorie. Touching the tearmes of Biſhops, Elders, Miniſters, Prieſts, &c. enough hath beene ſaid already. Our tranſlators haue done that, which they thought beſt to be done in our language, as Beza did in the Latine tongue.

MART. 5. As alſo, when you tranſlate of Saint Matthias the Apoſtle, that hee was by a common conſent counted with the eleven Apoſtles: Act. 1. v. 26. what is it elſe, but to make onely a popular election of Eccleſiaſticall degrees, as Beza in his annotations, would haue us to underſtand, ſaying, that nothing was done here peculiarly by Peter, as one of more excellent dignitie than the reſt, but in common by the voyces of the whole Church: though in an other place upon this election, hee noteth Peter to bee the chiefe or Corypheus. And as for the Greeke word in this place, if partialitie of the cauſe would ſuffer him to conſider of it, hee ſhould finde, that the proper ſignification thereof in this phraſe of ſpeech is, as the vulgar Latine Interpreter, Eraſmus, and Valla, (all which he reiecteth) tranſlate it, to wit, hee was numbred, or, counted with the eleven Apoſtles, without all reſpect of common conſent, or not conſent, as you alſo in your other Bibles doe tranſlate.

FULK. 5. The election of Matthias to bee an Apoſtle, was extraordinarily, and therefore permitted to the lot: the manner whereof, as it is not to bee drawne into example, ſo the proper election cannot bee proved thereby: yet hath both Beza, and the Engliſh tranſlatour, faithfully expreſſed the Greeke word, which Saint Luke there vſeth: although, neither Eraſmus, nor Valla, beſide your vulgar Interpreter, did conſider it. Neither doth that common conſent, in accepting Matthias for an Apoſtle, whom the lot had deſigned, more proue a popular election, or derogate from the ſingularity of Peter, than that by common conſent of the whole brotherhood, two were choſen and ſet up, that the Apoſtleſhip ſhould be laid upon one of them.

MART. 6. Which diverſitie may proceede of the diverſitie of opinions among you. For wee underſtand by Maſter Whitegifts bookes againſt the Puritanes, that he and his fellowes deny this popular election, and giue preeminence, ſuperioritie, and difference in this caſe to Peter, and to Eccleſiaſticall Prelates: and therefore he proveth at large the uſe and Eccleſiaſticall ſignification of the Greeke word χειροτονία, not to the giving of voices in popular elections, but to be the Eccleſiaſticall impoſing of hands upon perſons taken to the Churches miniſterie. Which hee ſaith very truely, and needeth the leſſe here to be ſpoken of, ſpecially being touched elſewhere in this booke.*

His defenſe, or 2. booke. pag. 157.

* Chap.6. num.7.

FVLK. 6. The diverſitie of the tranſlation, proceedeth of this, that the former tranſlators did not obſerue the nature of the Greeke word, which Beza hath conſidered more abſolutely, than any Interpreters before him. Although it is not unlike, that Chryſoſtome did well acknowledge it, when ſpeaking of this election, hee vſeth theſe words. Iam & illud conſidera, quam & Petrus agit omnia ex communi diſcipulorum ſententia, nihil authoritate ſua, nihil cum imperio. Now alſo conſider this thing, how Peter doth all things by common conſent of the Diſciples, nothing of his owne authoritie, nothing with rule or commaundement. And as for the popular election, if you had read thoſe bookes, you make mention of, you might perceiue, that neither of both parts, allow a meere popular election. And that Maſter Whitgiſt, doth not ſo much contend, what forme of election was vſed in the time of the Apoſtles, and of the Primitiue Church, as whether it be neceſſary that ſuch forme of election as then was practiſed, ſhould in all ages of the Church, and in all places, be of neceſſitie continued, and obſerved.

In act. hom 3.

MART. 7. One thing onely wee would know, why they that plead ſo earneſtly againſt their brethren the Puritanes, about the ſignification of this word, pretending herein onely the primitiue cuſtome of impoſition of hands, in making their Miniſters, why (I ſay) themſelues tranſlate not this word accordingly, but altogether as the Puritanes, thus: When they had ordained them Elders by election in every Church, Act.14.verſ.23. For if the Greeke word ſignifie here the peoples giving of voices (as Beza forceth it onely that way, out of Tully, and the popular cuſtome of old Athens) then the other ſignification of impoſing hands is gone, which Maſter Whitgift defendeth, and the popular election is brought in, which hee refelleth: and ſo by their tranſlation they haue in my opinion over-ſhot themſelues, and given advantage to their brotherly adverſaries. Vnleſſe indeed they tranſlate as they thinke, becauſe indeed they thinke as heretically as the other, but yet becauſe their ſtate of Eccleſiaſticall regiment is otherwiſe, they muſt maintaine that alſo in their writings, howſoever they tranſlate. For an example, They all agree to tranſlate Elder for Prieſt: and Maſter Whitakers telleth us a freſh in the name of them all, that there are no Prieſts now in the Church of Chriſt, that is, (as he interpreteth himſelfe) This name Prieſt is never in the new Teſtament peculiarly applyed to the Miniſters of the Goſpell, this is their doctrine. But what is their practiſe in the regiment of their Church? cleane contrary. For in the order of the communion booke, where it is appointed what the Miniſter ſhould doe, it is indifferently ſaid, Then ſhall the Prieſt doe or ſay this and that: and, Then ſhall the Miniſter, &c. Whereby it is evident that they make Prieſt a proper and peculiar calling applied to their Miniſters, and ſo their practiſe is contrary to their teaching and doctrine.

FVLK. 7. I haue ſatisfied your deſire before, if you liſt to know, our tranſlation muſt be, as neere as it can, to expreſſe the true ſignification of the originall words, and ſo it is, in that place of the Act. 14.*v.*23. which being granted by them, that deny the neceſſitie of that forme of election to continue alwayes, giveth no more advantage to the Adverſaries, than they would take out of the ſignification of the Greeke word, howſoever it were tranſlated. Your example of Maſter Whitakers denying the name of Prieſt to bee applied to the Miniſters of the Goſpell, to proue that wee muſt maintaine our Eccleſiaſticall ſtate, howſoever we tranſlate, is very fond and ridiculous: as alſo the contradiction that you would make betweene him and the ſervice-booke, touching the name of Prieſt, there vſed and allowed. Maſter Whitakers writing in Latine, ſpeaking of the Latine tearme, Sacerdos, the Communion booke of the Engliſh word Prieſt, is not this a goodly net for a foole to daunce naked in, and thinke that no body can ſee him.

MART. 8. Now concerning impoſition, or laying on of hands, in making their Miniſters, (which the Puritans alſo are forced to allow by other words of Scripture; howſoever they diſpute and iangle againſt χειροτονία) none of them all make more of it, than of the like Iudaicall ceremonie in the old Law, not acknowledging that there is any grace given withall; though the Apoſtle ſay there is, in expreſſe tearmes, but they will anſwere this text (as they are wont) with a favourable tranſlation, turning grace, into gift. As, when the Apoſtle ſaith thus, Neglect not THE GRACE that is in thee, which is given thee by propheſie, with impoſition of the hands of Prieſthood, they tranſlate, Neglect not the GIFT: and Beza moſt impudently, for, by propheſy, tranſlateth tranſlateth, to propheſie: making that onely to be this gift, and withall adding this goodly expoſition, that he had the gift of propheſie, or preaching before, and now by impoſition of hands was choſen onely to execute that function. But becauſe it might bee obiected that the Apoſtle ſaith, Which was given thee with the impoſition of hands, or, (as hee ſpeaketh in an other place) by impoſition of hands, making this impoſition of hands, an inſtrumentall cauſe of giving this grace, he ſaith, that it did onely conſirme the grace or gift before given.

2 Tim.1.

FVLK. 8. Though we finde that by, or with impoſition of hands, many rare and extraordinary gifts of propheſie of tongues, and ſuch like, were given in the Apoſtles time, yet wee finde no where, that grace is ordinarily given by that ceremonie, vſed alwayes in the Church, for ordination of the Miniſters thereof. But whether there be, or not, our tranſlation of χάρισμα, into gift, is true and proper to the word. For albeit the word χάρις be taken, not onely for the favour of God, but alſo for his gracious gifts: yet χάρισμα is never taken in the Scripture, but for a free gift, or a gift of his grace. That Beza referreth the prepoſition διὰ, to the end of the gift, hee hath the nature of the word to beare him out, which may well abide that ſenſe: and yet hee doth not reiect the other common interpretation by propheſie, that by appointment of the holy Ghoſt, uttered by ſome of the Prophets. But where you wrangle about the gift of propheſie, as though hee were utterly voide thereof, before hee received impoſition of hands: I know not what you meane. Would you haue us thinke, that hee was ordained Prieſt, or Elder, or to any office of the Church, without competent gifts, meete to diſcharge his office? That the gift of propheſie as well as of ſpeaking with tongues, might bee given by and with impoſition of hands. Beza doubteth not. But it is out of doubt, that to an office, none was choſen or admitted by the Apoſtle and the reſt of the Presbyterie of Epheſus, but ſuch as had ſufficient gifts to anſwere that office.

MART. 9. Thus it is evident that, though the Apoſtle ſpeake never ſo plaine for the dignitie of holy Orders, that it giveth grace, and conſequently is a Sacrament, they pervert all to the contrary, making it a bare ceremonie, ſuppreſſing the word grace, which is much more ſignificant to expreſſe the Greeke word, than gift is, becauſe it is not every gift, but a gracious gift, or a gift proceeding of marvellous and meere grace. As when it is ſaid, To you it is given not onely to beleeue, but alſo to ſuffer for him. The Greeke word ſignifieth thus much, To you this grace is given, &c. So when God gaue unto Saint Paul all that ſailed with him, this Greeke word is vſed, becauſe it was a great grace or gracious gift given unto him. When Saint Paul *pardoned the inceſtuous perſon before due time, it is expreſſed by this word, becauſe it was a grace (as Theodoret calleth it) given unto him. And therefore alſo the almes of the Corinthians, 1 Cor. 16. 3. are called, their grace, which the Proteſtants tranſlate, liberalitie, neglecting altogether the true force and ſignification of the Greeke words.

ἐχαρίσθη. Phil.1.29.

κεχάριςαι. Act.27.

2 Cor.2. κεχάρισμαι. χάρισμα. τὴν χάριν ὑμῶν.

FVLK. 9. Here is no evidence at all, that the order of Prieſthood is a Sacrament, or giveth grace, but that God, by the ceremonie of laying on of hands, did giue wonderfull and extraordinary gifts, of tongues, and prophecying, in the beginning and firſt planting of the Church. But, that grace ſhould alwayes follow that ceremonie, there is no proofe to bee made out of the holy Scriptures. And experience ſheweth, that hee which was voide of gifts, before hee was ordered Prieſt, is as very an Aſſe and Dogbolt, as hee was before, for any encreaſe of grace or gracious gifts: although hee haue authoritie committed unto him, if hee bee ordered in the Church, though unworthily, and with great ſinne both of him that ordaineth, and of him that is ordained. But wee ſuppreſſe the word grace (you ſay) becauſe chariſma ſignifieth, at leaſt, a gracious gift. See how the bare ſound of termes delighteth you, that you might therein ſeeke a ſhadow for your ſinglefolde ſacrament of popiſh orders. The word ſignifieth, a free or gracious gift, and ſo will every man underſtand it, which knoweth, that it is given by God. As alſo in all places, where mention is made of Gods gifts, we muſt underſtand, that it proceedeth freely from him, as a token of his favour and grace. But that the Greeke word χαρίζομαι, doth alwayes import the grace or favour of God, none either wiſe or learned will affirme, neither doth your vulgar Interpreter expreſſe the word of grace in thoſe places that you bring for example, Phil. 1.v. 29. hee ſaith plainely, donatum eſt, it is given, and ſo your ſelues tranſlate. Why, I pray you doe you ſuppreſſe the word grace, or why doe you thus trifle againſt us? When Saint Paul appealed to Caeſar, *Act.*25. affirming, that no man could giue him into the hands of his adverſaries, hee vſeth the ſame word χαρίσασθαι. So, when Feſtus telleth Agrippa, that hee anſwered the Iewes, that it was not the cuſtome of the Romanes, to giue any man to deſtruction, &c. Saint Luke vſeth the word χαρίζεσθαι, were not hee a mad tranſlatour, or Interpreter either, that would expound this word of the grace of God, which is ſpoken of the favour of men? So when the Apoſtle, 1 *Cor.*16. calleth the almes of the Corinthians, their grace, is it not better Engliſh to ſay, their liberalitie? for although their liberalitie proceeded of Gods gift, yet the Apoſtle adding the pronoune ὑμῶν, meaneth the free gift of the Corinthians, not the grace of God.

MART. 10. But concerning the ſacrament of orders, as in the firſt to Timothie, ſo in the ſecond alſo, they ſuppreſſe the word Grace, and call it barely and coldly, Gift: ſaying: I put thee in remembrance, that thou ſtirre up the gift of God, which is in thee, by the putting on of my hands. Where if they had ſaid, the grace of God, which is in thee, by the putting on of my hands: then were it plaine, that Saint Paul by the ceremonie of impoſing hands upon Timothie, in making him Prieſt, or Biſhop, gaue him grace: and ſo it ſhould bee a very Sacrament of holy Orders. For auoiding whereof, they tranſlate otherwiſe, or elſe let them giue us an other reaſon thereof, ſpecially the Greeke word much more ſignifieth grace, than a bare gift, as is declared.

1 Tim.1.v.6.

FULK. 10. Theſe colewoorts were ſodden enough once before that they need not bee ſet on againe. The word χάρισμα if you finde it an hundred times, ſignifieth no more, but a free gift, or a gift that is freely given, even as the Engliſh word gift doth: whereof the Proverbe is, what is ſo free as gift? Whereof if we had ſaid the grace of God wee had tranſlated amiſſe, and otherwiſe than the Greeke word doth ſignifie. But where you trifle in your tearmes of a bare gift, and we call it barely and coldly a gift, you doe nothing but bewray your owne ſhame. Can the gift of God bee called a bare gift? or doth hee ſpeake barely and coldly, that ſaith the gift of God? Doth the Apoſtle *Epheſ.*2. ſpeaking of our ſalvation, and your vulgar Interpreter, and you your ſelues ſpeake, of a bare gift, and call it barely and coldly, the gift of God? When you ſay, you are ſaved through faith (and that not of your ſelues for it is the gift of God) not of worke, &c. See you not that while you ſeeke to raſe our skin, you ſtrike your ſelfe to the heart? Be wiſer therefore, and ſpare your owne credite: find no fault with that which you cannot amend, and which if it were a fault, you your ſelues commit as much as we.

MART. 11. The more to prophane this ſacred order, whereunto continencie and ſingle life hath beene alwayes annexed in the new Teſtament for the honour and reverence of the functions thereunto belonging, to prophane the ſame (I ſay) and to make it meere laicall and popular, they will haue all to be maried men, yea thoſe that haue vowed the contrary: and it is a great credite among them, for our Prieſts Apoſtates to take wiues. This they would deduce from the Apoſtles cuſtome, but by moſt falſe and impudent tranſlation: making Saint Paul ſay thus as of his owne wife and the other Apoſtles wiues; Haue not wee power to leade about a wife being a ſiſter, as well as the reſt of the Apoſtles? Whereas the Apoſtle ſaith nothing elſe but, a woman a ſiſter, that is, a Chriſtian woman, meaning ſuch holy women as followed Chriſt, and the Apoſtles, to finde and maintaine them of their ſubſtance. So doth Saint Hierome interpret it, and Saint Auguſtine, both directly prouing that it cannot bee tranſlated, wife, but, woman: and the Greeke fathers moſt expreſly. And as for the Greeke word, if they ſay it is ambiguous, Saint Auguſtine telleth them that as the Apoſtle hath put it downe with all the circumſtances, there is no ambiguitie at all that might deceiue any men. Yea let us ſet apart the circumſtances, and conſider the Greeke word alone in it ſelfe, and Beza will tell us in other places, that it ſignifieth a woman rather than a wife: reprehending Eraſmus for tranſlating it, wife, becauſe there is no * circumſtance annexed why it ſhould ſo ſignifie: thereby declaring that of it ſelfe it ſignifieth, woman, and therefore much more when the circumſtance alſo (as S. Auguſtine ſaith) making it certaine, that ſo it doth ſignifie.

FULK. 11. If matrimonie be a holy Sacrament, as you ſay, and an holy ordinance of God as wee both confeſſe, how ſhould the ſacred order of Prieſthood bee prophaned thereby. That continence and ſingle life hath alwayes beene annexed to the Eccleſiaſticall functions in the new Teſtament, it is ſo maniſeſt an untruth, that I will not ſtand to confute it. As where you ſay, that wee make the order meere laicall and popular, that wee will haue all men to bee married, yea thoſe that haue vowed the contrary, theſe be moſt impudent aſſertions. Though it bee free for all men to marry, yet no man is willed, otherwiſe than hee ſhall finde cauſe in himſelfe. And for Prieſts that come from you, it is more credite to marry, than out of mariage to liue incontinently: otherwiſe they are of as great credite that bee unmarried, as they that be maried. What the cuſtome of the Apoſtles was for hauing wiues and keeping company with them, not onely the Scripture of the Apoſtles, but alſo Clemens Alexandrinus a moſt auncient writer is witneſſe for us, and againſt your impudent aſſertion, alledging euen this text of 1 Cor. 9. FULK. 12. Nay great muſt bee the impudencie of the Papiſts, that imagine the Apoſtles, which had wiues of their owne, did leaue them behinde them, and leade ſtrange women about with them into all parts of the world. The firſt that invented that gloſſe of continent women, ſuch as followed Chriſt, was Tertullian the Montaniſt, in his booke of Monogamie, which hee wrote againſt the Church, condemning ſecond mariage, and reprouing the Latine tranſlation of his time, as it ſeemeth, which in this text, 1 Cor. 9. uſed the tearme of uxor, by the ambiguitie of the Greeke word γυνὴ, ſaying, that if the Apoſtle had ſpoken of matrimonie, hee would haue underſtood this of wiues, but ſeeing hee ſpeaketh De victuaria exhibitione, of the exhibition toward his living, hee underſtandeth it of ſuch women as followed Chriſt. Than the which diſtinction nothing can bee more abſurd: for ſpeaking of exhibition toward his living, the Apoſtle ſheweth, that hee might haue lawfully charged the Church with finding, not onely of himſelfe, but alſo of his wife, as the other Apoſtles did. Againe, if rich women did follow the Apoſtles, miniſtring to them of their ſubſtance, as they followed our Saviour, this was no burden, but an eaſement unto the Church, which the Apoſtle would not haue abſtained from as a thing burdenous to the Church of Corinth. Concerning the other place, Act. 1. v. 14. although perhaps it bee not neceſſary to tranſlate wiues; yet it is neceſſary to underſtand wiues. For to anſwere you in Maſter Bezaes name, who telleth you, that it was meete, as alſo Eraſmus thinketh that their wiues ſhould bee confirmed, who partly were to bee companions of their travell and peregrination, partly to tarrie patiently at home, while their husbands were about the Lords buſineſſe, and therefore their wiues alſo were preſent. Againe, what a ſhamefull abſurditie were it, to thinke that the Apoſtles would tarrie in a cloſe houſe ſo long together with other women than their wiues, and ſhut out their owne wiues, which muſt needes haue beene ſubiect to great offence and obloquie? And what deuilliſh malice haue you againſt the Apoſtles wiues, that you cannot abide that they ſhould ioyne with their husbands in prayer and ſupplication, and bee made partakers of the holy Ghoſt with them, as well as other women, which were alſo maried women, Mary the wife of Cleophas, Ioanna, the wife of Chuza, and other holy women, the mothers or wiues of holy men? Will you ſay the Apoſtles had no wiues? Peters wiues mother will teſtifie againſt you. Will you ſay ſhee was forſaken by Peter? The ſtorie of his martyrdome, if it bee true, affirmeth that ſhee continued with him to his dying day. Will you ſay hee had no matrimoniall company with her? His daughter Patronilla will beare witneſſe againſt you, ſo young, that ſhee was deſired in mariage by Flaccus the Comes. Touching the place, 1 Cor. 7. where Eraſmus tranſlateth uxorem, I haue anſwered already. The circumſtance of the place doth argue, that it is ſpoken generally of continence, and not of abſtinence in mariage onely. And who is ſuch a novice in the Greeke tongue, that he knoweth not that the word γυνὴ ſignifieth a wife or woman, as the circumſtance of the place requireth, where it is uſed?

But that S.* Paul ſhould here meane his wife, moſt of the Greeke Fathers count it ridiculous and fooliſh, S. Chryſoſtome, Theodoret, Oecumenius, Theophilactus. [illegible]ntation, whiles he earneſtly wrote againſt them that oppugned matrimonie.

LK. 13. The Greeke word being σύζυγε ſignifieth a fellow or companion in yoke, they haue not therefore tranſlated amiſſe, when they ſay yoke fellow, which ſignifieth fellow in any yoke whatſoeuer. If it ſound man and wife in Engliſh, what matter is that? for ſo it ſoundeth in Greeke. Men muſt not follow the ſound of words onely, but examine the matter. And great probabilitie there is, that hee ſpeaketh there of his wife, as Clemens Alexandrinus thinketh, neither doth Saint Paul himſelfe ſay preciſely hee had no wife, 1 Cor. 7. but that hee liued without the uſe of a wife, which might bee, his wife conſenting to remaine at Philippi. That the latter writers miſlike the iudgement of Clemens, and ſpecially that fabulous hiſtorian Nicephorus, it derogateth nothing to his credit, nor to the likelihood of the matter. That Theophylact ſaith, the adiectiue ſhould bee of the feminine gender, hee is not to bee credited aboue Clemens Alexandrinus, who knew the puritie of the Greeke tongue, as well as hee. But whether it bee to bee underſtood of his wife or no, wee leaue it indifferent, and tranſlate according to the Greeke word, without preiudice of either opinion, which kinde of tranſlation at other times you doe highly commend.

RT. 14. Againe for the mariage of Prieſts, and of all ſorts of men indifferently, they tranſlate the Apoſtle thus: Wedlocke is honourable among all men. Where one falſification is, that they ſay, among all men, and Beza, inter quoſvis, and in the margent * in omni hominum ordine, in euery order or condition of men, and in his annotation hee raileth, to make this tranſlation good: whereas the Greeke is as indifferent to ſignifie, that mariage is honourable, by all meanes, in all reſpects, wholly, throughly, altogether. So doth not onely Eraſmus, but alſo the Greeke Fathers expound it, namely Theophylact, whoſe words in the Greeke bee very ſignificant, but too long here to trouble the Reader with them. Not in part (ſaith he) honourable, and in part not; but wholly, throughout, by all meanes honourable and undefiled, in all ages, in all times. Therefore, to reſtraine it in tranſlation to perſons onely, (though it may alſo very well bee underſtood of all perſons that haue no impediment to the contrary) that is to tranſlate falſly.

FVLK. 14. I haue anſwered already, that ſeeing the Apoſtle threatneth the iudgement of God againſt fornicators and adulterers, the moſt apt ſignification of the words ἐν πᾶσι, is, among all men. Although that which you would haue, comprehendeth all perſons, as well as all other things, meanes, reſpects, &c. If any perſons haue an impediment to the contrary, ſuch as Gods word doth allow, their mariage by this text is not authorized. But Prieſts haue no impediment, when they are by the word of God to bee choſen as well of maried men, as of any other, 1 Tim. 5. Tit. 1. neither can it bee any falſification, to tranſlate ſo, as both the words in the Greeke tongue doe ſignifie, and the reaſon of the place doth require. Theophylacts words, you ſay, bee long, and ſo it ſeemeth, they bee for your purpoſe, therefore you take but a peece in the midſt, cutting off both the beginning, and the end, that make againſt you. In all (ſaith hee) not in men of riper age, and not in young men alſo, but in all men, or by all meanes, and in all times, not in affliction truely, and in quietneſſe not alſo; not in this part pretious, and honourable, and in that part otherwiſe, but the whole, and through all parts, let it bee pretious. Here Heretikes are made to bluſh, that ſlander mariage: for behold, he calleth mariage pretious, matrimonie honourable, which keepeth a man in the vertue of temperance. And afterward: If matrimonie bee permitted, the fornicators and adulterers are iuſtly puniſhed. Who is ſo blinde, that hee will not ſee Theophylact referre it to the perſons, as well as to all parts of it? At leaſtwiſe you ſhould haue remembred, that Theophylact being a Biſhop of the Greeke Church, where their Prieſts haue beene, and yet are ſuffered to be maried men, would not write any thing here againſt the mariage of Prieſts. Neither doth Oecumenius exclude the perſons, when hee extolleth the perfection of mariage, but rather doth comprehend them. Chryſoſtome doth plainely referre it to the perſons, inſomuch, that he ioyneth it in expoſition with that text, Haue peace with all men.

MART. 15. Another, and the like falſification in this ſame ſhort ſentence, is, that they make it an affirmatiue ſpeech, by adding, is, whereas the Apoſtles words be theſe, Mariage honourable in all, and the bed undefiled: which is rather an exhortation, as if hee ſhould ſay, Let mariage be honourable, and the bed undefiled. How honourable? That (as S. Peter ſpeaketh, 1 Pet. c. 3.) men conuerſe with their wiues according to knowledge, imparting honour to them, as to the weaker veſſels: that is, (as S. Paul alſo explicateth it, 1 Theſſ. c. 4.) poſſeſſing euery man his veſſell in ſanctification and honour, not in the paſſion or luſt of concupiſcence, as the Gentiles, &c. Loe what honourable mariage is, to wit, when the husband uſeth the wife honourably and honeſtly in all reſpects, not beaſtly and filthily according to all kinde of luſt and concupiſcence. And that the Apoſtle here exhorteth to this honourable uſage of wedlocke rather than affirmeth any thing, it is moſt probable both by that which goeth before, and that which immediately followeth, all which are exhortations: and let the Proteſtants giue us a reaſon out of the Greeke text, if they can, why they tranſlate the words following by way of exhortation, Let your conuerſation be without couetouſneſſe, and not theſe words alſo in like manner, Let mariage bee honourable in all. Certaine it is, that the Greeke in both is all one phraſe and ſpeech, and Beza is much troubled to finde a good reaſon againſt Eraſmus, who thinketh it is an exhortation. The ſentence then being ambiguous and doubtfull at the leaſt, what ſolly fellowes are theſe that will ſo reſtraine it in tranſlation, that it cannot be taken in the other ſenſe, and not rather leaue it indifferently, as in the Greeke and vulgar Latine it is, leſt the ſenſe of the holy Ghoſt bee not that, or not only that, which they tranſlate.

FVLK. 15. I haue already ſhewed, that the verbe of the indicatiue moode is here to bee underſtood, becauſe the verbe which followeth in the ſame verſe is of the indicatiue moode. Againe, the particle δὲ, as Beza telleth you, declareth the firſt words to bee uttered affirmatiuely: Mariage is honourable among all men, and the bed undefiled, but fornicators and adulterers God will iudge. Moreouer, Chryſoſtome, Theodoret, Theophylact, Oecumenius, doe all prooue out of this place, the permiſſion and lawfulneſſe of mariage to all men, which could not bee except they underſtood the Apoſtles words affirmatiuely. That maried men muſt liue temperately with their wiues, it is alſo true, but not the principall purpoſe of the Apoſtle here, to exhort thereunto, but rather to diſſwade men from fornication and adulterie, becauſe mariage is honourable and undefiled in all ſorts of men. The reaſon you require, Beza hath giuen you, and I haue reported it. Neither is the ſentence ambiguous, neither hath it beene ſo taken, but of late dayes, in deſpight of holy matrimonie, which though you cannot deny in all men, yet you deface the honour thereof, as the Manichees, and other Heretikes did, when you affirme, that the ſacred order of Prieſthood is prophaned thereby. They bee your owne words before, Sect. 11. conuincing you to bee a maintainer of the doctrine of Deuils, 1. Tim. 4.

MART. 16. Moreouer, it is againſt the profeſſion of continencie in Prieſts and others, that they tranſlate our Sauiours words of ſingle life, and the unmaried ſtate, thus: All men cannot receiue this ſaying: as though it were impoſſible to liue continent. Where Chriſt ſaid not ſo, that all men cannot, but, All men doe not receiue this ſaying. But of this I haue ſpoken more in the chapter of free-will. Here I adde onely concerning the words following, that they tranſlate them not exactly, nor perhaps with a ſincere meaning: for if there bee chaſtitie in mariage, as well as in the ſingle life, as Paphnutius the Confeſſor moſt truly ſaid, and they are wont much to alleadge it, then their tranſlation doth nothing expreſſe our Sauiours meaning, when they ſay, There are ſome chaſte, which haue made themſelues chaſte, for the kingdome of heauens ſake: *for a man might ſay, all doe ſo that liue chaſtely in matrimonie. But our Sauiour ſpeaketh of them that are impotent and unable to generation, called * Eunuches, or gelded men, and that in three diuers kindes: ſome that haue that infirmitie or maime from their birth, other ſome that are gelded afterward by men, and other that geld themſelues for the kingdome of heauen, not by cutting off thoſe parts, which were an horrible mortall ſinne, but hauing thoſe parts, as the other men haue, yet geld themſelues (for ſo is the Greeke) and make themſelues unable to generation. Which how it can bee, but by voluntary profeſſion, promiſe, and vow of perpetuall continencie, which they may neuer breake, let the Proteſtants tell us. Chriſt then (as it is moſt euident) ſpeaketh of gelded men, either corporally, or ſpiritually, (which are all ſuch as profeſſe perpetuall continencie) and they tell us of ſome that were borne chaſte, and ſome that were made chaſte by men, and ſome that make themſelues chaſte: a moſt fooliſh and falſe tranſlation of the Greeke words,* εὐνοῦχος and εὐνουχίζειν.

FVLK. 16. Concerning the former part of this matter, Matth. 19 v. 11. wee haue anſwered ſufficiently in the chapter of free-will, but here is a new cauill. Becauſe chaſtitie is alſo in mariage, as in ſingle life, our Tranſlators doe not well to expreſſe the word εὐνοῦχοι & εὐνούχισαν, by chaſte, and haue made chaſte. I confeſſe they ſhould more properly haue ſaid gelded men, or gelded themſelues, or elſe continent, and made continent. Although they meane none other by the word chaſte, which they uſe. And touching your queſtion, how men may lawfully geld themſelues, but by voluntary purpoſe of continencie, which they may not breake; I anſwer, that wee deny not, but that ſuch as bee aſſured they haue the gift of continencie, may profeſſe to keepe it, and after ſuch profeſſion or promiſe made to God, they ſinne if they breake it. But if any haue raſhly vowed that which they are not able to keepe, they haue ſinned in vowing, and cannot keepe their vow by abſtinence from mariage, except they abſtaine alſo from all filthineſſe out of mariage: for ſuch, wee hold with Epiphanius, and S. Hierome, that immoderate aduancer of virginitie, that it is better to mary, than out of mariage to liue incontinently.

MART. 17. The Bezites here are blameleſſe, who tranſlate it word for word, Eunuches: but they are more to blame in another place, where in derogation of the priviledge and dignitie of Prieſts, they tranſlate thus: The Prieſts lips ſhould preſerue knowledge, and they ſhould ſeeke the Law at his mouth: where in the Hebrew and Greeke it is as plaine as poſſibly can bee ſpoken, The Prieſts lips ſhall keepe knowledge, and they ſhall ſeeke the Law at his mouth. Which is a marvellous priviledge given to the Prieſts of the old Law, for true determination of matters in controverſie, and right expounding of the Law, as we reade more fully, Deut.17. where they are commanded under paine of death, to ſtand to the Prieſts iudgement, which in this place God by the Prophet Malachie calleth his covenant with Levi, and that he will haue it to ſtand, to wit, in the new Teſtament, where Peter had ſuch priviledge for him and his ſucceſſors, that his faith ſhall not faile, where the holy Ghoſt is Preſident in the Church of Biſhops and Prieſts. All which theſe Heretikes would deface and defeat, by tranſlating the words otherwiſe than the holy Ghoſt hath ſpoken them.

FVLK. 17. The verbe indeede which the Prophet Malachie vſeth, is of the future temps. But who knoweth not, that the Hebrewes lacke the potentiall moode? and therefore they doe very often expreſſe it by the future temps of the indicatiue moode: which if you ſhould alwayes tranſlate by the future indicatiue, you ſhould make many faire promiſes to them that are ſharpely rebuked. But the circumſtance of the place doth plainely declare, that the Prieſts of that time had broken the covenant made with Levi, concerning keeping of the Law. Yea the very words following expreſſe the ſame: But you haue departed out of the way, and haue cauſed many to fall againſt the Law. You haue made voide the covenant of Levi, ſaith the Lord of Hoſts. By which words it is manifeſt, that the Prophet before ſpake of that knowledge of the Law, which the Prieſt ought to haue, and not which the Prieſts alwayes had: for certaine it is, that many of them were ignorant, yea ſometimes all: the high Prieſt was often an Idolater. And who condemned Chriſt and his Goſpell, but the high Prieſt? The authoritie that was given to the Prieſts, in caſe of controverſie, was limited within the bounds of Gods Law, from which if they declined, no man was bound to obey them. For who was bound to obey Vrias the high Prieſt, preferring the idolatrous Altar of Damaſco before the true Altar of the Lord? or thoſe devilliſh Tyrants, Menelaus, Alcimus, and ſuch other as occupied the Prieſts roomes in the time of the Macchabees, or Annas and Caiaphas in the time of Chriſt? Peter then having none other priviledge for him and his ſucceſſors, than Aaron had, hee and his ſucceſſors might fall and bee deceived: although Chriſt prayed that his faith ſhould not faile, as hee prayed for all the Apoſtles, and for all their ſucceſſors, yea for all beleevers, that they might bee ſanctified in the trueth; yet it were madneſſe to ſay, that none of them could erre. But whenſoever you will goe about to proue this priviledge, out of thoſe words of our Saviour Chriſt, make your Syllogiſme, and let us haue no more brabling. Our tranſlation in that place of Malachie, is more true, than you are able to impugne, for thoſe words are rather a commandement, what the Prieſts lips ſhould doe, not a promiſe or aſſurance, that they alway did ſo.

MART. 18. And when the Prophet addeth immediately the cauſe of this ſingle prerogatiue of the Prieſt, quia Angelus Domini exercituum eſt, becauſe hee is the Angel of the Lord of hoſts, which is alſo a wonderfull dignity, ſo to be called: they after their cold manner of prophane tranſlation, ſay, becauſe hee is the meſſenger of the Lord of hoſts. So doe they in the next chapter call S. Iohn the Baptiſt, meſſenger, where the Scripture (no doubt) ſpeaketh more honourably of him, as being Chriſts Precurſor, than of a meſſenger, which is a tearme for Poſts alſo and Lackies. The Scripture (I ſay) ſpeaketh thus of Saint Iohn, Behold I ſend mine Angell before thee: and our Saviour in the Goſpell, Matt. 11. Luk.7. telling the people the wonderfull dignities of S. Iohn, and that he was more than a Prophet, citeth this place, and giveth this reaſon, For this is hee of whom it is written, Behold I ſend mine Angell before thee. Which Saint Hierome calleth meritorum αὔξησιν, the increaſe and augmenting of Iohns merits or priviledges, that in Malachie hee is called an Angell: and S. Gregorie ſaith, hee which came to bring tidings of Chriſt himſelfe, was worthily called an Angell, that in his very name there might bee a dignitie. And all the Fathers, and all wit and reaſon conceiue a great excellencie in this name: onely our prophane Proteſtants, that thinke of all divine things and perſons moſt baſely, tranſlate accordingly, even in the foreſaid Goſpell alſo, making our Saviour to ſay, that Iohn was more than a Prophet, becauſe he was a Meſſenger. Yea, where our Saviour himſelfe is called, Angelus Teſtamenti, the Angell of the Teſtament, there they tranſlate, the Meſſenger of the covenant.

FVLK. 18. It is not ſafe, to tranſlate alwayes the Meſſenger of God, by the name of an Angell, which is commonly taken to ſignifie a ſpirit, not a bodily creature: therefore our tranſlators thought good to expreſſe the ſignification of the Hebrew, and Greeke word in Engliſh, and to uſe the tearme of Meſſenger, as the word doth ſignifie: nothing derogating from the dignitie of the perſons, or office of them, of whom it is uttered, which conſiſteth in the addition following of God, of the Lord, of the Church. For the name of Angell, of it ſelfe, is no name of dignitie, ſeeing there bee Angells of the Devill, and of darkeneſſe, as well as of God, and of Light. And Iſidorus Clarius interpreteth the word in this place of Malachie, Legatus, the Emballadour, or Meſſenger. It is not therefore of any prophane minde, that for Angell, wee ſay Meſſenger. Your owne vulgar interpreter, Agg. 1.*v.*13. tranſlateth Maleach Iehovah, nuncius domini, the Lords Meſſenger, and ſo divers times where mention is made of Gods Meſſengers. This is therefore a vaine contention about tearmes, when the matter is not in queſtion. That the name of Angels ſoundeth more honourably as Hierome and other thinke, it is no rule to binde tranſlators, but expounders may as occaſion is offered obſerue it.

MART. 19. If Saint Hierome in all theſe places had tranſlated, nuntium, then the Engliſh were meſſenger: but tranſlating it, Angelum, and the Church and all antiquitie ſo reading and expounding it as a terme of more dignity and excellencie, * what meane theſe baſe companions to diſgrace the very eloquence of the Scripture, which by ſuch termes of amplification would ſpeake more ſignificantly and emphatically? what meane they (I ſay) that ſo invey againſt Caſtaleo for his prophaneneſſe, themſelues to ſay for Angell, Meſſenger, for Apoſtle, Legate, or Embaſſadour, and the like? Are they afraide, leſt by calling men Angels, it would bee miſtaken, as though they were Angells indeed by nature? then Saint Paul ſpake dangerouſly, when he ſaid to the Galathians, As Gods Angell you received me, as Chriſt Ieſus. But to proceede.

Gal.4.v.14.

FVLK. 19. The very eloquence of the Scripture, is beſt expreſſed, when the words are tranſlated as they ſignifie in the originall tongue. And although ſome words, bee appropried to certaine callings, which it is not convenient to turne into the generall ſignification: yet is neither the Hebrew, nor the Greeke word, that ſignifieth Meſſengers in the Scripture, ſo reſtrained, but that it is vſed, for all Meſſengers indifferently, of God and men, yea of God, and the Devill. Wherefore there is no cauſe why wee ſhould uſe the Greeke word Angell, rather than the Engliſh word Meſſenger. And where you aske, whether wee be afraid, leſt by calling men Angells, it would be miſtaken, as though they were Angels in nature: wee may well feare, leſt the ignorant and unlearned, might ſo bee deceived, when Briſtow, ſo great a Doctor, and writer amongſt you, is ſo fondly diſguiſed, that hee miſtaketh the Angell of the Church of Philadelphia, for an Angell by nature, and alledgeth, that which God promiſeth, that his enemies the Iewes ſhall worſhip before his feete, to proue the invocation and worſhip of heavenly Angells. Neither ſpake Paul dangerouſly, when hee ſaid the Galathians received him as an Angell of God as Chriſt Ieſus. For the word Angell in the Greeke tongue ſignifieth a meſſenger: it was eaſie to underſtand, that the Meſſenger or Embaſſador of a Prince is received as the Prince himſelfe, without confounding the perſons, of the Prince and his meſſenger.

Otherwiſe, Beza in his annotatiõs upon the place, doth not miſlike the ſenſe, and interpretation of Ambroſe, whereof hee maketh mention, but preferreth the other, as more ſimple and agreeable to the meaning of the Apoſtle in that place, and to the nature of the Greeke and Hebrew phraſe.

a ſmall matter in compariſon of the leaſt corruption: or rather, becauſe they doe the like Act.20.v.28. it is done, to ſuppreſſe the ſignification of Eccleſiaſticall power and governement, that concurreth with feeding, firſt in Chriſt, and from him in his Apoſtles and Paſtors of the Church, both which are here ſignified in this one Greeke word, to wit, that Chriſt our Saviour ſhall rule and feede, (Pſal.2. Apoc.2. v.27.) yea he ſhall rule in a rod of yron, and from him, Peter and the reſt, by his commiſſion given in the ſame word, feede and rule my ſheepe, Io. 21. yea and that in a rod of yron, as when hee ſtroke Ananias and Sapphira *to corporall death, as his ſucceſſors doe the like offenders to ſpirituall deſtruction (unleſſe they repent) by the terrible rod of excommunication. 2 Cor.10.v.4. & 8.

FVLK. 21. That wee ſhould not meane any thing againſt the government of Chriſt, whom wee wiſh and deſire from our hearts, that hee alone might raigne, and his ſervants under him, hee himſelfe is iudge, to whom in this caſe wee doe boldly appeale. But let us ſee, how we may bee charged with falſe tranſlation. The Hebrew and Greeke (ſay you) doe ſignifie onely a ruler or governor, *Mic.*5. And doe not wee tranſlate a governor or captaine, which may anſwere there the Hebrew of the Prophet, or the Greeke of the Septuaginta, or of the Evangeliſt. The word ποιμανεῖ that wee tranſlate, ſometime to governe, ſometime to feede, is not in the Prophet, but in the Evangeliſt, and ſignifieth properly to feede as a ſheepheard, and metaphorically to governe. What cauſe have you here to cry out, falſe tranſlation, and to oppoſe the Hebrew word of the Prophet, which is fully ſatisfied in the word governour? And the Greeke word, which the Evangeliſt uſeth, hath his proper ſignification in ſome tranſlations, in other, that which is figurative, neither doth the one exclude the other. But feeding doth import governing. But it ſeemeth you would have rule, without feeding, that you are ſo zealous for governement. The word ποιμαίνειν, Act. 20. in ſome tranſlations, is rendred, to rule, in other, to feede. The more proper is, to feede, yet the Greeke word will beare the other alſo. But feeding as a ſheepheard doth his ſheepe, comprehendeth both. The ſame word Ioan. 21. our Saviour Chriſt limiteth rather to feeding, as the Evangeliſt reporteth his words, uſing βόσκε twiſe and ποίμαινε once. For by lording, and ruling, Peter ſhould not ſo well teſtifie his love towards Chriſt, as by painefull feeding. And there your owne vulgar interpreter tranſlateth Paſce, and your ſelves feede, though in the margent you would faine pray aide of the Greeke to eſtabliſh your Popes tyrannicall rule. Yea you will give him a rodde of yron which is the ſcepter of Chriſt, yea an armie of ſouldiers to ſubdue Ireland, and to wreſt it out of the Queene of Englands dominion that is ποίμαινε τὰ πρόβατά μου feede and rule my ſheepe in your ſecret meaning, and for that purpoſe you bring in the miraculous ſtriking of Ananias and Saphira for their hypocriſie, pretending that you meane but ſpirituall deſtruction by the rodde of excommunication, which how terrible it is, when it is duely exerciſed by them that have authoritie, wee neede not learne of you. The other text Pſalme the 2. Apoc. 2. *v.*27. wee tranſlate alwayes rule. And your vulgar Interpreter, Pet. 5. tranſlateth the ſame word paſcite, feede you the Church of God &c. and elſewhere divers times. Doth hee ſo diminiſh Eccleſiaſticall authoritie? &c.

FVLK. 22. Touching this text 1 Pet: 2. I have anſwered before that the word ſignifieth him that excelleth, and therefore it is no corruption to tranſlate it the chiefe. For the name of ſupreame head in that ſenſe which Calvine and other abroad did miſlike it, it was never allowed, nor by authoritie graunted to the Kings Henry and Edward, but in the ſame ſenſe it is now graunted to Queene Elizabeth whom wee acknowledge to have the ſame authority in cauſes Eccleſiaſticall which her father and brother Kings before her had, and exerciſed to Gods glory. But as Steven Gardiner underſtood the title in conference with Bucer at Ratiſbone, we doe utterly abhorre it, and ſo did all Godly men alwayes, that a King ſhould have abſolute power to doe in religion what he will. In what ſenſe the Popiſh Clergie of England, being caſt in the premunire did firſt of all aſcribe it to the King in their ſubmiſſion, looke you unto it: we thinke it was rather of flattery, than of duty, wiſedome, or religion. As for the Eccleſiaſticall government which the Scripture preſcribeth may well ſtand, which craveth the aide of a Chriſtian Prince, which is the Queenes authority in cauſes Eccleſiaſticall.

MART 23. But howſoever that be, let them iuſtify their tranſlation, or confeſſe their fault. And as for the Kings ſupremacy over the Church, if they make any doubt, let them reade Saint Ignatius wordes, who was in the Apoſtles time, even when Saint Peter *gave the foreſaid admonition of ſubjection to the King, and knew very well how farre his preeminence extended, and therefore ſaith plainely in notorious wordes, that wee muſt firſt honour God, then the Biſhop, and then the King. FVLK. 23. Howſoever thoſe Epiſtles be truly or untruely aſcribed to Ignatius which here I will not diſpute, there is nothing ſaid in this that you cite of the Biſhops preeminence above the King, but we acknowledge it to be true of the meaneſt Prieſt of Gods Church in matters properly belonging to his office, which yet doeth not exempt him from ſubjection to his Prince, but that in cauſes Eccleſiaſticall alſo he is to be commanded by his Prince to doe his duty, and to be puniſhed by him, if he doe otherwiſe.

MART. 24. But in the former ſentence of Saint Peter, though they have altered their tranſlation about the Kings headſhip, yet there is one corruption remaining ſtill in theſe wordes, Submit your ſelves VNTO ALL MANER ORDINANCE OF MAN. Whereas in the Greeke it is word for word as in the old vulgar Latine tranſlation, omni humanæ creaturæ, and as we have tranſlated, to every humane creature: meaning temporall Princes and Magiſtrates, as is plaine by the exemplification immediately following, of King, and Dukes, and other ſent or appoynted by him. But they in favour of their temporall ſtatutes, actes of Parliament, Proclamations, and iniunctions made againſt the Catholike religion, doe tranſlate all with one conſent, Submit your ſelves to all maner ordinance of man, Doeth κτίσις ſignify ordinance? or is it all one to be obedient to every one of our Princes, and to all manner ordinance of the ſaid Princes?

1 Pet.2.v.13. 14.

FVLK. 24. The word ordinance you doe violently draw to every ſtatute, proclamation, or iniunction, which is underſtood of the ordinance or appoyntment of Magiſtrates in what forme ſoever they be created, or at the worſt cannot be referred but onely to ſuch decrees as are not contrary to the word of God. The word κτίσις we know ſignifyeth a creature or creation, which ſpeeches being not uſuall in our Engliſh tongue to ſignify Magiſtrates: our Interpreters have expreſſed the ſame by the word ordinance. You your ſelves tranſlate that which is in Greeke κτίσις in Latine Creatura, Mark. 16. of the creation and in the ſame ſenſe doe our Tranſlatours uſe the word of ordinance.

MART. 25. A ſtrange caſe and much to be conſidered, how they wring and wreſt the holy Scriptures this way and that way and every way to ſerve their hereticall proceedings. For when the queſtion is of due obedience to Eccleſiaſticall Canons, and decrees of the Church and generall Councells, where the holy Ghoſt by Chriſts promiſe is aſſiſtant, and whereof it is ſaid, if he heare not the Church, let him bee unto thee as an heathen and Publicane: and, Hee that heareth you, heareth mee: hee that deſpiſeth you deſpiſeth mee: there they cry out aloude and odiouſly tearme all ſuch ordinances, mens traditions, and, commandements of men, and moſt deſpitefully contemne and condemne them. But here, for obedience to temporall edicts, and Parliament ſtatutes daylie enacted in favour of their ſchiſme and hereſies, they once maliciouſly forged, and ſtill wickedly retayne without alteration, a text of their owne, making the Apoſtle to command ſubmiſſion unto all manner ordinance of man, whereof hath enſued the falſe crime of treaſon and cruell death for the ſame, upon thoſe innocent men and glorious Martyrs, that choſe to obey God and his Churches holy ordinances, rather then mans ſtatutes and lawes directed againſt the ſame.

Luc.10.

FVLK. 25. It is no ſtrange caſe for an heretike and a traytour that hath ſould his tongue to utter ſlaunders againſt the Church of God and the Chriſtian magiſtrate protectour of the ſame, to deviſe and ſurmiſe that which never was intended, never was practiſed. As that againſt the Godly and lawfull decrees of the Church wee ſhould tranſlate mens traditions commandements of men, and to the maintenance of all temporall lawes be they never ſo wicked, we ſhould tranſlate ordinance in ſtead of creature. As for the crime of treaſon and juſt execution of them that have ſuffered of your viperous brood, I referre to the tryall of the lawes and judgements that have paſſed upon them, as no matter meete for me to diſpute of: onely this all good ſubjects know, yea all the world may know that they which take part with the Pope, our Princes open and profeſſed enemy, not in matters of religion onely, but in caſes concerning her crowne and dignity, her Realmes and Dominions cannot beare dutifull and obedient hearts to her Majeſty. Whoſe clemency hitherto hath ſpared them that acknowledge her Princely authority, although in all other poynts of Poperie they continue as obſtinate as ever they were.

CHAP. XVI.

Hereticall tranſlation againſt the Sacrament of Matrimonie.

BVT as they are injurious tranſlatours to the ſacred order of Prieſthood, ſo a man would thinke they ſhould bee very friendly to the Sacrament of Matrimonie. For they would ſeeme to make more of Matrimony then we doe, making it equall at the leaſt with virginity. Yet the trueth is, wee make it, or rather the Church of God eſteemeth it as an holy Sacrament, they doe not: as giving grace to the marryed perſons to live together in love, concord, and fidelity: they acknowledge no ſuch thing. So that Matrimony with them is highly eſteemed in reſpect of the fleſh, or (to ſay the beſt) onely for a civill contract, as it is among Iewes and Pagans: but as it is peculiar to Chriſtians, and (as S. Auguſtine ſaith) in the ſanctification alſo and holineſſe of a Sacrament, they make no account of it, but flatly deny it.

FVLKE.

WE make no more of Matrimonie then the holy Scripture doeth teach us neither doe wee in all reſpects make it equall with virginity, howſoever you doe ſlaunder us. But you ſo make it an holy Sacrament, that you thinke the holy order of Prieſthood is prophaned by it. Wee acknowledge that God giveth grace to them that bee faithfull, to live in love, concord, and fidelity, even as he did to the Fathers of the old Teſtament living in the ſame honourable eſtate, which prooveth that Matrimonie is no Sacrament of the new Teſtament, although it bee an holy Ordinance for Gods Children to live in, and in it is contained, an holy ſecret or myſterie of the ſpirituall conjunction of Chriſt and his Church. It is therefore nothing elſe but a diveliſh ſlaunder to ſay that wee eſteeme it but in reſpect of the fleſh or for a civill contract.

MART. 2. And to this purpoſe they tranſlate in the Epiſtle to the Epheſians, 5. Where the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of Matrimonie, That is a great ſecret. Whereas the Latine Church and all the Doctours thereof have ever read, This is a great Sacrament: the Greeke Church and all the Fathers thereof, This is a great myſterie, becauſe that which is in Greeke, myſterie: is in Latine, Sacrament; and contrarywiſe, the wordes in both tongues being equivalent: ſo that if one bee taken in the large ſignification, the other alſo: as, Apoc. 17. I will ſhew thee the Sacrament of the woman. And I will ſhew thee the myſtery of the woman. And ſo in ſundry places, againe if one be reſtrayned from the larger ſignification, and peculiarly applyed, ſignify the Sacraments of the Church, the other alſo. As, the Sacrament of the body and blood of Chriſt: or, the Myſtery of the body and blood of Chriſt: and the Calviniſts in their Latine and Greeke Catechiſme ſay, two Sacraments, or, two Myſteries.

Sacramentum hoc magnum eſt μυστήριον.

Sacramentum μυστήριον.

Duo Sacramenta. δύο μυστήρια.

FVLK. 2. The Engliſh word ſecret, ſignifyeth fully as much as the Greeke word μυστήριον, in which wee muſt ſeeke no holineſſe as Papiſts doe in vaine ſound of wordes: but in the matter annexed, which plainely expreſſeth that it is a great ſecret of great holineſſe whereof the Apoſtle ſpeaketh. And it is very falſe that you ſay that the Latine word Sacramentum is equivalent to the Greeke: for both it ſignifyeth an oath which the Greeke word doeth not, and alſo it includeth holineſſe, which the Greeke word doeth not. Or elſe why [illegible] not your vulgar Tranſlatour and you, the Sacrament of iniquity? μυστήριον therefore ſignify [illegible] every ſecret, ſacramentum onely an holy Sacrament, as when you ſay, Apoc. 17. the Sacrament of the woman, the meaning is, the ſecret to bee revealed concerning her, is an holy thing: elſe in the ſame chapter you have not a ſacrament written in her forehead, but a myſtery or ſecret, Babylon the mother of abominations. That the ſacraments are called myſteries we confeſſe; but that whatſoever is called a myſtery, may alſo be called a Sacrament, that doe we utterly deny.

MART. 3. This being ſo, what is the fault of their tranſlation in the place aforeſaid? This that they tranſlate neither Sacrament, nor Myſtery. As for the word Sacrament, they are excuſed, becauſe they tranſlate not the Latine: but tranſlating the Greeke, why ſaid they not Myſtery, which is the Greeke word here in the Apoſtle? I meane, why ſaid they not of matrimony, This is a great Myſtery? No doubt there can bee no other cauſe, but to avoyd both theſe words, which are uſed in the Latine and Greeke Church, to ſignify the Sacraments. For in the Greeke Church the Sacrament of the body and blood it ſelfe is called but a myſtery, or myſteries, which yet the Proteſtants themſelves call a true Sacrament. Therefore if they ſhould have called Matrimony alſo by that name, it might eaſily have ſounded to be a Sacrament alſo. But in ſaying it is a great ſecret, they put it out of doubt, that it ſhall not be ſo taken.

Were it [illegible] or lawfull [illegible] tranſlate Baptizo, I waſh, or Baptiſmus, waſhing, or Evangelium, good newes? Yet the words prophanely taken, ſignify no more.

FVLK. 3. Seeing the word ſecret that wee uſe, ſignifyeth wholly as much as myſtery, wee hope all reaſonable men will allow the ſame alſo. Sacrament without prejudice to the trueth wee could not tranſlate, and myſtery for the better underſtanding of the people, wee have expreſſed in the Engliſh word ſecret. Out of which if it have any force of argument in it, you may prove Matrimonie to be a Sacrament, as well as out of the Greeke word myſterie. But it is the ſound of an unknowne word that you had rather play upon in the eares of the ignorant, then by any ſound argument out of the Scripture, to bring them to the knowledge of the trueth.

MART 4. They will ſay unto mee, Is not every Sacrament and myſtery in Engliſh a ſecret? Yes, as Angell is a meſſenger; and Apoſtle, one that is ſent. But when the holy Scripture uſeth theſe words to ſignify more excellent and divine things then thoſe of the common ſort, doth it become Tranſlatours to uſe baſer tearmes in ſtead thereof, and ſo to diſgrace the writing and meaning of the holy Ghoſt? I appeale to themſelves, when they tranſlate this word in other places, whether they ſay not thus, And without doubt, great was that MYSTERIE of godlineſſe: God was ſhewed manifeſtly in the fleſh, &c. Againe, The MYSTERIE which hath beene hid ſince the world beganne, but now is opened to his Saints. Againe, I ſhew you a MYSTERY; we ſhall not all ſleepe, but we ſhall all be changed. And the like, Where if they ſhould tranſlate ſecret in ſtead of myſtery, as the Bezites doe in one of theſe places, ſaying, I will ſhew you a ſecret thing; what a diſgracing and debaſing were it to thoſe high myſteries there ſignifyed? And if it were ſo in theſe, is it not ſo in matrimony, which the Apoſtle maketh ſuch a myſtery, that it repreſenteth no leſſe matter then Chriſt and his Church, and whatſoever is moſt excellent in that conjunction? Now then, if in all other places of high myſtery, they tranſlate it alſo myſtery, as it is in the Greeke, and onely in Matrimony doe not ſo, but ſay rather, This is a great ſecret, uſing ſo baſe a tearme in ſo high and excellent a myſtery, muſt we not needes thinke (as no doubt it is) that they doe it becauſe of their hereticall opinion againſt the Sacrament of matrimony, and for their baſe eſtimation thereof?

1 Tim. 3.
Col. 1. v. 26.
Eph. 3. v. 9.
1 Cor. 15. v. 51.

FVLK. 4 Now you fly to your old ſhift of the Eccleſiaſticall uſe of tearmes, which you cannot proove to bee like of this Engliſh word myſtery, which is commonly as prophanely and ſecularly uſed, as any other word. For what is more common among Artificers, then their ſcience or myſtery, of weaving, of dying, and ſuch like? And yet the word may bee uſed of the higheſt ſecrets of Chriſtian Religion, as it is of our Tranſlatours. And whereſoever they have ſayd a myſterie, they might as truely have ſayd a ſecret, and where they ſay a ſecret, they might have ſaid a myſtery. But where you ſay, that in all other places of high myſtery, they tranſlate the word myſtery, it is falſe: for Matth. 13. Marke the 4. Luke the 8. where all the myſteries of the Kingdome of God are ſpoken of, they tranſlate Myſteria, the ſecrets of the Kingdome of Heaven: and 1 Corinth. 4. where the Sacraments and all other ſecrets of Chriſtian Religion are ſpoken of, they tranſlate μυστηρίων, Stewards of the Myſteries of God. Wherefore it is a ſhamefull and ſenceleſſe ſlaunder, that here onely wee uſe this word ſecret to ſhew our baſe eſtimation of Matrimonie.

MART. 5. But they will yet reply againe, and aske us what wee gaine by tranſlating it either Sacrament, or myſterie: Doth that make it one of the Sacraments properly ſo called, to wit, ſuch a Sacrament as Baptiſme is? No ſurely: but howſoever wee gaine otherwiſe, at leaſt we gaine the commendation of true Tranſlatours, whether it make with us or againſt us. For otherwiſe it is not the name maketh it ſuch a peculiar Sacrament. For (as is ſaid before) Sacrament is a generall name in Scripture to other things. Neither doe we therefore ſo tranſlate it, as though it were forthwith one of the ſeven Sacraments, becauſe of the name: but as in other places whereſoever we find this word in the Latin, we tranſlate it Sacrament (as in the Apocalyps, the Sacrament of the woman) ſo finding it here, wee doe here alſo ſo tranſlate it: and as for the diverſe taking of it here, and elſewhere, that we examine otherwiſe, by circumſtance of the text, and by the Churches and Doctours interpretation: and wee finde that here it is taken for a Sacrament in that ſenſe as we ſay, ſeven Sacraments; not ſo in the other places.

Apoc. 17.

Fvlk. 5. No reaſonable man can charge us to bee falſe Tranſlatours, when wee turne the Greeke word into that which it doeth generally, properly, and alwayes ſignify. And for all your bragging of ſincere tranſlating, if you ſhould tranſlate Tob. 12. I am perſwaded you would not ſay, It is a good thing to hide the Kings Sacrament. Yet is the Latine word in that place Sacramentum, and the Greeke μυστήριον. But it is ſufficient for you to have a ſhaddow of ſomething to finde your ſelfe occupyed, rather then you would bee ſaying of nothing.

Mart. 6. As when we reade this name Ieſus in Scripture common to our Saviour and to other men, wee tranſlate it alwayes alike, Ieſus: but when it is[b] IESVS Chriſt, and when ſome other Ieſus,[c] wee know by other circumſtances. Likewiſe preſuppoſe Baptiſme in the Scripture were called a Sacrament, yet the Proteſtants themſelves would not, nor could thereby conclude, that it were one of their two Sacraments. Yet I trow they would not avoyde to tranſlate it by the word Sacrament, if they found it ſo called. Even ſo wee finding Matrimonie ſo called, doe ſo tranſlate it, neither concluding thereby that it is one of the Seven, nor yet ſuppreſſing the name, which no doubt gave ſome occaſion to the Church and the holy Doctours to eſteeme it as one of the Seven. They contrarywiſe, as though it were never ſo called, ſuppreſſe the name altogether, calling it a ſecret, to put it out of all queſtion, that it is no Sacrament: which they would not have done, if the Scripture had ſaid of Baptiſme or the Euchariſt, This is a great Sacrament. So partiall they are to their owne opinions.

[b] Iude v. 5.
[c] Act. 7. v. 45. Coloſſ. 4. v. 11.

Fvlk. 6. Except you thought you had to doe with very ignorant perſons, or elſe eſteemed too much of your lately profeſſed Divinity, you would never cumber the Reader with ſuch childiſh trifles of the name of Ieſus, of the bare name of Sacrament, which could not proove Baptiſme or the Lords Supper to bee Sacraments, &c. and what we would doe if we found them ſo called, &c. I have already told you what wee have done, where not onely the Sacraments, but all other pretious Iewells of Chriſts Church committed to the diſpenſation of his Miniſters, are called μυστήρια, and tranſlate it ſecrets, without any abaſement of the dignity of them, or without any intent to ſuppreſſe any of the honour and reverence which is due unto them. Wherefore uſing the word ſecret in this text, wee had no purpoſe to derogate any thing from the worthineſſe of matrimonie, much leſſe from the ſpirituall myſtery which the Apoſtle offereth to be conſidered by it in Chriſt and his Church.

MARTIN.

Chap. XVII.

Hereticall tranſlation againſt the bleſſed Sacrament and Sacrifice, and Altar.

NOW let us ſee concerning the Euchariſt, which they allow for a Sacrament, how they handle the matter to the defacing and diſgracing of the ſame alſo. They take away the operation and efficacy of Chriſts bleſſing pronounced upon the bread and wine, making it only a thankeſgiving to God: and to this purpoſe they tranſlate more gladly thankſgiving, then bleſſing, as Mat. 26. the Greek words being two, the one ſignifying properly to bleſſe, the other to give thanks, they tranſlate both thus, When wee had given thankes. Likewiſe Mark. 14. in the Bible printed 1562. And when they tranſlate it bleſſing, they meane nothing elſe but giving thankes, as Beza telleth us in his annotations, Mat. 26. v. 26. Wee reply, and by moſt manifeſt Scripture prove unto them, that the former Greeke word doeth not ſignify thankeſgiving properly, but bleſſing, and a bleſſing of creatures to the operation of ſome great effect in them: as when Chriſt tooke the five loaves and two fiſhes, to multiply them, he bleſſed them, Luk. 9. What ſay they to this, thinke you? Doeth not the Greeke word here plainely ſignify, bleſſing of creatures? No (ſaith Beza) no doubt but here alſo it ſignifyeth giving thankes. How Beza? He addeth, Not as though Chriſt had given thankes to the bread, for that were too abſurd: but we muſt mollify this interpretation thus, that he gave thankes to God the Father for the loaves and the fiſhes. Is not this a notable expoſition of theſe words, benedixit eis?

αὐτοὺς, [illegible] Luke 9, 16.

FVLKE.

THE Sacrament of the body and bloud of Chriſt, being a matter of ſome great weight and controverſie betweene us, you might not omit, but note our falſe tranſlations againſt it. But becauſe wee have dealt ſo ſincerely, as malice hath nothing to blame therein, you muſt feigne a quarrell and forge a controverſy, where none is betweene us, namely, that wee take away Chriſts bleſſing pronounced upon the bread and wine, making it onely a thankeſgiving unto God: which is a falſe and impudent ſlander, as in that which followeth concerning this matter, moſt plainely ſhall appeare, even by teſtimonie of him whom you doe moſt ſlander in this caſe. But let us ſee what fault is in our tranſlation: Matth. 26. and Mark. 14. two of our tranſlations for εὐλογήσας ſay, when he had given thankes. To this I anſwer, that Beza telleth you that in ſeven Greeke copies the word is εὐχαριστήσας, which ſignifyeth giving of thankes, without controverſie, as alſo εὐλογήσας doeth, but not onely ſo expreſſing rather the Hebrew word ברך which ſignifyeth both to bleſſe, and to give thankes. But ſeeing Saint Luke and Saint Paul reporting the inſtitution of the Supper doe uſe the word εὐχαριστήσας, which ſignifyeth giving of thankes, we count them the beſt Interpreters of the other two Evangeliſts, which plainely teach us, that by bleſſing they meane giving of thankes, or that the Greeke word doth here ſignify giving of thankes, as in many other places. The place Luke 9. where Chriſt bleſſed the loaves, is alſo interpreted by Saint Iohn, who reporting the ſame miracle, (as Beza ſheweth) uſeth the word which ſignifieth onely thankeſgiving: but becauſe εὐλόγησεν is in Luke uſed as a verbe tranſitive, which cannot ſignify thankeſgiving or prayer made to the creatures, we muſt underſtand, that hee bleſſed the loaves, that is, he gave thankes to God for them, and withall prayed, that ſo ſmall a quantity of bread and fiſh might feede ſo great a multitude, and that this whole feaſt might bee referred to the glory of God. This is Bezaes interpretation, which becauſe it was too long for your quarrell, you cut off the better part of it, and like a grinning hypocrite ſcoffe at a peece, as though it were the whole expoſition of theſe words, benedixit eis, he bleſſed them.

Mart. 2. We aske him in the like caſes, when God bleſſed Adam and Eve, Gen. 1. and 9. Noe and his children ſaying, Increaſe and multiply; when hee bleſſed the Children of Iſrael, and they multiplyed exceedingly: when hee bleſſed the latter things of Iob more then the firſt, Iob 42. was this alſo a giving of thankes, and not an effectuall bleſſing upon theſe Creatures? What will they ſay, or what difference will they make? As God bleſſed here, ſo hee was God and man that bleſſed the loaves and fiſhes there. If they will ſay hee did it as man, and therefore it was a giving of thankes to God his Father: to omit that hee bleſſed them as hee multiplyed them, that is, rather according to his divine nature then humane: wee aske them, when he bleſſed as man, was it always giving of thankes? Hee bleſſed the little Children, hee bleſſed his Diſciples when hee aſcended: was this giving thankes for them, as Beza *expoundeth his bleſſing of the loaves and fiſhes? When we bleſſe the table, or the meat upon the table, when S. Paul ſaith, 1 Tim. 4. *All meat is lawfull that is ſanctifyed by the word and by prayer: is all this nothing but giving thanks? So ſaith Beza in expreſſe words.

εὐλόγησεν αὐτοὺς. Pſal 16. εὐλόγησε τὰ ἔσχατα.

* Beza Lico citato ἁγιάζεται, which word can never ſignify giving thankes.

Fvlk. 2. When I ſee thoſe often moſt impudent invectives againſt Beza and other, I muſe with my ſelfe whether you have read Beza, and the other your ſelfe, or whether you give credite to ſome malicious caviller, who is ſet on worke to picke quarrells out of other mens writings to ſerve your turne. But when I conſider all circumſtances of every place, and namely, how you object againſt Beza, that which hee ſaith of the bleſſing or conſecrating of our ordinary meates and drinkes, I thinke it is not like but that you have read the places your ſelfe: And then of all that ever I knew, I muſt eſteeme you the furtheſt from ſincerity and honeſt dealing, that ſo often, ſo openly, ſo confidently, ſo purpoſedly, committe ſo vile and ſhamefull forgery. Beza ſaith, that our meat is ſanctifyed by the word of God, and prayer, and thankeſgiving. For 1 Timoth. 4. the Apoſtle joyneth both, as here Luke 9. wee muſt joyne both together. For partely for the meate given to us, thankes is given to God; partly petition is made, that wee may uſe it purely and ſoberly, that wee may ſpend the reſt of our life in the worſhip of God. Hereof it commeth, that Chriſtians are ſaid to bleſſe the Table, and to conſecrate the table, whereas yet this bleſſing pertaineth not to the meates themſelves, but to God rather, and them that ſhall bee partakers of them. But in the cup of bleſſing which wee bleſſe (as it is written 1 Cor. 10.v. 16.) although the word of bleſſing may bee expounded after the ſame manner, yet the end of the bleſſing is altogether diverſe, as in due place wee ſhall expound. Theſe are the wordes of Beza. Is all this nothing but giving of thanks?

Mart. 3. Wee goe forward, and prove the contrary, yet more manifeſtly, in the very matter of the bleſſed Sacrament, for the which they multiply all the foreſaid abſurdities. Wee tell them that S. Paul ſaith thus, The chalice of bleſſing, which wee bleſſe, is it not, &c. *How could hee ſpeake more plainely, that the chalice or cup (meaning that in the cup) is bleſſed? Which S.*Cyprian De Cœn. Dom. explicateth thus: Calix ſolenni benedictione ſacratus, The chalice conſecrated by ſolemne bleſſing. Oecumenius thus, The chalice which bleſſing wee prepare, that is, which wee bleſſe and ſo prepare, for ſo it muſt ſignify, and not as Beza would have it, which with thankes-giving wee prepare, and that I proove by his owne wordes immediately before, where hee ſaith, that the Greeke word being uſed of the Apoſtle tranſitively, that is, with a caſe following, cannot ſignify giving thankes. How then can it ſo ſignify in Oecumenius words, who doeth interpret the Apoſtles meaning by the Apoſtles owne wordes and phraſe? yea, (that you may note a notorious contradiction) how doeth Beza then in the place of Luke before alleadged (where the ſame Greeke word is a plaine tranſitive, as in this place) expound it of giving thanks for the bread and fiſhes? A lyar (they ſay) muſt bee mindefull to make his tale agree in every poynt. He that before forced the word in every ſentence to bee nothing elſe but thankes-giving, even when it was a plaine tranſitive, now confeſſeth that hee never read it in that ſignification when it is a tranſitive: and ſo wee have, that the bleſſing of the cup or of the bread, is not giving thankes, as they either tranſlate, or interpret it.

ὃ εὐλογοῦμεν ὃ εὐλογοῦντες κατασκευάζομεν.

Annot. in 1 Cor. 10.v.16.

Fvlk. 3. I muſt continue my admiration of your impudence, for Beza ſaith expreſſely in this place 1 Corinth. 10. that to bleſſe here is to ſanctifie or conſecrate, becauſe that the ordinance of God being rehearſed and ſet foorth, the bread and wine are appoynted to this holy uſe, that they ſhould bee the Sacraments of the true and naturall body and bloud of Chriſt, that is, the ſignes and pledges thereof, and that in ſuch ſort, that the ſame thing which is ſignifyed, is offered to us to bee received ſpiritually. And becauſe this whole action is joyned with the prayſe of God, and ſolemne thankes-giving, therefore I eſteeme that Saint Paul ſignifyed this whole matter in the verbe εὐλογεῖν. So that in my judgement Oecumenius hath plainely and briefely expounded ὃ εὐλογοῦμεν, that is, which with prayſe and thankes-giving wee prepare. Which I admoniſh, leaſt any man ſhould thinke that by the tearme of conſecration, wee meane any magicall incantation. That you would proove by Bezaes wordes, that he hath not juſtly explicated the meaning of Oecumenius, it is too too beyond all meaſure of impudence. For Beza not contrarying that which hee ſaid before, ſheweth how the cup is bleſſed, ſanctifyed, conſecrated, namely by prayer, prayſe of God, and thankes-giving. For which hee citeth Chryſoſtome, who expoundeth theſe wordes of Saint Paul (which we bleſſe) to meane, which wee receive with thanks-giving. As for the place of Saint Luke 9. Beza himſelfe citeth it, and many other like, to proove that εὐλογεῖν with an accuſative caſe ſignifyeth to bleſſe, to ſanctify, to conſecrate, as alſo in that place, Luk. 9. he expoundeth it. And yet you will make him a lyar, forgetting what tale he told before. Indeed that rule you give, is meet for a crafty lyar, that hath ſome care to maintaine his credit. But ſuch an impudent lyar and ſhameleſſe forger as you are, hath no regard of any thing, but to deceive them, whoſe ignorance and ſimplicity is ſuch, as they neither can, nor care to examine your ſlaunders.

Mart. 4. And ſurely in the word εὐλογεῖν *this is moſt evident, that it ſignifyeth in this caſe the bleſſing and conſecration of the creature or element: Inſomuch that S.*Baſil *and S.*Chryſoſtome in their Liturgies or Maſſes, ſay thus by the ſame Greeke word. Bleſſe (O Lord) the ſacred bread: and, Bleſſe (O Lord) the ſacred cup: and why, or to what effect? It followeth, changing it by thy holy ſpirit. Where is ſignifyed the tranſmutation and conſecration thereof into the body and bloud. But in the other word εὐχαριστεῖν there may be ſome queſtion, becauſe it ſignifyeth properly to give thankes, and therefore may ſeeme to bee referred to God onely, and not to the element and creature. But this alſo we find contrary in the Greek Fathers, who uſe this word alſo tranſitively ſaying, panem & chalicem euchariſtiſatos, or panem in quo gratiæ actæ ſunt, that is, the bread and the cup made the Euchariſt: the bread over which thankes are given: that is, which by the word of prayer and thankes-giving is made a conſecrated meat, the fleſh and blood of Chriſt, *as S.*Iuſtine in fine 2. Apologo, *and S.*Irenæus, lib. 4. 34. in the ſame places expound it. Whereas it may alſo ſignify that, for which thankes are given in that moſt ſolemne ſacrifice of the Euchariſt, as S. Denys in one place ſeemeth to take it, Eccl. Hier. c. 3. in fine, who in the ſelfe ſame chapter ſpeaketh of the conſecration thereof moſt evidently.

That

Fvlk. 4. That the creatures, or elements, are bleſſed and conſecrated, that by the working of Gods ſpirit, they ſhould bee changed into the body and bloud of Chriſt, after a divine and ſpirituall manner, unto the worthy receivers, Beza and wee agree with the Greeke Liturgies. But that this bleſſing is performed by the word of God, prayer, and thankes-giving, both Iuſtinus, and Irenæus, doe moſt plainely teſtifie with Beza and us. When the mixed cuppe, and bread, ſayth Irenæus, receiveth the word of God, it is made the Euchariſt, &c. The bread on which, or for which, thankes is given. The bread which is of the earth, receiving the vocation or invocation of God. So ſaith Iuſtinus, the meat for which thankes are given, by the word of prayer, which is received from him. And ſpeaking of the very manner of the conſecration uſed in his time: when the bread and wine, with water, is offered: the chiefe Miniſter ſendeth for the prayers, and thankes-giving, with all his might, and the people conſenteth, ſaying, Amen. Then followeth the diſtribution, and participation of thoſe things, for which thankes was given, to every one, &c. As for the Magicall myſteries of Dionyſe, although in this behalfe, they make nothing againſt us, wee make not ſo great account of, that wee will ſtand to his judgement any more, then you to his practice.

Mart. 5. Whereby we have to note, that the Heretikes in urging the word, Euchariſt, as meere thanks-giving, therby to take away bleſſing, and conſecration of the Elements of bread and wine, doe unlearnedly, and deceitfully. Becauſe all the Fathers make mention of both: Saint Paul alſo calleth it, bleſſing of the chalice, which the Evangeliſts call, giving of thankes. Whoſe words Theophylact explicateth thus, The Chalice Of Blessing, that is of the Euchariſt. For holding it in our handes, wee bleſſe it, and give thankes to him that ſhed his bloud for us. See here both bleſſing, and Euchariſt, bleſſing the chalice, and thankes-giving to Chriſt. Saint Iames, and the Greeke Fathers in their Liturgies, put both wordes in the conſecration of each element, ſaying thus, give thankes, ſanctifying, breaking: and, giving thankes, bleſſing, ſanctifying: and, taking the cuppe, giving thankes, ſanctifying, bleſſing, filling it with the holy Ghoſt, hee gave it to us his Diſciples. Saint Chryſoſtome, who in many places of his workes, ſpeaketh much of thankes-giving in theſe holy myſteries, doeth hee not as often ſpeake of the bleſſing, conſecration, yea, and the tranſmutation thereof, and that with what wordes, and by what power it is done? Doeth not Saint Auguſtine ſay of the ſame, benedicitur, & ſanctificatur, it is bleſſed, and ſanctifyed, who often ſpeaketh of the ſolemne giving of thankes in the ſacrifice of the Church? Doth not the Church at this day, uſe the very ſame tearmes, as in S. Auguſtines time, Gratias agamus Domino Deo noſtro, Let us give thankes to the Lord our God, and, Verè dignum et juſtum eſt, ſemper & ubique tibi gratias agere, &c. It is very meete and right, alwayes, and in all places, to give thee thankes: Which the Greeke Church alſo in their Liturgies, expreſſe moſt abundantly? yet doeth there follow bleſſing, and conſecration, and whatſoever S. Ambroſe deſcribeth to be done, in this holy ſacrifice, touching this poynt, writing thereof moſt excellently in his booke, de ijs qui initiantur miniſterijs, c. 9.

Fvlk. 5. If it were to proove any thing that wee deny, you would bee as bare and hungry, as now you are franke and plentifull of your teſtimonies. Theophylact ſaith the ſame that Beza ſaid out of Chryſoſtome, and Oecumenius. The Greeke Liturgies, falſely intituled to Saint Iames, Baſil, and Chryſoſtome, have none other thing: nor any other Authour whom you name. But your Popiſh Church, doeth not, either as the Greeke Liturgies, or as the Churches in Ambroſe and Auguſtines time. For they hold, that the Elements are conſecrated by prayer, and thankes-giving, whereof, although you uſe ſome tearmes in your Maſſe, yet you hold, that the conſecration conſiſteth onely in a Magicall murmuration of the word, Hoc eſt corpus meum, over the bread by a Prieſt, with intent of conſecration, wherefore you are farre from the judgement that the auncient Fathers had and wee have, of the conſecration of the bread and wine, to bee the Sacraments of the body and bloud of Chriſt.

Mart. 6. Of all which, this is the concluſion, that the Euchariſt is a ſolemne name, taken of the word εὐχαριστεῖν ſo called, becauſe this Sacrament and ſacrifice, is bleſſed, and conſecrated with prayer, and thankes-giving, as Saint Iuſtine ſpeaketh, and becauſe in this ſacrifice, ſo bleſſed and conſecrated into the body and bloud of Chriſt, him we offer up a moſt acceptable oblation of thankes-giving, and a memory of all Gods marvellous benefits towards us. In this ſenſe, the Fathers, and the holy Church ſpeake of the Euchariſt, including all the reſt, to wit, Sacrament, ſacrifice, bleſſing and conſecration, without which this were no more to bee called Euchariſt, then any other common giving of thankes, as Saint Irenæus doeth plainely ſignify, when hee declareth, that being before bread, and receiving the invocation of God over it, now is no more common bread, but the Euchariſt, conſiſting of two things, the earthly, and the heavenly. So that it is made the Euchariſt by circumſtance of ſolemne wordes, and ceremonies and therefore is not a meere giving of thankes, and further we learne that Saint Iuſtines, and Saint Irenæus wordes alledged, Panis et calix Euchariſtiſatus, ſignify, the bread and chalice made the Euchariſt: conſequently wee learne that the active thereof, is, by thankeſgiving to make the Euchariſt, and becauſe the other word of bleſſing, and this of thankeſgiving, are uſed indifferently one for another, in Chriſts action, about this Sacrament, wee learne undoubtedly, that when it is ſaid, εὐλογήσας, or, εὐχαριστήσας, the meaning is, bleſſing, and giving thankes, hee made the Euchariſt of his body and bloud, that is, the Sacrament and Sacrifice of a ſingular thankeſgiving, which (as Saint Auguſtine is wont to ſay) the faithfull onely doe know and underſtand in the ſacrifice of the Church: and becauſe the faithfull onely underſtand, therefore the Proteſtants and Calviniſts are ſo ignorant in this myſtery, that to take away all the dignity thereof, they bend both their expoſitions and tranſlations.

LK. 6. That the Elements are bleſſed and conſecrated by prayer, and thankes-giving, as Iuſtinus, Irenæus, and other auncient Fathers write, it is the thing that wee contend for. But you (except you bee a ſchiſmatike from all other Papiſts) doe teach, that they are conſecrated by theſe wordes pronounced by a Prieſt, this is my body: which are wordes neither of prayer, nor of thankes-giving. Neverthelesse, to pricke us with a pinne, you have wounded your ſelfe with a ſword, and ſay the Sacrament is bleſſed, and conſecrated with prayer, and thankes-giving. Except you have ſome ſophiſticall meaning, that it is conſecrated with them, but not by them. The ſignification of the Active, which you gather out of the Paſſive, uſed by Iuſtinus, ſheweth what a learned Clerke you are. Iuſtinus writeth to the Gentiles or heathen men, of whom hee could not have beene underſtood, if hee had not uſed the paſſive, εὐχαριστηθεὶς, in that ſignification, that all other men did uſe it in, in that time. What wee underſtand of the myſtery of the Lords Supper, and the Sacrifice of prayer and thankes-giving, which is the onely Sacrifice of Chriſtians, as Iuſtinus writeth, the Church of God doeth acknowledge, though the Synagogue of Antichriſtian heretikes will not confeſſe it.

MART. 7. After they have turned bleſſing or conſecration into bare thankes-giving, which is one ſteppe toward the denying of the reall preſence, they come neerer and ſo include Chriſt in heaven, that he cannot be withall upon the Altar, tranſlating thus, Whom heaven muſt containe, untill the times that all things be reſtored, Act. 3. verſ. 21. and yet Beza worſe, and hee that alledgeth him, Maſter Whitakers: who muſt be contained in heaven. Which is ſo farre from the Greeke that, not onely Illyricus the Lutherane, but Calvine himſelfe doeth not like it. Beza proteſteth, that he ſo tranſlateth of purpoſe: to keepe Chriſts preſence from the Altar, and wee marvell the leſſe, becauſe wee are well acquainted with many the like his impudent proteſtations. M. Whitaker, onely wee doe marvell at, that hee ſhould either be ſo deceived by another mans tranſlation, or himſelfe be ſo overſeene in the Greeke word, that hee knoweth not a meere deponent, and only deponent, from a paſſive.

FVLK. 7. The anſwer to this cavill is at large contained, Chapt. 1. ſect. 36. your owne tranſlation is, whom heaven muſt receive. If there bee now ſuch difference betweene, receiving, and containing, capere and recipere, it is very ſtrange to learned eares, howſoever ſottiſh Papiſts will accept whatſoever proceedeth from you. But foraſmuch, as this ſection, with two other following, are directed principally againſt Maſter Whitakers, I ſhall neede to ſay little, ſeeing he hath fully anſwered for himſelfe. This one thing I may ſay, concerning his knowledge in the Greeke tongue, which you make to bee ſo ſmall, that hee knoweth not a deponent from a paſſive, hee is well knowne to bee ſo well learned therein, that many of your Seminarie may marvell at him, as you ſay, but neither you, nor any of you all is able to match him therein.

MART. 8. *This doeth not become him that * objecteth ignorance of the Greeke to another man, and that after hee had well tryed by publike conference, that hee was not ignorant: and ſo objecteth it, as though he knew not three wordes in that tongue, whereas hee had heard him reade and interprete Saint* Baſil, not the eaſieſt of the Greeke Doctours. This is palpable impudencie, and a face that cannot bluſh, and full of malice againſt the Saints of God, who, if they knew not a word in the Greek tongue, were never the worſe, nor the leſſe learned, but among fooles and children, that eſteeme learning by ſuch trifles, which Grammarians know farre better then great Divines. For were not hee a wiſe man that would preferre one Maſter Humphrey, Maſter Fulke, Maſter Whitakers, or ſome of us poore men, becauſe wee have a little ſmacke in the three tongues, before Saint Chryſoſtome, Saint Baſil, Saint Auguſtine, Saint Gregory, or Saint Thomas, that underſtood well, none but one? howbeit, if they eſteeme learning by knowledge of the tongues, they will not (I trow) compare with Catholikes, either of former time, or of theſe latter ages, ſpecially ſince their new Goſpell beganne: and if they will compare with us herein for their ſimple credite, wee may perhaps give them occaſion ere it bee long, to muſter their men all at once, if they dare ſhew their face before our Campe of excellent Hebricians, Grecians, Latiniſts, of abſolute linguiſts in the Chaldee, Syriacke, Arabike, &c. whom they muſt needes confeſſe to have beene, and to

to be, even at this day, their Maſters and Teachers.

FVLK. 8. It becommeth you that have caſt off all feare of God, and duety to your Prince, to caſt off all civill honeſty, and humane modeſty alſo. If you ſpeake of ſuch matters, as you might not bee controuled in them, yet, if you forbeare the trueth, it were ſomewhat tollerable. But when you ſpeake of Campions learning in the Greeke tongue, wherein you may bee ſo manifeſtly convicted by hundreths of witneſſes, you ſtoppe the way from any credite to bee given you in other matters. All Oxford knew that Campion was no Grecian when hee departed from that Vniverſity. His time ſpent in Ireland, and other places, where hee travelled, would not yeelde him great knowledge ſince his departure, except hee had wholly applyed it, which hee could not doe, nor any other ſerious ſtudie in ſuch ſort as hee travelled in diverſe places. But admitte hee might have knowledge by extraordinary meanes or myracle if you will, how ſhall hee bee tryed, but by reading and underſtanding that which greatly concerneth his cauſe, in diſputation and conference. You ſaid hee did reade and interprete Saint Baſil, not the eaſieſt of the Greeke Doctours. I was not preſent at that conference, and therefore have the leſſe to ſay: But I my ſelfe making tryall of his skill, by a place of Epiphanius, both read it to him, and offering him the booke, hee underſtood no more the matter thereof, then, if I had cited it in the Arabicke, or Perſian language. And therefore, upon the acknowledging of his diſſembled ignorance, with great laughter of the hearers, I was content to expound it to him in Engliſh, before I could receive any anſwere to the argument taken from that authoritie. Wherefore, I verily thinke, and am certainely perſwaded, that if hee pretended to interprete any thing out of Saint Baſil, it was altogether by artificiall conjecture, either of the place which hee knew, and had read in Latine, or elſe by ſurmiſing of ſome one common word, hee gathered what the ſenſe of the whole ſhould bee. Indeede if hee had never knowne a word of Greeke, although hee had beene no meete man to challenge a whole realme to diſputation: yet hee might have beene an honeſt man, and otherwiſe meanely learned, ſo hee had not pretended knowledge, when hee was in a manner altogether ignorant. For mine owne part, though it pleaſe you to name mee with Maſter Humphrey, Maſter Whitakers, and others, I never tooke upon mee but a meane knowledge in the tongues, neither deſire I in compariſon to bee preferred before any learned man, whoſe travailes have beene profitable to the Church, although hee were ignorant in the tongues. Yet, this I muſt freely ſay, that hee which ſhall profeſſe to bee an abſolute learned Divine, without the knowledge of three tongues, at the leaſt, may thinke well of himſelfe, but hardly hee ſhall get and retaine the credite hee ſeeketh among learned men in this learned age. And therefore Campion, if diſputation had beene meant rather then ſedition, for all his arrogance and impudence, was an unmeete Apoſtle to bee ſent from Gregory of Rome, to challenge all the wiſe and learned in England. Neither doe I ſay this, as though I meaſured all learning by knowledge of the tongues, but wherein ſoever any Papiſt in the world, ſhall bee bold to challenge the name of learning, in any knowledge, that ever was, or is accounted good learning, God bee prayſed there are many of Gods true Catholike Church, whereof wee are members, able to match them therein. That I ſay not to excell them. And whereas you would make us beholding to Papiſts for ſuch knowledge, as any of us hath in the Greeke, Hebrew, Syriacke, Chaldee, Arabicke tongues, &c. It is well knowne, the Papiſts are more beholding to us. And although I confeſſe, that ſome Papiſts of late dayes, have beſtowed fruitefull paynes, in ſetting foorth ſome of the orientall tongues: yet are they not the firſt, nor all that have travelled profitably that way. But many have attayned to competent skill in thoſe languages many yeares before any Papiſts had written any thing that might further them therein. You were wont to beare ignorant men in hand, that wee were a ſight of Engliſh Doctours, underſtanding no languages but our mother tongue, which hath enforced diverſe men to ſhew their skill in the tongues, which otherwiſe they would never have openly profeſſed. But now that the world ſeeth, to your ſhame, how richly God hath bleſſed us, with the knowledge, and interpretation of diverſe tongues, you exprobrate to us our knowledge in the tongues, and traduce us among the ignorant, as though wee eſteemed all learning by knowledge of tongues, and that wee were but meere Grammarians, and often tell us of that ſtale jeſt, that the kingdome of Grammarians is paſt, as though it were but a little Grammar, whereof wee make a ſhew. But for that generall muſter which you threaten to drive us unto, ere it be long, if you come as learned men ſhould doe, armed with bookes, penne, inke, and paper, I doubt not by the grace of God, but you ſhall finde them that dare confront you, and chaſe you out of the fielde alſo. But if you come under the Popes banner with ſuch bleſſing, as hee ſent lately into Ireland, I hope you ſhall bee met withall, as thoſe his Champions were, and finde that promotion for your good ſervice, which you have long agoe deſerved by your travells for upholding of his Kingdome.

MART. 9. But to returne to you Maſter Whitakers, greater is your fault in divinity, then in the tongues, when you make your argument againſt the reall preſence out of this place, as out of the Scripture and Saint Peter, whereas they are Bezaes wordes, and not Saint Peters. Againe, whether you take Bezaes, wordes or Saint Peters, your argument faileth very much, when you conclude that Chriſts naturall body is not in the Sacrament, becauſe it is placed and contained in Heaven. For Saint Chryſoſtome telleth you, that Chriſt aſcending into heaven, both left us his fleſh, and yet aſcending hath the ſame. And againe, O myracle, ſaith hee: Hee that ſitteth above with the Father, in the ſame moment of time is handled with the hands of all. This is the faith of the auncient Fathers, Maſter Whitakers, and this is the Catholike faith, and this is (I trow) another manner of faith and farre greater, thus to beleeve the preſence of Chriſt in both places at once, becauſe hee is omnipotent, and hath ſaid the word: then your faith (whereof you boaſt ſo much) which beleeveth no further then that hee is aſcended, and that therefore hee cannot bee preſent upon the Altar, nor diſpoſe of his body as he liſt.

Hom. 2. ad po. Antioch.
Lib. 3. de Sacerdotio.

FVLK. 9. Maſter Whitaker is not ſo young a Divine, but he knoweth that Chryſoſtome ſpeaketh of the ineffable manner of Chriſts preſence ſpiritually, though he be abſent corporally. As in the place by you cited, De ſacerdotio, it is moſt manifeſt, where hee ſaith that we may ſee the people dyed and made redde with the pretious bloud of Chriſt, which as it is not with the eye of the body, but with the eye of faith, ſo is Chriſt that is corporally preſent in heaven, ſpiritually preſent unto the faith of the worthy receiver.

MART. 10. *Againe, it is a very famous place for the reall preſence of the bloud (which we have handled at large * elſewhere, but here alſo muſt be briefely touched) when our Saviour ſaith,* Luk. 22. This is the chalice the new Teſtament in my bloud, which (Chalice) is ſhedde for you. For ſo (which) muſt needes bee referred according to the Greeke. In which ſpeech, Chalice muſt needes bee taken for that in the chalice, and that in the chalice muſt needes be the bloud of Chriſt, and not wine, becauſe his bloud onely was ſhed for us. And ſo we doe plainely prove the reall preſence, according as Saint Chryſoſtome alſo ſaid, Hoc quod eſt in chalice, illud eſt quod fluxit de latere. That which is in the Chalice, is the ſame that guſhed out of his ſide. All which moſt neceſſary deduction Beza would defeate, by ſaying the Greeke is corrupted in all the copies that are extant in the world, and by tranſlating thus cleane otherwiſe then the Greeke will beare, This cuppe is the new Teſtament in my bloud, which (bloud) is ſhedde for you.

FVLK. 10. It is a famous place indeede that never a one of the auncient writers, could conſider for any reall preſence to bee drawne out of it. How Beza hath tranſlated it, I have at large declared before, Chap. 1. ſect. 37. 38. 39. That which Chryſoſtome ſayth, wee confeſſe to bee moſt true, after a ſpirituall and heavenly manner, and ſo hee doeth expound himſelfe, in the ſame place, where hee ſaith that Chriſt ſuffered himſelfe to bee broken for us, in the oblation, which hee ſuffered, not on the croſſe, where no bone of his was broken. Which none but a mad man would take otherwiſe then ſpiritually to bee done, as he is preſent after a ſpirituall manner.

MART. 11. But what pertaineth this to the Engliſh Heretiks, who tranſlate, which is ſhed, ſo indifferently that it may ſignify, which cuppe, or which bloud is ſhed? Thus farre it pertaineth, becauſe they doe not onely defend this tranſlation by all meanes, but they tell us plainely, namely Fulke, that they referre (which) to the name bloud, and not to the word cuppe, even as Beza *doeth, asking us what Grammarian would referre it otherwiſe. In which queſtion hee ſheweth himſelfe a very ſimple Grammarian in the Greeke, or a madde heretike, that either knoweth not, or will not know, that in the Greeke it cannot bee ſo referred, and conſequently neither in Latine nor Engliſh which in true tranſlation muſt follow the Greeke. But of theſe and other their foule and manifold ſhifts to avoyd this place, * I have ſpoken in another place of this booke.*

FVLK. 11. As you have placed your crimination in the firſt Chapter, to bee ſure that it ſhould bee read of every man that taketh your booke in hand: So have I, obſerving your order, anſwered you in the ſame place, and in ſuch ſort I hope diſcharged my ſelfe, that you ſhall have little luſt hereafter to inſult againſt mine ignorance, before you bee able to weigh the matter your ſelfe with ſounder knowledge.

MART. 12. Onely M. Whitakers (to ſay truely) hath brought ſomewhat to the purpoſe, to wit, that Saint Baſil readeth the Greeke as they tranſlate. But he doeth well to make light of it, becauſe it is evident that Saint Baſil cited not the text of the Evangeliſt, but the ſenſe, which Beza noteth to bee the cuſtome of the auncient Fathers; telling us withall that therfore the reading of the Fathers, is no certaine rule to reforme or alter the wordes of Scripture according to the ſame: and it is very like that if Beza or Fulke his advocate had thought Saint Baſils reading of any importance, they would have uſed it long ſince, rather then ſo many other ſhiftes and ſo abſurd, as they doe: unleſſe we may thinke they knew it not, and therefore could not uſe it. But for Saint Baſil, according cording to the ſenſe, hee citeth it very truely: for whether wee ſay, the cup that is ſhed, or the bloud that is ſhed, both ſignifyeth the bloud of Chriſt ſhed for us, as S. Baſil citeth it. The difference is, that referring it to the cup, as S. Luke hath it, it ſignifyeth the bloud both preſent in the cup, and alſo then ſhed in a Sacrament at the laſt Supper: but referring it to the word bloud, as S. Baſil doeth, and as they tranſlate it, it may ſignify the bloud ſhed on the croſſe alſo, yea (as theſe Tranſlatours meane and would have it) onely that on the Croſſe, not conſidering that the Greeke word is the Preſent tenſe, and therefore rather ſignifyeth the preſent ſhedding of his bloud then in myſticall ſacrifice, then the other viſible ſhedding thereof, which was to come in the future tenſe. Laſtly, they tranſlate S. Lukes Goſpell, and not S. Baſil: and therefore not following S. Luke, they are falſe Tranſlatours, howſoever S. Baſil readeth.

FVLK. 12. The reading of Saint Baſil, whereof Beza maketh mention in his annotation upon this text of Saint Luke, is alſo handled before. As the reading of the Doctours is no perpetuall rule to reforme the text of the Scripture by, ſo is it not to bee neglected, but that ſometimes alſo the preſent reading may bee corrected thereafter. True it is, that Beza ſuppoſeth it rather to have beene added out of the margent; and I, as I have before declared, doe thinke that either it is to bee read as Baſil did reade it, or elſe that the verbe ſubſtantive is to bee underſtood, and the article taken for the relative, as it is often both in prophane writings, and in the new Teſtament it ſelfe, as by ſundry examples I have made it manifeſt.

MART. 13. As this falſehood is both againſt Sacrament and Sacrifice, ſo againſt the Sacrifice alſo of the Altar, it is, that they controll S. Hieromes tranſlation in the old Teſtament, concerning the Sacrifice of Melchiſedech, Who brought forth bread and wine, Gen. 14. v. 18. that is, offered or ſacrificed bread and wine: which we prove to bee the true ſenſe and interpretation (and that this bringing forth of bread and wine, was ſacrificing thereof) not onely by all the Fathers expoſitions, that write of Melchiſedechs Prieſthood. (Cypr. Epiſt. 63. Epiph. hær. 55. & 79. Hier. in Mat. 26 & in Epiſt. ad Evagrium) and by the Hebrew word, which is a word of Sacrifice, Iud. 6. verſ. 18. *and * by the greateſt Rabbines and Hebricians that write thereof; but we prove it by theſe words of the very text it ſelfe.* He brought forth bread and wine, for he was the Prieſt of God moſt high. Which reaſon immediately following, Becauſe hee was Gods Prieſt, proveth evidently, that hee brought it not foorth in common manner, as any other man might have done, but as Gods Prieſt, whoſe office is to offer Sacrifice. This conſequence is ſo plaine, that for avoyding thereof, the Adverſaries will not have it tranſlated in any wiſe, For hee was the Prieſt, as though the Scripture gave a reaſon, why hee brought foorth bread and wine; but, and hee was a Prieſt, &c. wrangling about the ſignification of the Hebrew conjunction.

FVLK. 13. That Saint Hieronyme was authour of the vulgar Latine interpretation of the old Teſtament, it is more boldly affirmed, then ever it can bee ſufficiently proved by you. But what doe wee controll? Your vulgar Interpreter ſaith, that Melchiſedech brought forth bread and wine, and ſo ſay we. Which how Saint Hierome and other underſtandeth, I have before declared, Cap. 1, Sect. 42.

Againſt all the Fathers that expound that bringing forth of bread and wine, to pertaine to his Prieſthood, I oppoſe the Apoſtle to the Hebrewes, who could not have omitted it, if it had beene ſo. That the Hebrew word is a word of ſacrifice, it is moſt impudently affirmed of you. For Iudges 6. it ſignifyeth no more to offer then here, although there Gedeon deſire the Angell to ſtay, untill hee returne and bring from his houſe with him a gift or oblation. But if you will contend, that whatſoever is brought forth, whereſoever this Hebrew word is uſed, is a Sacrifice, you ſhall make an hundred ſacrifices more, then ever God ordayned. Neither will Galatinus or Gerebrardus for their credite, once affirme that it ſignifyeth to offer ſacrifice. Though it may bee uſed in bringing forth of Sacrifices, as wel as of all other things that are brought forth. But the conjunction cauſall maketh it cleere, that this bringing forth was in reſpect of his Prieſthood: Indeed if the Hebrew conjunction were cauſall, and not copulative, wee were driven to the wall: but ſeeing the Hebrew conjunction copulative muſt bee expounded according to the ſenſe, you doe very unskilfully, to conclude the ſenſe which is in controverſy, upon the conjunction which is indefinite: and we without partiality have tranſlated the conjunction copulative, as it doeth moſt commonly and ordinarily ſignify.

MART. 14. Wherein the Reader may ſee their exceeding partiality and wilfulneſſe: for beſides infinite like places of Scripture, whereby wee doe eaſily ſhew, that this Hebrew particle is uſed to give a reaſon or cauſe of a thing. Themſelves alſo in another place prove it for us, and that by the authority of Theophylact, and allegation of examples out of the Scripture, and tranſlate accordingly thus: Bleſſed art thou among women, becauſe the fruit of thy wombe is bleſſed. Let them give us a reaſon why the ſaid conjunction is here by their tranſlation quia, or enim, where it was never ſo tranſlated before, and it muſt not be in any caſe in the other place of Geneſis, where it hath beene ſo tranſlated, and generally received, even in the Primitive Church. In other places of Scripture alſo, which Theophylact alleadgeth, and many moe may bee alleadged, they confeſſe and like very well it ſhould ſo ſignify: onely in the place of Geneſis*, they cannot abide any ſuch ſenſe, or tranſlation thereof; but,* He brought forth bread and wine, and hee was the Prieſt, &c. not, becauſe he was the Prieſt. What is the cauſe of this their dealing? None other undoubtedly (and in all theſe caſes I knocke at their conſciences) but that here they would avoyd the neceſſary ſequell of Melchiſedechs ſacrifice, upon ſuch tranſlation, which typicall ſacrifice of bread and wine if it ſhould bee graunted, then would follow alſo a ſacrifice of the new Teſtament, made of bread and wine, anſwering to the ſame, and ſo wee ſhould have the ſacrifice of the Altar, and their bare Communion ſhould be excluded. Gen. 14. v. 18.

VLK. 14. Becauſe wee will not falſely tranſlate, to mainetayne a colour of your Popiſh Sacrifice, wee ſhew great partiality. Wherein I pray you? The conjunction copulative wee know may often bee reſolved into the cauſall, where the ſenſe ſo requireth. But it never hath any force in it ſelfe, to breede ſuch a ſenſe, or to conclude ſuch a ſenſe by it. It is againſt all reaſon therefore, that you would urge us to tranſlate contrary to that which in our conſciences before God wee take to bee the ſenſe. Where you ſay, that the ſacrifice of Melchiſedech, if it were graunted, would bring in your Maſſe, and exclude our Communion, it is altogether untrue. For none of the auncient Fathers (who were deceived to imagine a Sacrifice, where the Apoſtle ſeeking all things pertayning to Melchiſedechs Prieſthood, could finde none) doeth allow your propitiatory Sacrifice, but contrarywiſe, by thoſe onely ſpeeches that they uſe about Melchiſedechs oblation of bread and wine, wee are able to prove, that they did ſpeake of a Sacrifice of thankeſgiving onely. And your Sacrifice, in which you ſay is neither bread nor wine, ſhould hardly reſemble Melchiſedechs oblation, made of bread and wine.

ART. 15. For which purpoſe alſo their partiall tranſlation about Altar and Table, is notorious: for the name of Altar (as they know very well) both in the Hebrew and Greeke, and by the cuſtome of all peoples, both Iewes and Pagans, implying and importing ſacrifice, therefore wee, in reſpect of the ſacrifice of Chriſts body and bloud, ſay Altar, rather then Table, as all the auncient Fathers (Chryſoſt. hom. 53. ad pop. Antioch. and hom. 20. in 2 Cor. and in Demonſt. quòd Chriſtus ſit Deus, tom. 5. Nazianzen. de Gorgonia ſorore. Baſil. in Liturg. Socrat. lib. 1. hiſt. cap. 20, & 25. Theodoret. hiſt. lib. 4. cap. 20. Theophylact. in 23. Matth. Cyprian. epiſt. 63. Optat. cont. Parm. Auguſt. epiſt. 86. & lib. 9. Confeſſ. cap. 11. & 13. & alibi ſæpe) are wont to ſpeake and write, (namely when Saint Hierome calleth the bodies or bones of Saint Peter and Paul, the Altars of Chriſt, becauſe of this ſacrifice offered over and upon the ſame) though in reſpect of eating and drinking the body and bloud, it is alſo called a Table: ſo that with us it is both an Altar and a Table, whether it bee of wood or of ſtone. But the Proteſtants becauſe they make it onely a Communion of bread and wine, or a Supper, and no Sacrifice, therefore they call it Table onely, and abhorre from the word Altar, as Papiſticall. For the which purpoſe, in their firſt tranſlation (Bibl. Ann. 1562.) when Altars were then in digging downe throughout England, they tranſlated with no leſſe malice, then they threw them downe, putting the word Temple in ſteede of Altar, which is ſo groſſe a corruption, that a man would have thought it had beene done by overſight, and not of purpoſe, if they had not done it thrice immediately within two Chapters, 1 Corinth. chap. 9. and 10. ſaying, Know you not, that they which wayte of the TEMPLE, are partakers of the TEMPLE? And, Are not they which eate of the Sacrifice partakers of the TEMPLE? In all which places, the Apoſtles word in Greeke is Altar, and not Temple. And ſee here their notorious peeviſhneſſe: where the Apoſtle ſaith Temple, there the ſame tranſlation ſaith Sacrifice: where the Apoſtle ſaith Altar, there it ſaith Temple. θυσιαστήριον. מזבח θυσιαστήριον. C. 9 v. 13. ἱερόν.

FVLK. 15. That the auncient Fathers uſed the name of Altar, as they did of Sacrifice, Sacrificer, Levite, and ſuch like, improperly, yet in reſpect of the ſpirituall oblation of prayſe and thankeſgiving, which was offered in the celebration of the Lords Supper, wee doe eaſily graunt: as alſo, that they doe as commonly uſe the name of table, and that it was a table indeede, ſo ſtanding, as men might ſtand round about it, and not againſt the wall, as your Popiſh Altars ſtand, it is eaſy to proove, and it hath often times beene prooved: and it ſeemeth you confeſſe as much, but that it is with you both an Altar and a Table, with us indeede it is, as it is called in the Scripture onely a Table. That wee make the Sacrament a Communion of bread and wine, it is a blaſphemous ſlaunder, when wee beleeve, as the Apoſtle taught us, that it is the Communion of the body and bloud of Chriſt, and the Lords Supper. As for the corruption you pretend, I cannot thinke (as I haue anſwered before) it was any thing elſe but the firſt Printers overſight. For why ſhould the name of Altar miſlike us in that place, more then in an hundred other places, when it is certaine, whereſoever it is uſed in the Scriptures, in the proper ſenſe, it ſignifyeth the Altars of the Iewes, 1 Cor. 10. 11. Chap. 1. ſect. 11.

Iewes, or of the Gentiles; and never the Communion Table, or that at which the Lords Supper is prepared and received?

MART. 16. Thus wee ſee how they ſuppreſſe the name of Altar, where it ſhould bee. Now let us ſee how they put it in their tranſlation, where it ſhould not be. This alſo they doe thrice in one Chapter, and that for to ſave the honour of their Communion Table, namely in the ſtorie of Bel, where we have it thrice called the Table of that Idoll, under which Bels Prieſts had made a privie entrance, and, that the King looked upon the Table, and, that they did eate up ſuch things as were upon the Table: theſe wicked Tranſlators fearing leſt the name of Bels Table might redound to the diſhonour of their Communion Table, tranſlate it Altar in all theſe places. Wherein I cannot but pittie their follie, and wonder exceedingly how they could imagine it any diſgrace, either for Table or Altar, if the Idols alſo had their Tables and Altars, whereas Saint Paul ſo plainely nameth both together, The Table of our Lord, and the Table of Devils. If the Table of Devils, why not the Table of Bel*? If that bee no diſgrace to the Table of our Lord, why are you afraid of* Bels Table, leſt it ſhould diſgrace yours? Or if you had no ſuch feare, then you muſt tell us ſome other good reaſon of your unreaſonable tranſlation in this place, why you tranſlate Altar for Table, that is, chalke for cheeſe. Dan. 14. v. 12. 17. 20. τράπεζα. See the Bible 1562. & 15 1 Cor. 10. v. 2

FVLK. 16. That the Authors of the firſt tranſlation, in the fabulous ſtorie of Bel, for Table, tranſlated Altar, as I cannot excuſe them of errour, ſo I dare diſcharge them of any partialitie, or favour of the Communion Table. For in King Henry the eights time, when that tranſlation was firſt printed, there was never a Communion Table in any Church of England. It is like therefore, they reſpected ſimilitude of the placing thereof, ſo as a privie doore might bee under it, which could not bee conveyed in Tables of ſuch formes as now adayes are in uſe. The Bible 1577. in the margent placeth the word Table, which is in the Greeke, ſignifying, that there is no great matter whether word you uſe. And that ſtory being of no credit, the Tranſlators could haue no purpoſe, either to proue, or improue, by authoritie thereof.

MART. 17. And here, by the way, the Reader may note another exceeding follie in them, that thinke the name of Table maketh againſt Altar and Sacrifice, their owne tranſlation here condemning them, where they call Bels Table, an Altar; and Saint Paul having ſaid to the Corinthians, the Table of our Lord, ſaith to the Hebrewes, of the ſelfe ſame,* wee haue an Altar: and againe hee ſaith, the Table of Devils, which I am ſure they will not deny to haue beene a true Altar of Idololatricall Sacrifice: and Malach. 1. v. 7. in one ſentence it is called both Altar and Table, whereupon the Iewes offered their externall and true Sacrifices; and all the Fathers, both Greeke and Latine, ſpeaking of the Sacrifice of the new Teſtament, call that whereupon it is offered, both Altar and Table: but the Greeke more often, Table; the Latine Fathers more often, Altar: and why, or in what reſpects, it is called both this and that, wee haue before declared, and here might adde the very ſame out of S. Germanus, Archbiſhop of Conſtantinople, in his Greeke Commentaries (called myſtica theoria*) on the Liturgies or Maſſes of the Greeke Fathers. But to proceed.* * Haimo. Occumen.

FVLK. 17. It were an infinite matter to note, not onely all the follies that you commit, but alſo the impudent aſſertions that you make, upon your owne ſurmiſe, without all proofe. Who made you ſo privie of our thought, that you affirme us to thinke the name of Table maketh againſt Altar and Sacrifice? Wee know the name of Table proveth no Sacrifice: but that the Fathers call the ſame both a Table and an Altar, wee doe never deny unto you. Yet that the Apoſtle to the Hebrewes, 12. calleth the ſame an Altar, which Saint Paul to the Corinthians nameth a Table, you ſhall never bee able to proue: howſoever Oecumenius and Haimo, two late Writers, doat upon that place, which is evident even by the text, to bee underſtood of the onely Sacrifice of Chriſts death upon the Croſſe. That the people whom the Prophet Malachie reproveth, called the Lords Altar, his Table, is no ſufficient proofe, that it might bee called by the one name as well as the other. And although in reſpect of the meate offerings and drinke offerings, it was alſo a Table, at which God vouchſafed to bee entertained by the people, as their familiar friend. But what is this to the purpoſe of any controverſie betweene us? The Altar was called a Table in the old Teſtament, but the Table is never called an Altar in the new Teſtament, although by the ancient Fathers oftentimes.

MART. 18. There are alſo ſome places leſſe evident, yet ſuch as ſmatch of the like hereticall humor againſt the bleſſed Sacrament. In the Prophet Ier. c. 11. v. 19. wee reade thus, according to the Latine and the Greeke, Let us caſt * wood upon his bread, that is, ſaith S. Hierome, in comment. huius loci, the Croſſe upon the body of our Saviour: for it is he that ſaid, I am the bread that deſcended from heaven. Where the Prophet ſo long before ſaying bread, and meaning his body, alludeth prophetically to his body in the bleſſed Sacrament made of bread, and under the forme of bread, and therefore alſo called bread of the Apoſtle. So that both in the Prophets, and * Lignum in panem eius. ξύλον εἰς τὸν ἄρτον αὐτοῦ. 1 Cor. 10.

Apoſtle, his bread and his body is all one: and leaſt we ſhould thinke that the bread onely ſignifieth his body, hee ſaith, Let us put the Croſſe upon his bread, that is, upon his very naturall body, which hung on the Croſſe. Now for theſe words of the Prophet, ſo vſuall and well knowne in the Church and all antiquitie, how thinke you doe theſe new Maſters tranſlate? In one Bible thus, Let us deſtroy the tree with the fruite thereof: Another, We will deſtroy his meat with wood; or, as they ſhould haue ſaid rather, the wood with his meat. Doe you ſee how properly they agree, whiles they ſeeke novelties, and forſake the auncient vſuall tranſlation?

Fvlk. 18. The phraſe or manner of ſpeech which the Prophet Ieremie vſeth, being ſomewhat obſcure, and unvſuall, hath bred divers tranſlations. The moſt ſimple meaning, and agreeable unto the Hebrew, is this: Let us deſtroy him with wood in ſtead of bread, that is, let us famiſh him in a cloſe priſon, or in the ſtockes, &c. and ſo may the Greeke and vulgar Latine bee expounded, Let us giue him wood for bread, rather than that violent expoſition of Saint Hierome is to be admitted, which referreth it to his crucifying, where beſide, it were an intolerable figure in that place to underſtand his body by bread, it is cleane contrary to that you ſaid. For the Croſſe was not put upon Chriſt, but Chriſt upon the Croſſe. Such wreſting of the Scripture, where no neede is, maketh the Chriſtians ridiculous to the Iewes. And yet it is more farre fetched, to draw it to the Sacrament, which is called bread, and is not bread. Neither doth Saint Hierome extend his interpretation ſo farre.

Mart. 19. They will ſay, the firſt Hebrew word cannot bee as Saint Hierome tranſlateth, and as it is in the Greeke, and as all antiquitie readeth; but it muſt ſignifie, Let us deſtroy. They ſay truly, according to the Hebrew word which now is. But is it not evident thereby, that the Hebrew word now is not the ſame which the Septuaginta tranſlated into Greeke, and Saint Hierome into Latine? and conſequently, the Hebrew is altered and corrupted from the originall copie which they had: perhaps by the Iewes (as ſome other places) to obſcure this prophecie alſo of Chriſts paſſion, and their crucifying of him upon the Croſſe. Such Iewiſh Rabbines and new Hebrew words doe our new Maſters gladly follow in the tranſlation of the old Teſtament, whereas they might eaſily conceiue the old Hebrew word in this place, if they would employ their skill that way, and not onely to novelties. For who ſeeth not that the Greeke Interpreters, in number 70. *and all Hebrewes of beſt skill in their owne tongue, S.*Hierome alſo a great Hebrician, did not reade as now we haue in the Hebrew, Naſhchita, but Naſhitha, or Maſhlicha. Againe, the Hebrew word that now is, doth ſo little agree with the words following, that they cannot tell how to tranſlate it, as appeareth by the diverſitie and difference of their tranſlations thereof before mentioned, and tranſpoſing the words in Engliſh otherwiſe than in the Hebrew, neither of both their tranſlations having any commodious ſenſe or underſtanding.

Fvlk. 19. If wee ſhould acknowledge the Hebrew word to bee altered in ſo many places, as the 70. depart from it, wee ſhould not onely condemne the Hebrew text that now is, in many places, but your vulgar Latine text alſo, the Tranſlator whereof differing oftentimes from the Greeke, followeth the trueth of the Hebrew, or at leaſt commeth neerer unto it. Your argument of the number of the 70. Interpreters all Hebrewes, is very ridiculous and childiſh. Hierome himſelfe will laugh you to ſcorne in it, who acknowledged for certaintie, no more than the bookes of the Law tranſlated by them. And Lindanus proveth manifeſtly unto you, that ſome parts of the old Teſtament in Greeke, which wee now haue, are not the ſame that were accounted the 70. tranſlation in the ancient Fathers time. Whether Hierome in this place did conſider the Hebrew text, wee know not, for hee doth not, as his manner is, ſhew the diverſitie of the Hebrew and the Septuaginta in this chapter, beſide hee profeſſeth great brevitie, intreating upon ſo long a Prophet. But whether a letter in this word haue beene altered or no, or whether it were corrupt in the copie which the Greeke Tranſlator and Hierome did reade, for the true or ſimple ſenſe thereof, there is no great difference: no nor for that ſenſe which Hierome brings, which although it ſeemeth to bee farre from the Prophets meaning, yet it may haue as good ground upon the word Naſchita, as upon the word Naſhlicha.

Mart. 20. But yet they will pretend, that for the firſt word at the leaſt they are not to be blamed, becauſe they follow the Hebrew that now is, Not conſidering that if this were a good excuſe, then might they as well follow the Hebrew that now is, Pſal. 21. v. 18. and ſo utterly ſuppreſſe and take out of the Scripture this notable prophecie, They pierced my hands and my feet: which yet they dare not, neither can they doe it for ſhame, if they will be counted Chriſtians. So that indeede to follow the Hebrew ſometime where it is corrupt, is no ſufficient excuſe for them, though it may haue a pretence of true tranſlation; and wee promiſed in the Preface, in ſuch caſes not to call it hereticall tranſlation.

Fvlk. 20. To this cavill againſt the certaine truth of the Hebrew text, I haue ſufficiently anſwered in my confutation of your preface Sect: 44. ſhewing that the true reading of this word, as Felix Pratenſis, Ioannes, Iſaak, Tremellius, and other doe acknowledge, is ſtill remayning and teſtified by the Mazzorites.

Mart. 21. But concerning the B. Sacrament, let us ſee once more how truely they follow the Hebrew. The holy Ghoſt (ſaith S. Cyprian ep. 62. num. 2.) by Salomon foreſheweth a type of our Lords ſacrifice, of the immolated hoſt of bread wine, ſaying, Wiſedome hath killed her hoſts, SHE HATH MINGLED HER WINE INTO the cuppe. Come yee, eate of my bread, and drinke the wine that I HAVE MINGLED for you. Speaking of WINE MINGLED (ſaith this holy Doctor) hee foreſheweth prophetically the cup of our Lord, MINGLED WITH WATER AND WINE. So doth Saint Hierome interpret this mixture or mingling of the wine in the chalice, ſo doth the author of the commentaries upon this place among Saint Hieromes workes, ſo doe the other Fathers. So that there is great importance in theſe propheticall words of Salomon. Shee hath mingled her wine into the cuppe, and, the wine which I haue mingled, as being a manifeſt prophecie of Chriſts mingling water and wine in the Chalice at his laſt Supper, which the Catholike Church obſerveth at this day, and whereof Saint Cyprian writeth the foreſaid long Epiſtle.

That water & wine ought to be mingled in the Chalice.

Fvlk. 21. It had beene to bee wiſhed that Saint Cyprian when hee goeth about to proue the neceſſitie of wine, in the celebration of the Lords Supper, againſt the Heretikes, called Aquarij, that contended for onely water, had retained the preciſe inſtitution of Chriſt in wine onely, which the Scripture mentioneth, and not allowed them a mixture of water, and for that purpoſe driven himſelfe to ſuch watrie expoſitions, as this of Proverbs 9. which without good warrant, he draweth to repreſent the Lords ſupper. Where if he had beene urged by the adverſaries, whereto the beaſts ſlaine were referred in this Sacrament, hee muſt haue beene driven to ſome violent comment. But whereto tendeth this preparation?

Mart. 22. But the Proteſtants counting it an idle ſuperſtitious ceremonie, here alſo frame their tranſlation accordingly, ſuppreſſing altogether this mixture or mingling, and in ſteed thereof ſaying, ſhe hath drawne her wine, and, drinke the wine that I haue drawne: or (as in other of their Bibles) Shee hath powred out her wine, and, the wine which I haue powred out: neither tranſlation agreeing either with Greeke or Hebrew. Not with the Greeke, which doth evidently ſignifie, mingling and mixture, as it is in the Latine, and as all the Greeke Church from the Apoſtles time hath vſed this word in this very caſe whereof we now ſpeake, of mingling water and wine in the chalice. Saint Iames, and S. Baſil in their Liturgies expreſly teſtifying that Chriſt did ſo, as alſo Saint Cyprian in the place alleaged. S. Iuſtine in the end of his ſecond Apologie, calling it of the ſame Greeke word κρᾶμα, that is (according to Plutarch) wine mingled with water: likewiſe Saint Irenæus in his fifth booke neere the beginning. See the ſixth generall Councell moſt fully treating hereof and deducing it from the Apoſtles and auncient fathers, and interpreting this Greeke word by any other equivalent, and more plainely to ſignifie this mixture.

Fvlk. 22. The authoritie of the holy Scriptures with us is more worth then the opinion of all the men in the world. In the Scripture wee finde the fruite of the vine, water wee finde not, therefore wee account not water to be of any neceſſitie in the celebration of the Lords ſupper. In the primitiue Church, we know water was vſed first of ſobrietie, then of ceremonie, and at length it grew to be counted of neceſſitie. The Armenians therefore are commendable in this point, that they would never depart from the authoritie of the Scriptures, to yeeld to the cuſtome, practiſe, or iudgement of any men. But againſt this mixture, as you ſurmiſe, wee haue tranſlated, powred out or drawne. I confeſſe our tranſlators, ſhould more ſimply according to the word haue ſaid, mingled her wine, and the wine that I haue mingled, but becauſe that ſpeech is not vſuall in the Engliſh tongue, it ſeemeth they regarded not ſo much the propertie of the word, as the phraſe of our tongue. But that they had no purpoſe againſt the mixture of the wine with water in the Sacrament, it is manifeſt by this reaſon, that none of them did ever thinke, that this place was to bee interpreted of the Lords ſupper, but generally, of ſuch ſpirituall foode as wiſedome giveth to mens ſoules. Therefore it is certaine they had no meaning to avoide the word of mixing for any ſuch intent as you ſurmiſe.

Mart. 23. Thus then the Greeke is neither drawing of wine, nor powring out thereof, as they tranſlate, but mingling. But the Hebrew perhaps ſignifieth both, or at the leaſt one of the two, either to draw, or to poure out. Gentle Reader if thou haue skill, looke the Hebrew Lexicon of Pagnine, eſteemed the beſt: if thou haue not skill, aske, and thou ſhalt underſtand, that there is no ſuch ſignification of this word, in all the Bible, but that it ſignifieth onely mixture and mingling. A ſtrange caſe, that to avoide this mingling of the cup, being a moſt certaine tradition of the Apoſtles, they haue invented two other ſignifications of this Hebrew word, which it never had before.

Fvlk. 23. The Dictionaries are more ſure to teach what a word doth ſignifie, than what it doth not ſignifie. I confeſſe, Pagnine giveth none other ſignification of that roote מסך, but miſcuit. But even the word miſcuit, may ſignifie, a powring out, when there is no reſpect of ioyning divers things together, but of ſerving one with the cuppe, as Tullie vſeth the word. Qui alteri miſceat mulſum, ipſe non ſitiens. Hee that ſerveth an other with ſweete wine, when hee is not a thirſt himſelfe. So is the Hebrew word vſed, Eſay, 19. where the Prophet ſaith, The Lord hath powred forth among them, the ſpirit of errour. Where the word of mixture, is not ſo proper. Againe, your owne vulgar Latine Interpreter, Proverb. 23. tranſlateth mimſach, a word derived from the ſame roote, not for any mixture, but for drinking up, or making cleane the cuppes, & ſtudent calicibus epotandis, which ſtudie how to emptie or drinke up all that is in the cuppes. ממסכ In Hebrew it is, which goe to ſeeke ſtrong wine, or mingled wine. And if a mixture bee granted in the place you require, how prove you a mixture, with water rather than with any thing elſe. Verily, the circumſtance of the place, if there muſt needes bee a mixture, requireth a mixture of ſpices, hony, or ſome ſuch things to make the wine delectable, unto which Wiſedome doth invite, and allure all men to drinke it, rather than of water onely, to abate the ſtrength of it. As alſo in the text, Proverbes, 23. the drunkards that continued at the wine, and went to ſeeke ממסך mingled wine, went not to ſeeke wine mingled with water, but ſome other delicate mixture. And Eſay 5. where woe is pronounced to drunkards, the ſame word is vſed: woe bee to them, that are ſtrong to drinke wine, and men of might, limſoch, to mingle ſtrong drinke, not to למסכ mingle it with water, for ſobrietie, but with ſome other delectable matter, to provoke drunkenneſſe, as your vulgar Interpreter tranſlateth it. So that albeit the word did ſignifie to mingle, never ſo properly, and certainely, you can make no good argument for mingling with water, in that place, Proverbes 9. where either it ſignifieth ſimply to draw, broch, or powre out, or elſe to prepare with ſome other more pleaſant mixture, than of water onely.

Hereticall tranſlation againſt the honour of Saints, namely of our B. Ladie.

LEt vs paſſe from Gods holy Sacraments, to his honourable Saints in heaven, and wee ſhall finde that theſe tranſlations plucke from them alſo as much honour as they may. In the Pſalme 138. where the Catholike Church, and all antiquitie readeth thus, Nimis honorati ſunt amici tui Deus, &c. Thy friends O God are become exceeding honourable, their princedome is exceedingly ſtrengthened: which verſe is ſung and ſaid, in the honour of the holy Apoſtles, agreeable to that in an other Pſalme, Conſtitues eos principes ſuper omnem terram, Thou ſhalt appoint them Princes over all the earth: what meane they in all their Engliſh Bibles to alter it thus: How deare are thy counſels (or thoughts) to me O God: O how great is the ſumme of them? Doth not the Hebrew make more for the old received Latine tranſlation, than for theirs, becauſe the Hebrew word is vſed more commonly for to ſignifie friends, than cogitations? doth not Saint Hierome ſo tranſlate in his tranſlation of the Pſalmes according to the Hebrew? doth not the great Rabbine R. FVLKE.

THe context of the verſe going before, and alſo the verſe following, not any envy againſt the Saints of God, have moved our tranſlators to depart from the vulgar tranſlation, which is neither ſo proper for the words, and altogether impertinent to the matter of the text. For when the Prophet had in the verſe going before, celebrated the wonderfull worke of God, in the framing of his body in his mothers wombe, in this verſe, hee breaketh out into an exclamation, to behold the marvelous and unſearchable wiſedome of Gods councels, whoſe ſtrength is above mans reach, whoſe number is as the ſand of the ſea. To anſwere R. Salomon, wee have R. David Kimchi, as great a Rabbine as hee, and a more ſincere Interpreter, that expoundeth the whole verſe even as we doe.

Mart. 2. And you my Maſters, that tranſlate otherwiſe, I beſeech you, is it in Hebrew, How great is the ſumme of them: and not rather word for word moſt plainely, how are the heads of them ſtrengthened, or their Princedomes, as in the Greeke alſo it is moſt manifeſt? Why doe you thus hunt after novelties, and forſake the troden path of the ancient, and paſſe the bounds which our holy forefathers have ſet and appointed, preferring your owne ſingularities and new deviſes, even there where you cannot iuſtly pretend either the Hebrew, or Greeke? When the Hebrew Lexicon hath given the common interpretation of this place, and then ſaith, Quidam exponunt, Some expound it otherwiſe: why had you rather bee of that leſſer, ſome that expound otherwiſe, than of the great ſociety of all auncient Interpreters.

Fvlk. 2. The Hebrew is as we have tranſlated, how great is the ſum of them. So doth Kimchi expound it, ſo doth Pagnine, and to the ſame effect, Iuſtinian. And the ſame word, yatſemu miſſapel, the ſumme of them is greater than can bee numbred, Pſal. 40. Where the Prophet ſpeaketh of the counſailes or thoughts of God, as in this place. Where you quarrell at us, for following the leſſer number, when Pagnine ſaith, Quidam, &c. You may know if you liſt, that Pagnine himſelfe is one of thoſe quidam, that tranſlateth even as wee doe. How precious are their thoughts unto mee, how are the ſummes of them multiplied? As for Hierome, whom you would have us to follow, in ſteed of Princes, hath poore men. And therefore you do iniuriouſly, to require us to follow him, whom you follow not your ſelves. You muſt therefore indite Pagnine of hereticall tranſlation, beſide all Proteſtants, or elſe you are very partiall.

Mart. 3. But this new fangled ſingularitie of teaching and tranſlating, otherwiſe than all antiquity hath done, ſhall better appeare in their dealing about our B. Lady, whoſe honour they have ſought ſo many wayes to diminiſh, and deface, that the defenſe and maintenance thereof againſt the Heretikes of our time, is growne to a great booke; learnedly written by the great Clerke, and Ieſuite, father Caniſius, entituled, Mariana.

Fvlk. 3. I thinke Caniſius in all his great booke called Mariana, medleth not with our Engliſh tranſlations, and therefore very idlely was this matter brought in, to tell us of Caniſius booke, called Mariana. I have ſeene a blaſphemous booke againſt, I may iuſtly ſay, (though it were pretended in the honour of) the bleſſed Virgine, called Mariale. I have ſeene that horrible blaſphemous Pſalter of Bonaventure, perverting all the Pſalmes unto the honour of the Virgine Mary, with intollerable blaſphemie againſt God, and the holy mother of Chriſt, whoſe greateſt honour is in the kingdome of her ſonne, and in his infinite glory.

Mart. 4. Concerning our purpoſe, What was ever more common, and is now more generall, and vſuall, in all Chriſtian Countries, than in the Ave Marie, to ſay, Gratia plena, full of grace, inſomuch, that in the firſt Engliſh Bible, it hath continued ſo ſtill, and every childe in our Countrie, was taught ſo to ſay, till the Ave Marie was baniſhed altogether, and not ſuffered to be ſaid, neither in Latine, nor Engliſh? What auncient father of the Latine Church, hath not alwayes ſo read, and expounded? What Church in all the Weſt, hath not ever ſo ſung, and ſaid? Onely our new tranſlatours have found a new kinde of ſpeech, tranſlating thus: Haile thou that art freely beloved: and, Haile thou that art in high favour. Why this, and that, or any other thing, rather than, Haile full of grace? Saint Iohn Baptiſt was full of the holy Ghoſt, even from his birth, Saint Stephen was full of grace, as the Scripture recordeth of them both: why may not then our Lady much more be called full of grace, (who as S. Ambroſe ſaith) only obtained the grace, which no other women deſerved, to be repleniſhed with the author of grace.

Fvlk. 4. The ſalutation of the Virgine, may bee ſaid ſtill, either in Latine, or Engliſh, as well as any part of the holy Scripture beſide. But not to make a popiſh Orizon, of an Angelike ſalutation. That wee haue tranſlated Haile Marie freely beloved, or, that art in high favour, wee haue followed the truth of the Greeke word, not ſo denying thereby, but that the Virgine Marie of Gods ſpeciall goodneſſe without her merits, as ſhe confeſſeth was filled with all gracious gifts of the holy ſpirit, as much as any mortall creature might be, except our Saviour Chriſt, whoſe onely priviledge it is to bee free from ſinne, and to haue received the gifts of the holy Ghoſt without meaſure in his manhood.

MART. 5. They will ſay, the Greeke word doth not ſo ſignifie. Doth it not? I make themſelues witneſſes of the contrary, and their owne tranſlation in other places ſhall confute them, where they tranſlate an other word of the ſelfe ſame nature and forme and in all reſpects like to this, full of ſores. If ἡλκωμένος bee full of ſores, why is not κεχαριτωμένη full of grace? Let any Grecian of them all, make mee a difference in the nature and ſignificancy of theſe two words. Againe, if ulceroſus (as Beza tranſlateth) bee full of ſores, why is not gratioſa (as Eraſmus tranſlateth) full of grace? or why doth Beza marvell, that Eraſmus tranſlated, gratioſa, when himſelfe tranſlateth the like word, ulceroſus? All which adiectiues in oſus, (you know) ſignifie fulneſſe, as periculoſus, ærumnoſus. Yet what a ſtirre doth Beza keepe here in his annotations, to make the Greeke word ſignifie, freely beloved?

MART. 6. But hath it indeed any ſuch ſignification? tell us you that profeſſe this great skill of the tongues, what ſyllable is there in this word, that ſoundeth to that ſignification? S. Chryſoſtome, and the Greek Doctors, that ſhould beſt know the nature of this Greek word, ſay that it ſignifieth, to make gracious, and acceptable, and beloved, and beautifull, and amiable, and ſo to be deſired, as when the Pſalme ſaith; The King ſhall deſire thy beautie. Beza himſelfe ſaith, that it is word for word, gratificata, made gratefull, and yet hee expoundeth it, accepted before God, and tranſlateth it, freely beloved, becauſe hee will haue no ſingular grace or goodneſſe, or vertue, reſident in our B. Lady, but all by imputation, and acceptation, whereof I haue ſpoken before. S. Athanaſius a Greeke Doctor ſaith, that ſhee had this title κεχαριτωμένη, becauſe the holy Ghoſt deſcended into the Virgin, filling her with all graces and vertues. And I beſeech the Reader, to ſee his words, which are many more concerning this fulneſſe of grace and all ſpirituall gifts. S. Hierome, that knew the Greeke word as well as the Proteſtants, readeth gratia plena, and findeth no fault with this interpretation, but ſaith plainely, ſhe was ſo ſaluted, full of grace, becauſe ſhee conceived him in whom all fulneſſe of the deitie dwelt corporally.

FULK. 6. Looke in the beſt Greeke Lexicons, and you ſhall finde it the ſame ſignification, that wee tranſlate, and none other. Chryſoſtome is of the ſame iudgement, as I haue ſhewed, in the place aboue mentioned: That the Virgin Mary was iuſtified before God by faith, imputed to her for righteouſneſſe without workes or iuſtice, as you will haue it called, wee doubt no more of her, than of Abraham. But, that ſhee was alſo ſanctified with moſt excellent graces, and indued in her ſoule, with all Chriſtian vertues. Beza, and all that eſteeme Beza in the word, will confeſſe as much as is convenient for her honour, ſo nothing bee derogated from the honour of God. That which Athanaſius ſaith, wee doe likewiſe admit, and that which Hierome writeth alſo. But this is all the controverſie whether the Virgin Mary were freely accepted and beloved of God; and ſo by his ſpirit indued with gracious vertues, or whether, for her vertues which ſhee had of her ſelfe, ſhee were worthy to bee beloved of God, and deſerved that honour, whereof ſhee was vouchſafed to become the mother of God. Athanaſius ſaith expreſly, that all thoſe graces and gifts were freely given her by the obumbration or overſhadowing of the holy Ghoſt, which the Angell promiſed ſhould come upon her.

MART. 7.  Now let the Engliſh Bezites come with their new terme,* freely beloved, and controll theſe and all other auncient fathers both Greeke and Latine, and teach them a new ſignification of the Greeke word, which they knew not before. Let Iohn Keltridge one of their great Preachers in London, come and tell us, that the Septuaginta and the beſt tranſlations in the Greeke haue no ſuch words as wee uſe in the Aue Mary, but that the word which the Septuaginta uſe, is κεχαριτωμένη &c. Who ever heard ſuch a ieſt, that the Preacher of the word of God in London (ſo hee is called in the title of his booke) and Preacher before the Ieſuites and Seminaries in the Tower, which is next degree to the diſputers there, whoſe Sermons bee ſolemnely printed, and dedicated to one of the Queenes Councell, who ſeemeth to be ſuch a Grecian that hee confuteth the vulgar Latine tranſlation by the ſignification of the Greeke word, and in other places of his booke alleageth the Greeke text: that this man for all this, referreth us to the Septuaginta either as authors of Saint Lukes Goſpell, which is too ridiculous: or as tranſlators thereof, as though S. Luke had written in Hebrew, yea as though the whole new Teſtament had beene written in Hebrew (for ſo no doubt he preſuppoſed) and that the Septuaginta had tranſlated it into Greek as they did the old, who were dead three hundred yeeres before S. Lukes Goſpel and the new Teſtament was written.

* Iohn Keltridge preacher of the word in London. In his Sermons within the Tower, printed, fol. 14. Groſſe ignorance & ſingular pride in many of the new Clergie. So he called the Prieſts of the Seminary, as if one would call a Monke a Monaſtery, or a Nun a Nonry, Pag. 37. of the 2. part.

Concer.

FULK. 7. Concerning Iohn Keltridge, againſt whoſe ignorance and arrogancie you inſult, I can ſay nothing, becauſe I haue not ſeene his booke. But knowing how impudently you ſlander mee, Maſter Whitaker, Beza, and every man almoſt, with whom you haue any dealing, I may well ſuſpect your fidelitie in this caſe, and thinke the matter is not ſo hard againſt Iohn Keltridge, as you make it ſeeme to bee. If hee haue overſhot himſelfe (as you ſay) he is the more unwiſe: if you ſlander him, as you doe others, you are moſt of all to blame.

MART. 8. All this is ſuch a pitifull ieſt, as were incredible, if his printed booke did not giue teſtimonie. Pitifull, I ſay, becauſe the ſimple people count ſuch their Preachers iolly fellowes, and great Clerkes, becauſe they can talke of the Greeke and of the Hebrew text, as this man doth alſo concerning the Hebrew letter Tau, whether it had in old time the forme of a Croſſe, or no, even as wiſely and as skilfully, as he did of the Septuaginta, and the Greeke word in Saint Lukes Goſpell. Whoſe incredible follie and ignorance in the tongues, perhaps I would never haue mentioned (becauſe I thinke the reſt are ſorry and aſhamed of him) but that hee boaſteth of that, whereof hee hath no skill, and that the people may take him for a very patterne and example of many other like boaſters and braggers among them, and that when they heare one talke luſtily of the Hebrew and Greeke, and cite the text in the ſaid tongues, they may alwayes remember Iohn Keltridge their Preacher, and ſay to themſelues, what if this fellow alſo be like Iohn Keltridge.

Fol. 11. part. 2.

FULK. 8. Reſerving Iohn Keltridge to the triall and defenſe of himſelfe, I ſay, you haue ſhewed your ſelfe as ridiculous in this booke divers times, and ſo haue many that beare a greater countenance among you ten times, than Iohn Keltridge doth among us, howſoever it pleaſeth you to make him the next degree to the Diſputers. But if Iohn Keltridge haue ſhewed himſelfe to bee a vaine boaſter of that knowledge whereof perhaps hee is ignorant, what reaſon is it that other learned men, which know the tongues indeed, ſhould bee drawne into ſuſpicion of ignorance for his follie? But that you delight by all meanes to diſcredit their learning and good gifts of God in them, to whom if you were comparable your ſelfe, yet it were not tolerable that you ſhould ſeeke their reproach, before their unskilfulneſſe may plainely be reproved.

MART. 9. But to proceed: Theſe great Grecians and Hebricians that controll all antiquity, and the approved ancient Latine tranſlation, by ſcanning the Greeke and Hebrew words; that thinke it a great corruption, Gen. 3. to reade, Ipſa conteret caput tuum, ſhee ſhall bruiſe thy head, becauſe it pertaineth to our Ladies honour, calling it a corruption of the Popiſh Church, whereas S.* Ambroſe, S. Auguſtine, S. Gregorie, S. Bernard, and the reſt reade ſo, as being the common received text in their time (though there hath beene alſo alwayes the other reading even in the vulgar Latine tranſlation, and therefore it is not any late reformation of theſe new correctors, as though the Hebrew and Greeke text before had beene unknowen) theſe controllers (I ſay) of the Latine text by the Hebrew, againſt our Ladies honour, are in another place content to diſſemble the Hebrew word, and that alſo for ſmall devotion to the bleſſed Virgin, namely Ierem. 7. and 44. where the Prophet inveigheth againſt them that offer ſacrifice to the Queene of heaven, this they think is very well, becauſe it may ſound in the peoples eares againſt the uſe of the Catholike Church, which calleth our Lady, Queene of heaven. But they know very well, that the Hebrew word doth not ſignifie Queene in any other place of the Scripture, and that the Rabbines and latter Hebricians (whom they gladly follow) deduce it otherwiſe, to ſignifie rather the whole corps and frame of heaven, conſiſting of all the beautifull ſtarres and planets, and the Septuaginta call it not onely βασίλισσαν, Queene, but τὴν στρατιάν, the hoſt of heaven, c. 7. Ierem. and S. Hierome not onely Reginam, but rather militiam cæli: and when hee nameth it Reginam, Queene, he ſaith we muſt underſtand it of the Moone, to which and to the other ſtarres they did ſacrifice and commit idolatrie. But the Proteſtants (againſt their cuſtome of ſcanning the Hebrew and the Greeke) tranſlate here, Queene of heaven, *for no other cauſe in the world, but to make it ſound againſt her, whom Catholikes truely call and worthily honour as Queene of heaven; becauſe her ſonne is King, and ſhe exalted aboue Angels and all other creatures. FULK. 9. Wee thinke it indeede a ſhamefull corruption of the Scripture, that your vulgar Latine text, for ipſum, or ipſe, as it is in the Greeke, readeth ipſa, and blaſphemous it is to aſcribe that to the mother of Chriſt, which is proper unto himſelfe. But many of the ancient Fathers did reade ſo, and therefore Fulke did ignorantly belike, in calling it a corruption of the Popiſh Church. The beſt propertie I finde in you, (for which I am beholding to you) is, that when you haue made a lie, and ſlandered mee, you will note the place your ſelfe, where I may bee diſcharged, and your owne impudencie bee convinced. My words in the place by you noted bee theſe: Finally, how the Romiſh Church in theſe laſt dayes hath kept the Scripture from corruption, although I could ſhew by an " hundred examples, yet this one ſhall ſuffice for all: The very firſt promiſe of the Goſpell " that is in the Scripture, Gen. 3. That the ſeede of the woman ſhould breake the Serpents head, the Popiſh Church hath either wilfully corrupted, or negligently ſuffered to bee depraved thus: Ipſa conteret caput tuum, ſhee ſhall breake thine head, referring that to the woman, which God ſpeaketh expreſly to the ſeede of the woman. Whether the myſterie of iniquitie working in the Latine Church, long before the Apoſtaſie thereof into the kingdome of Antichriſt, began this corruption, I leaue it in doubt: but that the Popiſh Church hath ſuffered this depravation to continue, it is out of all queſtion, although you ſay you haue the other reading alſo, which though ſome copies haue, yet will you not admit it to bee authenticall. And whereas you bragge, that this reading hath beene always in your vulgar Latine tranſlation, Hentenius confeſſeth, that of 28 ancient copies, by which hee reviſed the vulgar tranſlation, he found it only in two. As for S. Ambroſe, how hee did reade, it is not certaine: for in his booke, De fuga ſeculi, cap. 7. where this text is cited, though the printed bookes haue ipſa, yet there is nothing in his expoſition that agreeth therewith: and ſeeing that hee followed the Greeke text, which hath the pronoune of the maſculine gender, it is like hee did reade rather ipſe; but becauſe his Greeke was very corrupt, ſo that for τρίψει, conteret, hee did reade τηρήσει, ſervabit; there is no great account to bee made of his reading. S. Auguſtine in Pſalm. 103. readeth Ipſa, but hee referreth it to the Church, not to the Virgin Mary: as alſo, for conteret, out of the corrupt Greeke, hee readeth obſervabit. Gregorie followeth the ſame corrupt verſion, out of the Greeke, Ipſa obſervabit, but hee referreth it to every Chriſtian man, which is the ſeede of the woman, not to the Virgin Mary, Mor. lib. 2. cap. 38. By which it is evident, that your vulgar Latine text was not received in the Church of Rome for ſixe hundred yeeres after Chriſt: for you reade conteret, and not obſervabit. Onely Bernard indeede, a late writer, hath your reading, ipſa conteret; which hee expoundeth as a propheſie of the Virgin Mary, who withſtood the temptations of the Devill, not underſtanding the promiſe of the overcomming of the Devill by Chriſt, even as the Apoſtle alludeth to it, the Lord ſhall tread downe Sathan under your feete, Rom. 16. The ſame Bernard, Serm. de Villic. iniquo, readeth the text, Gen. 4. Si recte offeras, & non recte dividas, after the Greeke, by which alſo it is plaine, as by other arguments, that your vulgar Latine tranſlation was not received for 1000. yeeres after Chriſt. How true therefore it is that you ſaid, Ipſa conteret caput tuum, was the common received text in the ancient Fathers time, the Readers may ſee and iudge.

But the chiefe complaint is behinde, that in Ierem. 7. v. 44. wee tranſlate the Queene of heaven, as the Septuaginta, Hierome, and the vulgar Latine tranſlation doth, and wee onely doe it in deſpight of the Virgin Mary, becauſe the Papiſts blaſphemouſly call her the Queene of heaven. The Hebrew word indeede may ſignifie Queene, although with thoſe points it bee not elſewhere read for a Queene, and it may ſignifie the workmanſhip, but then you muſt ſupply Aleph of the roote, that is wanting, and reſteth under no long vowell, and ſo ſome Proteſtants doe tranſlate it, as Tremellius and Iunius. But if wee bee accuſed of hereticall tranſlation, when wee ioyne with your vulgar Latine, with Hierome, with the Septuaginta, it is very ſtrange that they ſhould not beare the blame with us. Certaine it is, no Proteſtant did ever teach, that the Iewes did worſhip the Virgin Mary for the Queene of heaven; but the Sunne, the Moone, or ſome great ſtarre, as Paguine ſaith. How truely you call the Virgin Mary Queene of heaven, and how well you prove it in your notes upon Act. 1. 14. ſome other more convenient time and place may bee granted to conſider.

MART. 10. Againe, why doth the Geneua new Teſtament make S. Matthew to ſay, that Hee (to wit, Ioſeph) called his name Ieſus? Why not ſhe, as well as he? For in S. Luke the Angell ſaith to our Lord alſo, Thou ſhalt call his name Ieſus. S. Matthew then ſpeaking indifferently, and not limiting it to him or her, why doe they giue this preeminence to Ioſeph rather than to the bleſſed Virgin? Did not both Zacharie and alſo Elizabeth his wife by revelation giue the name of Iohn to Iohn the Baptiſt? Yea did not Elizabeth the mother firſt ſo name him before Zacharie her husband? Much more may wee thinke, that the bleſſed Virgin, the naturall mother of our Saviour, gaue him the name of Ieſus, than Ioſeph his putatiue father, ſpecially if wee conſider that the Angell revealed the name firſt unto her, ſaying, that ſhee ſhould ſo call him: and the Hebrew word, Eſay. 7. whereunto the Angell alludeth, is the feminine gender, and referred by the great Rabbines, Rabbi Abraham, and Rabbi David, unto her, ſaying expreſly in their commentaries; Et vocabit ipſa puella, And the maid her ſelfe ſhall call. And ſurely the vſuall pointing of the Greeke text (for Beza maketh other points of his owne) is much more for that purpoſe. Now if they will ſay, that Theophylact underſtandeth it of Ioſeph, true it is, and ſo it may be underſtood very well: but if it may be underſtood of our Lady alſo, and rather of her than of him, why doth your tranſlation exclude this other interpretation?

FVLK. 10. The matter is not worth the weight of an haire, whether wee reade, hee called, or ſhee called, for both called him ſo. But becauſe Ioſeph had a commandement in the ſame chapter, that hee ſhould call his name Ieſus, it is more probable, that S. Matthew in this place meant of him, rather than her; at the leaſt, it is no hereticall tranſlation, to ſay, that Ioſeph did that; which he was in few verſes before commanded to doe: and it was more ordinary and vſuall, that the man gave the name, rather than the woman, although in this caſe the woman had more right than the man. As for Elizabeths example, it proveth nothing, becauſe ſhee ſpake when her husband was dumbe.

MART. 11. Where by the way I muſt tell you (and elſewhere perhaps more at large) that it is your common fault to make ſome one Doctors interpretation the text of your tranſlation, and ſo to exclude all the reſt that expound it otherwiſe, which you know is ſuch a fault in a Tranſlator, as can by no meanes be excuſed. Secondly, the Reader may here obſerue and learne, that if they ſhall hereafter defend their tranſlation of any place, by ſome Doctors expoſition agreeable thereunto, that will not ſerue nor ſuffice them, becauſe every Doctor may ſay his opinion in his commentaries, but that muſt not be made the text of Scripture, becauſe other Doctors expound it otherwiſe: and being in it ſelfe, and in the originall tongue, ambiguous, and indifferent to divers ſenſes, it may not be reſtrained or limited by tranſlation, vnleſſe there be a meere neceſſitie, when the tranſlation cannot poſſibly or hardly expreſſe the ambiguitie and indifferencie of the originall text.

See chap. 1. num. 3. 43.
Ch. 10. nu. 1.
Cha. 19. nu. 1.

FVLK. 11. The authoritie of one Doctor, agreeing with the proprietie of the originall tongue, is more worth than an hundred againſt it. Wee never follow one Doctor, as you falſly ſlander us, to make his interpretation the text; but where that one Doctor did ſee the truth of the naturall ſenſe, according to the tongue, that perhaps was hid from other Doctors, whoſe writings we haue. As for ambiguities, and indifferences unto divers ſenſes, are better reſerved to Commentaries and Lectures upon the Scriptures, than that they either can or ought to be retained in the tranſlations.

MART. 12. As (for example) in this controverſie concerning Saints, S. Peter ſpeaketh ſo ambiguouſly, either, that he will remember them after his death, or they ſhall remember him, that ſome of the Greeke Fathers gathered and concluded thereupon, (Oecum. in Caten. Gagneius in hunc locum) that the Saints in heaven remember us on earth, and make interceſſion for us. Which ambiguitie both in the Greeke and the Latine ſhould be alſo kept, and expreſſed in the Engliſh tranſlation, and wee haue endeavoured as neere as we could poſſibly ſo to make it, becauſe of the divers interpretations of the ancient Fathers. But it may ſeeme perhaps to the Reader, that the ſaid ambiguitie cannot be kept in our Engliſh tongue, and that our owne tranſlation alſo can haue but one ſenſe. If it bee ſo, and if there be a neceſſitie of one ſenſe, then (as I ſaid) the Tranſlator in that reſpect is excuſed. But let the good Reader conſider alſo, that the Calviniſts in reſtraining the ſenſe of this place follow not neceſſitie, but their hereſie, that Saints pray not for us. Which is evident by this, that they reſtraine it in their Latine tranſlations alſo, where there is no neceſſitie at all but it might be as ambiguous and indifferent as in Greeke, if it pleaſed them: yea, when they print the Greeke Teſtament only, without any tranſlation, yet here they put the Latine in the margent, according as they will haue it read, and as though it might bee read no otherwiſe than they preſcribe.

FVLK. 12. Oecumenius, who lived in a ſuperſtitious time, telleth, that ſome men underſtood this ſaying of Peter, by an hyperbaton, &c. meaning to ſhew, that the Saints, even after their death, doe remember thoſe things which they haue done here for them that are aliue. But other handling this matter plainely, &c. doe giue the vſuall ſenſe. Firſt Oecumenius counteth this an enforced expoſition, becauſe it cannot ſtand but by an hyperbaton. Secondly, he ſpeaketh never a word of the interceſſion of Saints for us. Thirdly, hee preferreth the common ſenſe, that all the Fathers before him giue of this text, as plaine and ſimple, and yet this muſt be ſufficient for us to change our interpretation, although we were put in fault immediately before, as though wee made one Doctors interpretation a ſufficient ground of our tranſlation. Yet is not this an opinion approved, but reported onely by Oecumenius, and Oecumenius himſelfe a Doctor of as little authoritie as any other, in reſpect of the late ſeaſon in which hee lived. As for Gagneius, that came after him, who ſeeth not how little we are to account of his credit, that would wreſt the deciding of an unprofitable queſtion, out of this place, whether Saints make interceſſion for us, which if it were granted, it followeth not, that wee muſt make interceſſion to them.

Hereticall tranſlation againſt the diſtinction of LATRIA and DVLIA.

I*N this reſtrayning of the Scripture to the ſenſe of ſome one Doctor, there is a famous example in the Epiſtle to the Hebrewes, where the Apoſtle ſaith, either* Iacob adored the top of Ioſephs ſcepter, as many read and expound; or elſe, that he adored toward the top of his ſcepter, as other reade and interpret: and beſide theſe, there is no other interpretation of this place in all antiquitie, but in S. Auguſtine onely, as Beza confeſſeth: yet are they ſo bold to make his expoſition onely, and his commentarie peculiar to him alone, the text of the Scripture in their tranſlation, ſaying, Iacob leaning on the end of his ſtaffe, worſhipped God, and ſo excluding all other ſenſes, and expoſitions of all the other Fathers, excluding and condemning their owne former tranſlations, adding two words more than are in the Greeke text, leaning, God; forcing αὐτοῦ, to αὑτοῦ, which may bee, but is as rare, as virgæ eius, for virgæ ſuæ: turning the other words cleane out of their order and place, and forme of conſtruction, which they muſt needs haue correſpondent and anſwerable to the Hebrew text, from whence they were tranſlated: which Hebrew words themſelues tranſlate in this order, Hee worſhipped toward the beds head. If hee worſhipped toward the beds head, according to the Hebrew, then did hee worſhip toward the top of his ſcepter, according to the Greeke: the difference of both being onely in theſe words, ſcepter and bed, (becauſe the Hebrew is ambiguous to both) and not in the order or conſtruction of the ſentence.

FVLKE.

THe reſtrayning of ſimple men from errour, is counted of you the reſtrayning of the Scripture, as though the Scripture were a noſe of wax, as ſome of you haue called it, which might bee writhed euery way, and eſpecially it pleaſeth you, when it may be wreſted to ſome colour of your errour. So haue you not one place of Scripture cleare on your ſide, for any of your hereſies, but you are glad to uphold ambiguities, and diuerſities of ſenſes, whereas if you had the truth, you might haue texts of infallible certaintie, whereof there could not bee diuers interpretations, without manifeſt violence offered unto the words and true ſignification of them. But concerning the place now in queſtion, your vulgar text, omitting the prepoſition, which is both in the Greeke and in the Hebrew, hath comitted a manifeſt errour, in ſaying that Iacob worſhipped the top of his rod or ſtaffe, where S. Auguſtine hath rightly obſerued the true ſenſe of the place, and ſaith, that Iacob (as a weake old man) worſhipped upon the top of his ſtaffe, that is, leaning on his ſtaffe. The Hebrew is, towards the beds head. Although it is not unlike, that either the Apoſtle did reade the word Mattah, which wee reade Mittah, or elſe that Mittah ſignifieth a ſtaffe, as well as Mattah. For it is not like (as Beza ſaith) that Iacob kept his bed when Ioſeph came firſt to him, for after it was told Ioſeph that his father was ſicke. That other Tranſlators obſerued not this matter, whereto ſhall it bee imputed, but to humane imperfection? That wee adde to the text, it is falſe: the words leaning and God, are printed in the ſame letter, to ſignifie that they are not of the originall text, but added for plaineneſſe. And yet the ſenſe may ſtand without them: And hee worſhipped upon the end or top of his ſtaffe. That αὐτοῦ is forced to ſignifie αὑτοῦ, it is a forgerie of you, and no enforcement by us: for it is in a manner as commonly taken ſo, as otherwiſe, except there be another antecedent, to whom it may bee referred, then to auoide ambiguitie, it is αὑτοῦ rather than αὐτοῦ: As Matth. 4. his paths, his meat, his hand: Matth. 5. his Diſciples, and elſewhere in euery place.

MART. 2. To make it more plaine, when the Prophet David ſaith, Adorabo ad templum ſanctum tuum, Pſal. 5. and 137. is not the true tranſlation and Grammaticall ſequele of the words thus, I will adore toward thy holy Temple? Is it not a common phraſe in the Scripture, that the people of God adored toward Ieruſalem, toward his holy Mount, before the Arke, toward the place where his feete ſtood? May any man bee ſo bold, by adding and tranſpoſing to alter and obſcure all ſuch places of holy Scripture, that there may appeare no manner of adoration toward or before a creature? and for worſhipping or adoring toward the things aforeſaid, and the like, may we ſay, leaning upon theſe things to worſhip, or adore God? Were they afraid, leſt thoſe ſpeeches of holy Scripture might warrant and confirme the Catholike and Chriſtian maner of adoring our Sauiour Chriſt, toward the holy Roode, at, or before his Image and the Crucifix before the altar, and ſo foorth? For had they not feared this, why ſhould they tranſlate ἐπὶ, leaning upon, rather than, towards, yea, why in Geneſis, towardes his beddes-head, and here not, towardes?

FVLK. 2. You abound in leaſure, thus to trifle about nothing, wee allow worſhipping toward the Temple, the holy hill, the footſtoole, the Arke of God, and ſuch like: yea if you will haue it toward the beds-head, or the toppe of his ſtaffe, what gaine you for the worſhipping of Images, forbidden by the ſecond commandement, or before Images? for ſo you would creepe upon poore mens conſciences, firſt, to worſhip before images, then to worſhippe images, thirdly, to worſhip them with Dulia, and not with Latria, at laſt to worſhip the image of God, of Chriſt, of the Trinitie, with Latria, even the ſame worſhip that is due to God himſelfe.

MART. 3. And (which is more) when the ancient Greeke fathers, Chryſoſt. Oecum. in Collectan. Damaſc. lib. 1. pro imaginibus, Leont. apud Damaſc. put ſo little force either in this prepoſition ἐπὶ, (or the other alledged) that they expound all theſe ſpeeches, as if the prepoſitions were of phraſe onely, and not of ſignification, ſaying: Iacob adored Ioſephs ſcepter, the people of Iſrael adored the Temple, the Arke, the holy Mount, the place where his feete ſtood, and the like, whereby Saint Damaſcene proveth the adoration of creatures, named Dulia, namely, of the Croſſe, and of ſacred images: if I ſay they make ſo little force of the prepoſitions, that they inferre not onely adoration towards the thing, but adoration of the thing: how doe theſe goodly tranſlators, of all other words, ſo ſtraine and racke the little particle ἐπὶ, to ſignifie, leaning upon; that it ſhall in no wiſe ſignifie any thing, tending towards adoration?

FVLK. 3. The worſhip that Chryſoſtome, and Oecumenius ſpeake of, is a civill reverence done to Ioſeph, or to his ſcepter, in reſpect of the kingdome of Ephraim, that ſhould bee ſet up in his poſteritie. What Damaſcene gathereth hereof, to maintaine idolatrie, wee regard not, certaine it is, that Iacob worſhipped none but God, and bowed himſelfe, either toward the beds head, or leaning upon his ſtaffe, as Saint Auguſtine ſaith. That they will follow conſtrained expoſitions, are inforced to neglect the prepoſitions, it is no warrant for us, when wee ſee how the ſenſe may beſt ſtand without making the prepoſitions, which the holy Ghoſt uſeth, idle or unprofitable, both in the Hebrew, and in the Greeke. And if ἐπὶ ſhould ſignifie toward, as it doth not properly, but upon your counterfet diſtinction of Dulia, and Latria, ſhould never the ſooner bee received.

MART. 4. And if the Greeke Doctors ſuffice not to ſatisfie thoſe great Grecians herein, tell me, you that haue skill in the Hebrew, whether in the foreſaid ſpeeches cited out of the Pſalmes, there be any force in the Hebrew prepoſitions? ſurely no more than if we ſhould ſay in Engliſh, without prepoſitions, Adore yee his holy hill: wee will adore the place where his feete ſtood: Adore yee his footeſtoole: for you know that there is the ſame prepoſition alſo, when it is ſaid; Adore yee our Lord: or, as your ſelues tranſlate, worſhip the Lord: where there can be no force nor ſignification of the prepoſition. And therefore in theſe places alſo, your tranſlation is corrupt, and wilfull; when you ſay thus: Wee will fall downe before his footeſtoole: fall yee downe before his footeſtoole, before his holy Mount, or worſhip him upon his holy hill: Where you ſhunne and avoide, firſt the terme of adoration, which the Hebrew and Greeke, duely expreſſe by termes correſpondent in both languages, throughout the Bible, and are applied for the moſt part, to ſignifie adoring of Creatures. Secondly, you avoide the Greeke phraſe, which is at the leaſt, to adore towards theſe holy things, and places: and much more the Hebrew phraſe, which is, to adore the very things rehearſed: to adore Gods footeſtoole (as the Pſalme ſaith) becauſe it is holy; or, becauſe he is holy, whoſe footſtoole it is, as the Greeke readeth.

FVLK. 4. If the Apoſtle had meant nothing by the prepoſition, hee might, and would, (as it is moſt like) haue left it cleane out, yea, if hee had meant no more, but the adoration of Ioſephs ſcepter, what needed hee to haue added the toppe, or the extremitie? or why was the top of his ſcepter more to bee adored, than all the other length of it? But certaine it is, the Apoſtle would expreſſe the Hebrew prepoſition, which muſt needes haue ſome ſignification. And where you aske them that haue skill in the Hebrew, whether there bee any force in the prepoſition, in thoſe ſayings out of the Pſalme, that ſpeake of worſhipping, or falling downe before his footeſtoole, his holy hill, &c. I anſwere, yea, there is great force, for the hill was not to bee worſhipped, but hee whoſe Tabernacle or Temple was on it. But you obiect, that wee our ſelues neglect the propoſition, Pſalme 96. and ſay, worſhippe the Lord. The fault is the leſſe, becauſe the worſhippe is referred to none but the Lord: yet the preciſe tranſlation in that place, ſhould bee, bow downe, or fall yee downe before the Lord, in the glorious ſanctuarie. And where you ſay, wee ſhunne the word of adoration, which the Hebrew, and Greeke, duely doe expreſſe, by tearmes applied, for the moſt part ſignifie adoring of creatures. You haue packed up a great number of untruths, together, as it were in a bundell. First, that wee ſhunne the tearme of adoring, for doubt of your Dulia, which is utterly untrue, for it is avoyded partly, becauſe it is more Latine, than Engliſh, partly becauſe it doth not expreſſe either the Greeke, or the Latine tearmes, which the Scripture vſeth. Secondly, you avouch, that both the Hebrew, liſhtachaueh, and the Greeke προσκυνεῖν, whereas all that bee learned in both the tongues, doe know, that the Hebrew word doth ſignifie properly, to bow downe, and therfore is vſed of ſuch bowing downe, as is not to the end of adoration, as Pſalme 42. v. 5. 6. Why art thou caſt downe O my ſoule? and in divers other places. The Greeke word alſo ſignifieth, to uſe ſome geſture of body in worſhipping, and ſometimes, to fall downe as Herodotus, προσκυνεῖν προσπίπτοντας, they muſt worſhip the King falling downe before him. Finally, where you ſay, they are applied to the adoring of creatures, if you call it adoration which is vſed in civill manner to Princes, and other perſons of authoritie, I grant it is often ſo applied, but if you meane of religious adoration, it is expreſly forbidden to any creature or Image of creature, by the ſecond commaundement in the Hebrew tearme, and by the words of our Saviour Chriſt to the Devill, Math. 4. In the Greeke word, Thou ſhalt worſhip the Lord thy God, and him onely ſhalt thou ſerue. Where Sathan deſired not to bee worſhipped as God with divine honour, but that our Saviour Chriſt would fall downe before him and worſhip him, as an excellent Miniſter of God, to whom the diſpoſition of all the kingdomes of the world, as hee falſly ſaid, were by God committed, Luk. 4. v. 6. which utterly overthroweth your bold diſtinction of Dulia and Latria, ſeeing it was that which you call Dulia, that the Devill required, but our Saviour Chriſt telleth him, that all religious worſhip and ſervice pertaineth only to God. Touching the adoration of Gods footſtoole, I haue ſpoken ſufficiently before, Cap. 1. Sect. 41. לשתחוה

MART. 5. This being moſt manifeſt to all that haue skill in theſe tongues, it is evident that you regard neither the Hebrew nor Greeke, but onely your hereſie: and that in Saint Pauls place aforeſaid of adoring Ioſephs ſcepter, you alter it by your owne fancie, and not by Saint Auguſtines authoritie, whom I am ſure you will not admit reading in the Pſalme, Adore yee his footſtoole: and ſo preciſely and religiouſly reading thus, that hee examineth the caſe, and findeth thereby that the Bleſſed Sacrament muſt bee adored, and that no good Christian doth take it, before hee adore it. Neither will you admit him when hee readeth thus of David, Hee was caried in his owne hands, and interpreteth it myſtically of Chriſt, that he was caried in his owne hands, when hee gaue his body and blood to his Diſciples. Yet are Saint Auguſtines interpretations (howſoever you like or miſlike them) very good, as alſo that aboue named of Iacobs leaning upon his ſtaffe, and adoring, may bee one good ſenſe or commentarie of that place, but yet a commentarie, and one Doctors opinion, not the ſacred text of Scripture, as you would make it by ſo tranſlating. Praef. in Pſ. 33

FULK. 5. Let Pagnine for the Hebrew word, the Greeke Lexicons for the other, bee iudge betweene us. For you are the moſt impudent advoucher I thinke that ever became a Writer. That wee leane to Auguſtines iudgement, in this caſe, it is not becauſe wee make him an author of truth, but a witneſſe of the ſame, againſt ſuch venemous tongues and pens, as yours is, that call every thing hereticall, that ſavoureth not of your owne drowſie dreames, of antichriſtian hereſie. Neither is it reaſon that by vſing the teſtimonie of Auguſtine, where hee beareth witneſſe to the trueth, wee ſhould bee bound to every interpretation of his, when hee declineth therefro. Where you ſay, that by adoring the footſtoole of God, hee findeth that the bleſſed Sacrament muſt bee adored, you ſay untruely, hee gathereth that Chriſts humanitie or body, muſt bee adored, but not the bleſſed Sacrament thereof. Likewiſe when hee ſaith, upon a feeble ground, of a falſe interpretation, that Chriſt was caried in his owne hands in the Sacrament, hee affirmeth it not ſo abſolutely, as you alleadge it, but quodam modo, after a certaine manner, hee bare himſelfe in his hands, when hee ſaid, this is my body. Yea, in that place Auguſtine, as in many other, declareth his iudgement, that hee acknowledged not the corporall manner of preſence, and eating of Chriſts body, in the Sacrament, for which, you Papiſts ſo greatly contend, that you are content to make ſo many ſenſes of the Scripture, it declareth, that you acknowledge none certaine, and ſo derogate all credit and authoritie from the word of God, which may haue ſo many meanings, as there bee divers Doctors that haue commented upon it. Whereas divers interpretations may haue all a true ſenſe, but it is impoſſible poſſible, that they ſhould all be ſenſes of the ſame Scripture.

MART. 6. And if Saint Hierome like not the Greeke Doctours interpretation, in this place of adoring Ioſeph and his ſcepter, yet he alſo ſaith, that Iacob adored toward Ioſephs rod, or toward the beddes head, and not, leaning upon his ſtaffe he adored, which you make the text of Scripture. And though hee thinke, that in this place is not meant any adoration of Ioſeph, yet, I am ſure, for adoration of holy things, namely, Reliques, the Holy land, and all the holy places and monuments of Chriſts being and doing upon the earth, you will not bee tryed by Saint Hierome. And againe, why S. Paul ſhould ſay, that by faith hee adored, and in reſpect of things to come, it is not otherwiſe eaſy to underſtand, but that hee partly foreſaw the kingdome of Ephraim, in the poſterity of Ioſeph: partly the kingdome of Chriſt, prefigured in Ioſeph then Prince of Egypt, and ſo by faith adored his ſcepter or toward his ſcepter, (which is all one) as the Greeke Fathers for the moſt part expound it. But let us haſten toward an end.

FULK. 6 Saint Hierome indeed denyeth that Iacob did worſhip his ſtaffe or his ſcepter, or toward the top of his ſonnes ſcepter, but onely toward the beds head as the Hebrew text is. For reverent eſtimation of Reliques, the Holy land, and the monuments of Chriſts doing and being, as he ſometime upon contention perhaps, was immoderate, ſo for adoration of ſuch things, after ſuch Idolatrous manner as is uſed in the Popiſh Church he was farre off: yea, he ſaith expreſly, that he doeth not allow the adoration of any creature, and that, to adore any creatures, is plaine idolatry. Has autem non dico martyrum reliquias, &c. But we doe worſhip and adore, I ſay, not the reliques of Martyrs, but neither the Sunne truely, nor the Moone, &c. not Angells not Archangells, not Cherubin, nor Seraphin, or any name that is named in this world, or in the world to come, leſt we ſhould ſerve the creature rather then the Creator which is bleſſed for ever. But we honour the reliques of Martyrs, that we might adore him, whoſe Martyrs they are.

Doe you not heare how Hierome alloweth the adoring of creatures? I ſee no cauſe therefore why wee may not be tryed by his judgement, for adoration of holy things, and namely, reliques, and whatſoever you will name beſide, ſeeing he maketh adoration proper onely to God.

Finally, the Apoſtle ſaith, not that Iacob adored, in reſpect of things to come, but, that by faith, he bleſſed his ſonne, concerning things to come, and worſhipped God, whom no man can worſhip truely, but by faith. And Iacobs faith, was the more commendable, that being neere his end, and in that infirmity of body, he both beleeved the promiſes of God made to him concerning his ſonnes, and alſo gave thankes unto God, for thoſe benefits which he ſhould never taſt of in the fleſh, but was aſſured by them, as tokens of Gods favour towards him, to the attainement of the land of eternall life, whereof the land of Canaan was but a holy figure and Sacrament.

CHAP. XX.

Hereticall tranſlation, by ADDING TO THE TEXT.

BEcauſe in the laſt corruption I ſpake of adding to the text, though it bee their common and univerſall fault in every controverſy, as is to bee ſeene in every Chapter of this booke: yet here I will adde certaine places, not yet mentioned. As, The reſt of the acts of Iehoakim, and his abhominations which hee did, and CARVED IMAGES THAT WERE LAYD TO HIS CHARGE, BEHOLD THEY ARE WRITTEN, &c. theſe wordes, carved images layd to his charge, are more then is either in the Greeke or the Hebrew.

FVLKE.

YOV forget your ſelfe in the firſt place, whereof is made mention, cap. 3. ſect. 9. where I have anſwered, that our firſt Tranſlatours added that which is the common interpretation, and ſupply of them that write upon this place, but, becauſe that had bẽene better in the note then in the text, it is corrected in two later tranſlations.

MART. 2. Againe, Saul confounded the Iewes, proving, (by conferring one Scripture with another) that this is very Chriſt. Theſe words, by conferring one Scripture with another, are added more then is in the Greeke text: in favour of their preſumptuous opinion, that conference of Scripture is enough for any man to underſtand them, and ſo to reject both the commentaries of the Doctours, and expoſition of holy Councells, and Catholike Church, it is ſo much more I ſay, then is in the Greeke text, and a notorious corruption in their Bible, read dayly in their Churches, as moſt authenticall. See the reſt of their Bibles, and thou ſhalt finde no more, for all thoſe wordes, but, affirming, or, confirming. And the ſelfe ſame Bible, in the firſt Epiſtle to the Corinthians, tranſlateth the ſame Greeke word thus, Who ſhall inſtruct? And indeed, that is the true and uſuall ſignification of the word, both in the old Teſtament, and in the new, as Deut. 4. Thou ſhalt teach them thy Children. And Eſay 40. Who ſhall inſtruct our Lord? The Hebrew word alſo in both places, ſignifying no more, but inſtructing and teaching. And ſo doeth the Apoſtle cite it to the Corinthians out of Eſay, and hee uſeth it to the Coloſſians, (c.2.v.2.) in the ſame ſignification, as the Church readeth and expoundeth it, and ſo conſequently, Saint Luke in the place whereof wee now treat, ſaid nothing elſe, but that Saint Paul earneſtly taught or inſtructed them, that Ieſus is Chriſt. And yet our new Tranſlatours without reſpect of Hebrew, or Greeke, have coyned a new ſignification, of conferring one Scripture with another. So ignorant they are in the ſignification of Greeke words, or rather ſo wilfully malicious.

FVLK. 2 Either you make a lowdly, or elſe ſome one print, which you have of the Biſhops Bible, which you call Bib. 1577. hath put that into the line, which ſhould bee the note in the margent. For, of foure tranſlations, that I have, never a one hath that addition. The Biſhops Bible hath that 22. verſe Chap. 9. this. But Saul increaſed the more in ſtrength, and confounded the Iewes, which dwelt at Damaſcus, affirming, that this was very Chriſt. The Geneva Bible thus. But Saul increaſed the more in ſtrength, and confounded the Iewes that dwelt at Damaſcus, confirming, that this was the Chriſt, where the note in the margent upon the word, confirming, is this: proving by the conference of the Scriptures. Thomas Mathewes Bible tranſlateth that verſe thus. But Saul increaſed in ſtrength, and confounded the Iewes, which dwelt at Damaſcus, affirming, that this was very Chriſt. Maſter Coverdales Bible, 1562. hath it thus. But Saul increaſed the more in ſtrength, and confounded the Iewes which dwelt at Damaſcus, affirming, that this was very Chriſt. Thus are all our tranſlations without that addition, which, although it is not to bee borne in the text, yet is no hereticall addition, except you count it hereſie, to proove a thing by conference of Scriptures.

MART. 3. Againe, in the firſt Epiſtle of Saint Peter they tranſlate thus: The word of the Lord endureth ever: and this is the word which by the Goſpel was preached unto you. Where theſe wordes, by the Goſpell, are added deceiptfully, and of ill intent, to make the Reader thinke, that there is no other word of God, but the written word, for the common Reader hearing this word Goſpell, conceiveth nothing elſe. But indeed all is the Goſpell, whatſoever the Apoſtles taught, either by writing, or by tradition and word of mouth, as Saint Paul ſpeaketh 2 Theſſ. 2. and Saint Peter ſaith nothing elſe in that place alledged, but, This is the word which is preached among you, as the Geneva Bibles tranſlate, or more ſignificantly, which is evangelized among you, as wee tranſlate, for though there bee greater ſignificancy in the Greeke word, then is expreſſed by bare preaching or telling a thing, as having a goodly relation, and alluſion to the word, Evangelium Goſpell, yet neither doe they in any other place, neither can they tranſlate it to preach by the Goſpell, but ſimply, to preach, to tell, to ſhew: as, preaching peace by Ieſus Chriſt, Act. 10. v. 39. ſo themſelves tranſlate it. And Pſal. 95. (or 96. v. 2.) Bee telling of his ſalvation from day to day. Which in other places is ſpoken by other Greeke wordes, that have no ſignification at all of Goſpell, as immediately in the ſaid Pſalme, 95. (or 96. verſ. 3.) and Pſalm. 104. (or 105. verſ. 1.) and Act. 13. v. 5. and c. 17. v. 23. and Io. 1. v. 3.

FVLK. 3. The other before is not a more lewd ſlaunder, then this is a fooliſh cavill. The Greeke word ſignifyeth not ſimply to preach the Goſpell, or good tydings, which, both may, and ought to bee expreſſed, where the phraſe of our tongue will abide it. And therefore the Geneva tranſlation is imperfect in this place, rather then the other. When you ſay, Evangelized, you doe not tranſlate, but feigne a new word, which is not underſtood of meere Engliſh eares, as you doe in an hundred places beſide, to make the Scripture darke and unprofitable to the ignorant Readers. And if the word ſignifyeth no more, but to preach, to tell, to ſhew, as you would ſeeme to proove by a number of quotations, why doe you uſe that new word Evangelize? which, if it were underſtood, and in uſe, is more then ſimply to preach, to tell, to ſhew. But of all other your midde ſurmiſes, this is the moſt monſtrous, that this is added, to make the Reader thinke, that there is no other word of God, but the written word. Doth Goſpell, I pray you, ſignify the written word? The common hearer, you ſay, hearing this word Goſpell, conceiveth nothing elſe. I am perſwaded there is no ſuch Reader in England, except it bee ſome of your viperous broode, that thinketh the Goſpell to bee nothing but the ſtorie written by the foure Evangeliſts: whereas all true Chriſtians know the Goſpell to bee contained not onely in thoſe ſtories, but alſo in other writings of the Apoſtles, and that the Goſpell is preached whenſoever a good Sermon teaching the way unto ſalvation is preached. Howſoever the Septuagints uſed the word Evangelizo in the old Teſtament, wee are not to learne the ſignification thereof out of their tranſlation, but out of the Scribes of the holy Ghoſt in the new Teſtament.

MART. 4. All which words ſignify onely to tell, to ſhew, to declare, and are uſed indifferently for and with the other word, which they here only tranſlate to preach by the Goſpell. Whereas in all other places, when they will tranſlate it moſt ſignificantly, they expreſſe it by bringing glad tidings: and in ſome places, where it ſhould bee expreſſed moſt ſignificantly in reſpect of evangelizing or preaching the Goſpell, there they tranſlate it barely, Preachers, and preaching. Only S. Peters place aforeſaid muſt bee ſtretched to ſignify, The word preached by the Goſpell, to inſinuate and uphold their hereſy of the written Goſpell onely, or onely written word, againſt Apoſtolicall traditions not written. If this bee not their meaning, let them give us a good reaſon, why they tranſlate it ſo in this one place onely.

FVLK. 4. When wee vary about the ſignification of the word εὐαγγελίζειν, or indeede when wee vary not in ſubſtance, though you muſt brabble about it for a countenance, what meane you to teach us the ſignification of other wordes, except you would make folke beleeve, that wee know nothing but what wee learne of you? I ſay againe, if in the new Teſtament wee have not fully expreſſed the ſignification of the Greeke word εὐαγγελίζειν, either it is becauſe our Engliſh phraſe could not expreſſe it, or elſe it is a fault of negligence. But in the old Teſtament, where wee have not that word, becauſe wee tranſlate out of Hebrew, what reaſon is there that you ſhould exact the ſignificancy of that word, when wee doe not tranſlate it? The ſenſeleſſe inſinuation that you dreame of, I am ſure was farre from the Tranſlatours mindes, ſeeing wee have manifeſt and inevitable Scriptures, to confound your hereticall blaſphemie of the imperfection and inſufficiency of the word and Goſpell of God written unto eternall ſalvation. And if the word Goſpell, when it is added to the text out of the verbe of Evangelizing, doe inſinuate the hereſie of the written Goſpell onely, why doe you, Matth. 11. verſ. 5. tranſlate, Pauperes evangelizantur, to the poore the Goſpell is preached? would you thinke it were an honeſt ſurmiſe of mee, to ſay you avoyd the name of the Goſpell, ſo often as you expreſſe it not in tranſlating that word, for hatred you beare the Goſpell? And yet it hath more likelyhood, then many that you have invented, and proſecuted againſt us.

MART. 5. It is written of Luther, that hee for the ſelfe ſame hereſie, in his firſt tranſlation into the Germane tongue, left out theſe wordes of Saint Peter altogether, This is the word which is evangelized or preached to you. Why ſo? becauſe S. Peter doth here define what is the word of God, ſaying, that which is preached to you, and not that onely which is written. Which falſe dealing of Luther, is no ſmall preſumption againſt the like hereticall meaning of our Engliſh Proteſtants, who (I am ſure) in this poynt of controverſy of the word written and unwritten, will not deny that they agree with the Lutherans.

FVLK. 5. That any ſuch ſentence was upon any purpoſe left out by Luther in his tranſlation, for my part I beleeve it not, neither upon your report, nor upon your Authour Lindanus credite. If the Printer did omitte a line, yet what reaſon were it to thinke, that Luther did it upon ſuch a cauſe? which were to no purpoſe for him, except hee ſhould have left out all thoſe texts of Scripture, where preaching of the Goſpell or word of God is mentioned. What you have left out, I have noted before, and yet I have not pronounced the cauſe why, ſo confidently as you doe of that omiſſion, which you know not whether it be ſo or no.

MART. 6. Againe, in the Epiſtle of Saint Iames they adde the word Scripture into the text, ſaying, But the the Scripture offereth more grace: where the Apoſtle may ſay as well, and indifferently, The Spirit or holy Ghoſt giveth more grace, and it is much more probable, and is ſo expounded of many. Let the good Reader ſee the circumſtance of the place, and abhorre their ſaucineſſe in the text of holy Scripture.

FVLK. 6. The nominative caſe in the Greeke is wanting, which is expreſſed in the verſe before, and in this verſe is ſupplyed by the Tranſlatours: yet printing it ſo in another letter, that the Reader may know it is not in the Greeke, as they doe in 500. places beſide, where a verbe, or a noune, or a pronoune, or any other word, muſt of neceſſity bee underſtood, to fill up the ſenſe: which you in your preciſe tranſlation obſerve not, when you adde any ſuch thing, beſide many imperfect ſentences that you make, becauſe you will not ſeeme to adde that which in tranſlation is no addition, but a true tranſlation. But heere you ſay, the Apoſtle may as well underſtand the holy Ghoſt, as the Scripture. When there is a nominative caſe before, that agreeth with the verbe, and the ſenſe, it is farre fetcht to underſtand a nominative caſe of him, that is not ſpoken of. I will ſet downe the whole text, that the Reader may judge, what a perillous addition is here committed by our Tranſlatours. Doe you thinke that the Scripture ſaith in vaine, the ſpirit that dwelleth in us, luſteth after envy? But (the Scripture, or) it giveth more grace, and therefore ſaith, God reſiſteth the proud, and giveth grace to the humble. In Grammar ſchooles they uſe to examine it thus, who, or what giveth? who, or what ſaith? Doeth not the Scripture mentioned immediately before, anſwer to theſe queſtions moſt aptly? Yet men muſt abhorre our ſaucineſſe, or rather your ſpightfull maliciouſneſſe.

MART. 7. One addition of theirs I would not ſpeake of, but onely to know the reaſon why they doe it, becauſe it is very ſtrange, and I know not what they ſhould meane by it. This I am ſure, if they doe it for no purpoſe, they do it very fooliſhly and forgetfully, and contrary to themſelves. In the Goſpel of S.Marke, in the reckoning of the Apoſtles, they adde theſe wordes, And the firſt was Simon, more then is in their Greeke text: which addition they learned of Beza, whoſe contradictions in this point are worthy noting. In S.Mathew, where theſe wordes are, he ſuſpecteth that firſt, was added by ſome Papiſt, for Peters primacy: here, where the word is not, he avoucheth it to be the true text of the Goſpell, and that becauſe Mathew readeth ſo. There hee alleadged this reaſon, why it could not be ſaid, the firſt, Simon, becauſe there is no conſequence nor coherence of ſecond, third, fourth, &c. here hee ſaith that is no impediment, becauſe there be many examples of ſuch ſpeech, and namely in the ſaid place of S.Mathew. There he ſaith, it is not ſo, though all Greeke copies have it ſo; here it muſt needs be ſo, though it be onely found in certaine odde Greek copies of Eraſmus, which Eraſmus himſelfe (as Beza confeſſeth) allowed not, but thought that theſe words were added in them out of S. Mathew. What theſe contradictions meane, I know not, and I would learne the reaſon thereof, of his ſchollers our Engliſh Tranſlatours, who by their Maſters authority have made the ſelfe ſame addition in their Engliſh tranſlation alſo.

FVLK. 7. It ſeemeth you like the addition well enough, becauſe it importeth a ſhaddow of Peters primacy; but yet your malice is ſo great againſt Beza, whoſe ſincerity in this caſe you ſhould rather commend, if there were any ſparke of honeſt equity in you, that you cannot paſſe it over without quarrelling and cavilling. But your pretence is, to know the reaſon why they doe it. I have ſome marvell that you ſhould bee ignorant of ſuch things, as are counted ſo materiall for the maintenance of the Popes primacy, eſpecially, ſith Beza telleth you ſo plainely the reaſon of it. True it is, that the common printed bookes have not that addition. But Beza taketh Eraſmus to witneſſe, that in diverſe Greeke coppies theſe wordes are expreſſed, and becauſe they agree beſt with the context, Beza tranſlateth them out of thoſe coppies. For except you ſo reade (ſaith Beza) the next verſe beginning of the particle καὶ, ſhall have no word at all, with which it may bee knitte. But in Saint Mathew (you ſay) hee ſuſpecteth that the word (firſt) was added by ſome Papiſt for Peters primacy. Hee onely objecteth, what if it were ſo, and anſwereth the objection himſelfe out of Saint Marke: as upon Saint Marke, for the coherence with that which followeth. Wherefore it is not without great and malicious impudence, that you charge him with contradiction, where there is none, and where hee ſaith more toward your cauſe, then any of you could ſay for your ſelves.

MART. 8. There is alſo another addition of theirs, either proceeding of ignorance, or of the accuſtomed humour, when they tranſlate thus: If yee continue ſtabliſhed in the faith, and be not moved away from the hope of the Goſpell, which yee have heard how it was preached to every creature; or, whereof yee have heard how that it is preached; or, whereof yee have heard, and which hath beene preached to every creature, &c. For all theſe varieties they have, and none according to the Greeke text, which is word for word, as the vulgar Latine Interpreter hath moſt ſincerely tranſlated it, Vnmoveable from the hope of the Goſpell, which you have heard, which is, or hath beene preached among all creatures, &c. So that the Apoſtles exhortation is unto the Coloſſians, that they continue grounded and ſtable in the faith and Goſpel which they had heard and received of their firſt Apoſtles: as in the Epiſtle to the Romans, and to the Galatians, and to the Theſſalonians, and to the Hebrewes, and to Timothy, and S.Iohn in his firſt Epiſtle, c.2.v.24. and S.Iude, v.3. and 20. all uſe the like exhortations.

FVLK. 8. Here is no addition of any word, that may not bee comprehended in the Greeke: for οὗ being the genitive caſe, ſignifyeth not onely which, but alſo whereof, or of which, and κηρυχθέντος, that hath beene, or which hath beene preached. Here is onely the poore word (how) which is a ſuperfluous word even in our Engliſh, for the ſenſe is all one, if you leave it out, Vnmoveable from the hope of the Goſpell, of which you have heard, that it hath beene preached among, or to all creatures. Here is therefore no addition to the text, but a ſenſe differing from that which pleaſeth you beſt, and yet your vulgar Latine may well beare that ſenſe, which our Tranſlatours doe follow.

MART. 9. *But this doeth not ſo well like the Proteſtants, which * with* Hymeneus and Alexander, and other old Heretikes, have fallen from their firſt faith, and therefore they alter the Apoſtles plaine ſpeech, with certaine words of their owne, and they will not have him ſay, Bee unmoveable in the faith and Goſpell which you have heard and received, but, whereof you have heard, how that it is preached: as though hee ſpake not of the Goſpell preached to them, but of a Goſpell which they had onely heard of, that was preached in the world. Certaine it is, theſe wordes, whereof you have heard, how it was preached, are not ſo in the Greeke, but, which you have heard, which hath beene preached. Which is as much to ſay, as that they ſhould continue conſtant in the faith and Goſpell, which themſelves had received, and which was then preached and received in the whole world. So ſay wee to our deere Countrey-men, Stand faſt in the faith, and bee unmoveable from the hope of the Goſpell, which you heard of your Apoſtles, which was, and is preached in all the world. If the Proteſtants like not this exhortation, they doe according to their tranſlation.

1 Tim.1.&6.

FVLK. 9. The Lord is witneſſe, there is nothing liketh the Proteſtants better, then that all nations ſhould continue grounded and ſtable in that faith and Goſpell, which they had heard and received of their firſt Apoſtles: but in this place our Tranſlatours underſtand not onely that continuance in the Goſpell, but alſo they comprehend the myſtery of the preaching of the Goſpell to the Gentiles, whereof the Apoſtle in this text beginneth to ſpeake, that the Coloſſians might know that they have beene inſtructed in that Goſpell, which at ſuch time as the Apoſtle did write unto them, had beene ſpread by preaching, according to our Saviour Chriſts commandement, over all the world. As for your bruitiſh collection, as though hee ſpake not of the Goſpell preached to them, but of a Goſpell, which they had onely heard of, that was preached in the world; what ground can it have of our tranſlation, according to the ſenſe I ſhew, that the Tranſlatours followed? Is it poſſible they ſhould continue in a Goſpell that was not preached unto them, but whereof they had heard onely a fame, that it was preached to others? The whole context before, inforceth as much as you ſay, is the ſenſe of the place. And the vulgar Tranſlatour ſeemeth to favour this ſenſe, that our Tranſlatours follow, rather then that bare tranſlation of yours, becauſe hee ſaith not, à ſpe Evangelij, quod audiſtis prædicati in univerſa creatura, &c. but, à ſpe Evangelij quod audiſtis, quod prædicatum eſt in univerſa creatura. The words of the exhortation you make to your Country-men, are well to be liked, if your meaning were as good. But when by the Goſpel you meane Popiſh traditions, by your firſt Apoſtles, not the Apoſtles of Chriſt, but of the Biſhop of Rome, by which was preached in all the world the doctrine of Antichriſtian apoſtaſie, we are ſo to conſider, that under ſo good and holy words, ſo divelliſh and deteſtable a meaning is craftily covered, and cloaked with hypocriſy.

MARTIN.

Chap. XXI.

Certaine other hereticall TREACHERIES and CORRVPTIONS worthy of obſervation.

THey hold this poſition, that the Scriptures are not hard to bee underſtood, that ſo every one of them may preſume to interpret and expound them. And becauſe Saint Peter ſaith plainely, that Saint Paules Epiſtles are hard, and other Scriptures alſo, which the unlearned (ſaith hee) pervert to their owne deſtruction, therefore they labour tooth and naile, to make this ſubtile difference that Saint Peter ſaith not, Pauls Epiſtles are hard, but ſome things in Saint Pauls Epiſtles are hard, (as though that were not all one) and therefore they tranſlate ſo, that it muſt needes bee underſtood of the things, and not of the Epiſtles, pretending the Greeke, which yet they know in ſome copies cannot bee referred to the things, but muſt needs bee underſtood of the Epiſtles. Wherefore, the Greeke copies being indifferent to both, and the thing alſo in very deed being all one, whether the hardneſſe bee in the Epiſtles, or in the matter, (for when wee ſay the Scripture is hard, wee meane ſpecially the matter) it is not onely an hereticall, but a fooliſh and peeviſh ſpirit, that maketh them ſo curious and preciſe in their tranſlations, as here to limit and abridge the ſenſe to the things onely, Beza tranſlating, inter quæ ſunt multa difficilia, and not, in quibus, as it is in the old vulgar tranſlation, moſt ſincere, and indifferent both to Epiſtles and things.

2 Pet. 3. Corruption concerning the eaſineſſe of the ſcriptures. Beza in Annot. ἐν οἷς. ἐν αἷς. Teſt. Gr. Criſp.]

FVLKE.

WEE hold of the Scriptures, as Saint Auguſtine teacheth, de doctrin. Chriſt. lib. 2. cap. 6. that the holy Ghoſt hath ſo magnifically, and wholeſomely attempered the holy Scriptures, that with open and cleare places hee hath provided againſt famine, and in darke and hard places hee hath wiped away loathſomeneſſe. And that nothing almoſt is gathered out of thoſe darke places, which is not found elſewhere to bee uttered moſt plainely, ſpecially if it containe matter neceſſary unto ſalvation. But that every one may preſume to interprete and expound the Scriptures, it is one lye of an hundred, that Martine hath made in this booke, and hath faigned of us, never held or mainetayned by us. But Saint Peter (you ſay) plainely ſaith, that Saint Paules Epiſtles are hard, and other Scriptures alſo. Howbeit, Saint Peter ſayth neither the one, nor the other, eſpecially not the latter. For albeit, in the moſt approoved Greeke Coppies, the relative bee of the neuter gender, limiting that which Saint Peter ſpeaketh, not to any matter at large in Saint Paules Epiſtles, but to thoſe things which Saint Paul hath written concerning the ſecond comming of Chriſt; yet of the other Scriptures hee ſaith not, that they are hard, although hee might ſay, there are hard things in them, but that the unſtable and unlearned pervert them to their owne deſtruction, which they doe oftentimes, when they bee moſt playne and eaſy, and not onely where they bee difficult and hard. That you can underſtand no difference betweene the ſenſe which is made of the neuter gender, and that which the fœminine gender doeth yeeld, I know not whether it bee to be imputed to the dullneſſe of your wit, but rather I thinke it proceedeth of the crafty malice of your minde. As alſo that you charge us with an hereticall, fooliſh, and peeviſh ſpirit, when wee tranſlate according to the moſt uſuall Greeke coppies, and according to that which is moſt agreeable to the place. For to accuſe all Saint Paules Epiſtles of difficultie and hardneſſe, had not been agreeable to that excellent commendation which Saint Peter before did give him. For every man that deſireth to teach, as Saint Paul did by his Epiſtles, ought to frame his ſpeech to bee as plaine and eaſy to bee underſtood, as the matter whereof hee ſpeaketh will admit. But that ſome things about that high myſtery of the ſecond comming of Chriſt, are hard to bee underſtood, diſchargeth Paul of affectation of difficulty, or not regard of perſpicuity, ſhewing the cauſe of the hardneſſe to bee in the height of the matter, not in the handling of the writer. And that ſome did miſunderſtand the Apoſtle Saint Paul writing of that matter, it is apparant by the ſecond Epiſtle to the Theſſalonians, chap. 2.

Another

Mart. 2. Another faſhion they have, which cannot proceede of good meaning, that is, when the Greeke text is indifferent to two ſenſes, and one is received, read, and expounded of the greater part of the auncient Fathers, and of all the Latine Church, there to follow the other ſenſe, not ſo generally received and approoved; as in Saint Iames Epiſtle, where the common reading is, Deus intentator malorum eſt, God is no tempter to evill, they tranſlate, God cannot bee tempted with evill, which is ſo impertinent to the Apoſtles ſpeech there, as nothing more. But, why will they not ſay, God is no tempter to evill, as well as the other? is it becauſe of the Greeke word, which is a paſſive? Let them ſee their Lexicon, and it will tell them that it is both an active, and paſſive. So ſay other learned Grecians, Interpreters of this place. So ſaith the very circumſtance of the wordes next going before, Let no man ſay that hee is tempted of God. Why ſo? Becauſe God is not tempted with evill, ſay they, is this a good reaſon? nothing leſſe, how then? Becauſe God is no tempter to evill, therefore let no man ſay, that hee is tempted of God.

Gagneius.

Fvlk. 2. You have a faſhion, common to you, with many of your fellowes, to ſnatch all occaſions that you can get, to make a ſhew, for your haynous ſlaunders, wherewith you ſeeke to overwhelme the Saints of God, and eſpecially thoſe, whoſe labours have beene moſt fruitfull to his Church. Whereof, you give us an evident example in this tranſlation, which you follow with ſuch eagerneſſe in three large ſections, that the ignorant Reader, which cannot examine the matter, might thinke you had great and urgent cauſe ſo to doe. The Greeke of Saint Iames, ἀπείραστος κακῶν, wee tranſlated paſſively, as the word ſignifyeth, and as wordes of that forme doe ſignify, God is not, or cannot bee tempted with evill. But againſt this tranſlation, you oppoſe the Lexicon, which following the judgement of the vulgar Interpreter, that hath tranſlated it actively, doeth indeede make it indifferent, to both ſignifications, but example giveth none thereof, but this now in controverſy. You alleadge further learned Grecians Interpreters of this place, and namely, Gagneius a late writer, to whom I may oppoſe Hentenius, who tranſlating Oecumenius upon Saint Iames, turneth this place of Scripture thus. Deus enim malis tentari nequit. And Oecumenius in his Commentary is plaine of the ſame judgement, for repeating the text as before, he ſaith: Iuxta eum qui dixit (quanquam externus ſit à nobis & à fide alienus) divina beataque natura neq; moleſtias ſuſtinet neq; alijs præbet. God cannot bee tempted with evill, according to him which ſaid (although it bee a forrainer from us, and a ſtranger from the faith) the divine and bleſſed nature, neither ſuffereth griefes, nor offereth to other. And this judgement of Oecumenius, is collected out of a great number of Greeke Doctours. But the very circumſtance of the wordes next before (ſay you) doeth require it ſhould be taken actively. A good Interpreter will conſider the circumſtances of the wordes following, as well as of the wordes going before. For the wordes following declare that it muſt be taken paſſively, or elſe the Apoſtle ſpeaketh one thing twice together, without any cauſe why. Wheras the paſſive taking of that word, agreeth to the circumſtance, as well going before as following after. The whole context is this: Let no man ſay, when he is tempted, I am tempted of God. For God cannot bee tempted of evills, neither doeth he tempt any man. The meaning is plaine, God is ſo farre from tempting unto evill, as his divine nature is uncapable of any temptation of evill. For temptation to evill, could not come from God, except it were firſt in God, but ſeeing it cannot bee in God, it cannot proceed from him, and ſo doth Oecumenius interpret the place.

Mart. 3. This reaſon is ſo coherent and ſo neceſſary in this place, that if the Greeke word were onely a paſſive (as it is not) yet it might beſeeme Beza to tranſlate it actively, who hath turned the active into a paſſive without ſcrupuloſity, as himſelfe confeſſeth, and is before noted, againſt the reall preſence. Much more in this place might he be bold to tranſlate that actively, which is both an active and a paſſive, ſpecially having ſuch an example, and ſo great authority as is all the auncient Latine Church till this day. But why would hee not? ſurely, becauſe hee would favour his and their hereſie, which ſaith cleane contrary to theſe wordes of the Apoſtle, to wit, that God is a tempter to evill. Is that poſſible to be proved? yea, it is poſſible and plaine. Bezaes wordes be theſe, Inducit Dominus in tentationem eos quos Satanæ arbitrio permittit, aut in quos potius Satanam ipſum inducit, ut cor eorum impleat, ut loquitur Petrus, Act. 5. v. 3. that is, The Lord leadeth into tentation thoſe whom hee permitteth to Satans arbitrement, or into whom rather hee leadeth or bringeth in Satan himſelfe, to fill their heart, as Peter ſpeaketh. Marke that he ſaith God bringeth Satan into a man, to fill his heart, as Peter ſaid to Ananias, Why hath Satan filled thy heart to lie unto the holy Ghoſt? So then, by this mans opinion, God brought Satan into that mans heart, to make him lie unto the holy Ghoſt, and ſo led him into tentation, being authour and cauſer of that haynous ſinne.

Annot. No. Teſt. an. 1556. Math. 6. v. 13.

Fvlk. 3. How neceſſary the coherence is, with the former wordes, that it maketh an abſurd repetition in the wordes following, I have noted before. And therefore, there is no cauſe, that ſhould drive Beza, to tranſlate a word of paſſive ſignification actively, as you ſlaunder him to have tranſlated an active paſſively, againſt the reall preſence, for that you meane of Act.3. he tranſlateth not paſſively, ſo as the paſſive is oppoſite to the active, but as the one may be reſolved into the other, the ſame ſenſe remaining, which every child in the grammar ſchoole knoweth: Ego amo te, tu amaris à me, I love thee, thou art loved of me: and not as they may diſagree, I love thee, but I am not loved of thee.

But Beza (you ſay) would not follow the vulgar Interpreter, whoſe antiquity I have ſhewed for univerſall receiving, not to have beene above five hundreth yeares: ſeeing Bernard, which lived a thouſand and one hundred yeares after Chriſt, uſeth it not alwayes. And why did Beza leave the vulgar tranſlation, in this place? Surely, in favour of our hereſie, that God is a tempter to evill. The Lord himſelfe bee judge, whether we abhorre not that hereſy. Yet you ſay, it is both poſſible, and plaine to bee prooved, by Bezaes owne wordes. In his latter edition, Anno 1565. his wordes are theſe, upon that petition of the Lords prayer, Leade us not into temptation. Inducit autem Dominus in tentationem eos quos Satana arbitrio permittit, ut cor eorum impleat, ſicut loquitur Petrus, Act.5. " The Lord leadeth into temptation them, whom hee permitteth to the will of Satan, that " hee may fill their heart, as Peter ſpeaketh. Theſe wordes declare, that God leadeth ſome " men into temptation, and how hee leadeth them into temptation, namely, by giving " them over to Satan, who filleth their heart with all iniquity. But hereof it cannot bee prooved that hee tempteth unto evill. Hee ſent the lying ſpirit into the mouth of Achabs Prophets, for a puniſhment unto Achab, and them: yet hee neither tempted Achab to evill, nor his Prophets to lie. But you grate upon theſe wordes, in the firſt edition, God bringeth Satan into a man. Beza meaneth no otherwiſe, then for a puniſhment, they are delivered to Satan, as the lying ſpirit was ſent to deceive Achab, not that God filleth their hearts, but that Sathan filleth their hearts to their deſtruction, as Peter ſaith: where you doe ſlaunderouſly apply that which Peter ſaith of Satan, filling the heart of Ananias, to the whole ſentence: as though Peter were alleadged to ſay, that God ſendeth Satan into a mans heart. That God did leade Ananias into temptation for his hypocriſy, and gave him over to Satan, who filled his heart, and poſſeſſed him, ſo that hee lyed unto the holy Ghoſt, wee may ſafely affirme, and yet it followeth not, that God either tempted Ananias to his ſinne, or elſe was Authour and cauſer of that haynous ſinne, otherwiſe then hee is the good Authour and cauſer of all things, which as they are cauſed by him, they are good. And yet of ſuch things (as Saint Auguſtine ſaith,) hee is no evill authour, hee may bee and is a juſt revenger. Wherefore you can no better gather of this ſaying, that God is the authour of ſinne, then when wee ſay, that God created the Devill, or man to be of free-will, for if they had not beene of free-will to ſinne, they ſhould not have ſinned. Or if God had not ſuffered, and ordayned the Devill firſt of all, hee could not have tempted Eve, and ſo have brought man to ſinne. But as God is cleare from the ſinne of the Devill, and of Adam, which yet hee might have kept from ſinning: ſo is hee cleare from the ſinne of them, whom for a juſt plague, hee leadeth into temptation, and giveth into the power of Sathan, to worke his wicked will in them, to their eternall deſtruction.

MART. 4. Is not this to ſay, God is a tempter to evill? cleane contrary to Saint Iames the Apoſtle? or could hee that is of this opinion, tranſlate the contrary, that God is no tempter to evill? Is not this as much to ſay, as that God alſo brought Satan into Iudas to fill his heart, and ſo was authour of Iudas treaſon, even as he was of Pauls converſion? Let Beza now, and Maſter Whitaker, or any other Heretike of them all, wreſt and wring themſelves from the abſurditie of this opinion, as they endeavour, and labour to doe exceedingly, becauſe it is moſt blaſphemous: yet ſhall they never be able to cleare and diſcharge themſelves from it, if they will allow and maintaine their foreſaid expoſition of Gods leading into temptation. Doth not Beza for the ſame purpoſe tranſlate, Gods providence, for, Gods preſcience? Which is ſo falſe, that the Engliſh Bezites in their tranſlation, are aſhamed to follow him.

FVLK. 4. Beza that ſaid the one, defyeth the other. For Saint James ſaith, that God tempteth no man to evill, as hee himſelfe is not tempted of evill. Therefore it is moſt ridiculous that you imagine that Beza ſhould not tranſlate the word actively, to avoyde that ſentence (God is no tempter to evill) which followeth in the very next wordes, God tempteth no man. That God gave over Iudas unto Satan, it implyeth not, that God was the authour of Iudas treaſon, no more then when the Apoſtles ſay, that Herode and Pontius Pilate came together, with the Gentiles, and people of Iſrael, againſt Ieſus Chriſt, to doe whatſoever the hand and counſell of God had determined, Actes 4. verſ. 27. 28. Behold all they that murdered Chriſt, Herod, Pilate, Iudas, Annas, Caiphas, with all the reſt, did whatſoever the hand and counſell of God had before determined to bee done.

done. Was God then authour of their ſin? God forbid. And yet without horrible ſins, thoſe things could not be done, which God had determined to be done, by thoſe wicked inſtruments, yet neceſſary by Gods appoyntment, for our redemption. Beza therefore needed not for any ſuch end, as you ſlaunder him, to have tranſlated Gods providence, for Gods preſcience, which I have anſwered before. Neither is there any need for Maſter Whitaker or other to wreſt and wring themſelves from this abſurdity, which they never granted, but may eaſily be avoyded by them that hold the doctrine of Gods eternall providence, and fore-appoyntment of all things as we doe.

FVLK. 6. A childiſh folly. As though we were enemies to good and godly foundations, becauſe wee miſlike idolatrous and ſuperſtitious foundations. The Hebrew word which ſignifyeth to give, according to the circumſtances of this place, may well bee tranſlated to found, becauſe the text ſpeaketh of a gift, of perpetuity, intended by thoſe wicked Kings. That Chemarim were the Prieſts of Baal, the ſtorie doeth declare, although they had that name of their blacke garments, which they did weare ſuperſtitiouſly, as your blacke Monkes doe; or if you doubt whether Baal had Sacerdotes, ſacrificing Prieſts, you may reade, 4. Reg. 11. verſ. 18. where Mathan, Baals Prieſt, was killed before his Altar. And if the Hebrew word ſignify all thoſe, that miniſtred in the Temples of falſe Gods, your vulgar Latine Tranſlatour, by your owne judgement, hath erred in tranſlating it Aruſpices, which is a kinde of Southſayers.

MART. 7. Againe, Silver ſhrines for Diana, Act. 19. verſ. 24. Becauſe of the ſhrines and tabernacles made to the image of our bleſſed Lady: the Greeke word ſignifying, temples, and Beza ſaith, hee cannot ſee how it may ſignify ſhrines.

Shrines.

FVLK. 7. The word in that place is taken neither for ſhrines, nor temples, but for pieces of coyne, in which was ſtriken the ſimilitude of Dianaes temple, indeed ſuch a thing as your ſhrines and tabernacles are, or rather ſuch as your brooches, and leaden coynes are, which are uſed at your ſolemne Pilgrimages, and idolatrous feſtivities, ſuch as I have ſeene a number at Amiens in France, prepared on Saint Iohn Baptiſts Eve, having the print of Saint Iohns head in a platter on them, and I know not what beſide. But of this place, I have ſpoken before, Chap. 1. ſect. 16.

MART. 8. Againe, As I paſſed by, and beheld your devotions I found an Altar, Act. 17. verſ. 23. So they call the ſuperſtition of the Athenians toward their falſe Gods, becauſe of Catholike peoples devotions toward the true God, his Church, Altars, Saints, &c. the Greeke word ſignifying the things that are worſhipped (as 2 Theſſal. 2. verſ. 4. and Sap. 15. verſ. 17.) not the manner of worſhipping.

Devotions

FVLK. 8. Of this alſo I have ſpoken in the place above mentioned, the word may ſignify the exerciſe of their relligion. And ſeeing Saint Paul accounteth the Altar, which hee found dedicated to the unknowne God, among their σεβάσματα, it ſeemeth hee taketh the word more generally, then to ſignify their Gods. For the Altar was not worſhipped as God, but dedicated to the unknowne God. Againe, what folly is it to thinke, our Tranſlatours had reſpect to your Popiſh devotions, by the name of devotion ſo applyed to diſcredit them; when the tearme of devotion is indifferent as the tearme of religion, either to true or falſe devotion, and religion?

Mart. 9. Againe, The Iewes had agreed, that if any man did confeſſe that he was Chriſt, he ſhould be excommunicate, Ioh. 9. verſ. 22. And Ieſus heard that they had excommunicated him, verſ. 35. to make the Iewes doing againſt them that confeſſed Chriſt, ſound like to the Catholike Churches doing againſt Heretikes in excommunicating them, and ſo to diſgrace the Prieſts power of excommunication, whereas the Iewes had no ſuch ſpirituall excommunication, but (as the Greeke muſt needes onely ſignify) they did, put them out of the Synagogue, and ſo they ſhould have tranſlated, the Greeke word including the very name of Synagogue. But they, as though the Church of Chriſt, and the Synagogue of the Iewes were all one, ſo tranſlate, excommunicating, and putting out of the Synagogue, as all one.

Fulk. 9. The like diſcipline to the Churches excommunication, had the Iewes in excluding men from their Synagogues or aſſemblies, and therefore of the ſimilitude the one hath to the other, in the thing, as well as in the end, our Tranſlatours have uſed the word of excommunicating in this place, and yet not excommunicating alone, for they all adde out of the Synagogue, to make it more plaine, which you doe fraudulently ſuppreſſe. But how vaine a thing it is, that wee ſhould have any purpoſe againſt the diſcipline of excommunication, all the world may ſee, when wee practiſe it our ſelves, and teach, that it is neceſſary to be perpetuall in the Church, againſt them that hold it was but temporall. And what wee are to eſteeme of the excommunication of heretikes, both out of this place, and diverſe other, wee may be ſufficiently inſtructed.

Mart. 10. I omit here as ſpoken before, that they call an Idol, the Queene of heaven, becauſe wee call our Lady by that title: ſo to make both ſeeme like. Alſo, that they ſay Bels altar thrice, for Bels table, to diſgrace altars: and that for Idols, they ſay images, in deſpite of the Churches images: that they ſay tradition duely in the ill part, yea ſometime when it is not in the Greeke, to make traditions odious, and ſuch like. Thus by ſimilitude, and like ſound of wordes they beguile the poore people, not onely in their falſe expoſitions concerning Iudaicall faſts, meates, obſervation of dayes, (as is elſe where ſhewed) but alſo in their tranſlations. So doeth Calvins new Teſtament in French, for, Nolite vocari Rabbi, tranſlate, Be not called noſtre maiſtre, or Magiſter noſter; in deriſion and diſgrace of this title or calling, which is peculiar to Doctors of Divinity in the Catholike Univerſities beyond the ſeas: even as Wicliffe their grand-father did upon the ſame words condemne ſuch degrees in Univerſities. But their Rabbines can tell them that Rabbi ſignifyeth, Magiſter, and not, Magiſter noſter. And Saint Iohn telleth them ſo chap. 1. v. 38. and chap. 3. verſ. 2. and chap. 20. v. 16. and yet it pleaſeth them to tranſlate otherwiſe and to abuſe Chriſts owne ſacred words againſt Catholike Doctors and ſchooles: not conſidering that as Chriſt forbad them to bee called Rabbi, ſo he forbad them the name of father and fathers, and yet I trow they will not ſcoffe at this name either in their owne fathers: or in themſelves ſo called of their children: though irreligious men, according to their hereticall humour, they ſcoffe alſo at this name, as they doe at the other in Doctours.

Altars.

Images.
Traditions.

Math. 23.

Fulk. 10. And I omit here, as anſwered before, the Queene of Heaven, Altars, Images, and Traditions. But now as though wee had any thing to doe therewith, wee are charged with Calvines new Teſtament in French, which tranſlateth Math. 23. Nolite vocari Rabbi, be not called Noſtre maiſtre, or Magiſter noſter. I ſuppoſe it is not credible, that any man would tranſlate, Rabbi, Noſtre maiſtre, or Magiſter noſter. Specially ſeeing it is made a great difference among dunſticall Doctours, betweene Noſter magiſter, and Magiſter noſter, as alſo it is a like ieaſt betweene Noſter magiſtrande, and Noſtrande magiſter. Wherefore, except I ſee the booke of Calvines tranſlation, I muſt thinke you feigne. For I have two new Teſtaments printed at Geneva, the one 1555. the other 1559. and in both them Rabbi is tranſlated conſonantly, Maiſtre, and not Noſtre maiſtre, or Magiſter noſter. That the text may bee well applyed againſt your pompous titular Doctors, that deſire to bee called Noſtre maiſtre, as alſo that which followeth againſt your Iebuſites, that muſt bee called fathers, though they bee but young and light perſons, I will not deny. And yet I thinke the titles of Doctour, and Maſter, in the Univerſities, and of fathers, aſcribed to any auncient and grave perſonage, in reſpect of civility, and not of ſuperſtition, may bee well uſed without tranſgreſſion of our Saviour Christs commandement, Mathew 23.

Mart. 11. Contrariwiſe as they are diligent to put ſome wordes odiouſly where they ſhould not, ſo they are as circumſpect not to put other words and termes, where they ſhould. In their firſt Bible, (printed againe, Anno 1562.) not once the name of Church: in the ſame, for charity, love: for altar, temple: for heretike, an author of ſects: and for hereſie ſect: becauſe in thoſe beginnings all theſe words ſounded exceedingly againſt them. The Church they had then forſaken, Chriſtian charity they they had broken by ſchiſme, Altars they digged downe, hereſie and heretike they knew in their conſcience were like in the peoples eares to agree unto them, rather then to the old Catholike faith and profeſſors of the ſame. Againe, in all their Bibles indifferently, both former and latter, they had rather ſay, righteous, then juſt; righteouſneſſe, then juſtice; gift, then grace; ſpecially in the Sacrament of holy Orders; ſecret, rather then myſtery, ſpecially in matrimony; diſſention, rather then ſchiſme: and theſe wordes not at all, Prieſt, (to wit, of the new Teſtament) Sacrament, Catholike, hymnes, confeſſion, penance, juſtifications, and traditions, in the good part; but in ſtead thereof, Elders, ſecret, Generall, prayſes, acknowledging, amendment of life, ordinances, inſtructions: and which is ſomewhat worſe, carcaſe, for ſoule, and grave, for hell. Wee may ſay unto you, as Demoſthenes ſaid to Æſchines, τί ταῦτα; ῥήματα ἢ θαύματα; What are theſe? wordes or wonders? Certainely they are wonders, and very wonderfull in Catholike mens eares, and whether it bee ſincere, and not hereticall dealing, I appeale to the wiſe and indifferent Reader of any ſort.

Demoſt. de coron.

Fulk. 11. For all the tearmes quarrelled at in this ſection, wee have anſwered before, except perhaps, for the tearme of love, which is uſed in ſtead of charity, expreſſing what charity is indeed, and not as it is commonly taken of the common people, for an effect of charity, when they call almes, charity. No man that patiently could abide the people to bee inſtructed, would cavill at the explication of the word charity, by love, when in the Engliſh tongue, the word charity of the common people is either not underſtood, or taken for another thing then the Latine word charitas doeth ſignify. As for the wonders of words that Demoſthenes ſpake of, I know not where more properly they ſhall bee found, then in your affected novelties of tearmes, ſuch as neither Engliſh nor Chriſtian eares ever heard in the Engliſh tongue, Scandall, prepuce, neophyte, depoſitum, gratis, paraſceve, paraclete, exinanite, repropitiate, and an hundred ſuch like inkhorne tearmes. Yea, I would gladly know, why among ſo many Greekiſh and Latine-like tearmes, Gazophylacium is not a Gazophylace, but a treaſury; encænia, the dedication, and not the encænes, as well as Paſche, Pentecoſt, azymes paraſceue: belike the Church muſt have treaſure, and the feaſt of dedication muſt not lie hid in a new found tearme. Why ſhould Adventus be ſometime the comming, and ſometime the advent, except it were for the ſound of the time of advent, before the feaſt of the Nativity of Chriſt? Why ſhould Latine words be tranſlated in Greekiſh tearmes? as ſciſſuras into ſchiſmes, æmulatores, zelators, and ſuch like. Theſe and ſuch other, be wonders of words, that wiſe men can give no good reaſon why they ſhould be uſed.

MARTIN.

Chap. XXII.

Other faults, Iudaicall, prophane, meere vanities, follies, and novelties.

NOw leaving matters of controverſy, let us talke a little with you familiarly, and learne of you the reaſon of other poynts in your Tranſlation, which unto us ſeeme faults, and ſavour not of that ſpirit which ſhould bee in Chriſtian Catholike Tranſlatours.

FVLKE.

OVR tranſlations, as neere as the Tranſlatours could ſee the trueth, are even and juſt with the originall text, the ſenſe whereof, if it doe not alwayes containe ſuch excellent matter, as the Septuaginta, or vulgar Latine tranſlation have ſuppoſed, there is no cauſe why our Tranſlatours ſhould bee blamed, whoſe office is to regard what the originall trueth is, and not to draw it for any reſpect to another meaning then the ſpirit of God expreſſeth in thoſe words.

Mart. 2. Firſt, you are ſo prophane, that you ſay, The ballad of ballads of Salomon, ſo tearming that divine booke, Canticum Canticorum, containing the high myſtery of Chriſt and his Church; as if it were a ballad of love betweene Salomon and his Concubine, as Caſtaleo wantonly tranſlateth it. But you ſay more prophanely thus, Wee have conceived, wee have borne in payne, as

as though wee ſhould have brought forth wind. I am aſhamed to tell the literall commentary of this your tranſlation. Why might you not have ſaid, Wee have conceived, and as it were travelled to bring forth, and have brought forth the ſpirit? Is there any thing in the Hebrew, to hinder you thus farre? Why would you ſay wind, rather then ſpirit, knowing that the Septuaginta in Greeke, and the auncient Fathers, and Saint Hierome himſelfe, who tranſlateth according to the Hebrew, yet for ſenſe of the place, all expound it both according to Hebrew and Greeke, of the ſpirit of God, which is firſt conceived in us, and beginneth by feare, which the Scripture calleth, the beginning of wiſedome; inſomuch, that in the Greeke there are theſe goodly wordes, famous in all antiquity: Through the feare of thee, O Lord, wee conceived, and have travelled with paine, and have brought forth the ſpirit of thy ſalvation, which thou haſt made upon the earth. Which doeth excellently ſet before our eyes the degrees of a faithfull mans increaſe, and proceeding in the ſpirit of God, which beginneth by the feare of his judgements, and is a good feare, though ſervile, and not ſufficient: and it may bee, that you condemning with Luther this ſervile feare, as evill and hurtfull, meane alſo ſome ſuch thing by your tranſlation. But indeede the place may bee underſtood of the other feare alſo, which hath his degrees more or leſſe.

Ambr. lib. 2. de interpel. c. 4. Chryſ. in Pſ. 7. prope finem. See S Hierome upon this place

FVLK. 2. I marvell why this word ballet ſhould ſeeme to you to bee prophane, more then this word ſong, or canticle. Songs and canticles bee many as ill as any ballads. But the other matter is of great weight, Eſay, 26. where for the ſpirit wee tranſlate winde, which is ſuch an abſurdity, that you are aſhamed to tell the literall commentary of this our tranſlation. Belike you are afrayd of ſuch a fault as Saint Lambert in your Legend is reported to have committed. But except you had a prophane minde, you would never have imagined any ſuch matter thereof, which you are aſhamed to utter. The circumſtance of the place requireth, that wee ſhould tranſlate the word in this place for winde, and not the ſpirit: for the Prophets purpoſe was to ſhew, that people were in deſperate caſe, without hope of helpe, till God did rayſe them even as it were from death. The ſimilitude is taken of a travelling woman, whoſe wombe, if it be full of winde, ſhe is in great torments. But you aske us whether there bee any thing in the Hebrew, that hindreth us to ſay, wee have conceived, and as it were travelled, and have brought forth the ſpirit. Yea verily, the context of the Hebrew wordes will not beare that tranſlation, for the word chemo, quaſi, as it were, is placed before the word ialadhenu, which ſignifyeth bringing forth, and not before chalnu, which ſignifyeth travelling in payne. Therefore the text is word for word as wee have tranſlated it. And the word following, Wee could make no helpe to the land, or there was no helpe in the earth, declareth a continuance of their miſery, and cannot agree with that ſenſe which you would have, becauſe they which have received the holy Ghoſt, have found helpe, and are able to helpe. Beſide that, it is a monſtrous phraſe, that the Godly ſhould ſay, they have conceived, travelled, and brought foorth the holy Ghoſt, by which they are borne againe to bee the children of God, rather then that they have conceived or brought forth Gods ſpirit. And therefore howſoever Hierome like your interpretation, it agreeth neither with the wordes of the Hebrew, nor with the circumſtance of the place, and it is ſcarce tollerable to make ſuch a conception and generation of Gods ſpirit in men. That ſervile feare is to bee reprooued in the children of God, which ſhould feare him as ſonnes, and not as ſlaves, wee are content to acknowledge with Luther. But what place is this for us to meane any thing againſt ſervile feare, when there is no mention of feare in the Hebrew text? and the Greeke hath ſuch licentious additions, that Hierome is faine to ſtrike them through with a ſpit, and note them to bee wiped out.

MART. 3. But to ſay, we have brought forth winde, can admit no ſuch interpretation: but even as if a meere Iew ſhould tranſlate or underſtand it, who hath no ſenſe of Gods ſpirit, ſo have you excluded the true ſenſe which concerneth the holy Ghoſt, and not the cold tearme of winde, and whatſoever naked interpretation thereof. And it is your faſhion in all ſuch caſes, where the richer ſenſe is of Gods holy ſpirit, there to tranſlate winde, as Pſalme, 147. verſe 18. as you number the Pſalmes.

FVLK. 3. Wee muſt ſay in Engliſh, as the Prophet hath ſaid before us in Hebrew, and ſo truely tranſlate the Scripture, that never a Iew in the world may have juſt cauſe to accuſe our falſehood or partiality. And how cold ſoever the tearme of winde ſeeme to your crooked minde, and how naked ſoever the interpretation bee thought of your cloaked hypocriſy, it is the word of the everliving God, and the true ſenſe thereof, as it is expreſſed by the Prophet. Likewiſe Pſalm. 147. the Prophet ſheweth who doeth execute the commaundement of God, in thawing and diſſolving the froſt, namely, the winde, which being ſoutherly, wee ſee the effect of it: what neede wee here to cauſe the holy Ghoſt to be ſent to melt the ice?

And

MART. 4. And it is not unlike to this, that you will not tranſlate for the Angels honour that carried Abacuc, He ſet him into Babylon, over the lake, by the force of his ſpirit; but thus, through a mighty winde, ſo attributing it to the winde, not to the Angels power, and omitting cleane the Greeke pronoune αὐτῦ, his, which ſheweth evidently, that it was the Angels ſpirit, force, and power.

FVLK. 4. That wee haue tranſlated in the ſtorie of Abacuks taking up, that it was through a mighty winde, it hath good probabilitie by the circumſtance of the place: and the ſignification of ῥοῖζος, which is a force with a noiſe, is more apt to the winde, than to the ſpirit. And in other writers, πνευμάτων ῥοῖζος, is taken for the vehement noiſe of windes. But the pronoune, I confeſſe, ſhould not haue beene omitted, and then it may bee referred either to the winde, or ſpirit of God, whoſe Angell this is ſaid to be, rather than to the Angell: for the Angell being nothing but a ſpirit, it is not ſo convenient to ſay, by his ſpirit, as by his owne force: againe, the pronoune is not αὐτῦ, but αὑτῦ, whereof you made a great difference, as indeed there is difference in another caſe.

MART. 5. Againe, where the Prophets ſpeake moſt manifeſtly of Chriſt, there you tranſlate cleane another thing: as Eſa. 30. v. 20. when Saint Hierome tranſlateth thus, and the Church hath alwayes read accordingly, Non faciet avolare a te ultra Doctorem tuum: & erunt oculi tui videntes præceptorem tuum: that is, And (our Lord) ſhall not cauſe thy Doctors to flie from thee any more: and thine eyes ſhall ſee thy maſter: which is all one in effect with that which Chriſt ſaith, I will bee with you unto the end of the word: there you tranſlate thus, Thy raine ſhall bee no more kept backe, but thine eyes ſhall ſee thy raine. So likewiſe Ioel. 2. v. 23. where the holy Church readeth, Reioyce you children of Sion in the Lord your God, becauſe hee hath given you the Doctor of iuſtice; there you tranſlate, the raine of righteouſneſſe. Doth the Hebrew word force you to this? You know that it ſignifieth a Teacher or Maſter. And therefore the Iewes themſelues, partly underſtand it of Eſdras, partly of Chriſts Divinity. Why are you more profane (I will not ſay more Iudaicall) than the Iewes themſelues? Why might not Saint Hierome a Chriſtian Doctor, and lacking no skill in the Hebrew, (as you well know) ſatisfie you, who maketh no doubt but the Hebrew in theſe places is Doctor, Maſter, Teacher? Who alſo (in Pſal. 84. 7. tranſlateth thus, With bleſſings ſhall the Doctor be arayed, meaning Chriſt. Where you with the latter Rabbines, the enemies of Chriſt, tranſlate, The raine covereth the pooles. What cold ſtuffe is this, in reſpect of that other tranſlation, ſo cleerely pointing to Chriſt our Maſter and Doctor?

FVLK. 5. I haue told you in the beginning of this Chapter, wee muſt not, neither is it ſafe for the ſtrengthening of our faith, to draw places of Scripture unto Chriſt, which by the holy Ghoſt had another meaning: ſo ſhall the Iewes laugh us to ſcorne, and the faith of the ignorant, which is grounded upon ſuch tranſlation, if it ſhall bee opened unto them, that it is untrue, ſhall bee mightily ſhaken, and brought in doubt of all other places of Scripture, applied to the like end. God bee thanked, there bee plaine and evident teſtimonies of Chriſt in the Scripture, which no malice of Iewiſh or Heatheniſh enemies can wreſt out of our hands, which are ſufficient for inſtruction, and confirmation of our faith. Now concerning thoſe places, where you would haue מורה to ſignifie a Doctor, Teacher, or Maſter; firſt, it ſeemeth you haue your Hebrew but from hand to mouth: for Chapter 3. ſect. 25. whereas wee tranſlate, moreh ſhaker, a teacher of lies, Abacuk 2. you ſay, we tranſlate another thing, without any neceſſary pretence of Hebrew, or Greeke: and here you would haue it of the neceſſitie of the Hebrew, that wee ſhould tranſlate, a Teacher: yet Pagnine in the roote ירח, whereunto you referre us, ſaith, that Eſay 30. verſe 20. this word is taken either for raine, or for a Teacher, Ioel the ſecond; hee maketh no queſtion, but it ſignifieth raine, ſaving that ſome thinke it to bee the name of a place. In the third place, Pſalme 84. after hee hath told you how Hierome tranſlateth it, hee telleth you how R. David, and other doe tranſlate it for raine, as wee doe: and in all theſe places, the ſenſe is more proper for raine, than for a Teacher, ſaving that in Eſay perhaps it may ſignifie more aptly a Teacher, and ſo the Geneva tranſlation noteth it. In Ioel, where the Prophet before had threatned famine through drought, nothing is ſo convenient to bee underſtood, as ſeaſonable raine. In the Pſalme 84. where the Prophet commendeth the courage of the people that travelled to Ieruſalem, through the dry deſerts, and places that wanted water, it is moſt apt to underſtand, that God filleth their pits with raine, for their comfort. This, how cold ſoever it is counted of you, that care not whereon faith ſhould bee grounded, yet it is an hundred times more comfortable to a godly conſcience, that deſireth to bee eſtabliſhed in truth, than any violent wreſting of the Scripture, from the true and naturall ſenſe, to any other interpretation, how good in ſhew ſoever it bee.

MART. 6. And againe, where S, Hierome tranſlateth, and the Church readeth, and all the Fathers in- terpret and expound accordingly, There ſhall bee faith in thy times; to expreſſe the marvellous faith that ſhall be then, in the firſt Chriſtians ſpecially, even unto death, and in all the reſt concerning the hidden myſteries of the new Teſtament; there you tranſlate, There ſhall bee ſtabilitie of thy times. The Prophet ioyneth together there, iudgement, iuſtice, faith, wiſedome, knowledge, the feare of our Lord: you for a little ambiguitie of the Hebrew word, turne faith into ſtabilitie. Eſa.53.

FVLK. 6. The word ſtabilitie, Eſay 33. v.6. excludeth not faith, but ſheweth wherein faith is grounded. And therefore this is, as all the reſt, a fond quarrell, without any good ground at all. Seeing our tranſlation may ſtand with the truth of the words, and of the matter, and comprehendeth as much as you would haue, and more alſo. Yea it ſheweth that faith is ſetled upon ſtabilitie, and ſtedfaſtneſſe of truth, which ſhall flouriſh in the time of Chriſt.

MART. 7. If I ſhould burden you with tranſlating thus alſo concerning Chriſt, Ceaſe from the man whoſe breath is in his noſtrils: for wherein is hee to be eſteemed? you would ſay I did you wrong, becauſe it is ſo pointed now in the Hebrew: whereas you know very well by S. Hieromes commentarie upon that place, that this is the Iewes pointing or reading of the word, againſt the honour of Chriſt; the true reading and tranſlation being as he interpreteth it, for he is reputed high: and therefore beware of him. Otherwiſe (as S. Hierome ſaith) what a conſequence were this, or who would commend any man thus, Take heed yee offend not him, who is nothing eſteemed? Yet that is your tranſlation. Neither doth the Greeke helpe you, which (if the accent be truely put) is thus, becauſe hee is reputed for ſome body, or ſome thing: as S. Paul ſpeaketh of the chiefe Apoſtles, and it is our phraſe in the commendation of a man. Eſa.2. במה [illegible] Gal.2.v.6.

FVLK. 7. So long as you acknowledge wee haue tranſlated truely according to the Hebrew text that wee reade, there is no reaſon that you ſhould burden us with falſe interpretation. The Septuaginta, as Hierome confeſſeth, did reade as wee doe, and plaine it is, not onely by the vowels, but alſo by the context, that ſo it muſt be read: for the Prophet diſſwadeth the people from putting affiance in any mortall man, for God will bring downe the pride of all ſuch as they truſt moſt in, as it followeth in the next chapter, whereof this verſe ſhould bee the beginning. The diſmembring whereof, by the ill diviſion of the chapter, deceived Hierome, to thinke the Prophet ſpake of Chriſt, when hee ſpake of a proud man, whoſe breath was in his noſtrils, and therefore hee was of no ſtrength: even as David uſeth the ſame argument, Pſal. 146. for the purpoſe. The Chaldee Paraphraſe alſo did reade even as the Septuaginta.

MART. 8. The like excuſe you would haue by alleadging the Hebrew vowels, if you were told, that you much obſcure a notable ſaying of the Prophet concerning Chriſt, or rather the ſpeech of Chriſt himſelfe by his Prophet, ſaying, I haue ſpoken by the Prophets, and I haue multiplied viſion, and in the hand of the Prophets (that is, by the Prophets) haue I beene reſembled. Which latter words doe exceedingly expreſſe, that all the Prophets ſpake of Chriſt, as our Saviour himſelfe declareth, beginning from Moſes and all the Prophets to interpret unto the two Diſciples, the things that concerned him: and as Saint Peter ſaith in theſe words, All the Prophets from Samuel, and that ſpake after him, did tell of theſe dayes. This prophecie then being ſo conſonant to theſe ſpeeches of the new Teſtament, the Greeke alſo being word for word ſo; the Hebrew by changing one little pricke, (which the latter Iewes haue added at their owne pleaſure) being fully ſo as wee reade with the Catholike Church; why pretend you the Iewes authoritie to maintaine another leſſe Chriſtian tranſlation, which is thus, I uſe ſimilitudes by the miniſterie of the Prophets, as though there were nothing there concerning Chriſt, or the ſecond perſon peculiarly? Oſee.12.10. Luk.24.v.27. Acts 3. ἐν χερσὶ προφητῶν ὡμοιώθην. אדמה אדמה

FVLK. 8. Seeing our Saviour Chriſt hath promiſed, that never a pricke of the Law ſhall periſh, we may underſtand the ſame alſo of the Prophets, who haue not received the vowels of the latter Iewes, but even of the Prophets themſelues, howſoever that heatheniſh opinion pleaſeth you and other Papiſts.

MART. 9. This will alſo perhaps alleadge not only the latter Iewes, but alſo ſome latter Catholike men, that ſo tranſlate the Hebrew. But the difference betweene them and you is, that they with reverence and preferment alwayes of S. Hieromes, and the Churches ancient tranſlation, tell us how it is now in the Hebrew: you with derogation and diſanulling the ſame altogether, ſet downe your owne, as the onely true interpretation according to the Hebrew; avouching the Hebrew that now is, and as now it is printed, to be the only authenticall truth of the old Teſtament. Where you can never anſwer us, how that in the Pſalme 22. As a Lion my hand and my feet, (as now it is in the Hebrew) can be the true and old authenticall Hebrew, which none of the Fathers knew, the ancient Rabbines condemne as a corruption, your ſelues tranſlate it not, but after the old accuſtomed reading, They haue pierced my hands and my feet. Which is a notable prophecie of our Saviours kinde and manner of paſſion, being crucifyed on the Croſſe. Onely the latter Iewes The Hebrew text is no certaine rule to interpret by. כארי

and ſuch Heretikes, as thinke hee died upon a gallowes or gibbet, and not upon the Croſſe; they like this Hebrew text well, and ſtand upon it, as you doe upon all without exception, and yet when it commeth to certaine particulars, you are compelled to forſake it, as in certaine other places, for example.

FVLK. 9. Iſidorus Clarius, retaining the word, aſſimulatus ſum, doth thus expound it, in his note: Hoc eſt voluntatem meam ſimilitudinibus & varijs locutionis generibus eloquutus ſum. That is, I haue uttered my will by ſimilitudes and divers kindes of ſpeech: you ſee therefore, how you are deceived in advouching this matter of your owne pſeudocatholikes, when this Biſhop, not departing from your reading, yet expoundeth this text according to the Hebrew, and was allowed in ſo doing, by the Deputies of the Councell of Trent, whoſe cenſure was obſerved in printing this Bible. Where you repeate yet once againe, that wee can never anſwer that of a Lyon, Pſal. 22. you ſhew your skill and great reading. I haue anſwered before in the preface. Sect. 44. that wee forſake the Hebrew in this, or in any other, it is utterly falſe, for wee follow no text, but the Hebrew, ſo neere as wee can underſtand it, and expreſſe it.

MART. 10. Where the Hebrew ſaith, Achaz king of Iſrael, 2 Paralip. 28. v. 19. which is not true, you are compelled to tranſlate, Achaz King of Iuda, as the truth is, and as it is in the Greeke and the vulgar Latine: yet * ſome of your Bibles follow the falſhood of the Hebrew. Faults in the Hebrew text. *Bib.1579.

FVLK. 10. While you take upon you, to diſcover faults in the Hebrew text, you bring three examples, which if they were all faults, containe no matter of doctrine, whereby we may be deceived in any article of faith. The firſt is, that Achaz, 2 Chron. 28. v. 19. is called King of Iſrael, whereas he was King only of Iuda. But I pray you ſir, was not Iuda part of Iſrael? why might he not then bee called a King, or one of the Kings of Iſrael? The Queene of England may well be called Regina Britanniæ, although there bee a King in Scotland. Although there may be an other cauſe why Achaz is called King of Iſrael, becauſe in his dayes when Pekah the ſonne of Remaliah was ſlaine, the kingdome of Iſrael, that had continued from Ieroboams time untill then, was now in a manner decayed. For Hoſea was of ſmall power, and made tributary to the King of Aſſyria, and peradventure alſo in the time of Achaz was kept in priſon: as it is certaine hee was empriſoned, 2 Reg. 17. v.4. ſo that, when there was none other King of Iſrael to account of, Achaz might be called King of Iſrael, as alſo in the ſame Chapter the laſt verſe, though hee were buried at Ieruſalem, and in the Citie of David, it is ſaid, that he was not laid in the ſepulchres of the Kings of Iſrael: where your vulgar Latine text hath, Iſrael, and not Iudah.

MART. 11. Likewiſe, where the Hebrew ſaith, Zedechias his brother, meaning the brother of Ioachim, you tranſlate, Zedechias his fathers brother, as indeede the truth is, according to the Greeke, and to the Scripture, 4 Reg. 24. v. 19. and therefore your Bible which followeth the Hebrew here alſo, tranſlating, his brother, yet in the margent putteth downe as more true, Uncle. Bib.1579.

FVLK. 11. This argueth no fault in the Hebrew text, but groſſe ignorance of the Hebrew tongue in you, which know not, that ach, ſignifieth, not onely a brother, but alſo, any other kinſman, as the Uncle, couſins, and ſuch like, as, Gen. 13. Abraham and Lot, are called brethren, yet was Abraham Lots Uncle, Deut. 25. when brethren ſhall dwell together, the law of marrying the brothers wife, that died without iſſue, there the word brethren pertaineth to kinſmen farre off, as appeareth in the ſtory of Ruth, cap. 3. & 4. finally, it is a thing ſo commonly knowen to them, which haue but a little ſmacke in the Hebrew tongue, that I will ſpend no time about it. And even your vulgar tranſlation in ſome ancient copies, hath fratrem, and not patruum, as you may ſee in the Bible printed by Plantin, 1567. אח

MART. 12. Likewiſe in an other place, the Hebrew is ſo out of frame, that ſome of your Bibles ſay, hee begate Azuba of his wife Azuba. And other ſome tranſlate, Hee begat Ierioth of his wife Azuba: the Hebrew being thus: he begat Azuba his wife and Ierioth, which, neither you, nor any man elſe can eaſily tell what to make of. Thus you ſee how eaſie it were (if a man would multiply ſuch examples) to ſhew by your owne teſtimonies the corruption of the Hebrew, and that your ſelues doe not, nor dare not exactly follow it, as of the Greeke text of the new Teſtament alſo is declared elſewhere. In the preface of the new Teſtament.

FVLK. 12. The third fault you finde, is 1 Chron. 2. v. 18. where the Interpreters are deceived; while they take eth, for a ſigne of the accuſatiue caſe, which in that place, as in divers other, is taken for a prepoſition of, or by, as Gen. 4. Eue ſaith, I haue obtained a ſonne eth Iehouah, of the Lord, or by the Lords gift, &c. Gen. 44. they were gone out eth haeir, of, or from the Citie. So here the true tranſlation of this verſe in queſtion, is this, Caleb the ſonne Chetzron, begate of Azuba, his wife, and of Ierioth: that is, hee had children by theſe two women, Azuba his wife, and Ierioth, which was his Concubine, ſo they את את יהוה את העיר called them, that were lawfull wiues, in reſpect of matrimonie, but yet had not the honour of wiues, but being of baſe condition before they were married, ſo continued: by this Ieriboth hee had thoſe three ſonnes, that in this verſe are named, his children by Azuba are named afterward, verſe 42. Wherefore here is no fault in the Hebrew, but in your vulgar tranſlator, which maketh Ieriboth the ſonne of Azuba, and addeth to the text, becauſe hee underſtood it not. It is falſe therefore that you ſay, we dare not follow the Hebrew, becauſe ſome tranſlator, by overſight, hath not attained to the right underſtanding thereof: as alſo, that wee dare not exactly follow the Greeke of the new Teſtament, which we deſire to follow as exactly as we can.

MART. 13. But it is greater marvell, why you follow not the Hebrew in other places alſo, where is no corruption. You proteſt to tranſlate it according to the points or vowels that now it hath, and that you call the Hebrew veritie. Tell me then I beſeech you, why doe you in all your Bibles tranſlate this, O Virgin, daughter of Sion, hee hath deſpiſed thee, and laughed thee to ſcorne: O daughter of Hieruſalem, hee hath ſhaken his head at thee. In the Hebrew, Greeke, Saint Hieromes tranſlation and commentarie, it is cleane contrary, The virgin daughter of Sion, hath deſpiſed thee (O Aſſur) the daughter of Hieruſalem hath ſhaken her head at thee. All are the fœminine gender, and ſpoken of Sion literally, and of the Church ſpiritually triumphing over Aſſur, and all her enemies: you tranſlate all as of the maſculine gender, and apply it to Aſſur, inſulting againſt Hieruſalem, &c. I cannot conceiue what this tranſlation meaneth, and I would gladly know the reaſon, and I would haue thought it ſome groſſe overſight, but that I find it ſo in all your Engliſh Bibles, and not only in this place of Eſay, but alſo in the bookes of the Kings, 4 Reg. 19. *where the ſame words are repeated. And it is no leſſe marvell unto us, that know not the reaſon of your doings, why you haue * left out* Alleluia nine times in the ſixe laſt Pſalmes, being in the Hebrew nine times more than in your tranſlation: ſpecially when you know that it is the ancient and ioyfull ſong of the Primitiue Church. See the new Engliſh Teſtament, Annot. Apoc. 19.

FVLK. 13. It ſeemeth that our tranſlators followed too much the iudgement of the Tigurine tranſlator, who, what reaſon mooved him ſo to tranſlate, I know not, it ſeemeth they weighed not well the Hebrew in that place, but ſuch is mans frailtie, that hee is apt and eaſie to bee deceived, if hee be not very vigilant, and attentiue in thoſe caſes. And the example of one mans errour, that is of credit, ſoone draweth other men into the ſame, by countenance of his authoritie. Neverthleſſe two of our tranſlations, the Biſhops Bible, and Coverdales Bible, tranſlate the very ſame words according to the Hebrew, 2 Reg. 19. referring the ſaying againſt Senacherib deſpiſed, and laughed to ſcorne by Ieruſalem. And therefore you ſay, untruely, that it is in all our Engliſh Bibles, 4 Reg. 19. Where you marvaile, why we haue left out Alleluia nine times in the ſix laſt Pſalmes, I marvell as much, why you ſhould ſo ſay: for in the Biſhops Bible which I haue, and which you call Bib. 1577. It is ten times in the fiue laſt Pſalmes, and ten times there is in the tranſlation, Praiſe yee the Lord. In the 145. it is not in the Hebrew. But in the other fiue Pſalmes, it is both in the beginning, and in the end of every one of them.

MART. 14. Againe, you tranſlate thus: Many which had ſeene the firſt houſe, when the foundation of this houſe was laid before their eyes, wept, &c. Looke well to your Hebrew, and you ſhall finde it according both to the Greeke and the Latine, thus: Many which had ſeene the firſt houſe in the foundation thereof, (that is, yet ſtanding upon the foundation, not deſtroyed) and this temple before their eyes, wept. You imagined that it ſhould be meant, they ſaw Salomons temple, when it was firſt founded, which becauſe it was unpoſſible, therefore you tranſlated otherwiſe than is in the Hebrew, Greeke, and Latine. But yet in ſome of your Bibles, you ſhould haue conſidered the matter better, and tranſlated accordingly.

FVLK. 14. The Hebrew is indifferent, Ezra, 3. to either of both tranſlations, and the ſenſe is all one, whether beiaſedho be referred to the firſt houſe, named before, or to this houſe before their eyes, which followeth. And therefore your coniecture of our imagination, as in other places, is no more bold, than vaine.

FVLK. 15. The Geneua Bible hath according to the Hebrew, the mount of corruption, which was indeed the Mount Olivet, as is proved by 1 Reg. 11. v. 7. and 2 Sam. 15. v. 30. and of the fruitfulneſſe of oyle was called Miſchethith: but in this place, in deteſtation of the idolatrie, is called Maſchith, ſignifying corruption, as Bethel was called Bethaven, Oſee, 4. v. 15.

In Eſay 45. two of our tranſlations, haue according to the uſuall ſignification of the Hebrew word peliṭei, you that eſcaped of the people; but that the word alſo ſignifieth an abiect, you might haue learned by Pagnine, and ſo ceaſed to haue marvelled, why the Geneua Bible tranſlateth, you abiects of the Gentiles. As your owne vulgar tranſlation, Ier. 44. tranſlateth it, of them that fled, or fugitiues.

MART. 16. Howbeit in theſe leſſer things (though nothing in the Scripture is to be counted little) you might perhaps more freely haue taken your pleaſure, in following neither Hebrew, nor Greeke: but when it concerneth a matter no leſſe than uſurie, there by your falſe tranſlation to giue occaſion unto the Reader, to be an uſurer, is no ſmall fault, either againſt true religion, or againſt good manners. This you doe moſt evidently in your moſt authenticall tranſlations, ſaying thus: Thou ſhalt not hurt thy brother by uſury of money, nor by uſurie of corne, nor by uſurie of any thing that hee may bee hurt withall. What is this to ſay, but that uſurie is not here forbidden, unleſſe it hurt the partie that borroweth, which is ſo rooted in moſt mens hearts, that they thinke ſuch uſurie very lawfull, and daily offend mortally that way. Where Almighty God in this place of holy Scripture, hath not a word of hurting, or not hurting, (as may bee ſeene by the Geneua Bibles,) but ſaith ſimply thus: Thou ſhalt not lend to thy brother to uſurie, uſury of money, uſurie of meate, uſurie of any thing that is put to uſurie.

MART. 17. Marke the Hebrew, and the Greeke, and ſee, and be aſhamed, that you ſtraine and pervert it; to ſay for, Non fœnerabis fratri tuo, which is word for word in the Greeke and Hebrew, Thou ſhalt not hurt thy brother by uſury. If the Hebrew word in the uſe of holy Scripture, doe ſignifie, to hurt by uſurie, why doe you in the very next words following, in the ſelfe ſame Bibles tranſlate it thus, unto a ſtranger thou maiſt lend upon uſury, but not unto thy brother? Why ſaid you not, A ſtranger thou maiſt hurt with uſurie, but not thy brother? Is it not all one word and phraſe, here and before? And if you had ſo tranſlated it here alſo, the Iewes would haue thanked you, who by forcing the Hebrew word as you doe, thinke it very good to hurt any ſtranger, that is, any Chriſtian, by any uſury, be it never ſo great.

Ibid.v.20.

FVLK. 16. 17. You ſay well, that in the Scripture, nothing is to bee counted little, and therefore, even in theſe little things, wee haue endeavoured to follow the Hebrew, and haue ſo well followed it, that though you ſay much, yet you can proue little againſt us. But concerning this text of uſury, whereof you would make us great patrones, it is marvell that you cannot finde in your Dictionaries, that the verbe, naſhach, ſignifieth to bite, at leaſtwiſe you ſhould haue regarded, that your vulgar Latine Interpreter, Num. 21. tranſlateth it to ſtrike, or hurt, as they were, that were hurt, or bitten by the fiery Serpents. The conſent of all Hebritians alſo is, that neſhech, the name of uſury, is derived of biting, hurting, wherefore the Biſhops Bible, meaning to expreſſe, that all uſury is hurtfull, according to the etymologie of the word, rather than to defend, that any uſury is lawfull, other than ſuch as God himſelfe alloweth. And therefore it had beene well to haue tranſlated alſo in the next verſe, a ſtranger, maiſt thou bite, or hurt with uſury, howſoever the Iewes would take it, whoſe abhominable uſury, under pretence of that place, ſure I am, our tranſlators purpoſe was not to defend.

to bee imputed to the negligence of the Printer, or of the tranſlators, but not withſtanding the ſenſe is all one. In the fourth text alſo, there is no difference for the meaning, and ſome are of opinion, that ἐνεργεῖν, may bee taken paſſiuely, as δοκῶν, Beza in Marc. 6. v. 14. other tranſlations turne it actiuely. In the fift text, Act. 23. if for an horſe, they had ſaid horſes, it had beene no faulte, for it is not like they rode upon Aſſes, or Camels. The word ſignifieth beaſts, that are poſſeſſed, and of poſſeſſion they bee called κτήνη; but here it is certaine, beaſts meete for carriage of men are ſignified. In the ſixt, Ioan. 7. v. 23. I thinke the tranſlators were deceived, ſuppoſing that ἵνα μὴ might bee tranſlated, ſo that the Law of Moſes bee not broken, as perhaps it may: but hereof I will not determine, commonly Ἵνα ſignifieth to the end: yet is there no ungodly ſenſe contained in this tranſlation. The ſeventh, Mar. 8. v. 31. Is but a knot in a ruſh: for reproved in that place, ſignifieth nothing but refuſed, or reiected. Your vulgar Latine ſaith Reprobari, which is, plainely to be reproved, and 1 Pet. 2. The ſtone which the builders reproved, Reprobaverunt, refuſed. By reproved, they doe not meane reprehended, or rebuked, but utterly refuſed, and not accepted. The eight, Neophytus, a young ſcholler, as I haue ſhewed before is better Engliſhed, than a Neophyte, which is neither Greeke, Latine, nor Engliſh. The ninth, is corrected in two tranſlations, and the Geneua Bible telleth you, that for Cananite you may read zealous, ſo that wee are not beholding to you for this correction, as it ſeemeth you would haue us. Touching the tenth text, Heb. 2. both thoſe tranſlations that ſay: leaſt at any time wee ſhould let them ſlippe, haue this note in the margent, by which they declare they meane even as you would haue them ſay: leaſt like veſſels full of chappes wee leake, and run out on every part, for veſſels that doe runne out, doe let goe or let ſlip that liquor that is put into them.

The firſt Bible was not that you meane, but not much differing from it, neither was it done in haſt, but with as good conſideration, as God gaue for that time: neither was it printed theſe 22. yeeres, for ought I know, which you ſay is printed ſtill a freſh. In that Bible Herods ſervants, put for Herodians, was lacke of knowledge of what ſect the Herodians ſhould bee. Idiotas, Lay men, is no more fault, than, of the vulgar ſort, which you ſay. The ſhip for the Arke, is a ſmall fault, ſeeing that Arke into which Noah entred, was a ſhip, or in ſteede of a ſhippe. The wondring, for the tumult, is a popular terme: for ſo they call a great noyſe made by a multitude. The lampes are gone out, or are quenched, I know not what great difference may bee in it. His ſubſtance ὑπόστασιν, I know not where you meane, except it bee Marke 13. where Eraſmus noteth, that hee hath read in ſome copie, οὐσίαν, ſubſtance, which ſeemeth to agree aptly with the place. In Titus the firſt, the participle is of the meane voice, and therefore may ſignifie actiuely or paſſiuely. In Gal. the tranſpoſition, Sina before Agar, ſeemeth to bee the fault of the Printer, rather than of the tranſlator.

FVLK. 20. Some indeede are ſmall faults, ſome none at all. That you miſlike us not, for not tranſlating a few words, whoſe ſignification is unknowen, or elſe they cannot bee aptly expreſſed in the Engliſh tongue, it is of no equitie towards us, but that you might under that ſhadow, creepe away with ſo huge a multitude of words, which may as well bee tranſlated, as any in the Bible, and that in the new Teſtament, which is ſcarſe the ſixt part of the whole Bible. The words which wee haue tranſlated Images, are out of queſtion tearmes ſignifying images, and of your Tranſlator, they bee called either imagines, ſimulachra, ſculptilia, Idola, &c. Our Engliſh tongue, being not ſo fruitfull of words, wee call them ſometimes Idols, ſome-ſometimes Images, which when wee ſpeake of worſhipped Images, can bee none other, but ſuch as you call Idols. To obſcure ſuch a multitude of words, and ſo much matter by them, as you doe, Saint Auguſtine will not warrant you, who ſpeaketh only of two or three words uſually received in the Latine Church in his time, not of ſuch a number as you haue counterfeited.

Seeing the moſt of the proper names of the old Teſtamēt were unknowen to the people, before the Scripture was read in Engliſh, it was beſt to utter them according to the truth of their pronuntiation in Hebrew, rather than after the common corruption, which they had received in the Greeke and Latine tongues. But as for thoſe names which were knowne unto the people out of the new Teſtament, as Ieſus, Iohn, Mary, &c. it had beene follie to haue taught men to ſound them otherwiſe than after the Greeke declination, in which we finde them.

MART. 22. When Zuinglius your great Patriarke did reade in Munſters tranſlation of the old Teſtament, Iehizkiahu, Iehezchel, Coreſh, Darianeſch, Beltzezzer, and the like for Ezechias, Ezechiel, Cyrus, Darius, Baltaſar; hee called them barbarous voyces, and uncivill ſpeeches, and ſaid, the word of God was ſoiled and depraved by them. Know you not, that proper names alter and change, and are written and ſounded in every language diverſly? Might not all antiquity, and the generall cuſtome, both of reading and hearing the knowen names of Nabuchodonoſor, and Micheas, and Ozias, ſuffice you, but you muſt needs invent other, which the people never heard, rather for vaine oſtentation, to amaze and aſtoniſh them, than to edification and inſtruction? Which is an old hereticall faſhion, noted by Euſebius, lib. 4. cap. 10. and by the Author of the unperfect commentaries upon Saint Matthew, hom. 44. and by Saint Auguſtine, lib. 3. cap. 26. contra Creſconium.

Præfat. in Eſa.

FVLK. 22. That Zuinglius is no Patriarke of ours, you may know by this, that wee doe freely diſſent from him, when wee are perſwaded that hee diſſenteth from the truth. But where you charge us with an hereticall faſhion, in ſounding Hebrew names according to the truth of the Hebrew tongue, if your Authors bee well weighed, they will convince you of an hereticall faſhion, in framing of new words, which are more apt to amaze and aſtoniſh men, than to inſtruct or edifie them: and in uſing ſtrange language in all your Church ſervice, and in that alſo divers Hebrew words. So did the Marcoſians, of whom Euſebius out of Irenæus writeth in baptizing. And the Author of the unperfect worke upon Matthew, though himſelfe an heretike, yet truely ſaith of heretike Prieſts, as you are, in the homilie by you quoted, Sic & modo heretici Sacerdotes, &c. Even ſo the heretike Prieſts ſhut up the gate of truth. " For they know that if the truth were made manifeſt, their Church ſhould bee forſaken, &c. " For which cauſe, untill this time, you haue beene utter enemies to the tranſlation of the Scrip- " ture. But now you ſee you cannot prevaile againſt the tranſlation, you haue begunne ſo to tranſlate the Scripture, as in many things it were as good not tranſlated, for any thing the people ſhall underſtand by it: for you haue not explicated the fourth part of the faigned inkhorne tearmes that you haue uſed. And that Saint Auguſtine ſaith, Creſconius went fondly about to terrifie him with the Greeke word Anticathegoria, you doe the like with Paraſceue, Azymes, ſcandals, Neophyte, yea with Latine words, gratis, depoſitum, and ſuch like, ſeeke to bring the ignorant in great admiration of your deepe knowledge, which is nothing elſe but an heretical faſhion, under ſtrange tearmes, to hide the poiſon of your peſtilent doctrine.

MART. 23. What ſhall I ſpeake of your affectation of the word Iehoua (for ſo it pleaſeth you to accent it) in ſtead of Dominus, the Lord? Whereas the ancient Fathers in the very Hebrew text did reade and Iehouah.

and found it rather Adonai, as appeareth both by S. Hieromes tranſlation, and alſo his commentaries. And I would know of them the reaſon, why in the Hebrew Bible, whenſoever this word is ioyned with Adonai, it is to bee read Elohim, but only for avoyding Adonai twice together. This I ſay we might iuſtly demand of theſe that take a pride in vſing this word Iehoua ſo oft, both in Engliſh and Latine, though otherwiſe wee are not ſuperſtitious, but as occaſion ſerveth, onely in the Hebrew text wee pronounce it and reade it. Againe, wee might aske them why they uſe not as well Elohim in ſtead of Deus, God; and ſo of the reſt, changing all into Hebrew; that they may ſeeme gay fellowes, and the people may wonder at their wonderfull and myſticall divinitie.

VLK. 23. In our Engliſh tranſlation, Iehoua is very ſeldome vſed in other ſpeech; no wiſe man vſeth it oftner than there is good cauſe why. And when there is cauſe, we haue no ſuperſtition in pronouncing it, as wee are not curious in accenting it. Although perhaps you quarrell at our accent, becauſe you cannot diſcerne betweene time and time. The middle ſyllable wee know to be long, whether it be to be elevated we make no queſtion, we know where the accent is in the Hebrew; but we thinke not that all accents bee ſharpe, and elevate that ſyllable in which they are. It is a great matter, that you demand the reaſon why ioyned to Adonai, it is to bee read Elohim: you ſhould rather demand why it is otherwiſe pointed, when it is ioyned with Adonai; for being pointed as it is, I ſee not why it ſhould not be read according to the vowels, Adonai Iehouih. Many other queſtions might bee moved, about the names of God, in pronouncing or writing of which wee know the Iewes were reverent, even to ſuperſtition: and therefore in bookes that ſhould come in all mens hands, made other alterations than you ſpeake of, and yet retained in other authenticall copies, the true letters and points. If any deſire vaine-gloriouſly to utter his skill in the tongues, when he ſhould edifie the people, of all them that be wiſe and learned, he is miſliked for ſo doing.

T. 24. To conclude, are not your ſchollers (thinke you) much bound unto you, for giving them in ſtead of Gods bleſſed word and his holy Scriptures, ſuch tranſlations, hereticall, Iudaicall, prophane, falſe, negligent, fantaſticall, new, taught, monſtrous? God open their eyes to ſee, and mollifie your hearts to repent of all your falſhood and treacherie, both that which is manifeſtly convinced againſt you, and cannot be denied; as alſo that which may by ſome ſhew of anſwer be ſhifted off in the ſight of the ignorant, but in your conſcience is as manifeſt as the other.

FVLK. 24. Happy and thrice happy hath our Engliſh Nation beene, ſince God hath given learned Tranſlators, to expreſſe in our mother tongue the heavenly myſteries of his holy word, delivered to his Church in the Hebrew and Greeke languages: who, although they haue in ſome matters of no importance unto ſalvation, as men beene deceived, yet haue they faithfully delivered the whole ſubſtance of the heavenly doctrine, contained in the holy Scriptures, without any hereticall tranſlations, or wilfull corruptions. And in the whole Bible among them all haue committed as few over ſights, for any thing that you can bring, and of leſſe importance, than you haue done onely in the new Teſtament. Where beſide ſo many omiſſions, even out of your owne vulgar Latine tranſlation, you haue taken upon you to alter that you found in your text, and tranſlate that which is onely in the margent, and is read but in few written copies. As for Italia you ſay Attalia, noted before Heb.13. for placuerunt you tranſlate latuerunt, 2 Pet. 2. for coinquinationis, which is in the text, you tranſlate coinquinationes which was found but in one onely copie, by Hentenius, as the other but in one or two of thirty divers copies, moſt written.

Ad Victor. lib.4. cap.1.

I Were very much to blame, if I would not confeſſe with Saint Auguſtine, that as in my manners, ſo in my writings many things may bee juſtly reprehended, at which I ought not to bee offended, no not although I were reprooved by mine Adverſaries. But when the enemies of GODS holy Religion, and of the quiet ſtate of this Realme, ſeeke by wounding of mee, to hurt the truth, and if it were poſſible, through my ſides to wound her to death; I ought not to be ſilent in this caſe, but by ſhewing mine honeſt defence, as it were by holding up my buckler, to beare off their blowes as well as I can, to maintaine the credit of that cauſe which I have taken in hand: leſt whileſt I forbeare to defend my ſelfe, the truth might ſeeme to have taken a foyle. And yet I meane not ſo to confound my caſe with the ſtate of truth, that whereſoever I may be juſtly convinced truth ſhould bee thought to have loſt the Victorie. For I am but one poore Souldier among many thouſand Captaines, that fight under the Banner of Truth, which if I have not in every reſpect performed all duties of an expert Warriour, it is reaſon the reproach of my defaults ſhould reſt and ſtay onely in mine owne ignorance or raſhneſſe, which have not ſo happily executed that which of good will to fight in truths cauſe, I have attempted within theſe five or ſix yeeres. I have ſet abroad ſundrie Treatiſes in confutation of Popiſh Bookes written in Engliſh, with purpoſe (if God give mee ſtrength) to anſwere as many as within twentie yeares of her Maieſties raigne had been ſet foorth by the Papiſts, and are not yet confuted by any other. This purpoſe of mine, the Papiſts have not greatly hindered by Replies, for (except one onely, Briſtow, who obſerving no good order of replying, but gathering heere and there at his pleaſure, whatſoever he thought himſelfe beſt able to reproove, hath made a ſhew of defence of Allens Articles and Purgatorie) none other have as yet ſet foorth any juſt Replication to the reſt of my writings. And as for Briſtow, hee hath my Rejoynder unto his Reply theſe two yeeres in his hand to conſider upon. The other that of late have ſet forth Popiſh Treatiſes, have endeavored themſelves almoſt every one of them, to have a ſnatch or two at ſome one odde thing or other in my Bookes, wherein they would ſeeme to have advantage, and that (belike) they would have their ſimple Readers thinke to bee a ſufficient Confutation of all that ever I have written againſt them. I have thought good therfore, as neere as I can, to gather all their Cavils together, and briefly to ſhape an anſwere to every one of them, that the indifferent Reader may ſee and judge what ſound matter they have brought againſt mee, wherewith in ſhew of words, they would have it ſeeme as though they had confuted me.

Firſt, Maſter Allen in his late Apologie, fol.63. accuſing the Proteſtants to faine an appellation unto the judgement of the moſt ancient Fathers of the primitive Church, and yet not to abide by it, not eſteeming them better then the preſent government of the Popiſh Church, but as of men deceived, as of humane traditions, &c. As in their writings (ſaith hee) it is moſt evident, where from Peters time downeward, they make the chiefeſt Fathers the Miniſters and furtherers of Antichriſt. For this evidence he quoteth Beza in 2 Theſ.2. and Retentive pag.248. How unjuſtly Beza is ſlandered to be a witneſſe of this accuſation, they that underſtand the Latin tongue, may ſee in the places quoted. But touching my ſelfe, the booke which he quoteth having ſcarce halfe ſo many pages, I might intreat him for a new quotation, but that I gheſſe hee meaneth a place in my Confutation of Sanders Booke, which hee calleth The Rocke of the Church, which was printed with the Retentive, and continueth the number of pages from it. In that Booke, pag.248. there is nothing that ſoundeth toward ſuch a matter, except it be theſe words: As for Leo and Gregorie, Biſhops of Rome, although they were not come to the full pride of Antichriſt, yet the myſterie of iniquitie having wrought in that ſeat neere five or ſixe hundred yeeres before them, and then greatly increaſed, they were ſo deceived with the long continuance of errour, that they thought the dignitie of Peter was much more over the reſt of his fellow Apoſtles, then the holy Scriptures of God (againſt which no continuance of errour can preſcribe) doeth either allow or beare withall. Wherefore although he have ſome ſhew out of the old Writers, yet hath he nothing directly to proove, that Peter did excell the other Apoſtles in Biſhop-like authoritie: and out of the word of God, no one jot or tittle, that Peter as a Biſhop excelled the other Apoſtles, not as Apoſtles, but as Biſhops. Firſt, it is manifeſt even to the eye, that Allens ſlander is not expreſſed in theſe words: then let us ſee if it may be implied. The myſterie of iniquitie did worke in the See of Rome from the Apoſtles time, taking increaſe by little and little, untill ſix hundred yeares and more after Chriſt, when Antichriſt began to be openly ſhewed: and many of the ancient Fathers not eſpying the ſubtiltie of Satans ſecret purpoſe, were deceived, to think ſomething more of Peters prerogative, and of the Biſhops of Romes dignitie, than by the word of God was granted to either of them. This is in effect as much as I affirme: but hereof it followeth not, that I make them the miniſters and furtherers of Antichriſt. For thoſe are the miniſters and furtherers of Antichriſt, which willingly lend all their power to maintaine and uphold his kingdome, after he hath invaded the tyranny: The ancient fathers meant nothing leſſe by admitting of the Biſhops of Romes prerogative, under colour of Peters ſucceſſour, than to ſerue him or aduance him into the throne of Antichriſt. Not euery one whom Sathan hath ſeduced that he might prepare a way for the aduancement of his tyrannie, is a miniſter and furtherer of Satan or his tyranny; for then ſhould all men be counted miniſters or furtherers of Satan, ſeeing the kingdome of ſinne is increaſed by the frailty of all men, which by temptation of the deuill fall into ſinne. Beſide that, many of the ancient Fathers, openly reſiſted the vſurped power of the Biſhops of Rome, when it began onely to bud vp, and was yet farre of from Antichriſtian tyrannie, although it tended ſomwhat toward the ſame. So did the Biſhops of the Eaſt Churches countermaund Victor Biſhop of Rome, contending about the celebration of Eaſter. So did Ireneus, Polycrates, and many other godly Fathers, in publike writings openly reprehend him. So did Cyprian in diuers Epiſtles expoſtulate with the Biſhops of Rome, for medling with cauſes that pertained to his iuriſdiction. So did all the Biſhops of Africa make decrees againſt the vſurped authority and titles of the Biſhops of Rome, denying all Appeales vnto the See of Rome, and excommunicating all them that would appeale to any place beyond the ſea, diſcouering alſo the forged Canon of the Nicene Councell, by which the Biſhops of Rome challenged that prerogatiue. So that M. Allen by this his ſlander, hath done iniury to me, and hurt to himſelfe, while men by this example may iudge of his ſinceritie in other matters.

Euſeb.lib.5. cap.25. & 26. Conc.Carth.3. cap.26. Gratiā diſt.99. Meleuit. c.22. Conc.Aph.ad Celeſtin.

Next commeth in the diſcouery of I. Nicols, denying that they make the Catholike religion locall, or of one prouince, as he chargeth me (with ſome ſcornfull termes of reproch) to affirme in my bad anſwer to Howlet. I ſaid indeed, that S. Auguſtine De unit. Eccleſ. cap.4. doth cleare us of ſchiſme, who willingly communicate with all the whole body of Chriſts Church, diſperſed ouer the world, and charge the popiſh faction both of ſchiſme and hereſie: of ſchiſme, becauſe they maintaine the Church to be only in a part of Europe, as the Donatiſts did in Aphrica, &c. And what iniurie haue I done to the Papiſts in ſo ſaying? The Donatiſts ſaid, the Church was periſhed out of all the world, and remained onely in Aphrica: not aſſigning any place of Aphrica, whereunto the Church muſt be regardant, as the Papiſts doe the Citie of Rome: but affirming that true Catholikes remained onely in Africa, being conſumed out of all other parts of the earth. And what ſay the Papiſts of all the Orientall Churches of Greece, of Aſia, of Africk, that acknowledge not the Popes authoritie? Doe they not account them all for heretikes or ſchiſmatikes? Then it followeth, that they acknowledge the Church to remaine only in thoſe parts of Europe that are ſubiect to the Pope, and Church of Rome. But perhaps they will alledge their newly founded Churches in India and America, which vaine brag I will not ſtand to confute: but ſeeing this inlargement is but new begun, in our grandfathers dayes, before thoſe parts of the earth were diſcouered by nauigation of the Portugals and Spaniards, where was the Romiſh Church and Pope thereof acknowledged but only in a piece of Europe. If yet they will alledge the ſubmiſſion of any Patriarks or Prelats of the Æthiopian or Armenian Churches, made to the Pope by ſome wandring pilgrims, which are of no credit among wiſe men, yet all men may know, that thoſe Chriſtians continuing to this day in the ſame religion, rites and ceremonies, that they did before ſuch pretended ſubmiſſions, holding and doing many things contrary to the Romiſh religion and cuſtome; which argueth plainly, that they neither were, nor meane to become members of the Church of Rome, and ſubiects to popiſh religion, which they refuſe to receiue in as many points, as euer they did. Wherefore the popiſh Church remaineth ſtill ſhut vp within the ſtreits of Europe, for any acceſſion of them. And what enlargement ſoeuer it hath in the new world, it is rather by Colonies of Portugals and Spaniards, than by conuerſion of thoſe barbarous nations. For as for them that were for feare of death compelled to receiue Baptiſme, as many of the barbarous people haue been, no true Catholike can acknowledge for good and Catholike Chriſtians, who as occaſion alwayes ſerued them, ſpared not to giue ſufficient teſtimonie of their counterfeit conuerſion; whereby it appeared, that the Sacrament of Baptiſme was in them prophaned, rather than that they by it were ſanctified. As for my bad anſwere to Howlet, as it ſeemeth was ſo ſufficient, that neuer a Papiſt theſe two yeeres can find time to confute it. Although if they thought it too bad to confute, there hath been ſince a better ſet foorth with more aduiſe by Maſter Wyburne, but the reply we ſhall haue at greater leaſure, the Howlet as I geſſe being otherwiſe occupied in defence of his Cenſure; for that his proud ſtomacke had rather play the Iudge than the defendant.

The next quarrell followeth in the third leafe after, where he approueth Iohn Nicols affirming, as he ſaith, that Purgatory, Praier for the dead, and Inuocation of Saints, are late inuentions of Popes and Papiſts. Whereas his owne companions, namely Fulke in his late anſwer to Doctor Allen and Doctor Briſtow, confeſſeth, that all theſe three errours were receiued in the Church aboue 1200. yeeres, that is, in the times of Auguſtine, Ierome, Ambroſe and upward, and that theſe Fathers with other beleeued them alſo. If to thoſe three Doctors which he named, he had not added vpward, I muſt haue abated one hundred yeeres at leaſt of his account. But now let us ſee what I haue confeſſed of theſe Doctors and vpward. Firſt, againſt Purgatory, *pag.*306. But whoſoeuer ſhall vouchſafe to turne the booke to that page, ſhall find neuer a word of my writing, good or bad, but only the firſt Section of the ninth Chapter of Allens ſecond booke. Well, this may be the Printers fault, peraduenture it is page 106. becauſe it is not like that 306. ſhould come before 115. the next quotation that followeth; but neither is there any thing to this purpoſe. Then let us ſee what may be found pag. 115. euen as much as in pag. 306. for there is neuer a word of my writing in that page but all is Allens 8. Chapter of the firſt booke. Then come we to the third quotation, *pag.*316. and there indeed is ſomething ſounding toward this matter, touching prayer for the dead, which Auguſtine did allow, but of Purgatorie there is nothing. Of Inuocation of Saints there is mention, but no affirmation that Auguſtine did beleeue it, for in the next page followeth a diſcourſe to proue that S. Auguſtine, as he declareth in his booke De cura pro mortuis &c. was not certaine how the Saints departed ſhould know any thing that is done in this world, although he inclined to that opinion, that they might haue knowledge by relation of dead men, or of Angels, or els he knoweth not how, and ſo doth plainly confeſſe. From hence we muſt paſſe to page 320. where indeed I doe confeſſe, that Ambroſe alloweth prayer for the dead, as it was a common errour of his time, but not ſacrifice of the Maſſe in that ſenſe that Papiſts doe. Laſt of all. Art.page 39. I denie, that for 200. yeeres after Chriſt, it can be prooued, that any Catholike writer doth allow prayer for the dead, or inuocation of Saints, and that the later error was not confirmed 400. yeeres after Chriſt, namely in S. Auguſtines time, in that ſmall helpe was acknowledged by Chryſoſtome, to come to the dead by prayers made for them. In all thoſe places S. Ierome is not once named, nor Purgatory confeſſed to bee receiued, whereof Saint Auguſtine the laſt of the three ſometime doubteth, ſometime vtterly denyeth any third place: neither did I euer confeſſe, that any of thoſe three errours were holden by theſe ancient Fathers in all reſpects, as they are by the Papiſts, nor that Purgatory was euer beleeued of any of them, onely Auguſtine ſometimes ſpeaketh of it, as of a doubtfull matter, which he ſaith may bee inquired, whether there be any ſuch place or no: and yet confuted thoſe interpretations of the Scriptures, which the Papiſts make their chiefeſt grounds of it. By this you may ſee, how liberall this Ieſuite is in extending my confeſſion further than euer it was made or meant by me, or can be proued by him, or any Papiſt of them all.

De oct. Dulcit. queſt.q.1. De fid.& op. c.16.Serm.in mont.lib.1.

The third leafe againe, after this, he ſaith, that Nicols by citing a place of Auguſtine, would haue men thinke that S. Auguſtine diſallowed prayer to Saints, which is contrary to Fulkes opinion, who confeſſeth Auguſtine to haue defended this ſuperſtition, as hee termeth it, and raileth on him for it. For this is quoted *Purg.pag.*315. 316. 317. Now he gathereth what Nicols would haue men thinke, let other men iudge. And what mine opinion is of Auguſtines allowing of prayer to Saints, I haue before expreſſed out of the places quoted: but where he ſaith, I raile on him for it, that is but a Friers report, which ſeldome differeth from a lie. For this is all I ſay of him for it: By ſuch places as I haue in thoſe pages cited out of Auguſtine, it is proued, that although Auguſtine were willing to maintaine the ſuperſtition that was not throughly confirmed in his time, about burials and inuocation of Saints, yet he hath nothing of certaintie out of the word of God, either to perſwade his owne conſcience, or to ſatisfie them that moued the doubts unto him. Whether in theſe words I haue railed, I ſubmit my ſelfe to the iudgement of the Reader, that will weigh what I haue cited out of S. Auguſtine, in the pages mentioned.

In the ſame leafe, and the next page, the margent is painted with quotations out of my booke againſt Purgatory. But what thinke you to proue? Forſooth, that his aduerſaries doe confeſſe all the old Fathers to be on their ſide and to haue erred with them, as Fulke doth of S. Ambroſe, Auſten, Tertullian, Origen, Chryſoſtome, Gregory, and Bede by name, with moſt reproachfull and contemptuous words againſt them. This is ſpoken generally, as though we confeſſe all the Doctors to be on their ſide, in euery controuerſie, which we doe not acknowledge to be true in any one, although many of the latter ſort doe in ſome part fauour one or two errors of theirs among an hundred. But let us examine his proofes, which ſeeme to be very plentifull; yet of nine quotations I muſt needs ſtrike out two, *pag.*306. and 279. becauſe in them is not one ſyllable of my writing, but all of Allens. In the pages 315. and 316. is nothing more contained touching this matter, than I haue already declared. There remaineth now, page 349. where I ſay touching a rule of Saint Auguſtine, which he giueth, to try faith and doctrine of the Church only by the Scripture, that if he had as diligently followed it, in examining the common error of his time, of prayer for the dead, as he did in beating downe the ſchiſme of the Donatiſts, or the hereſie of the Pelagians, hee would not ſo blindly haue defended that which by holy Scripture he was not able to maintaine, as he doth in that booke, De cura pro mortuis agenda; and elſewhere. What moſt reproachfull or contemptuous words are here againſt S. Auguſtine? Seeing the holy Scripture is a light ſhining in a darke place, as S. Peter ſaith, who ſo goeth without it, muſt walke blindly, which I ſay in commendation of the light of the Scripture, not in contempt of Auguſtines reaſon, whom as I may not honour, with contempt of the truth; ſo when he is patron and maintainer of the truth, I honour him from my heart. Likewiſe *pag.*78. Ambroſe is named, but nothing acknowledged to fauour any Popiſh error. Auguſtine is againe noted, ſpeaking of the amending fire, whereof he hath no ground, but in the common error of his time, and whereof he affirmeth ſometimes, that it is a matter that may be doubted of, ſometimes that there is no third place at all. Wherefore this place hath neither reproachfull words, nor confeſſion of any conſtant opinion of Auguſtine, inclining to your errors. Then let us paſſe to the next place, which is page 435. where concerning this matter I haue written thus: I deny that any of the ancient Fathers in Chriſts time, or Schollers to his Apoſtles, or within one or two hundred yeares after Chriſt, except one that had it of Montanus the heretike, as hee had more things beſide, in any one word, maintained your cauſe for Purgatory, or prayers for the dead. Secondly, of them that maintained prayers for the dead, the moſt confeſſed they had it not out of the Scriptures, but of tradition of the Apoſtles, and cuſtome of the Church, therefore they are not to bee compared vnto us in better vnderſtanding of the Scriptures, for that point, which they denyed to bee receiued of the Scriptures. Thirdly, thoſe of the ancient Fathers that agreed with you in any part of your aſſertion, (for none within foure hundred yeeres was wholly of your errour) notwithſtanding many excellent giftes that they had, yet maintained other errours beſide that, and about that diſſented one from another, and ſometime the ſame man from himſelfe, and that is worſt of all, from manifeſt trueth of the holy Scriptures. Therefore neither is their erroneous interpretation in this matter to bee receiued, nor Maſter Allens wiſe iudgement of us to bee regarded. Here alſo I appeale to the iudgement of indifferent Readers, what confeſſion I haue made of the Fathers to bee on their ſide; or what reproachfull or contemptuous words I haue vſed againſt them, for diſſenting from us. The next place is quoted, *pag.*247. where I ſay againſt Allen, boaſting of ancient teſtimonies, for prayer for the dead: I will not deny but you haue much droſſe and dregges, of the latter ſort of Doctors, and the later, the fuller of droſſe. But bring me any word out of Iuſtinus Martyr, Irenæus, Clemens Alexandrinus, or any that did write within one hundred yeares after Chriſt, that alloweth prayer or almes for the dead, and I will ſay you are as good as your word. Here except he will cauill, that I acknowledge much droſſe and dregs to be in the later ſort of Doctors, I know not what he findeth that hath any ſhadow of his ſlaunder. But the truth muſt be confeſſed, that the pure waters of life are to be found only in the word of God, and beſide that the beſt and pureſt liquors that are to be ſeene, are not cleare from all dregs and droſſe of humane errour and frailty. In the next page Origen deliuered from the ſhamefull mangling of Allens allegation, is ſhewed plainly to be an enemy of Purgatory and prayer for the dead, in that he affirmeth the day of a Chriſtian mans death to be the end of all ſorrow, and the beginning of all felicity. There remaineth now the laſt place quoted, *pag.*194. where I acknowledge that Gregorie, Bernard, and Bede, vpon the text *Matth.*12. are of opinion, that ſins not remitted in this world, may be remitted in the world to come. But how happeneth it (ſay I) that Chryſoſtome and Hieronyme, which both interpreted that place, could gather no ſuch matter, although they otherwiſe allowed prayer for the dead. The reaſon muſt needes bee, becauſe the errour of Purgatorie growing ſo much the ſtronger, as it was neerer to the full reuelation of Antichriſt, Gregorie and Bede ſought not the true meaning of Chriſt in this Scripture, but the confirmation of their plauſible errour. Here is all the confeſſions, moſt reproachfull and contemptuous words, that are contained in ſo many of thoſe places as he hath quoted, in which I will not tarry to rehearſe how many vntruths hee hath vttered againſt me, but wiſh the indifferent Reader to conſider, that if he be ſo bold to ſlaunder me concerning a booke printed in Engliſh, by which he may be conuinced of euery ſimple Reader, what dare he not aduouch of matters done and paſt at Rome, whether none may trauail to try out his trechery, but he is in manifeſt danger neuer to returne the anſwer of his meſſage.

From this popiſh Parſon whatſoeuer his name be, I muſt paſſe to another Gentleman nameleſſe in deed, but not blameleſſe, yea much more blame-worthy than the other: who among ſo many and ſo great ſlanders, as it is wonder how they could be conueyed into ſo ſmall a booke, againſt our Prince, her lawes, her Councellors, her Iudges, her officers, the Nobilitie, the commonaltie, the Church, the gouernors, the Paſtors, and the people thereof, againſt all ſtates and perſons of the land, in whom there is religion towards God, ioyned with dutie toward their Prince and countrey, hath found yet ſome empty corners where he might place mee in particular. And firſt, of all, *pag.*46. of his latine Epiſtle, after he hath deſcribed the manner of quartering vſed in the execution of traytors, and moſt impudently ſlandered the officers of iuſtice, to make ſuch haſt in cutting downe the Papiſts, which are hanged, as they vſe not in puniſhment of other traitors, to the end they might ſatisfy their cruel minds in their torments, which is proued falſe by many thouſand eye witneſſes, that haue not lightly ſeene any of them reuiue with any ſenſe of their paines, except one Storie, who alſo did hang ſo long before he was cut downe, that it was great wondering to many to ſee him ſo ſoone recovered, not only in life, but alſo in ſtrength. At length he commeth in his tragicall manner, to inveigh againſt the crueltie of their adverſaries, whom this cruell ſight doth nothing at all moue to pity, but they laugh and make ſport at it, and inſult againſt them that are a dying. But eſpecially (ſaith he) if any overcome with paine, hath given forth any groning, which yet happeneth moſt ſeldome ſo one of them no meane preacher in a certaine imprinted booke, doth gather that ours are not true martyrs, becauſe one of them (as he himſelfe affirmeth) gave forth a certaine howling as of an hell-hound, that I may uſe his owne words. O ſentence worthy of a Preacher! O new charitie of the new Goſpell! What ruffianly theefe at any time hath not bluſhed to utter ſuch a voice? what murtherer did ever ſhew a mind ſo cruell and barbarous? This froth of words I might eaſily match with like rhetoricall exclamations. O impudent lyer, O ſhameleſſe ſlanderer, O trayterous backbiter, &c. But I had rather beat it downe with truth of matter. Briſtow in his booke of Motives, maketh Martyrs his 15. Motive. Among whom he commendeth as well for the goodneſſe of their cauſe, as alſo for their patient ſuffring: The good Earle of Northumberland (I uſe his owne trayterous words) Story, Felton, Nortons, Wood-houſe, Plomtree, and ſo many hundreths of the Northerne men, whom approved by miracles undoubted he oppoſeth againſt Foxes martyrs, as he calleth them. Againſt this traiterous commendation of open rebels and traitors, among other things thus I have written. Retent. pag. 59. Seeing not the paine, but the cauſe maketh a martyr, whoſoever have ſuffered for treaſon and rebellion, may well be accounted martyrs of the popiſh Church, but the Church of Chriſt condemneth ſuch for enemies of Chriſts kingdome, and inheritors of eternall deſtruction, except they repent and obtaine mercy for their horrible wickedneſſe. And ſeeing patient ſuffering is by Briſtowes owne confeſſion, a gift of God unto all true martyrs, ſuch as were manifeſtly voide of patience can bee no true martyrs, as were moſt of theſe rebels and traitors, and Storie by name: who for all his glorious tale, in the time of his moſt deſerved execution by quartering, was ſo impatient, that he did not only roare and cry like an hell-hound, but alſo ſtrake the executioner doing his office, and reſiſted as long as ſtrength did ſerve him, being kept downe by three or foure men, untill he was dead. O patient Martyr of the popiſh Church! What cauſe had this ſlanderous ſpirit upon theſe my words, to make ſuch hideous outcries, what theefe? what ruffian? what murderer? or what matter is miniſtred in this my ſaying, to accuſe all the adverſaries of Papiſts in England, of ſuch barbarous cruelty? We are not ſo voide of humanity, but we lament the miſery even of our greateſt and moſt graceleſſe enemies: but yet we are not ſo voide of underſtanding, to acknowledge impatient ſuffering to be true martyrdome, no not if the cauſe were never ſo good. Not that wee thinke true Martyrs to be voide of ſenſe and feeling of their torments, or that they may not teſtifie their paines, even with teares and ſtrong crying ſometimes, but that there is a great difference betweene the crying of patient martyrs unto God for ſtrength and comfort, and the brutiſh roaring of impatient ſufferers, expreſſed only with paine and torment, as was this of Storie, who uttered no voice of prayer in all that time of his crying (as I heard of the very executioner himſelfe, beſide them that ſtood by) but only roared and cryed, as one overcome with the ſharpneſſe of the paine, as no martyr is, whom God is faithfull to deliver out of temptation: ſo that although they have never ſo great ſenſe of their torment, yet are they never overcome thereby. But peradventure this Orator for the Popiſh traitors, will take me up, for concluding againſt Storie, that he did not pray, becauſe no voice of prayer was heard to come from him, as though I could not conſider, that he was immediatly before ſtrangled, ſo that the paſſage of his voice might be ſtopped, that albeit that roaring were his prayer, yet it might not be underſtood by them which heard it. Indeed if there had been no other ſigne of his impatiency, but his crying, I would not have been bold to have judged therof, and made him an example of impatiency, as I did. But what patient Martyr ever ſtrake his tormentor? Who praying for his perſecutors, would ſtrive to buffet and beat them? What man ſubmitting himſelf to the will of God in his ſuffering, would reſiſt the executioners that he might not ſuffer? Yea, when there was no remedy but he muſt ſuffer, except God for his cruelty ſhewed againſt his patient Saints, had not only given him a taſt of ſuch torments as he procured to others, but alſo made him an open ſpectacle of the impatient and uncomfortable ſtate of them that ſuffer, not in a good cauſe, and with a good conſcience. By this it is manifeſt how honeſtly this Proctor of the perſecuted Papiſts reporteth, that upon a litle groaning I gather that he was no true Martyr, and further raileth as his faculty well ſerveth him.

The like honeſt dealing and truth is ſhewed in the Engliſh tranſlation of this pamphlet, toward the latter end, where he ſpeaketh of certain impriſoned and pined with famin at York. There in the margent Fulke is placed, as though he had bin author or executer of ſome perſecution at York, neer to which city he never came by 40 miles. But this will be excuſed perhaps by the Printers fault, becauſe it is not mentioned in the Latine. Howſoever it be, it argueth a lying and a ſlanderous ſtomack of the ſetters forth of this treatiſe, that would ſuffer ſo open and ſo apparant a ſlander, to paſſe uncorrected being in ſuch a place where it could not eſcape their ſight & knowledge.

But the ſtory of the conference at Wiſbich is a worthy matter, wherein not only this Rhetorician, but alſo the confuter of M. Chark (if they be not both one Parſon, as I gheſſe they be) have thought good to exerciſe their ſtile. The truth whereof is this, as it is eaſy to be proved in every reſpect by ſufficient teſtimonies. It pleaſed the Lords and others of her Majeſties Councell, after thoſe obſtinate Recuſants were committed to ſafe keeping in Wiſbich Caſtle, to direct their letters to the Biſhop of Ely (in whoſe dioceſſe and caſtle the priſoners were kept) requiring him to provide, that they might have conference, if they would admit any, and be called upon to come to the Church, and heare the preaching there: whereupon the Biſhop making choice of me, among other whom he purpoſed to ſend unto them, deſired me by his Chancellor Maſter Doctour Bridgewater, to repayre unto him into the Iſle, from whence he ſent me with a Gentleman of his houſe, to ſignify to them that had the charge of thoſe priſoners, the cauſe of my comming. Whereupon inſued that ſpeech in the preſence of certain honeſt men ſpecially called and required to be witneſſes, beſides a number of other of good credit, the ſumme whereof as it was written at the preſent time, by three or foure that came with me, of which one is a learned Preacher, was collected to certify the Biſhoppe as neere as could be, what communication had paſſed betweene us, without any further purpoſe of publiſhing the ſame. But the Copie thereof comming into the hands of a friend of mine at London, and by him communicated to ſome other of his friends at laſt came into a Printers hands, who ſuddainly ſet it abroad unknowing to my friend and me. Which how well it was liked of me and my friend, ſome of the beſt of the Company of Stationers can teſtify, by that meanes was made to have the Printer puniſhed, and had not Campions proud and vaine challenge come even in the nick, I could not have beene perſwaded by my friends, to have ſuffered the party to goe ſo cleare as he did. This is the whole truth and every part thereof, which if this dainty Oratour durſt ſhew his face in any honeſt preſence in England, may be prooved by ſuch ſufficient witneſſe and evidence, as no reaſonable perſon could refuſe. Notwithſtanding let us ſee, what a rhetoricall lyar without feare of God, or ſhame of the world, without knowledge of the matter, or meanes to have intelligence, can deviſe to publiſh in the face of the world, to bolſter the obſtinacy of thoſe wilfull Recuſants, and to deface the honeſt indeavour of them that ſeeke firſt to reforme them, and if that cannot be, to take away excuſe of ignorance from them. There is a certaine Miniſter (ſaith he) grew in his own opinion, but in other mens opinion but mean, &c. Mark how boldly even in the beginning he blaſeth not to affirm, that which it is impoſſible for him to know. For albeit I were as great in mine own opinion, as he reporteth me to be, yet how could he be privy to my conceipt, who though he know my perſon, yet is he not acquainted with my manners, that he might make conjecture by them. Neither is it like he can have it by report of other men. For I wiſt they which know me moſt familiarly, cannot report that my behavior argueth any ſuch great opinion of my ſelfe. But he gathereth it perhaps either by my preaching, or by my writing. What skill I have in any thing God knoweth beſt, and then they with whom I live. And that I make as little ſhew of that I know, as any man in ſuch caſes may conveniently, I anſwer, they that have moſt cauſe to underſtand what I am, will not refuſe to teſtify. That he ſaith I am mean in other mens opinions, it greeveth me nothing: rather I am afrayd leſt a great number accept me to be better then I deſerve. But to omit this matter, by which yet you may gather, what likelyhood of truth is in the reſt of his aſſertions, he proceedeth to accuſe me that for hope of a little vainglory, by contending with noble men, even magnatibus (ſo the honeſt ſubject calleth Watſon the Biſhop, and Fecknam the Abbot, ſo long ſince by lawfull authority deprived of thoſe dignities) I crept ſecretly into the Caſtle unlooked for. But if my comming were of hope to winne glory, why did I not rather come openly, or cauſe them to be brought into the Church before the whole multitude? Well, admit I were ſo blind with deſire of vain-glory, that I could not ſee, which way I might beſt come to it. Why ſhould he ſay that I crept into the Caſtle, as it were by ſtealth? Belike becauſe I came without authority, for ſo he ſaith afterward, the Papiſts ſaw that I came to offer them conference by no publike authority. If that had bin ſo, how could this ſtand which he ſaith, Siſti jubet omnes ad ſuum conſpectum, hee commandeth them all to be brought into his preſence. Did he command them by his private authority; or were they which had them in cuſtody ſo ſimple, that they would obey an unknown perſon, a mean man, of ſmall or no account, comming without authority, or commanding in his own name, or pretending the name of them that had authority without ſufficient warrant? or rather was it not well ſaid, that a lyer in a large tale is the beſt confuter of himſelfe? although in very truth, I gave no commandement for their appearance before me, only the Biſhops will was declared by the Gentleman his ſervant, unto their keeper. But what ſhould I ſtand to rip up thoſe vanities? All reaſonable conditions of bookes, time and order for the conference were offered them. To conclude, I am certainly perſwaded, that ſomthing, perhaps the diſdain of my perſon, but more the feare of the weakneſſe of their cauſe ſtayed them, that they would not adventure their credit in tryall by diſputation. For if the contempt of my lightneſſe and raſhneſſe (as their Proctor ſaith) had bin the only cauſe of their refuſall, why did they not yield to diſpute in the Univerſity, in which are many of more gravity or learning; yea why did they conclude in the end that al diſputation in maters of faith, was unprofitable, alleadging examples of the diſputation in the Convocation houſe, in the beginning of the Queens Majeſties raign and the conference at Weſtminſter, in preſence of almoſt all the learned and wiſe of the Realm in the beginning of her Majeſties raigne? For the publiſhing of the report, and the certainty of the contents thereof, I have ſhewed ſufficiently, as the truth of the matter was, and as I will be able to juſtifie by good witneſſe, whatſoever this impudent lyar hath avouched to the contrary. The ſame is alſo ſufficient to confute the ſame ſlander repeated by the confuter of Maſter Charke in Epiſt. pag. 9. concerning my only looking into Wiſbich Caſtle, and printing a pamphlet in mine own praiſe, where if I had faigned matter for my praiſe, I might as well have faigned, how valiantly I had vanquiſhed mine enemies. For ſmall praiſe is gotten where there is no victory, and victory can be none where there is no battail. The like ſlander he hath, but with more words of reproch p. 2. of his defence, where beſide his ruffianlike rayling, which is a greater fault in him that reproveth others, for intemperate ſpeech, there is nothing more in ſubſtance, but that I did ſet forth that pamphlet in mine owne commendation, and I attempted the matter without authority, wherein without all rhetorike I muſt tell him plainly, he lyeth impudently. As for the diſputation hee ſaith they have ſued for, in ſeditious manner, and for a purpoſe of ſedition by Campion their valiant champion, for other ſute they cannot proove that ever they made, or by any other meanes that ever I heard of, how like it is they would ſue for it, we may know by this, that they would not accept it when it was offered, and how well it was diſcharged by Campion their luſty challenger, when he could not refuſe it, there be many both wiſe and learned witneſſes can teſtifie, to the reproof of ſuch impudent reports, as have been bruted in Popiſh pamphlets, by ignorant aſſes: to whom their own champion is ſo little beholding, that they have for the moſt part made his anſwer a great deale more abſurd, and further from ſhew of learning, then indeed it was. But if you be ſo ſharp ſet upon diſputation, as you pretend, why doth never a Papiſt of you all anſwer my challenge made openly in print to all learned Papiſts, almoſt three yeares agoe, ſet before my Retentive againſt Briſtowes Motives, wherein you may expreſſe what you have in maintenance of your opinion, without ſuit, without danger, and to the beſt and ſureſt tryall of the truth. But now it is time to come to other cavils of this ſurly Cenſurer. They are of two ſorts; the one concerning words, the other touching matter. I will beginne firſt with the words, and as neere as I can readily find them, I will quote the places of my bookes where I have uſed them: And leaving the Reader to ſee what cauſe moved me ſometimes to ſuch vehement tearmes, I referre it to his judgement, whether I have paſſed the bounds of modeſty, or equity, yea or nay. Firſt he chargeth me with a Ruffian-like ſpirit, becauſe I ſay to Allen, Shew me, Allen, if thou canſt for thy guts, pag. 241. In that place I anſwer to Allen, which ſcornefully bableth the Papiſts ſay unto us, M. Proteſtant, let us have ſight of your only faith [illegible] of their religion, &c. that James calleth pure and unſpotted, &c. Whiles he requireth a ſight of our faith by our good workes, I anſwere that becauſe the tryall of ſingular perſons is uncertaine, and impoſſible, let us conſider the whole States. Then followeth: Shew me if thou canſt for thy guts, or name any Popiſh Cities, that hath made ſuch proviſion for the Fatherleſſe and widdowes, as the Citie of London, &c. What ſpeech is heere like a Ruffian? Except the delicate Cenſurer cannot abide to heare Allens guts named, but he thinketh it Ruffian-like, as though hee had never heard of theſe phraſes, ruperis licet, non ſi te ruperis inquit, no wiſe man did ever conceive [illegible] at the Codd. To wiſely, ſaving the authority of this noble Cenſurer, that himſelfe abuſeth the phraſe [illegible] Ruffian-like ſpirit? It ſheweth a great deale more of a Ruffian-like ſpirit, [illegible] Doctour Fulkes talent in rayling, [illegible] of the holy Ghoſt, ſo ſcoffingly and ſcoffing; as heere in the margent, [illegible] who but an Atheiſt would not abhorre to ſpeake ſo? But [illegible] pag. 50. Luthers lying with a Nun in the Lord, [illegible] Firſt, Lewd Loſell, let us examine what railing he hath noted out of my Retentive againſt Briſtowes Motives. [illegible] and unlearned dog-bolt, which I [illegible] pag. 6. where I ſay, that ſome of the Papiſts were moderatours of the conference at Weſtminſter, at leaſt and namely Doctour Heath, then occupying the place of the Biſhop of Yorke, [illegible] and unlearned dog-bolts, and traiterous [illegible] Therefore not only Lay Lords and unlearned Heretikes, as this lewd Loſell, and unlearned dog-bolts and traiterous Nobilitie of England) moſt [illegible] Papiſts, (thus ſaith he) [illegible] with the learned and godly [illegible] but ſome of the Popiſh [illegible] offenders, were only moderatours of that diſputation [illegible] Prelates, which [illegible] were not only preſent, but preſidents of that action, beſide all the reſt of the Popiſh [illegible] of that Parliament, for information whereof that conference was appointed. I ſay, let the Reader judge, whether hee have not deſerved thoſe tearmes, that being but a man of very meane learning, as his writings declare was not aſhamed to call all the Nobilitie and Commons of the Parliament, Lay Lords and unlearned Heretiks.

Again, pag.58. I call Briſtow a traiterous Papiſt, becauſe he ſlandereth our State not only for publike execution of open Rebells and errant Traitors, as the Earle of Northumberland, Storie, Felton, Nortons, Woodhouſe, and ſo many hundreds of the Northern men, whom all he calleth holy Martyrs, proved by miracles undoubted, but alſo with privy murthering, by poyſoning, whipping, and famiſhing. What leſſe I could have ſaid of him for this high treaſon, openly printed, and what an honeſt Papiſt the Cenſurer is for reprooving me in ſo tearming him, I refer to the judgement of all Chriſtian and faithfull ſubjects.

To proceed, I call him ſhameles beaſt, pag.18. becauſe he maketh a ſhameles and beaſtly concluſion in thoſe words: Whoſoever have at any time ſet themſelves againſt any doctrine confirmed by miracle, they have been againſt the trueth. There can to this no inſtance bee given: Our doctrine which they reſiſt, hath beene confirmed by miracles, therefore plaine it is that they are enemies of the truth. Doe you not heare this ſhameleſſe beaſt ſay (quoth I) there can be no inſtance given againſt his propoſition, when the Lord himſelfe giveth an expreſſe Law againſt a falſe Prophet, which ſheweth ſignes and miracles, Deut.13.&c. Weigh the tearm with the deſert of the perſon in this bold aſſertion, and if it be too extream, I deſire no favour.

Yet againe pag.10. I write thus: Where Luther confeſſeth that the mockers of the true Church were commonly called Heretikes, his conſcience did not accuſe him (as Briſtow ſaid of him) that his ſide were Heretikes: For hee was able to put a difference betweene him that by Heretikes is called an Heretike, and him that is ſo indeede; although Briſtow, either for his blockiſh wit cannot; or for his ſpightfull malice will not conceive it. Here I doe not ſimply accuſe his wit, but either his wit or his malice; and that one of them was too blame, if not both, every wiſe man may ſee by his argument.

Furthermore, pag.39 I ſay he is an impudent Aſſe, which to ſtabliſh his ground of cuſtome, is not aſhamed to falſify the words of holy Scripture. For he had ſaid, that Saint Paul after many reaſons, 1 *Cor.*11. for the uncomlines of womens going bare-headed, recoileth to this invincible fort: Si quis, &c. But if any man ſeem to be contentious, we have no ſuch cuſtome (for women to pray uncovered) nor the Church of God. His ignorance and impudence is manifeſt in this place. If the tearme Aſſe offend any man, let him conſider, that nothing but an ignorant perſon is noted thereby; as alſo pag.88. where he is called a blind bayard, and blockheaded Aſſe, becauſe he diſdainfully upbraideth all our Doctors and Univerſities of much ignorance, and lack of learning, and Calvine he ſaith, erred about the Trinity through ignorance, with ſuch odious compariſons, as in ſo vaine and unlearned a fellow, as Briſtow ſheweth himſelfe to be, is intolerable.

To note his bold ignorance alſo, I ſaid pag.74. The more beaſtly is the blundering of this Briſtow, who dreameth that the Councell of Conſtantinople the firſt, which made this confeſſion by the Apoſtolike Church, did not onely meane the Romane Church, but alſo none other but the Romane Church: whereas the Councell knowing well the Catholike Church of the world, from the particular Church of Rome, gave like priviledges of honour to the Church of Conſtantinople, to thoſe which Rome had, reſerving onely ſeniority to old Rome: beſide many other reaſons they alledged, to prove that they acknowledged no ſuch authority of the Church at Rome, as the Papiſts now defend.

Likewiſe pag.89. I call him blundering Briſtow, for charging Maſter Iewel with ignorance, for affirming Chriſt to bee a Prieſt according to his Deity: of which aſſertion I ſhall have occaſion to ſpeake afterward againſt the laſt ſlander.

And pag.75. where Briſtow ſaith, that in all innovations both great and ſmall, that ever by heretikes were attempted, they can ſhew under what Pope they chanced, what tumults riſing in the world thereon, what Doctors withſtood it, what Councells accurſed it, &c. I reply thus: What an impudent lyer is this Briſtow, to bragge of that which at this day is unpoſſible to be done by any man living in the world? For of ſo many heretiks as are rehearſed by Epiphanius and Auguſtine, not the one halfe of them can be ſo ſhewed, as Briſtow like a blind bayard boaſteth they can doe.

Yet more touching his ignorance, pag.43. I ſay Hierom was not ſo groſſe, to count walking about the City, to be a peregrination. But what is ſo leaden or blockiſh, which theſe doltiſh Papiſts will not avouch for the maintenance of their trumpery? This I write, becauſe Briſtow would have Hierom, by often entring into the cryptes or vaults of the Churches of Rome, to ſignify, that he went on Pilgrimage. Where the collector of the phraſes doth me ſome wrong, to ſay I call Briſtow leaden, blockiſh, and doltiſh Papiſt; where I ſay, thoſe doltiſh Papiſts, which avouch any thing, never ſo leaden or blockiſh. Only I require the indifferent Reader to conſider, whether I have juſt cauſe to charge him with ignorance and impudence. As for the tearms, I will not ſtand either to juſtify them, or to revoke them, but refer them to every reaſonable mans cenſure.

Furthermore, pag.48. I ſay, that proud ſcoffe of Parliament Religion (which Briſtow uſeth) bewrayeth the ſtomack of a vantparler, and not the ſpirit of a Divine, or good ſubject. Here I think the tearme of vantparler was too milde for ſuch a knowne trayterous Papiſt, as commendeth open Rebels for Martyrs, as affirmeth that the Queenes ſubjects are lawfully diſcharged of the oath of obedience given to her Majeſty; as derideth the Religion eſtabliſhed by Parliament. pag.51. I ſay, the Papiſts like impudent dogges, yelpe and barke againſt us, that the Fathers are all on their ſide, becauſe they have ſucked out of their writings a few dregges of a great quantity of good liquor contained in their veſſels, having the Fathers in the moſt and greateſt matters wholly againſt them. And pag.55. I ſay that Briſtow quarrelling with D. Humfrey, yelpeth like a litle curre againſt a great lion, and ſnatching pieces of his ſentences gnawn from the reſt, ſquealeth out as though he had heard ſome marvellous ſtrange ſounds, &c. If this allegory be too baſe for Briſtowes dignity, let him humble himſelfe, and crave pardon of his treaſons, for I will doe no reverence to a Traitour, that openly bewrayeth himſelfe in a printed booke, as he and other of his complices have done. A proud hypocrite Prieſt, of ſtinking, greaſy, Antichriſtian and execrable Orders, I cannot finde where I have tearmed him, except I ſhould reade over the whole booke; but if I have uſed ſuch ſpeeches, I thinke they are no worſe then his wicked behaviour, and Popiſh ſacrificing Prieſthood deſerve to have. Blaſphemous Heretike hee giveth mee often occaſion to call him, and namely pag.81. where I reproove him for calling the bleſſed Sacrament his Lord and God, which although tranſubſtantiation were graunted, yet becauſe the Papiſts affirme, that this Sacrament conſiſteth of accidents, as the ſigne or externall part thereof, ſeeing accidents are neither God nor in God, it could not be ſaid without blaſphemy that the Sacrament is Lord and God.

Next follow reproachfull tearmes uſed againſt Allen. The firſt, braſen face and iron forehead, I doe not yet find: but it ſignifyeth nothing but notable impudence, which is noted pag.23. where I call him impudent blaſphemer, becauſe he had ſaid of us, That to ſuch as make no ſtore of good works, they caſt only faith under their elbowes to leane upon: whereas none of us did ever teach, that ſuch a faith as is not lively and fruitfull of good works, did ever profit any man, but to the increaſe of his damnation.

Againe,

Againe, pag.24. I note him to paſſe impudency it ſelfe in ſhameleſſe lying, where hee ſaith, Commit what you liſt, [illegible] what you liſt, your preachers ſhall promiſe [illegible] and priviledge it in this world.

Alſo pag.147. I charge him with an impudent lie, where he ſaith, that M. Calvine doth expound the [illegible] of S. Iames [illegible] for a medicinable ſalve or oyntment, to eaſe the ſicke [illegible] that Calvine [illegible] and condemneth that expoſition. Likewiſe pag.154. I convince him of impudent [illegible] falſify the [illegible] of two Councells at a clap, ſaying; they [illegible] the oblations for the departed, when both the Councells, [illegible] and Carthage ſpeake [illegible] of the dead given to the Church for the uſe of the poore. Theſe [illegible] hath a braſen face, and iron forehead, which ſhameth not [illegible] and many like ſhameleſſe aſſertions, doe proove that he hath [illegible] and wilfull lyes. But let us paſſe to other poynts. Where this impudent [illegible] to put in print ſuch [illegible] againſt the reverend Father M. Iewell, calling him the Engliſh [illegible] merchant. Allen had [illegible] like ſhameleſſe ſcoffe; I ſaid, and one that in ſummer games might winne two games of cracking and lying [illegible] his unlearned labours doe more clerely [illegible] doe not a whit reſpect. How M. Iewel hath anſwered his challenge [illegible] teſtify unto the world, than it can be blemiſhed by this Sycophants [illegible].

Moreover, pag.343. where Allen had called that learned Father M. Pilkington, a mock-Biſhop, I ſaid, If he be a mock-Biſhop, which beſide his excellent learning, is alſo a painfull and diligent Preacher of the Goſpel, what are thoſe unlearned Aſſes, [illegible] which have nothing of a Biſhop, but a Rochet and a Miter? Such are many of the Prelates of [illegible] Ruffinus ſaith, that only England had learned Biſhops. Likewiſe I ſay, that Allen raileth like a Ruffian [illegible] in the iſſue of their new Communion [illegible] pag.259. The tearme of [illegible] I find not, but well he deſerveth it by deriding and ſcoffing at ſuch godly, learned, and honourable Fathers, as [illegible] I have noted in him againſt the Biſhops of Saliſbury and Durham, which is not yet the [illegible] part of his general mocks and diſdainfull gibes.

Deſperate Dicke I find pag.371. where Allen had picked a quarrell to M. Pilkington of Durham, as he calleth him in his mockery, ſcoffing at him in his name, that he were aſhamed of his name, and therefore ſhould looke the glory of his aſſertion, &c. I anſwered: You would faine have ſuch a man to be your Adverſary, that though you [illegible] yet you might boaſt, that you were ſo boldly as to fight with him. But it is an eaſier matter for ſuch a deſperate Dicke to beginne a fray, then to end it.

Pag.390. where Allen ſaid, that David ſeeketh to be better cleanſed then by remiſſion of ſins only, and to have his ſins wholly blotted out, and to be made as white as ſnow, by his own ſatisfaction, which was not done by Gods mercifull pardon in the ſprinkling of the blood of Chriſt, [illegible] O horrible blaſphemy. Likewiſe pag.298. where he challengeth to the Popiſh Clergy the Prieſthood after the order of Melchiſedec, which is peculiar only to our Saviour Chriſt, I affirme it more horrible [illegible] confirmed by an oath, Pſal.110. [illegible] blaſphemy [illegible] to boaſt of [illegible] not preſume to winne heaven, nay to purgatorie, nor [illegible]

Alſo pag.[illegible] where we affirme, that meere works muſt not preſume to meddle with Chriſts worke of redemption, and the office of only faith; which aſſertions Allen calleth corruptions of Chriſtian conditions, I ſay, it is a blaſphemous barking of an horrible hell-hound. And I think I have ſaid nothing more hardly, then ſuch a deviliſh blaſphemy deſerveth to heare.

But leaving Allen, let us come to Stapleton, where he ſaith, our Preachers have a new trick, to make the audience cry, Amen: [illegible] to the Devill in his own perſon for his credit ſake would be aſhamed to pronounce) I ſay it (which is ſuch a lye, [illegible] is an old tricke of a cankred ſtomacked Papiſt, pag.[illegible]

To proceed, pag.[illegible] where Stapleton had alledged that which Euſebius ſpeaketh of a heavenly crowne of glory, the ornament of Gods faithfull Prieſts, to proove the antiquity of Popiſh ſhaven crownes; I thought I had good reaſon to ſay, he is worthy to be ſhorne on his poll with a number of crownes, that underſtandeth this of a ſhaven crowne. And I aske if there be any blocke ſo ſenſeleſſe, to thinke that Euſebius called a ſhaven head, the heavenly crowne of glory.

Pag.98. I ſaid they had [illegible] years, men that lived a ſolitary life, called Monachi, Anachoretae, Eremitae, &c. but no more like the Popiſh [illegible] living in their ſwarmes, then Angells are like Devills, [illegible] Epicurean marks of theſe laſt [illegible] Canon of the Nicene Councell, confuted by the Greeke copies, and the right tranſlation of the Latin, by [illegible] Peter Crabs confeſſion, I concluded; But ſuch draff and dregs of falſifications [illegible] are good enough for Popiſh ſwine.

Pag.79. where he [illegible] that Proteſtants [illegible] body of Chriſt, in ſuch ſenſe as you affirme the Sacrament to be the body of Chriſt, [illegible] then to breake in his laſt Supper, I anſwer, [illegible] the naturall body of Chriſt, [illegible] which Chriſt commanded to be [illegible] and therefore they [illegible] Otherwiſe I ſaid, The [illegible] the body of Chriſt, meaning the Sacrament of his body) [illegible] we take not away.

The tearme of braſen-faced Stapleton I find not, but notable impudency proved by him in ſundry places. As pag.[illegible] where he is noted for charging the Proteſtants to ſay, that theſe 900 yeares and upward the Church hath periſhed, [illegible] idolatry and ſuperſtition, which is a loud impudent lie, for the Proteſtants never ſaid ſo. Againe pag.[illegible] where he is reproved for affirming Calvine to teach, that God is the cauſe and author of evill, which blaſphemy Calvine alwayes abhorreth and confuteth. Alſo pag.[illegible] he is convicted of many impudent ſlanders. And pag.[illegible] where he ſaith the Proteſtants [illegible] only call S. Gregorie that Antichriſt, which I know not whether to impute it to impudence or malice. Theſe few examples among a great number, doe proove that he deſerveth the epithete of braſen-faced or impudent Stapleton.

Pag.[illegible] I call him blockheaded Papiſt, having often before deſcried his groſſe ignorance, becauſe he ſcorneth at M. Haddon, as though he alledged preſcription of 30 yeares continuance, except ſix, of the Proteſtants doctrine, whereas the Papiſts (as he ſaith) have 900 yeares.

Pag.[illegible] thus I write: The miracles reported by M. Fox, the ſhameleſſe beaſt [illegible] being teſtified by witneſſes above all exception [illegible] he [illegible] would have our doctrine to be confirmed [illegible] ſuch as may happen by courſe of reaſon: [illegible] the ſhameleſſe dogged ſtomack of this Popiſh ſlanderer, [illegible] for any ſuch miracle, [illegible] that we are [illegible] anſwer to make, as concerning ſuch miracles, [illegible] he is not able to prove, although he would [illegible] for malice againſt the truth.

The tearme of groſſe and beaſtly ignorance, although I finde not, yet I thinke I have uſed, as I had often occaſion; whereof I will note one, that pag.[illegible] to proove the antiquity of Auguſtine Fryers, he [illegible] more then a thouſand yeares after Saint Auguſtine [illegible] in Saint Auguſtine, Frater, a Fryer, whereas that order began guſtine, Anno Domini, 1406.

Finally, *pag.*43. where he will prove that the Church of the Iews never erred, becauſe the high Prieſts anſwered truly of the nativity of Chriſt, and becauſe Caiaphas propheſyed unwittingly of the vertue of Chriſts death, I ſay there can be nothing more blockiſh then ſuch kind of reaſoning. Againe, where he ſaith, the whole Synagogue, before the Law of Chriſt tooke place, in neceſſary knowledge of the Law, did never erre: For proofe of this (ſaid I) more like a blocke then a man, he bringeth ſuch places of Scripture, as either ſhew what the Prieſts duty ſhould be, but affirme not what their knowledge was, or elſe propheſy a reformation of the corrupt ſtate of the Clergy, from ignorance to knowledge. Laſt of all, I ſay, What drunken Flemmin of Doway would reaſon thus (as Stapleton doth) The Scribes and the Phariſees ſate in Moſes Chaire, therefore the Synagogue did never, or not then erre. Whereas the falſe doctrine of the Scribes and Phariſees, concerning adultery, murder, ſwearing, the worſhippe of God, not onely the perſon, but alſo the quality of Meſſias, and his Kingdome, our Savior Chriſt himſelfe ſo often and ſo ſharpely doth reprove.

Thus have I ſet downe the occaſions of as many of theſe ſpeeches as I could find, except I ſhould have read over the whole books, that the indifferent Reader may ſee, when they be in their proper places, they ſound not ſo hardly, to proove me a railer, as they ſeeme for the moſt part, by extreame malice, impudence, ignorance, ungodlineſſe, diſdainfulneſſe of the adverſaries, to have beene rather wreſted from me, then of any uncharitable affection uttered by me. But in common civility as our ſtately cenſurer judgeth, I ſhould have forborne theſe learned and reverend men, which in many reſpects (to ſay the leaſt) may be counted my equalls; ſeeing theſe or the like tearms were not uſed amongſt the Gentiles, nor of any honeſt or Chriſtian writer ſince. I anſwer, civility is to be uſed with Citizens, but not with Traitors: learning and other good qualities to be reſpected in Chriſtian Catholiks, or at the leaſtwiſe in them that are no profeſſed enemies of Chriſtian Catholike Religion, not in malicious heretikes. For equality in learning, I will not contend with them, but for ſuperiority in truth. And yet as unlearned as I am, let the proudeſt of them all, or this Cenſurer, whom in pride and diſdainfulneſſe I thinke to paſſe them all, attaint me of ſuch ignorance, as I convince theſe learned principall pillars of Popery, in their ſeverall printed bookes, in ſo many books as I have written againſt them; and then let me juſtly beare the reproach that I ſhall be prooved to deſerve. Where he ſaith, theſe tearmes were not uſed among the Gentiles, (I will adde, with approbation of Chriſtians) nor of any honeſt or Chriſtian writer ſince; his penne runneth before his memory, if he have read; or before his wit and modeſty, if he have not read, what both Gentiles againſt Traitours, and Chriſtians againſt Heretiks and Traitors have written. And if this iſſue might be tryed in preſence, I would not doubt but make his bluſhing countenance bewray his guilty conſcience. But of this Miniſters ſcurrility againſt many men, he ſaith he might repeat a great deale more. I would he might come foorth, and ſhew what bull he hath, to raile, and uſe ſcurrility againſt all men, and yet condemne whom it pleaſeth him of railing ſcurrility. But becauſe this Miniſter anſwereth many men forſooth, one ſaid well of him, that he is the common poſthorſe of the Proteſtants, to paſſe you any anſwer without a bait, againſt any Catholike book which commeth in his way. This is even as good, as becauſe this Cenſurer ſlaundereth many men, another might ſay of him, he is the common packhorſe of the Papiſts, to carry any fardell of lyes deviſed againſt any Chriſtian man or book, that commeth in his way, and the rather becauſe he weareth a paire of winkers over his eyes like a mill-horſe, being aſhamed to ſhew either his face or his name. And more truely then of me, for (with what ſpeed ſoever) I paſſe no mans anſwer but mine own, whereas he taketh up the bundle of ſlanders, deviſed by Staphylus, Hoſius, Cocleus, Lindanus, Bolſec, and a number of other beſide. But mine anſwers are not paſſed in ſuch haſt, as the replies are returned with leiſure: it ſeemeth the beaſts that ſhould bring them are afrayde of ſtumbling. Yet Martials epithets remain to be examined, who being a perſon ſo vild and abſurd, to rail ſo unmeaſurably and continually againſt that godly learned man M. Doctor Calfhil, of learned and Chriſtian memorie, I was bold in my rejoinder againſt him, to handle in part according to his vertues.

In the beginning, which is *pag.*121. of the volume, in conſideration of his intolerable ignorance, arrogancy, and impudencie, which appeareth throughout all his book, I ſay that whereas he tearmeth himſelfe to be a Batcheller of the Law, he is more like a wrangling pettifogger in the Law, than a ſober Student in Divinity, which alſo he profeſſeth to be, for he doth in a manner nothing els but cavill, quarrell, and ſcold. Likewiſe in the very end of my book, exhorting the Papiſts for their credits ſake, to make out a better champion hereafter; I tell them as the truth is, that in this his reply, he doth nothing in a manner, but either conſtrue like an Vſher (as he was ſometimes of Winchester Schoole) or quarrell like a dogbolt Lawyer. To the ſame purpoſe *pag.*128. where M. Calfhil ſaid, If an Angel from heaven teach otherwiſe then the Apoſtles have preached unto us, be he accurſed: Martial the quarelling Lawyer findeth fault with his tranſlation, becauſe Evangelizamus may be referred as well to the Diſciples as to the Apoſtles, ſo that the Diſciples preaching are to be credited as well as the Apoſtles. No doubt (ſay I) if they preach the Doctrine of the Apoſtles, of which the controverſy is, and not of the perſons that preached. But theſe quarrells (Sir Batcheller) are more meete for the hun-courts, where perhaps you are a prating Troller, then for the Schooles of Divinity. In this ſaying, if the tearme of hun-courts ſeeme too light, I yeeld unto the cenſure of grave and godly men.

*Pag.*138. where Martiall citeth Conſtantium for the commendation of his Croſſe, I ſay he ſheweth himſelf an egregious ignorant perſon: for the ſigne which the Emperour commended to be a healthfull ſigne, and true token of vertue, was the name of Chriſt, expreſſed in the character which he ſaw. And *pag.*154. where he maketh this Syllogiſme, to prove that in time of the Eliberin Councel, pictures were worſhipped, which he ſaith followeth neceſſarily upon the words of the Canon thus: That was worſhipped, that was forbidden to be painted on the walls: but pictures were forbidden to be painted on the walls, Ergo pictures were worſhipped. Anſwer M. Calfe. Hereunto I rejoyne, Who would have thought that an Vſher of Winchester, and Student in Lovaine, that teacheth us (as he ſaid) an old Lawyers poynt, would alſo teach us a new Logick point, to conclude affirmatively in the ſecond figure, and that all upon particulars? Anſwer M. Calfe, quoth Martial. Nay anſwer Gooſe to ſuch an argument. And reaſon who will with ſuch an Aſſe any longer about this matter, for I will hearken to his Law, ſeeing his Logick is no better.

If Sir Cenſurer will defend this ſyllogiſme, and prove it to be good and lawfull, I wil revoke my tearmes.

*Pag.*141. where he ſaith, that bread and wine of the Sacrament have no promiſe, I tell him he lyeth like an arrogant hypocrite, for bread and wine have as good promiſe in the one Sacrament, as water in the other.

*Pag.*178. where M. Calfehil had diſtinguiſhed traditions into ſome neceſſary, ſome contrary to the word, ſome indifferent: I ſay Martial like an impudent aſſe, calleth on him to ſhew in what Scripture, Doctor, or Councel, he findeth this diſtinction of traditions. As though a man might not make a true diſtinction in diſputation, but the ſame muſt be found in ſo many words, in Scripture, Doctor, or Councel, when he himſelfe cannot deny, but the diſtinction is true, and every part to be found in the Scriptures, Doctors, and Councels.

*Pag.*133. I call Martiall blockhead, and ſhameleſſe Aſſe, becauſe he would prove, that the ſpirit of God is not Iudge of the interpretation of the Scripture, becauſe Paul and Barnabas in the controverſy of circumciſion went not to the [illegible]

Alſo *pag.*2[illegible]. [illegible] of only faith iuſtifying, [illegible]

Likewiſe *pag.*2[illegible]. where Martiall would know whether M. [illegible] kneeling downe before his father to aske him bleſſing, did not commit Idolatry? I ſay he is an Aſſe, that [illegible] make a difference betweene civill honour and religious worſhip.

*Pag.*26[illegible]. I call not only Martiall, but all Papiſts ſhameleſſe dogs, and blaſphemous Idolaters, which [illegible] and make vowes unto Images, which crie all to them, and offer up both prayers and ſacrifices of candles, money, jewels and other things unto Images. Whoſe Idols have given anſwers, have wagged their heads and lips.

*Pag.*29[illegible]. I ſay he [illegible] upon Calvine like a Ruffian, and ſlaundereth him like a Devill, becauſe he ſaith a ſhippe would not carry the pieces of the Croſſe that are ſhewed in ſo many places, which yet is confirmed by teſtimony of Eraſmus.

*Pag.*3[illegible]. where Martial goeth about to prove that the Sacraments are no helps of our faith, I ſaid, Did you ever heare ſuch a filthy hog grunt ſo hatefully of the holy Sacraments, that they ſhould be no helps of our faith?

Theſe are as many of the ſpeeches noted by the Cenſurer, as I can find, wherein I truſt the indifferent Reader weighing upon what cauſe they were uttered, will not ſo lightly condemne me for a railer, ſeeing no reſpect of private malice to revile them that deſerve no reproch, and not of zeal in defence of truth, to uſe vehement and ſharp ſpeeches, as all the Prophets and the mildeſt ſpirited men that ever were, have uſed againſt the adverſaries thereof. But the moſt hainous accuſation is behind, that I call Staphylus a Counſellor to an Emperour rafcall. I might anſwer as S. Paul did, when he was reproved for calling the high Prieſt, painted wall: Brethren, I knew not that he was an Emperours Counſellor: or in very deed I knew nothing in him worthy to be an honeſt mans Counſellor. But ſeeing it pleaſed an Emperour to accept him, it is as great a fault, as if an enemy of meane condition ſhould call an Engliſh Counſellor, raſcall. So ſaith our ſharp Cenſurer. But if he meant thoſe that be of the Queenes Majeſties Privie Councell, I will not ſay he playeth the raſcall, but either the ignorant foole, or the malicious vile perſon, to compare that Apoſtata Staphylus, even in his Counſellorſhip, with the meaneſt of their Honours. For they that know the manner of the Princes of Germany, and of other forraigne Princes, can teſtify, that perſonages of meane eſtate, only being learned in the Lawes, are accepted of the Emperour and other States, as their Counſellors, whoſe counſell perhaps they never uſe, but may if it pleaſe them, as of Counſellors at Law. So that one man is Counſellor to the Emperour, and to many other Princes. As for example: Ioachimus Schnederus, Doctor of both Lawes, was ordinary Profeſſour in the Univerſity of Frankford, and Counſellor of the Emperour, of the Elector, and Marques of Brandeburge, of the Dukes of Brunſwick, Lunenburge, Megleburge, and of many other Princes of Germany. This was a very great and wiſe man. But *Gaſſanaeus in Cat. glor. mundi, part.*10. *conſid.*41. ſaith, that every ſimple advocate did uſe to call himſelfe the Kings Counſellor of France, before order was taken that none ſhould uſurpe that title, except he were called unto ſome office in the Courts. And ſpeaking of ſuch as were Counſellors in office in his time, of whoſe dignity he writeth much, he complaineth that they were promoted unto that dignity in Parliaments, by meanes of money, or ſome other unknown meanes, *part.*7. *Conſ.*13. Such a noble Counſellor was Staphylus, having ſome knowledge in the Lawes, being preferred to that title by the Papiſts, of favour more then of worthineſſe, to give him ſome ſhaddow of countenance, when he became an Apoſtata from true religion, and from thoſe Chriſtian Princes and Noble men, by whom he was before upholden. And yet in truth, if the Printer had not miſtaken my writing, I called him Renegate, and not raſcall, as before I called him beaſtly Apoſtata. Perhaps the Cenſurer will ſay, I mend the matter well, to call an Emperours Counſellor, a beaſtly Apoſtata. But ſo might I have done, though he had been an Emperor himſelfe: for what els was Iulian the Emperour, but a beaſtly Apoſtata, or Renegate from Chriſtian Religion, which once he profeſſed? Yea ſuch an Apoſtata is worſe then a beaſt, for he declareth himſelfe thereby to be a reprobate. Therefore the Chriſtians in his time, whereas the Church had alwayes uſed to pray for heathen Tyrants, that held the Empire, and made havock of the Church by perſecution, contrariwiſe prayed againſt this Apoſtata, that God would confound him, and ſhorten his time. Yea the godly conſtant Biſhops did openly inveigh againſt him, as Maris Biſhop of Chalcedon, which openly called him impious Atheiſt and Apoſtata. And when Iulian counterfeiting mildnes, did nothing but revile him by his blindnes, ſaying, the Galilean thy God cannot cure thee, he anſwered, I thank my God Chriſt, that I am blind, that I might not ſee one ſo void of godlineſſe as thou art. Therfore Staphylus, being but an Emperours Counſellor, as he was, may endure to heare worſe for his Apoſtaſie, then I have ſpoken againſt him.

*Trip. hiſt. lib.*6. *c.*4.

The quarrell of words being ended, it is time to goe to the matter. Firſt, *pag.*14. of his anſwer to Maſter Charkes Preface, he noteth that D. Fulke againſt *Briſtowes Mot. pag.*92. findeth, that it is evident by Scripture, that heretikes may be burned, againſt Luther. That blaſphemous heretiks are to be put to death, I find in Scripture by the Law of blaſphemers, *Lev.*24. and by the Law of falſe prophets, *Deut.*13. neither doth Luther (I think) deny, but the equity of the ſame Lawes doth ſtill remain, although not every one that erreth obſtinately, ought to be dealt with ſo extreamly. Alſo *pag.*82. of that book I ſay, that all Proteſtants are one in God, and Chriſt their Redeemer, from which unity, diſſention about ceremonies cannot ſeparate them: and yet I except ſuch ſchiſmatiks as delight in contention. The controverſy betweene Luther and us, doth not hinder us from this unity, although Luther and other of prepoſterous zeale of godlines, doe otherwiſe account of us, which errour is of infirmity, and not of malice.

The *pag.*23. of the ſame anſwer, there is another charge, where I ſay, that text, Vow ye and render your vowes to the Lord, is a text that pertaineth to the old Teſtament, meaning that it muſt have the expoſition according to the Law, of ſuch things as God did allow, and were in mens power to performe. For what if a man vowed to ſacrifice a dogge? what ſay wee to Iepthaes raſh vowe? to the vowe of them that vowed to kill Paul? Our Cenſurer reporteth my wordes, that this text belongeth onely to the old Teſtament, as though I ſaid, there was no uſe of it in the new Teſtament. There is one lye by addition. In the ſame place, to the text, If thou wilt be perfect, goe and ſell what thou haſt, &c. I ſay, it is a ſingular tryall to that one perſon: for every man is not bound ſo to doe. Yet our Cenſurer cavilleth, that ſo all the other words ſpoken to that young man, may be reſtrayned and made ſingular, as whatſoever elſe was ſpoken to any ſingular perſon. As though my reaſon were, that therefore it was ſingular, becauſe it was ſpoken to one man. As if wee had not generall Lawes and rules, to know what is inioyned to all men, what to ſome men, and what to a ſingular perſon. In the next *pag.*24. hee quarrelleth at my expoſition of the ſaying of Saint Iames, *chap.*2. that a man is iuſtifyed of workes, and not of faith onely. Where I ſay, workes are not denyed to iuſtify before men, and onely faith, without workes, is thought to iuſtifie before God, *Rom.*3. this he calleth a poore deuice, becauſe Saint Iames talking of faith without workes, ſaith it cannot ſaue a man. Nay rather this is a poore cauill: for Saint Iames talketh of another kind of faith, as well as of another kind of iuſtification, when his ſaying ſeemeth to be contradictory to Saint Paul. And that in the place in queſtion he meaneth iuſtification before men, as in the other place a faith voide of good workes, it is manifeſt, both by his owne words, Shew me thy faith by thy workes, and alſo by the example of Abrahams triall, which was not to informe God of his iuſtification, but to giue teſtimony before men.

Pag.35: to ſhew how Proteſtants deny all Fathers, he bringeth me for an example in many places. Firſt hee ſaith the conſent of ancient Fathers is alleadged, attributing ſuperiority to Peter, upon that text, Matth.16. Thou art Peter, &c. This he ſaith I avoyd very lightly, ſaying that diuers of the ancient Fathers were deceived in opinion of Peters prerogatiue. As for the conſent of all, which he would ſeeme to make for it, is falſe: but this is not all mine anſwer, but that this prerogatiue appeareth not in the Scriptures, which was heavier than the anſwerers pen could beare: or if he thinke it doth, let him proue by Syllogiſme out of the Scriptures if he can. But untill he can, I will ſay this is a lye by detraction.

Againſt the Rocke,p.291. Secondly, where I ſay, thoſe ancient Fathers that expound the text Iohn 5. I came in my Fathers name, &c. of Antichriſt, haue no ground of their expoſition, I proue it by example of Theudas the Egyptian, Cocabus, and other that deceived the Iewes in their owne name, yet none of them was Antichriſt.

Thirdly, where he ſaith, Ierome with all the Eccleſiaſticall writers are alleadged, for the interpretation of the words of Daniel, chap. 7. which interpretation I doe not admit, becauſe it hath no direction out of the Scriptures, he maketh a lye by multiplication: for only Ieromes, with ſuch Eccleſiaſticall writers out of whom he gathered his interpretation, is alleadged.

Againſt the Fortreſſe,p.52. Fourthly, he ſlandereth me, when he chargeth me to ſay, Auguſtine doth wrongfully interprete the place: for I allow of Auguſtines ſayings to be true, but I ſay he ſpeaketh it upon a text wrongly interpreted, that is, falſly tranſlated, Hee hath placed his Tabernacle in the Sunne, whereas the truth is, He hath made in the heavens a Tabernacle for the Sunne; and ſo doth Hierome interpret it, Soli poſuit Tabernaculum in eis.

Againſt Purgatory,p.262. Fiftly, where he ſaith, that Saint Ambroſe, Ephrem, and Bede are alleadged for interpretation of certaine Scriptures, he ſaith, he noteth not what, for they are alleadged for memories of the dead, which I ſay I will not deny: but they were vſed before their times, and prayer for the dead alſo: but without warrant of Gods word, or authority of Scriptures, but ſuch as is ſo pitifully wreſted and drawne unto them, as every man may ſee, the holy Ghoſt never meant any ſuch thing, as they gather of them. This I ſpeake not of theſe three, but of ſuch as would goe about to proue prayer for the dead out of the Scriptures: as Chryſoſtome, who followeth in the ſixt place, who indeede I ſay alleageth Scripture for it, but he applieth it madly, and yet he often applieth it to the ſame purpoſe, belike it was the beſt he had for that purpoſe. Pag.237. God ſaith unto Ezechias, I will defend this Citie, for mine owne cauſe, and for David my ſervants ſake. Alas good man, what manner of reaſon is this? Be it as he ſaith, that the memory of David being a righteous man, and not rather the truth of Gods promiſe made to David, moved him to defend the Citie from the enemies: doth it therefore follow that prayer and almes are available for the dead? &c. If Maſter Cenſurer thinke Chryſoſtome haue applyed the Scripture rightly, let him gather his argument into a Syllogiſme, and we will ſhape him an other anſwere.

Againſt Martiall,pag.146. Seuenthly I will not deny, but I ſaid that thoſe fathers, whom Martiall quoted, did rather dally in trifling allegories, than ſoundly proue, that the Croſſe was prefigured in ſuch places of Scripture as they alledge. As Auguſtine maketh the two ſtickes, that the Widow of Sarepta gathered, a figure of the Croſſe. Auguſtine and Tertullian, the lifting up of Moſes hands, &c. in which places yet they meant the vertue of Chriſts death, rather than the holineſſe of the ſigne.

Moreover, page, 33. Maſter Fulke is charged to abuſe the ſimple people, in ſaying often times: prayer for the dead is an hereſie, becauſe the Montaniſts, which were heretikes held it. Nay ſir, becauſe the Montaniſts are the firſt that invented prayer for the dead, and Purgatory, ſeeing neither in Scripture, nor doctor, is any mention of either of both before Montanus, therefore he ſaith prayer for the dead is an error. But he will haue me proue, that this was ever accounted one of Montanus hereſies. Tertullian being a Montaniſt proveth it ſufficiently, for he inveigheth againſt the Catholikes of his time, whom he vſed to call Pſychicos, for denying Purgatory, and obiecteth againſt them the paraclet which was the ſpirit of Montane, which affirmed, that none but Martyrs went ſtreight to heaven, and that all other went to hell, where they muſt pay the uttermoſt farthing before they come forth, lib. de anima, capite de inferis, & an aliquid patiantur apud inferos animæ; whereas he was of an other iudgement, while he was a Catholike, and did write againſt Marcion, noting it as one of his errors, that he affirmed all the Fathers before Chriſt, to haue gone to hell, as you Papiſts doe. Adverſus Marcionem lib. 4. whereas he ſaith againſt Marcion, aliud enim Inferi ut puto, aliud quoque Abrahæ ſinus: Hell I trow is one thing, and Abrahams boſome an other thing. But againſt the Catholikes, hee writeth, that Chriſt deſcendeth to hell, to make the Patriarkes and Prophets partakers of him, whereby (ſaith he) you may knocke them on the elbow, qui ſatis ſuperbe non putent animas fidelium inferis dignas: ſerui ſuper dominum, & diſcipuli ſuper magiſtrum, aſpernati ſi forte in Abrahæ ſinus, expectandæ reſurrectionis ſolatium capere; which proudly enough thinke, the ſouls of the faithfull are not worthy of hell, being ſervants aboue their Lord, and Schollers aboue their maſter, which diſdaine to receiue the comfort of the reſurrection looked for, if it were perhaps in Abrahams boſome. That other latter Catholike writers, which lived long after Tertullian, allowed prayer for the dead, it proveth not that it was no error in Montanus, but rather that it was an error in them, ſeing before Montanus no Catholike allowed prayer for the dead. To his proud challenge, I offer not only this that I haue ſaid, of the error of praying for the dead, and Purgatory, but of ſome parts of the hereſie of the Pelagians, condemned in old time, and accuſed for hereſie: revived by the Papiſts, and the contrary doctrine by them accurſed. As the Tridentine Councell, Seſſ.6. Can.7. accurſeth them that ſay: that all workes done before iuſtification, howſoever they are done, are ſinnes indeed, or deſerue the hatred of God, or by how much ſoever a man doth indeavour to diſpoſe himſelfe to grace, that he ſinneth ſo much the more grievouſly. This doctrine, and that which neceſſarily followeth of it, is directly contrary to the Scripture, ſaying that whatſoever is not of faith is ſin: and to the decree of the Meleuitane Councell, Cap.5. and to the Scripture there alledged, Without me you can doe nothing, ergo a man without grace cannot diſpoſe himſelfe to grace. For no man can diſpoſe himſelfe to grace, except he pleaſe god, but without faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe him.

Againe, where the 16. Can. of the ſame Tridentine Chapter, accurſed him that ſhall ſay: That the commandements are impoſſible to be kept, by a man iuſtified and ſet under grace: it is contrary to the ſixt Canon of the Meleuitane Councell, which concludeth, that no man can be without ſinne; according to the ſaying of the Evangeliſt; If wee ſay we haue no ſinne, &c.

But whereas we acknowledge, that wee hold for trueth that which by Epiphanius and Auguſtine was held for an errour, in Aërius, namely, prayer for the dead; anſwering that thoſe two Doctors were deceived, hee ſaith, wee condemne the whole Church, as though it were neceſſary that the whole Church were deceived

as much as they, or if the whole Church were deceived, that we condemne it of hereſie, ſeeing prayer for the dead as it was allowed by thoſe Fathers, was an error, not an hereſie. But when by Epiphanius images in the Church are condemned and defaced, when the worſhipping of the Image of Chriſt and his Apoſtles, is both by Epiphanius and Auguſtin condemned for an hereſy of the Carpocratians and Gnoſtikes, what have they to anſwer, but either to condemne thoſe Fathers, or themſelues of error, or elſe to ſeeke out ſome cavil againſt their own conſcience, and againſt the knowledge and iudgement of all learned and indifferent men?

Pag.34. againſt Briſtowes Motives, I ſay that Vigilantius (whom the Papiſts make ſo great an heretike for denying invocation of Saints, and ſuperſtitious reverence of their reliques) was ſlaundered only by Hierome, of other learned men in his time he was counted a godly man, and a learned. Maſter Cenſurer changeth my words, as pleaſeth him. Pag.333. The pride and cruelty of Auguſtine the Monke, which came to convert the Saxons, is recorded by our Brittiſh ſtories, and proofe thereof brought of his diſdainfulneſſe in receiving the Brittiſh Biſhops, and in procuring the ſlaughter of ſo many hundred ſtudents of Bangor. His ignorance, and unſkilfulneſſe is bewrayed by himſelfe in his writing to Pope Gregory, where he moveth queſtions, which a meane licentiate in Divinity would be aſhamed to doubt of. And ſurely I ſaid of him, that he did not ſo much good in planting faith where it was not, as in corrupting the ſincerity of the faith where it was before he came. Againſt B[illegible] Mot.pag.19. Againſt Stap. pag.1. And if he planted any [illegible] many traditions, and confirmed them by lying ſignes and miracles, as a fore-runner of Antichriſt, which was even immediatly after his time to be openly ſhewed: or if by ſubtile practice, miracles have been faigned to have been done by him and reported by a credulous man Bede, it hurteth not our cauſe: ſeeing other writers report him to have been both a proud and a cruell man. Gal. Mon. And yet we receive all that doctrine which he taught, agreeable to the doctrine of the Apoſtles of Chriſt: whatſoever he taught beſide, we are not to receive it of an Angel from heaven, much leſſe of Auguſtine from Rome. But where the Cenſurer reporteth, that I ſhould call Bede a fabulous man, he is not able to bring any proofe thereof: for albeit I acknowledge, that he reporteth many fables for true miracles, yet this reverence I profeſſe to have of him, that I think, he faigned not one of them himſelfe, but had them as he confeſſeth by relation of other. Pag.332. But a fabulous man is he, that maketh lyes, and inventeth fables. Pag.97, he accuſeth me of palpable flattery, becauſe I ſay that Howlet had no conſideration of her Maieſties ſingular virtues, and other of high eſtate under her, while he complaineth of the wicked and looſe times: and this I did to ſcrape a little favour from the Court, and to make the other odious. I thank God, favour is not ſo hard for me at the Court, that I need to ſcrape it, eſpecially by ſuch fond meanes, which hath rather flowed towards me, from her Maieſty and other of high place more then I have deſerved. But to make the other odious for his ſlanderous railing and hypocriſy, I will not deny but my purpoſe was, and yet with truth, and ſufficient ground of his owne writings. For whereas in publike writing, both he and ſome other of his complices have profeſſed their reverent opinion of her Maieſties ſingular vertues, and other of high eſtate, that are under her, in his familiar letter to his worſhipfull friend, he condemneth all perſons of this time, to be void of all ſenſe of vertuous life, except theſe few Popiſh Gentlemen, which he tearmeth preciſe in matters of religion, and reſpective of their conſcience, whom he doth ſo ambitiouſly commend, that he doth moſt ſlanderouſly condemne all other, that be friends to religion and the ſtate, among whom there be (God be praiſed) great numbers to ſpeake nothing of the Prince and nobility, who in godly life and preciſe walking in the feare of God, and the obedience of his lawes, may ſhame all the Popiſh hypocrites in the world. But it is beſt to ſet downe Howlets owne words and mine anſwer to them, that the Reader may iudge, whether I have flattered as the Cenſurer ſaith more palpably, or Howlet ſlandered more venemouſly.

It was no mean comfort unto me (ſaith Howlet) to conſider that in theſe wicked and looſe times of ours, wherein there is no feeling or ſenſe of vertue left, but all men are wrapped in the love of Gods profeſſed enemy, the world, following with all force and full ſaile the vanities and ambition of the ſame: that there ſhould be found in England ſo many Gentlemen both for their yeares, livings, and other abilities, as fit to be as vaine as the reſt, yet ſo preciſe in matters of religion, and ſo reſpective to their conſciences, as that they will prefer their ſoul before their body, &c.

Hereto I beganne to anſwer thus:

Indeed Sir you have followed your ſhameleſſe ſlander with full ſaile, and have had wind at will. What ſay you? Is there no ſenſe or feeling of vertue left, but all men are wrapped in the love of Gods enemy, except thoſe few Gentlemen, the matter of your rare comfort? In your familiar letters, we muſt ſuppoſe you write as you thinke, and as to your deare and worſhipfull friend: Wherefore whatſoever you doe in common writings profeſſe, of your reverent opinion of her Maieſties ſingular vertues, and other of high eſtate, that are under her, executours of her Chriſtian lawes, all is but diſſimulation and hypocriſy, feigned gloſing, and ſervile flattery. For you acknowledge not only no vertue, but not ſo much as any ſenſe or feeling of vertue, to be left in any other, then thoſe Gentlemen Recuſants, all other men not allured, nor entangled, but even wrapped in the love even of Gods profeſſed enemy the world, not ſeduced and drawn thereby, but following, and that not ſlowly, but with all force and full ſaile, vanities and ambitions of the ſame. If this were true, it would make a more miſerable eſtate of England, then you before imagined, by impriſonment of a few good houſe-keepers. And I would heartily wiſh that you falſly ſay of all, might not be verified of ſome. But that there is no ſenſe or feeling of vertue, but all men are wrapped in the love of Gods profeſſed enemy, and that in ſo extreame a degree: except a ſmall number of obſtinatly and wilfully blinded Papiſts, that is more then ever could be iuſtly ſaid, almoſt of any heatheniſh or Turkiſh ſtate, in which the ſenſe or feeling of vertue, was never ſo wholly extinguiſhed, but ſome remained even in them that knew not God, nor ſerved him aright, &c.

Beſide this intolerable ſlaunder of the whole ſtate, and all the profeſſours of the truth, from the Prince to the pooreſt ſubiect, I would the hypocriſy and flattery of this Papiſt, and other of his coate were knowne, who in his publike epiſtle which hee preſumeth to dedicate to the Queenes Maieſtie, not a little extolleth her princely vertues, with no ſmall commendation of the Nobility, but heere in his familiar letter, ſent over ſea to his friend, bewrayeth that hee hath no opinion indeed of any ſenſe of vertue, remaining in any perſon ſave onely in a fewe obſtinate Papiſts. Wherefore let men of underſtanding iudge, whether hee in his dedicatorie Epiſtle, or I in this reproofe of his familiar letter, have flattered ſo palpably: and whether in this replie I have played the Paraſite, or the Cenſurer in this malignant ſlaunder, the ſhameleſſe Sycophant. But let us heare what reaſon he hath to convince mee of flattery. When men accuſe the times (ſaith he) muſt they except Princes by name, or elſe be accounted Traytors? As though Howlet accuſeth the times onely and not the perſons alſo. Yea all men except the Recuſants, are with him utterly voyde of all ſenſe of vertue, and in worſe caſe alſo. But why ſay you, men muſt bee accounted Traytours? I accuſed Howlet but of diſſimulation, and flattery, but belike you acknowledge ſuch ſlaunder more meete to deſerve an haynous Traitour, then a diſſembling flatterer. I doe not altogether miſlike your Cenſure, although for that matter my purpoſe was not to accuſe him ſo deepely. But you proceede and aske, What Apoſtle, what ancient Fathers did ever ſo? And I will aske you againe, what Apoſtle, what ancient Father, did ever in publike writing profeſſe his reverent opinion of any Princes ſingular vertues, and of other of high eſtate under him, and yet never-

For we [illegible] not now firſt of all conſented to the burning of Heretikes. The Arians and Anabaptiſts [illegible] in King Edwards dayes, for thirty yeares ago can beare witneſſe. But you may ſay you are ſure. I know few in other countries, but Heretikes themſelues, that deny it to be lawfull to puniſh blaſphemous obſtinate Heretikes by death. If any haue any priuate opinion, what haue we to doe with it, or to be charged by it? If I ſhould note your phraſe, when you ſay that Proteſtants doe now reigne in England, as though there were more Kings than one, you would ſay perhaps I were ouer captious. Well, let it paſſe. But ſuch things (ſaid I) as are not euidently contained in the word, a Chriſtian is not abſolutely bound to beleeue them. In plaine dealing you ſhould haue beſtowed a note in your margine, where I haue ſo ſaid, as well as noted there hereticall audacity, of your papiſticall charity. The ſaying I confeſſe or the like, yet the circumſtances of the place, where it was uttered, would perhaps haue bewrayed ſome part of your vſuall and honeſt dealing. But what cauſe haue you to cry out ſo loude, Behold the laſt refuge of a proud hereticall ſpirit, in breaking where he cannot otherwiſe get out? Call you it proud hereſie to hold that nothing is to be credited upon neceſſity of ſaluation, which hath not authority of the holy Scriptures, which are able to make a man wiſe to ſaluation, which are written that beleeuing we might be ſaued, which are able to make the man of God perfect, prepared to euery good worke?

And why doe yee dare M. Charke to avouch, that which I haue affirmed? I know he dare affirme and is able to defend this truth, but there is no reaſon that he ſhould be dared with my aſſertions. I dare affirme to your face, if you dare heare it, that a Chriſtian man is not bound to beleeue, that the common Creede was made by the Apoſtles, after that fabulous manner that you Papiſts doe teach: Namely, that Peter made one peece, Andrew an other, and ſo of the reſt: yet I doubt not, but it is gathered out of the doctrine and writings of the Apoſtles. But you haue ancient Doctors, which affirme that it was made by the Apoſtles. Origen, Tertullian, Ierome, Rufinus, Ambroſe, Auguſtine, and all the primitiue Church doe ſo conſtantly affirme it to be their doings. Let us conſider them in order. Firſt Origen in prooem. lib. de princip. teſtifieth, that the Apoſtles by their preaching did moſt plainely deliuer the ſumme of faith according to the capacity of the moſt ſimple, whereof he maketh a rehearſall containing indeed ſome Articles of the Creede, but neither all nor any one in ſuch forme of words as our Creede doth expreſſe them. And before he beginneth the rehearſall of them, thus hee ſaith: Species vero eorum quæ per prædicationem Apoſtolicam manifeſte traduntur, iſta ſunt. Theſe are the particulars of thoſe things, which by the preaching of the Apoſtles are manifeſtly deliuered. Which words doe ſhew, that the Apoſtles indeede taught the Doctrine, yet proue not that they made this Creede, rather than the Nicene Creede or Athanaſius Creede.

Tertullian againſt Praxeas, much after the ſame manner, yet more neere the words of the Creed rehearſeth the Articles pertaining to the three perſons of the Deity, and then he addeth: Hanc regulam ab initio euangelij decurriſſe, etiam ante priores quoſque hæreticos, nedum ante Praxeam heſternum, probabit tam ipſa poſteritas omnium hæreticorum, quam ipſa nouellitas Praxeæ heſterni. That this rule hath run downe from the beginning of the Goſpell, euen before all former Heretikes, not only before Praxeas a yeſterdayes birth, as well the latter ſpring of all Heretikes ſhall proue, as the very noueltie of Praxeas one that came but yeſterday.

That the rule of faith contained in the Creed, is as ancient as the preaching of the Goſpell, I alwayes agreed with Tertullian: but that the Apoſtles made the Creede, I heare him yet ſay neuer a word.

[illegible] ad Pammachium againſt the errours of Iohn of Ieruſalem, ſaith: In ſymbolo fidei & ſpei noſtræ, quod ab Apoſtolis traditum [illegible] in charta & atramento, ſed in tabulis cordis carnalibus, poſt confeſſionem trinitatis [illegible] Chriſtiani dogmatis ſacramentum carnis reſurrectione concluditur. In the ſymbole of our faith and hope, which being deliuered from the Apoſtles, is not written in paper and inke, [illegible] of our [illegible] after the [illegible] of the Trinitie, and the unity of the Church, all the myſterie of [illegible] the reſurrection of the fleſh. Although it be granted that Saint Ierome here ſpeaketh of our common Creede [illegible] You [illegible] of [illegible], which Auguſtine [illegible] 115 [illegible] every Apoſtle [illegible], and more to your purpoſe [illegible], howſoeuer [illegible] is the [illegible] opinion of the late Papiſts, but neuer was [illegible] by Auguſtine [illegible] gotten under the ſhadow of his name. To conclude, as ſome of the ancient Fathers [illegible] thinke the Creed was of the Apoſtles making, ſo none of them affirmeth, that it is damnable to doubt thereof, ſo it a man doubt not of the doctrine contained therein, whereof the holy Ghoſt is Author, as it is proved by the holy Scriptures, whether the Apoſtles or their ſucceſſors did gather this ſhort ſumme or forme of beliefe, which we call the Apoſtles Creed.

For the obſeruation of the Eaſter day, which is the ſecond point wherein you dare Maſter Charke, I dare affirme, that though it be not commanded in the Scripture, the obſeruation thereof is not neceſſary to ſaluation. That Anicetus called it an Apoſtolike tradition, it is not materiall, ſeeing that very contention, which he reporteth [illegible] obſeruation of Eaſter, according to the Apoſtolike tradition, by the immediate ſucceſſors of the Apoſtles, Anicetus and Polycarpus doe plainely teſtifie, what credit is to be giuen to the traditions of the Apoſtles without the warrant of the Apoſtles writings. Euſeb. lib. 5. cap. 26. For while Anicetus pretendeth the tradition of S. Peter, and Polycarpus S. Iohn, and neither would yeeld to other, they teach us what to eſteeme of traditions apoſtolicall, not contained in the holy Scriptures: Namely, that in theſe dayes there can be no certainty of them, when they which might ſee and heare the Apoſtles themſelues, could not agree about them. Laſt of all, which you make the greateſt matter, the perpetuall virginity of the Mother of Chriſt after his birth, although for my part I doe beleeue it, and wiſh all men ſo to doe; yet dare I affirme, that it is not damnable, not to beleeue it, except it can be proved, that the Scripture hath taught it. But you obiect againſt me, firſt the condemnation of Heluidius, teſtified by Hieronimus. Whereto I anſwere, that he was iuſtly condemned, not becauſe he beleeved not, but becauſe he did obſtinately deny it, and troubled the peace of the Church, about an unneceſſary queſtion.

But you aske us, if we remember not the ſolemne curſe for this matter, of ſo many holy Biſhops recorded and confirmed by Saint Ambroſe, Ep. 81. & 79. It ſeemeth you remember it not your ſelfe, for that curſe contained in the end of the Ep. 81. was againſt them that like Manichees, denyed that our Sauiour Chriſt tooke fleſh of a Virgine. And Ep. 79. he reproveth them which did contend, that the virgine Mary had more ſonnes than our Sauiour Chriſt, which to affirme is a great errour: and conuinced by the authority of the Scripture, ſeeing as Ambroſe well noteth, our Sauiour Chriſt committed his mother to Iohn the Evangeliſt, which had not bin needfull, if ſhe had naturall ſonnes of her owne, which might take care of her.

But you will ſtop our mouthes if you can, (as you ſay) with theſe words of S. Auguſtin, Integra fide credendum eſt, &c. We muſt beleeue with a ſound faith bleſſed Mary the mother of Chriſt to haue conceiued in virginity, to haue brought forth her ſonne in virginity, and to haue remained a virgine after her child-birth, neither muſt we yeeld to the blaſphemy of Helvidius. Your author goeth on and telleth what that was: Qui dixit, fuit virgo ante partum, non virgo poſt partum. Who ſaid, ſhee was a virgine before her child-birth, ſhee was no virgine after her child-birth. But where ſhall we find this ſaying in S. Auguſtine? Your quotation directeth us to Auguſtine Enchirid. Cap. 34. where indeed ſome mention is of Maries virginity, namely, that ſhe conceived in virginity, but nothing of Heluidius or his hereſie. Wherefore it ſeemeth, that out of Caniſius, or ſome other mans collection your common places of the Doctors ſayings are borrowed, and not taken out of your owne reading. Therefore howſoeuer you haue miſtaken the matter, the ſaying you alleadge is in the baſtard booke De dogmatibus Eccleſiaſticis, Cap. 69. which may as eaſily be knowen from Auguſtines writing, as a Gooſe from a Swanne. And yet if it were of as good authority as Auguſtines owne writing, it were not ſufficient to ſtop our mouth, when we heare that we are ſlandered. For we dare not ſay with Heluidius, (which is the blaſphemy noted by that writer) that the Virgin Mary was no Virgin after her child-birth, although we ſay, that it is no article of faith, neceſſary to ſaluation, except it haue demonſtration out of the holy Scripture: neither doth your author ſay, it is blaſphemy to doubt of it, but to deny it, although for my part I doe neither deny it, nor doubt of it, but beleeue it as I doe many other truths, not expreſſed in the Scripture, but yet not as articles of Chriſtian faith neceſſary to ſaluation. I will conclude with a ſaying of S. Ierome, and ſtop your mouth if I can, which concerning this very queſtion in controverſie againſt Heluidius, to ſhew what a man is bound to beleeue upon neceſſity of ſaluation, even that which is contained in the Scriptures, and that which is not contained, that he is not bound upon loſſe thereof, to beleeue: thus writeth: Sed ut hæc quæ ſcripta ſunt, non negamus, ita ea quæ non ſunt ſcripta, renuimus. Natum Deum eſſe de virgine, credimus, quia legimus: Mariam nupſiſſe poſt partum non credimus, quia non legimus. But as we doe not deny thoſe things that are written, ſo we doe refuſe thoſe things that are not written. That God was borne of a Virgin we beleeue, becauſe we haue read it: that Mary uſed mariage after her childbirth, we beleeue not, becauſe we haue not read it. There you ſay, Loe Maſter Charke, S. Auguſtine maketh it both a matter of faith, and the denying thereof to be blaſphemy: how will you auoide this? It is eaſily auoyded, for it is falſe in many reſpects, firſt S. Auguſtine ſaith it not, but ſome obſcure man of much later time, leſſe learning, and authority, as the barbarous ſtile in many places declareth: ſecondly, he ſaith not, that it is a matter of faith, to beleeue the perpetuall virginity of Mary, but that ſhe conceiued, brought forth, and remained a Virgin after her childbirth. Thirdly, hee maketh not the doubting thereof to be blaſphemy, but the obſtinate denying of Heluidius, which ſaid ſhee was no Virgin after her childbirth. But how will you auoide that which Saint Ierome writeth, Wee refuſe thoſe things that are not written, we beleeue not becauſe we haue not read in the Scripture, any thing hereof as neceſſary to ſaluation.

Pag. 158. you doe not ſee why you ſhould beleeue a Charke or a Fulke comming but yeſterday from the Grammer ſchole, before a Cyprian, a Tertullian, a Baſil, a Ierome, an Ambroſe, or an Auguſtine, eſpecially in a matter of fact (as your caſe is) ſeeing they liued more than twelue or thirteene hundred yeares neerer to the deede doing than theſe Miniſters doe. Why ſir, I pray you, who requireth you to beleeue any [illegible] , all [illegible] beſide [illegible] in [illegible] deed [illegible] were [illegible] of [illegible] what was the Apoſtles [illegible], which was not [illegible] Anicetus, [illegible] time, could [illegible] certainty thereof. And [illegible] Ceremony or practiſe the Apoſtles [illegible] was [illegible] in the Scripture, was but [illegible] arbitrary in the power of the Church to [illegible] which as it might [illegible] for edifying. Finally, where you affirme, that Fulke came but yeſterday from the [illegible] Schole, [illegible] it ſeeme that he is but a young Grammarian, either your dayes be neere as long as [illegible] or elſe your pen runneth beyond your knowledge of him, or at leaſtwiſe your malice over[illegible] ledge. But yet to this extremity (of crediting one Clarke, or Fulke before ſo many ancient fa[illegible] for you are driven, and bad men hearken a little how D. Fulke handleth theſe men about traditions. And [illegible] S. Cyprian alleadging the tradition of Chriſt himſelfe, concerning the mingling of wine and water in the Ch[illegible]: But if Cyprian had ben well urged (ſaith Fulke) he would haue better conſidered of the matter. Thus you would make men beleeue, that I oppoſe nothing but mine owne authority or credite againſt S. Cyprian. But then you ſhamefully belie me; for this is the matter, and theſe are my words which you haue gelded at your pleaſure.

Againſt Mart. p. 170.

Whereas Cyprian ad Pompeium calleth all traditions to the writings and commaundements of the Apoſtles, Martiall crieth out that Cyprian is ſlandered, becauſe he himſelfe alleageth the tradition of Chriſt, for mingling of water with wine. If Cyprian brake his owne rule, who can excuſe him? But if he had beene urged as much for the neceſſity of water, as he was for the neceſſity of wine in the Sacrament, he would haue better conſidered of the matter. Who ſeeth not I ſuppoſe no leſſe authority againſt Cyprian, than of Cyprian himſelfe, and therefore I boaſt not of mine owne credit about his?

To proceede, Tertullian is alleadged ſaying that the bleſſing with the ſigne of the Croſſe, is an Apoſtolike tradition. Fulke. Tertullians iudgement of tradition without Scripture in that place is corrupt. If I ſhould ſearch no further, here is a reaſon of Fulkes miſlike of Tertullians iudgement added, becauſe he affirmeth tradition of the Apoſtles, without the writing of the Apoſtles. But indeed there is in the place by you noted, other arguments in theſe words: Tertullians iudgement of tradition without Scripture in that place is corrupt, for Martiall himſelfe confeſſeth, that a tradition unwritten ſhould be reaſonable and agreeable to the Scriptures: and ſo he ſaith the tradition of bleſſing with the Croſſe is, becauſe the Apoſtles by the holy Ghoſt delivered it. But who ſhall aſſure us thereof? Tertullian and Baſil are not ſufficient warrant for ſo worthy a matter, ſeeing Saint Paul leaveth it out of the univerſall armour of God. This laſt and invincible argument in rehearſing my words you leave out, which becauſe perhaps you could not ſee in few words, I will ſet it more abroad. The univerſall ſpirituall armour of God, is delivered by Saint Paul Eph. 6. bleſſing with the ſigne of the Croſſe is not there delivered by S. Paul: therefore bleſſing with the ſigne of the Croſſe is no part of the ſpirituall armour of God. Now let us ſee, whether you will beleeve a Paul before a Tertullian, or a Baſil; or a Fulke with Saint Paul, before a Baſil with Tertullian without Saint Paul or againſt Saint Paul?

Epheſ. 6.

But you goe forward, Saint Hierome is alledged, ſaying that Lent faſt is the tradition of the Apoſtles. Fulke. Hierome untruely aſcribeth that Tradition to the Apoſtles. My wordes are againſt Briſtowes Mot. pag. 35. theſe: Againſt Saint Hierome ſayeth; it was a Tradition of the Apoſtles to faſt forty dayes in the yeare. If this bee true, then is the Popiſh ſtorie falſe, that maketh Teleſphorus Biſhoppe of Rome author of that Lenten Faſt. Euſebius ſheweth the great diverſity of faſting before Eaſter lib. 5. cap. 26. ſaying that ſome faſted but one day, ſome two dayes, ſome more, ſome forty houres of day and night. This diverſity proveth, that Hierome untruely aſcribeth that Tradition to the Apoſtles, which ſhould have beene kept uniformely, if it had any inſtitution of the Apoſtles. Among ſo many arguments and authorities, cited for proofe, you can find nothing, but Fulke ſaith bluntly; Hierome untruely aſcribeth that Tradition to the Apoſtles. Sed perge mentiri; Saint Chryſoſtome is alledged, ſaying that the Apoſtles decreed, that in the Sacrifice of the Altar, there ſhould bee made prayer for the departed. Fulke: where hee ſaith it was decreed by the Apoſtles, &c. hee muſt pardon us for crediting him, becauſe hee cannot ſhew it out of the actes and writings of the Apoſtles. If I had added none other argument, this had been ſufficient for us, to forbeare crediting any thing of the Apoſtles: whereof we have not the Holy Ghoſt in their writings to be witneſſe. But you ſhall heare what I oppoſe againſt Chryſoſtome, beſide this. Againſt pag. 303. it followeth immediately upon theſe wordes noted by [illegible] ſaying: Hom. de Adam & Heva; Satis ſufficere, &c. We thinke it ſufficeth enough, whatſoever the writings of the Apoſtles have taught us, according to the aforeſaid rules: inſomuch that wee [illegible] Catholike, whatſoever ſhall appeare otherwiſe to be ruled [illegible]. And againe In Gen. Hom. 58. Vides in quantum, &c. Thou ſeeſt into how great abſurdity they fall which will not follow the Canon of holy Scripture, but permit all things to their owne reaſonings. But if wee be further urged, then will I alleadge that which hee ſaith In Evang. Ioan. hom. 58. Quia ſacra, &c. hee that uſeth not the holy Scriptures, but climbeth another way, that is, by a way not allowed, is a theefe. What may bee as bold with Chryſoſtome, as hee ſaid hee would bee with Paul himſelfe, in 2. ad Tim. Hom. 2. Plus aliquid dicam, &c. I will ſay ſomewhat more, wee muſt not bee ruled by Paul himſelfe, if hee ſpeake any thing that is his owne, and any thing that is humane, but wee muſt obey the Apoſtle when hee carrieth Chriſt ſpeaking in him. Wherefore ſeeing it is evident, that by teſtimony of Iuſtinus Martyr, that there was no mention of the dead, in the celebration of the Lords Supper, for more than an hundred yeares after Chriſt, wee muſt not beleeve Chryſoſtome without Scripture, affirming that it was ordeyned ſo by the Apoſtles. As though this place had not beene ſufficient to convince your impudent lying, you goe forward, and ſay, that pag. 350. and 363. of the ſame booke I anſwere to diverſe Fathers alleadged together, beſide Chryſoſtome for the ſame purpoſe: Who is witneſſe that [illegible] would [illegible] why the Lord would not have this ſet forth by Mathew, Marke, Luke, and Paul? Why they were not choſen Scribes thereof rather than Tertullian, Cyprian, Hierome, Auſten, and others ſuch as you name? [illegible] is a counterfeit inſtitution, and feigned tradition. Here you note in the margent a proud queſtion, which is [illegible] ſo right as if I ſhould [illegible] Lord [illegible] and [illegible] by [illegible] convicted of errours, as you [illegible] you [illegible] anſwer this queſtion, to the ſatisfaction of any man [illegible] it, and ſay it is a proud queſtion. As though it were pride [illegible] juſt cauſe of doubt. But in truth, my wordes are [illegible] the [illegible] inſtitution. If it be lawfull for mee once to poſe the Apoſtles, as you [illegible] I [illegible] why the Lord would not have this doubtleſſe inſtitution, and as you [illegible] of the Sacrament, plainely, or at the leaſtwiſe obſcurely ſet forth by M[illegible], Marke, Luke, or Paul, which all have ſet forth the ſtorie of the action of Chriſt, the inſtitution of the Sacrament, and the end or uſe of the ſame. If it were not meete at all to bee put in writing, why was it diſpenſed by Tertullian, Cyprian, Auguſtine, &c. If it were meete to be put in writing, why were not thoſe choſen Scribes, Mathew, Marke, Luke, and Paul, worthy of all credite, rather appoynted for it, then Tertullian, Cyprian, Auguſtine, and ſuch as you name? But againſt this counterfeit inſtitution, and feigned tradition Saint Paul cryeth with open mouth unto the Corinthians, 1 Cor. 11. That which I delivered to you I received of the Lord &c. which wrote to them of all.

In divers proud and fooliſh queſtions:

Laſt of all you ſay, that being urged by the like, I diſcredite all antiquity, ſaying: It is a common thing with the ancient Writers to defend every ceremonie which was uſed in their time, by tradition of the Apoſtles. Indeede the wordes are mine, the occaſion as of all the reſt fraudulently and falſely omitted. For upon occaſion of Chryſoſtome alleadged to proove that mention of the dead was made at the Communion, by tradition of the Apoſtles, for which I remit him to mine anſwer of Allen lib. 2. cap. 5. I adde moreover theſe wordes. If wee ſhould admit all things to bee ordained of the Apoſtles, which ſome of the old Writers doe aſcribe to their traditions, wee ſhould receive many things, which even the Papiſts themſelves doe not obſerve: As that it is a wicked thing to faſt on Sunday, or to pray kneeling, that oblations are to be made for mens birth-dayes, &c. Which with diverſe other ſuperſtitions, Tertullian fathereth upon the tradition of the Apoſtles, as well as oblations for the dead, De cor. Mil. Hearing therefore ſuch manifeſt untruethes, are fathered upon the Apoſtles tradition, by moſt ancient Writers, what credite can wee have of their tradition, without their writing? By this the Reader may ſee, how honeſtly and truely, you ſay there are ſet before you a paire of ballance, with Clarke and Fulke, in one end: and Cyprian, Origen, Tertullian, Baſill, &c. in an other end. And Fulke oppoſeth himſelfe againſt them all. Whereas in every place by you noted, hee oppoſeth either the holy Scriptures, or other ancient Writers, or the ſame writers themſelves, or evident and manifeſt reaſon, to proove that ſuch things are untruely fathered upon the Apoſtles tradition.

Againſt Briſt. Mot. p. 36.

Laſt of all; for your farewell, you charge Doctor Fulk to affirme that the book of the Machabees was written with a prophane and ambitious ſpirit. Againſt purg. pag. 209. Indeed in that place among many other reaſons which I bring to proove that ſtory not to be the Canon of the Scriptures, I ſay, that he maketh a very prophane Preface, ambitiouſly commending his travels, and ſhewing the difference betweene a ſtory at large and an abridgment, &c. If you be able to defend that booke to be Canonicall, anſwer my reaſons, and prepare your ſelfe to anſwer as many more, as may be alledged to convince the vanity and falſhood of that ſtory: and ſo I leave you to a better mind, if it be Gods will to give it you.

I finde alſo, that in the Popiſh annotations, upon the New Teſtament printed at Rhemes, my writings are carped at in two places, the former upon 2. Theſſal. 2. where my wordes upon Sanders, Rocke, pag. 248. and pag. 278. are rehearſed: In which I ſay that Leo and Gregory Biſhoppes of Rome, although they were not come to the full pride of Antichriſt, yet the myſtery of iniquity having wrought in that ſeate neere five or ſixe hundred yeares before them, and then greatly increaſed, they were ſo deceived with the long continuance of errour, that they thought the dignity of Peter was much more over the reſt of his fellow Apoſtles, then the holy Scriptures of God (againſt which no continuance of errour can preſcribe) doe either allow, or beare withall.

Againe, the teſtimonies of Leo and Gregorie, Biſhoppes of Rome, as alwayes, ſo now I deeme to bee unmeete to bee heard in their owne cauſe, though otherwiſe they were not the worſt men, yet great furtherers of the authority of Antichriſt, which ſoone after their dayes tooke poſſeſſion of the chayre, which they had helped to prepare for him.

For this I am called a malapert Scholler of Bezaes impudent Schoole. But by what reaſon? For placing the myſterie of Antichriſt, as working in the See of Rome even in Saint Peters time. That the myſterie of Antichriſt did worke in Saint Peters time, the text of S. Paul is plaine. That it did worke in Rome, where Antichriſt ſhould bee openly ſhewed, Saint Iohn is plaine in the Revelation, Ca. 17. ver. 9. & 18. yea, the Papiſtes confeſſing that Saint Peter called Rome Babylon, muſt needes graunt as much: this onely then remaineth in controverſy, whether in the See or Church of Rome, the myſterie of iniquity did worke, from the Apoſtles time, untill Antichriſt was openly ſhewed. Seeing it wrought at Rome, it wrought either in the Church, or altogether out of the Church: but it wrought not altogether out of the Church, therefore it wrought in the Church. That the myſterie of iniquity preparing for that Antichriſt wrought not altogether out of the Church, it is manifeſt, becauſe the ſeate of Antichriſt is propheſyed to bee in the Temple and Church of God. Without the Church, was not the myſterie of iniquity againſt Chriſt, but open wickedneſſe and perſecution of Chriſts Church. Therefore within the Church that myſterie did worke. By what meanes firſt, it is not certaine, becauſe it was a ſecret, not revealed by the Apoſtle. Some conjecture that it was by preferring one Biſhoppe before all the Clergy of Elders or Prieſts, which at the firſt were equall. Some thinke that ſuch faction began at Rome, as afterward were at Corinth, one holding of Cephas, that is Peter, another of ſome other. How ever it was, the challenge made to Peters chayre, and from the dayes of Victor, diverſe Biſhoppes of Rome creeping up by little and little, and pretending authority over other Churches, and other Churches reverencing that See, for many good reſpects, were abuſed by Sathan to ſet forward his purpoſe in advancing the Throne of Antichriſt. And where I ſaid that Leo and Gregorie were great furtherers of the authority of Antichriſt, my meaning was not, that they did wittingly and willingly prepare a ſeate for Antichriſt, but that the Devill by Gods permiſſion, becauſe hee was to ſend the efficacy of errour into the world, tooke hold in the time appoynted of that authority, which the Biſhoppes for the dignity of their See, and as they thought for the benefit of the Church, did labour ſo greatly to maintaine and increaſe. Neither write I any thing contrary to the challenge of that reverend Father the Biſhop of Sarum, as they charge me, who ſaid at Pauls Croſſe, O Gregorie, O Leo, if you be deceived, you have deceived us: For his meaning was not thereby to allow whatſoever they had done or written, but that in ſome ſuch matters as are in controverſy betweene the Papiſts and us, even Gregory and Leo are witneſſes againſt them.

[illegible] verſ.6. in theſe words. Yea muſt [illegible] of the Arrians and Heretikes (except theſe latter be rather [illegible] pretending of ignorance [illegible], that Chriſt was a Prieſt, or did ſacrifice, according to his Godhead, which is to make Chriſt [illegible] Prieſt, and not his Sonne, and to doe ſacrifice and homage to him, as his Lord, and not as his equall in dignity and nature. Therefore Saint Auguſtine ſaith, in Pſalm.109. Thou as hee was man, hee was Prieſt: as God hee was not Prieſt. And Theodoret in Pſalm.109. As man hee did offer ſacrifice, but as God hee received ſacrifice. And againe, Chriſt touching his humanitie was called a Prieſt, and hee offered none other hoſt but his owne body, &c. [illegible] of our new Maſters not knowing ſo much, did let fall out of their pennes the [illegible] and being admoniſhed of the errour, and that it was very Arrianiſme, yet they perſiſt in it, of meere ignorance in the grounds of Divinity. Firſt [illegible] the intollerable pride of theſe Popiſh Interpreters, that challenge to themſelves all learning and knowledge [illegible] Divinity, condemning all other men of ignorance and meere ignorance in the grounds of Divinity: So playeth Briſtow with the Biſhoppe of Sarum, whom in the place by them quoted, I reproved in theſe words: The like impudent cavill he bringeth againſt Maſter Iewell, whom no man I thinke without laughter can reade, to be charged with ignorance by blundering Briſtow, for affirming Chriſt to be a Prieſt according to his Deity, whom the Apoſtle expreſſely ſaith by his eternall ſpirit to have offered himſelfe, Hebr.9. verſe 14. But that you may the better underſtand this controverſy betweene us, we deny not that Chriſt was a Prieſt according to his humanity, but we affirme that whole Chriſt is a Prieſt as he is both God and man. For [illegible] office of Prieſthood two things muſt be conſidered, a miniſtery and an authority. In reſpect of the miniſteriall part, our Saviour Chriſt performed that office as man: but in reſpect of authority of entring into the holyeſt place, and reconciling us to God and preſenting us unto God, which was the principall part of his Prieſthood, he did performe it as the Sonne of God, as Lord and maker of the houſe, and not as a ſervant, but as God, which hath created all things. Hebr.3, verſ. 1.2.3.4.5. and 6. Againſt this ſound doctrine, let us examine what the Heretikes alleadge. Firſt, they charge it moſt odiouſly with Arrianiſme, but without all ſparke of reaſon; ſeeing we diſtinguiſh plainly the authority of God the Sonne, which is equall with his Father, from the miniſtery of the man Ieſus Chriſt inferiour to his Father, as touching his manhood. Secondly, they charge us that wee ſticke not to ſay: Chriſt was a Prieſt or did ſacrifice according to his Godhead. We ſay he was a Prieſt and did offer ſacrifice, both according to his Godhead, and according to his manhood. And the ſame ſaith the Apoſtle in effect, when he ſaith: The blood of Chriſt, which by his eternall ſpirit, offered himſelfe unreproveable to God, ſhall purge your conſcience, &c. Hebr.9.14. For not the bloud of beaſts, nor of any man though he had been innocent, but the bloud of that man which was God, was the price of our redemption; in which reſpect the Apoſtle Act.20.verſ.28. ſaith that God purchaſed his Church unto himſelfe by his owne bloud. For by the eternall ſpirit is underſtood that infinite power of the Divinity, united to the humanity, by which the Sacrifice of Chriſt was conſecrated, that by the ſame lively or quickning vertue, by which he created us he might alſo reſtore us. Whereunto our Saviour Chriſt had regard, when he ſaid Iohn 6. It is the ſpirit that giveth life, the fleſh profiteth nothing. But this (ſay the Papiſts) is to make Chriſt God the Fathers Prieſt, and not his Sonne. Nay rather this is to acknowledge Chriſt to bee both his Fathers Sonne, and his Prieſt, even as the Apoſtle ſaith: The Law appoynteth Prieſts, men that have infirmity: but the word of the oath which is after the Law, the Sonne for ever perfected. Hebr.7. verſ.28. Where by the oppoſition of men having infirmity, with the Sonne perfected for ever: it is moſt cleare, that the word of the oath maketh Chriſt, as he is the Sonne of God, a Prieſt after the order of Melchiſedech. Where I cannot omit the ſhamefull corruption of this text in the Popiſh tranſlation, which to hide this oppoſition, betweene men, and God the ſonne of God, hath altogether left out this word, men, although it be in the Latine expreſſed manifeſtly. Lex enim homines conſtituit ſacerdotes infirmitatem habentes, which they tranſlate thus: For the Law appoynteth Prieſts, them that have infirmity.

But to proceede. Our accuſers adde further, that our aſſertion is to make Chriſt to doe ſacrifice and homage to God his Father, as his Lord, and not as his equall in dignity and nature. I anſwere, no more then when Saint Paul ſaith, that Chriſt when he was in the forme of God, and thought it no robbery to be equall with God, he made himſelfe of no reputation, tooke upon him the ſhape of a ſervant, became obedient to the death, even the death of the Croſſe. I have ſufficiently before diſtinguiſhed, that all parts of his Prieſthood that required obedience, ſervice, homage, miniſtery, ſubjection, hee performed as man: but the authority of reconciling men unto God, he wrought as God and man, even as the Apoſtle writeth: God was in Chriſt reconciling the world to himſelfe, 2 Cor.5. verſ.19. That he might be a Prieſt therefore able and worthy to make atonement with God, he was God, that his reconciliation and ſatisfaction might extend to men, he was man: and ſo being God and man he is a perfect mediator between God and man, and an high Prieſt for ever after the order of Melchiſedech.

All this notwithſtanding, they oppoſe againſt us the authority of the Fathers, who doubtleſſe had no other meaning then wee to keepe this diſtinction. Firſt, Auguſtine in Pſalm.109. is produced to ſay, that as he was man he was Prieſt, as God he was not Prieſt. But Auguſtines words are ſomewhat otherwiſe upon the text, Iuravit Dominus, &c. Ad hoc enim natus ex utero ante Luciferum, ut eſſet ſacerdos in aeternum ſecundum ordinem Melchiſedech. Si natum ex utero de Virgine intelligimus ante Luciferum noctu, ſicut Evangelia conteſtantur, procul dubio inde ex utero ante Luciferum; ut eſſet Sacerdos in aeternum ſecundum ordinem Melchiſedech. Nam ſecundum id quod natus eſt de patre Deus apud Deum, coaeternus gignenti, non Sacerdos: ſed Sacerdos propter carnem aſſumptam, propter victimam, quam pro nobis offerret: a nobis acceptam. The Lord hath ſworne, &c. For to this end thou waſt borne out of the wombe before the dayſtarre, that thou mighteſt bee a Prieſt for ever after the order of Melchiſedech. For according to that hee is borne of God the Father God with God, coeternall with him that begetteth, hee is not a Prieſt: but a Prieſt for his fleſh aſſumpted, for the ſacrifice which being taken of us, hee might offer for us.

In theſe words Auguſtines meaning is plain enough that Chriſt according to his divine and eternall generation, could not have been a Prieſt for us, except he had taken our fleſh and been borne a man, which we doe alwayes confeſſe. But that our redemption by his ſacrifice was the meere worke of his manhood only, he ſaith not, but the contrary if he be marked. For he ſaith that the Sonne of God was a Prieſt, for the fleſh that he tooke of us, that he might offer for us that ſacrifice which he took of us. Here it is plain that Chriſt as God offereth ſacrifice; but he offereth as a Prieſt, for to offer Sacrifice pertaineth to a Prieſt; therefore Chriſt as God is a Prieſt, yet not as God only, but as God and man. Whereupon the ſame Auguſtine ſaith afterward: O Domine qui iuraſti, &c. O Lord which haſt ſworne and ſaid, Thou art a Prieſt for ever, after the order of Melchiſedech, the ſame Prieſt for ever, is the Lord on thy right hand, the very ſame I ſay Prieſt for ever, of whom thou haſt ſworne, is the Lord on thy right hand, becauſe thou haſt ſaid to the ſame, My Lord, ſit thou on my right hand, untill I make thine enemies thy footeſtoole.

Here

[illegible], he was God, [illegible] he was man, it that eternall Prieſt. [illegible] God, that he to [illegible] for God [illegible] and [illegible].

The next authority brought againſt us, is Theodoret in Pſal.109. who of himſelfe ſaith: As man, hee did offer ſacrifice, as God hee did receive ſacrifices. Verily we ſay [illegible] as God alſo reconciling the world to himſelfe. But to ſpeak the words of Theodoret [illegible]: [illegible] ſecundum carnem [illegible] corpus Eccleſiam [illegible] autem ea quae offeruntur, ut Deus; offert verò Eccleſia, corporis eius [illegible] per primitias ſanctificans. And Chriſt is now a Prieſt, which is ſprung of Iuda according to the fleſh, not offering any thing himſelfe, but is called the head of them that offer, ſeeing hee calleth the Church his body, and therefore he exerciſeth the Prieſthood as a man, and he receiveth thoſe things that are offered, as God: and the Church truely doth offer the tokens of his body and blood, ſanctifying every leaven by the firſt fruits. In theſe words Theodoret ſpeaketh not of the ſacrifice that Chriſt offered himſelfe, but of the ſpirituall ſacrifice of thankeſgiving, which the Church offereth to him in celebrating the memorie of his death: not of the Prieſthood which Chriſt did exerciſe in earth, but of the Prieſthood which he doth exerciſe in heaven, not now offering any thing, but as God receiving oblations. And where he ſaith, that now he exerciſeth the Prieſthood as man, he denieth not but that he doth exerciſe it as Mediator, God and man. Which is more plaine in his expoſition of the Epiſtle to the Hebrewes, chap.8. where he inquireth how Chriſt doth both ſit at the right hand of maieſtie, and yet is a Miniſter of the holy things: Quoniam enim munere ſacerdotali fungitur, qui ſeipſum ſemel obtulit, & non offert amplius ſacrificium? Quomodo autem fieri poteſt, ut idem & ſedeat, & ſacerdotali officio fungatur? Niſi forte dixerit quiſpiam eſſe munus ſacerdotale, ſalutem quam ut Dominus procurat. Tabernaculum autem vocavit coelum, cuius eſt ipſe opifex, quem ut hominem dixit Apoſtolus fungi ſacerdotio. For what prieſtly office doth he exerciſe, which hath once offered up himſelfe, and doth no more offer any ſacrifice? And how can it be, that the ſame perſon ſhould together both ſit, and exerciſe the Prieſtly office? Except perhaps a man will ſay that the ſalvation which he procureth as Lord, is a Prieſtly office.

Neither hath he any other meaning, Dialog. primo, where his purpoſe is to prove, that Chriſt had a body, Si eſt ergo ſacerdotum proprium, offerre munera, Chriſtus autem quod ad humanitatem quidem attinet, ſacerdos appellatus eſt, non aliam autem hoſtiam quam ſuum corpus obtulit, Dominus ergo Chriſtus corpus habuit. If therefore it be proper for Prieſts to offer gifts, and Chriſt as concerning his humanity truely is called a Prieſt, and he offered none other ſacrifice but his owne body, therefore our Lord Chriſt had a body. He ſaith not, that Chriſt is a Prieſt according to his humanity only, whereas the excellencie of his perſon being both God and man, cauſed his ſacrifice to be acceptable, and availeable for the redemption of man. But to make the matter cleare, beſide that which the Apoſtle writeth to the Hebrewes, chap.9. theſe arguments may plainely be drawen out of the 7. chapter, where he ſpeaketh expreſly of his Prieſthood after the order of Melchiſedech.

Chriſt as he is without father and without Mother, is a Prieſt after the order of Melchiſedech;

Chriſt as he is God and man, is without father and without mother:

Therefore Chriſt as he is God and man, is a Prieſt after the order of Melchiſedech.

Againe: Chriſt as he hath no beginning of his dayes, nor end of his life, is a Prieſt after the order of Melchiſedech:

Chriſt according to his Divinity, hath no beginning of his dayes, nor end of his life according to his whole perſon:

Therefore Chriſt according to his Divinitie, and according to his whole perſon, is a Prieſt after the order of Melchiſedech.

Againe, except you underſtand Chriſt to have beene a Prieſt according to his Divinitie, he was tithed in the loynes of Abraham as well as Levi, but according to his Divinitie he was not in the loynes of Abraham and therefore payd no tythe in Abraham as God, though as man hee was ſubject to the Law, but received tythes of Abraham in his Prieſt and figure Melchiſedech. For the Prieſt receiveth tythes in the name of God, as alſo he bleſſeth in the name of God. Therefore if Chriſt give prieſtly bleſſing in his owne name, he giveth it as he is God, and not as man only. Finally, to ſay that Chriſt was a Prieſt onely in reſpect of his manhood, favoureth rankly of Neſtorianiſme, whereas our aſſertion, that Chriſt is an high Prieſt both according to his Deity, in which he is equall with his Father, and alſo according to his humanity, in which the Father is greater than he, is as farre from Arianiſme as the Papiſts are from honeſty and ſincerity, to charge us with ſuch open blaſphemy.

FINIS.

[illegible]

Christ according to his Divinity, hath no beginning of his dayes, nor end of his life [illegible]

Therefore Christ according to his Divinitie, and according to his whole person, is a Priest after the order of Melchisedech.

[illegible]

FINIS.

TO THE MOST HIGH AND MIGHTY MONARCH, OVR DEARE AND dread Soveraigne Lord, CHARLES, by the good providence of God, King of GREAT BRITAINE, FRANCE, and IRELAND, Defender of the Faith, and most Gracious Patron of the CHVRCH.

MOST GRACIOVS AND DREAD SOVERAIGNE,

IT was the eminent Care of your moſt royall Father, both that the holy Scriptures ſhould be tranſmitted to his people in that moſt pure and faithfull Tranſlation, which this Kingdome now enioyes, as likewiſe to prevent the contrary miſchiefe of this popiſh Tranſlation, which might infect and ſeduce his Subiects. For which end his Maieſtie was graciouſly pleaſed to graunt an eſpeciall Priviledge vnder his Broad Seale, for the reprinting of this worthy VVorke, which vindicates the whole New Teſtament from their corrupt Gloſſes.

Your moſt Excellent Maieſtie inherites, to the ioy of all your good ſubiects, as his Kingdomes, ſo his zeale againſt Poperie, and for the trueth and puritie of the Scriptures, which hath emboldened mee though a poore woman, yet being the daughter of the deceaſed Authour, and the neereſt allyed to this Everliving Iſſue of his Mind, to preſent it to your Maieſtie: Beſeeching your Maieſtie to accept and protect this Worke with the ſame grace your royall Father did, as being one among others of thoſe prime Forts and ſtrongeſt Bulwarks your Maieſties Kingdome hath to withſtand the common inrode and invaſion of a Troupe of Romiſh and Rhemiſh Ieſuites, who endeavoured by this, as the moſt ſubtill and plauſible way that ever yet they enterpriſed, to build up the walls of Rome in England.

The Father of mercies crowne your Maieſtie with all the Bleſsings which are laid up in Heaven or Earth: So prayes

Your Majeſties moſt humble and dutifull Subject, HESTER OGDEN.

TO THE MOST HIGH AND MIGHTY PRINCESSE ELIZABETH,

by the grace of God, Queene of England, France, and Ireland, Defender of the Faith,
&c.

AT ſuch time as I publiſhed a Defence of our Engliſh tranſlations of the holy Scriptures, againſt the malicious cavils of Gregorie Martine, and was bold to offer the ſame unto your Majeſties moſt honourable protection (moſt mighty & gracious Soveraigne) I thought my ſelfe diſcharged in duty from any further dealing againſt theſe Rhemiſh Gloſes. Both for that I was perſwaded, that among ſo many learned Divines, as doe now flouriſh in the Church of England, a worke of ſuch importance could not be altogether neglected: & eſpecially becauſe it was reported, that by other men of very good gifts, it was already even at the firſt undertaken. But ſo many yeares having paſſed, and the expectation of many godly men not yet being ſatisfied with a full & generall anſwer (although their hunger hath bin well ſlaked with ſundry learned Diſcourſes, uttered partly by occaſion in other bookes, partly in ſpeciall Treatiſes directed againſt ſome portion of theſe Annotations, beſide often confutations of the ſame in publike Sermons) being ſolicited by men of good judgement and qualities, I haue attempted to ſet forth by my ſelfe, that which I haue long looked for, & much rather deſired to be performed by others. Not meaning therby to prejudice the more learned labours, & longer ſtudied Commentaries of them that had take the matter in hand before me, if they purpoſe at length to bring them to light: but to provide in the meane time, that by a ſhort and ſufficient reply, the weake might be confirmed, the doubtful ſatisfied, & eſpecially the inſolency of the Adverſaries might be repreſſed. Who not content to quarrell at the ſinceritie and truth of our Tranſlations, and to ſet out a farre worſe themſelues: haue alſo indeavoured to corrupt the ſenſe of the new Teſtament (howſoever tranſlated) with hereticall notes and ſophiſticall Collections. In which, leſt their ſcope and purpoſe might bee hidden in [illegible] for their [illegible] holy [illegible] your Majeſties moſt lawfull and godly government, not omitting in their trayterous intendment, to undermine and ſupplant even the foundation of your Majeſties moſt juſt title of Inheritance unto the Imperiall Crowne of this Realme. Which their moſt ungodly intent, if it were at the firſt obſcure to any (as to wiſe men it could never bee unknowne) yet it hath ſince openly diſcovered it ſelfe to bee the ſame, that was in ſending over of ſo many of their Circumcellion Ieſuites & Seminary Prieſts. Even to prepare a way to thoſe moſt deteſtable practiſes, that ſince that time by ſecret conſpiracies haue beene attempted againſt your Majeſties moſt ſacred life (which by the miraculous providence of Almightie God hath hitherto beene preſerved:) and lately by open and invincible force (as they boaſted) hath been aſſayed, againſt the life and libertie, not onely of your moſt excellent Maieſtie, but alſo of all your faithfull Subjects, and to the utter ſubverſion of the happy eſtate of our moſt deare Countrey for ever. But the Lord of Hoſtes our mercifull Father, in whom your Majeſtie hath alwayes truſted, and found helpe and deliverance out of all your troubles, even from your youth hitherto: and Ieſus Chriſt our Lord, whoſe Church under your moſt comfortable protection and government, hath enjoyed a long and happie reſt, to the ſalvation of many thouſand ſoules, hath mightily and marveilouſly defended your Majeſtie and his Church. In which moſt glorious deliverance, he hath ſo manifeſtly declared his gracious favour toward us, (that albeit nothing was omitted that by wiſe counſell ſhould haue been appoynted, or by a valiant Armie beene executed) yet hee hath given us evident occaſion to ſing with the Prophet: By his owne right hand, and with his holy arme hath he gotten himſelfe the victorie. And all the ends of the world haue ſeene the ſalvation of our God. Pſalm.98. Yea, the whole Pſalme ſeemeth ſo liuely to expreſſe the Lords mercy toward us, and our dutie toward him, as if it had bin ſpecially endited for this time and occaſion. In which, with gratulation of your Majeſties moſt proſperous ſucceſſe, we may be bold to ſay, not only that which is in every mans mouth and pen, out of the Poet Claudianus:

> O nimium dilecta Deo, tibi militat æther;
> Et conjurati veniunt ad claſsica venti.

But alſo in imitation of another elder Poet:

> —— tua carbaſa vexit
> Oceanus, tumidos ſatis indignatus Iberos. Valerius Flaccus.

And whereas the adverſaries made no ſmall account of that Aſtrologicall prediction, and perhaps truſted in it no leſſe then Crœſus did in the [illegible] of Apollo, we may now ſafely declare the accompliſhment, [illegible]

[illegible]

Thus hath the infinite goodnes of our Saviour, not only given grace unto your Maieſtie, according to the heavenly oracle, *apocal.*18 4. to leade the people of God with you out of Babylon: but alſo ſufficient power and juſt cauſe to render unto her as ſhe hath rendred unto us, and to reward her double according to her workes. Which great ſeveritie the Spirit of God would not ſo ſtreightly haue injoyned to his faithfull Church, and the chiefe Governours thereof, but that he foreſaw that the wickedneſſe of Antichriſt and his members would throughly deſerue it.

A part of whoſe impietie againſt the Lord, his Word, his Church, and your Majeſty his anointed, I haue endeavoured according to my calling and abilitie, to lay open and overthrow, by confuting theſe Annotations: humbly beſeeching your Majeſty graciouſly to accept my dutifull endeavour therein, not ſo worthy (I confeſſe) of your royall acceptation, as meet to bee publiſhed in ſome reſpects before mentioned.

The God of heaven who hath hitherto moſt abundantly garniſhed your Majeſties reigne with all princely ornaments equal to the beſt, and ſuperiour to the moſt of your noble Progenitors, vouchſafe to continue the gracious light of his countenance toward your Majeſtie for ever, and ſo bleſſe this Autumne of your Majeſties age, with moſt excellent fruites of godly, proſperous and victorious government, that his glory may be advanced aboue all things, and your honour endure unto all poſteritie. AMEN.

Your Majeſties moſt humble ſubject,

WILLIAM FVLKE.

THE PREFACE TO THE READER

TREATING OF THESE THREE POINTS:

Of the Tranſlation of Holy Scriptures into the vulgar Tongues, and namely into Engliſh: Of the cauſes why this New Teſtament is tranſlated according to the ancient vulgar Latine text: And of the manner of tranſlating the ſame.

RHEM. 1. THe Holy Bible long ſince tranſlated by vs into Engliſh, and the Olde Teſtament lying by vs for lacke of good meanes to publiſh the whole in ſuch ſort, as a Worke of ſo great charge and importance requireth: wee haue yet, through Gods goodneſſe, at length fully finiſhed for thee (moſt Christian Reader) all the NEVV TESTAMENT, which is the principall, moſt profitable, and comfortable piece of holy writ: and, as well for all other inſtitution of life and doctrine, as ſpecially for deciding the doubts of theſe dayes, more proper and pregnant, then the other part not yet printed.

The Confutation of this Preface.

FVLK. 1. IF the whole Bible hath beene tranſlated by you, and that long ſince, into the Engliſh tongue, it is marveile, that it hath lyen ſo long by you, for lacke of good meanes to publiſh it. You haue publiſhed Bookes of as great charge, and much leſſe importance, within theſe eight and twentie yeares: but ſuch indeed, by which you had more hope to winne unto your credite and cauſe, then [illegible] haue by the holy Bible, though you perverted it with never ſo partiall Tranſla[illegible] [illegible] poyſoned it with never ſo hereticall and blaſphemous Annotations, as you haue done your [illegible] of the New Teſtament. You were wont to boaſt of the zeale of Popes, [illegible] of the Romiſh ſect, for the converſion of our Nation unto [illegible]. [illegible] ſo ſtrait laced, that none of them can find in their purſes, to [illegible] ſo [illegible], or at leaſt wiſe profitable, as you hold the [illegible] of the Catholike Religion? Or doe you not [illegible] doe [illegible] their works, crafely beg of your favourers in [illegible] colour of [illegible] your tranſlation of the Bible? when it is not [illegible] if you were [illegible] indeed to ſet it foorth, and would uſe ſuch m[illegible] whole [illegible] of the money, though your Printer tooke it [illegible] one Impreſſion, although it ſo might happen, [illegible] number of them [illegible] carried in the wayes, as chanced to ſome of [illegible] your B[illegible]. FULKE. 2. You are afraid to give over your old impudent propoſition, that ignorance of the Scriptures, is the mother of Popiſh devotion. And therefore you hold it an erroneous opinion, That the holy Scriptures ſhould bee alwayes in our mother tongue, or that they ought, or were ordained by God, to be read indifferently of all. Whereas it is certaine, that the holy Scripture of the old Teſtament, was by Gods ordinance, firſt written in the mother tongue of the Iewes, and the new Teſtament in the Greeke tongue, which was the mother tongue to a great part of the world, and that language, which was moſt generally underſtood among the Gentiles, unto whom the Goſpell was preached. Our Saviour Chriſt commaundeth, not onely a reading (as you your ſelves confeſſe) but alſo a deepe ſearch of the Scriptures, unto all the Iewes indifferently. Saint Paul commendeth the education of Timothie, in knowledge of the Scriptures from his infancie. Which authorities proove, that the holy Scriptures were ordained by God, to be read and knowne indifferently of all, and therefore ought to be tranſlated into the Mother tongues of all Nations, that all may reade and know them. Another erronious opinion they account it, to thinke, that the Scriptures can be eaſily underſtood of every one that readeth or heareth them in a knowne language, which if it were admitted, yet it followeth not, that the Scriptures ought not to be in a knowne language, because [illegible] not be eaſily underſtood of everie one that readeth or heareth them [illegible] one that readeth or heareth them, ought more diligently to ſtudie [illegible] them, more often heare and reade them, and more fervently pray to [illegible] rit, that he may underſtand them. And yet it is certaine, that albeit [illegible] ture are not eaſie to be underſtood of all men, yet there are many [illegible] as are able to inſtruct us unto ſalvation, ſo plaine and eaſie, as they ma[illegible] ry one that readeth or heareth them. And of this judgement is S. [illegible] objection of the obſcuritie of the Scriptures: Magnifice igitur et ſalubriter, &c. Therefore hath the holy Ghoſt magnifically and wholeſomely ſo tempered the holy Scriptures, that by plaine and open places he might prevaile againſt famine: by darke places he might wipe away lothſomeneſſe. For nothing almoſt is gathered out of thoſe obſcurities, which is not found moſt plainly uttered in ſome other place. De doctr. Chriſt lib. 2. cap. 6. And in the Chapter immediatly before, he ſheweth, that by reaſon of the diverſitie of languages, the [illegible] ſound of words [illegible] ving all Nations, the Scriptures were [illegible] to divers t[illegible] nerally knowne, Ex quo factum eſt, &c. [illegible] is come [illegible] by which ſo great diſeaſes of mens wits are [illegible] being [illegible] conveniently ſpread over all the world, through divers languages of the interpreters [illegible] ſo farre and wide might become knowne of the Nations to [illegible] places, it is evident, that S. Auguſtine deemed it more convenient [illegible] more agreeable to Gods word, honour, and edification of the faithfull, to have the [illegible] ed into vulgar tongues, then to be kept and ſtudied in any learned language [illegible] Now why you ſhould account any one tongue, more then other to be Eccl[illegible] able to give no ſound reaſon, ſeeing God hath called his Church of all [illegible] ſanctified them all, to the preaching of the Goſpell, and praiſe [illegible] this tongue, which you would moſt willingly have to be [illegible] tongue, [illegible] for many hundred yeares after Chriſt, the co[illegible] part of the Weſt Churches, of thoſe Nations that were [illegible] And [illegible] is now eccleſiaſticall, that then was vulgar. FULKE 3. The [illegible] Synagogue, and the governours thereof, is the [illegible] of the old [illegible], and of the children of this world, which are oftentimes wiſer in their kinde, then the children of light, with whom it is an high point of prudence, to provide for [illegible] by what unjuſt meanes ſoever. So have the Popiſh Clergie alwayes indevoured, by depriving the common people of the reading of holy Scriptures, and following their predeceſſors the Iewiſh Lawyers, have taken away the key of knowledge, of the ſame policie that they did, leſt their wickedneſſe being commonly diſcovered by the light, they ſhould leeſe that eſtimation, which through blinde ignorance they have commonly obtained. And they which have made claime for the common people in this caſe, whom of your charity, you call the popular and their ſeditious leaders, of godly zeale, and true ſimplicity, not of curioſity, pride, and diſobedience, have both made it, and iuſtified it with better reaſons then all the proud Papiſts in the world are able to avoid. † For, what greater reaſons can be alledged, then the authority of God in the old Teſtament, and of Chriſt our Saviour and his Apoſtles in the new, and the practice of the Primitive Church, and the conſent of the moſt ancient and approved Fathers of the ſame, which have beene brought, to prove that the holy Scriptures ought to be knowne of all Chriſtians? But the governours of the Popiſh Antichriſtian Church, arrogating to themſelves the name and dignity of the diſpenſing of Gods myſteries and treaſures, among which the holy Scripture (as you confeſſe) is no ſmall ſtore, by maintaining, that ignorance is the mother of devotion, declare that they would willingly (if they could) aboliſh all knowledge of the holy Scriptures from the common peoples hearts. And whereas you ſay, That of old they have not ever condemned all vulgar verſions of the Scripture, nor generally forbidden the faithfull to reade them: Let the Regiſters of Biſhops be ſearched, where it will appeare, that many have beene accuſed and condemned as heretikes, for having, reading, or hearing the holy Scriptures in the Engliſh tongue, without any exception taking againſt the truth of the tranſlation. And that the governours of the Popiſh Church, have not by publike authority preſcribed, commanded, or authentically ever recommended any interpretation of Scriptures into the vulgar tongue to be indifferently uſed of all men: They have declared ſufficiently thereby, that they were not the [illegible] of God and Chriſt, nor ſucceſſours of his Apoſtles, nor of the ancient Fathers [illegible] Church: all which (as is noted before) have, by publike and lawfull authority, [illegible] and commanded, and authentically recommended (as the holy [illegible] of the Fathers are moſt plentifull witneſſes) the holy Scriptures of God, [illegible], and underſtood of all ſorts of Chriſtians indifferently: and [illegible] of any, which of neceſſity implieth the tranſlation of the ſame into all vulgar [illegible], without which it is not poſſible for all ſorts of Chriſtians, to reade them, know them, and underſtand them.

An ancient provinciall constitution in England concerning English translations. See Linwood, l. 5. tit. de Magistris.

FVLKE 4 Seeing the Armenians were converted to the faith long before S. Chrysostome came amonst them: it is not to be doubted, but they had the whole Scriptures in their vulgar tongue, long before his time. And their confession lately set forth, doth plainely argue, that they have the whole Bible in their owne language at this day. To justifie that the Sclavonians say of S. Hieronyms translation into their tongue, his owne words are these; Translationem diligentissime emendatam olim mea lingua hominibus dederim. I say not this that I would bite my predecessors, or thinke that any thing is to be detracted from them, whose translation being most diligently corrected, I have given long agoe to the men of my language. Now the Sclavonians were the men of Hieronyms language, or mother tongue, as he testifieth himselfe of the place of his nativity in Catalogo: for whose use he might translate the vulgar Latine Bible, which was according to the Septuagints, after he had most diligently corrected it. But if this place prove it not sufficiently, at leastwise he saith plainly, that the Scripture was translated into the tongues of many nations, præfat. ad Damasum in 4. Evangelia. Besides these, the Syrians, Arabians, and Æthiopians, had of ancient time the holy Scriptures in their severall languages, as it is manifest by those parts of them, which are at this day brought from them into this part of the world. The Spaniards have the old Testament translated of ancient time into their mother tongue. Walafridus testifieth, that the Dutch tongue is the same which was the language of the Gothes and Getes, into which since the dayes of Vlphilas, by whom they were first converted, some wise men of that nation, have translated the holy Scripture. De rebus Eccles. cap. 7. In our owne countrey not onely the Saxon translations of divers parts of the holy Scripture yet remaining, some in print, some in Libraries, but even the testimony of Beda, whom you quote and cite most impudently for the contrary, doth prove that vulgar translations of the holy Scriptures, in his time were commonly used and occupied of the faithfull multitude: his words are these, Hæc in præsenti juxta numerum librorum quibus lex divina scripta est, quinque gentium linguis, unam eandemque, summæ veritatis & veræ sublimitatis scientiam scrutatur & confitetur. Anglorum videlicet, Britonum, Scottorum, Pictorum, & Latinorum, quæ meditatione Scripturarum, cæteris omnibus est facta communis. This Island (saith Bede*) at this present, according to the number of the Bookes in which the Law of God is written, doth search out and confesse one and the selfe same knowledge of the highest truth, and of the true height in five tongues, namely of the* Angles, of the Britanes, of the Scots, of the Pictes, and of the Latines, which in meditation of the Scripture is made common to all the rest. He meaneth, that learned men of all the foure nations, studied the Scriptures by helpe of the Latine tongue, and such Commentaries and Treatises of the elder Fathers, as were written therein. But he saith expresly, that the knowledge of the highest truth, which is not to be found but in the holy Scriptures, & according thereunto, was both searched out, and confessed in the mother tongue of the other foure nations, by which he meaneth the Christians unlearned in the Latine tongue. A manifest testimony whereof, are many parts of Scripture in the Saxon language, yet remaining to be seene and read.

That the Scriptures were extant in English, both before and after Wicleffes time, and not of his translation, beside your conjecture out of Lynwod, it is manifestly proved, by so many ancient written copies of the English Bible, differing in translation yet to be shewed, of which Wicleffes translation could be but one. Notwithstanding, that the Pharisaicall Clergy condemned the reading of them for heresie, let the actes of publike writings remaining in the Registers testifie. And of what devillish pollicie they kept the Lawes of God in secrecie and silence, which he commanded to be uttered in all places and times, to the edifying of all sorts of Christians, howsoever you seeke to smoothe it, Gods children doe plainely espie it.

The like Catholike vulgar translations in many Countreys, since Luthers time.

FVLKE 5 How p[illegible] translations of the Scriptures are, which poison the people under colour of [illegible] authoritie: if we had not learned sufficiently by the corruptions of old Heretikes, [illegible] of yours doth give plentifull testimony; which being helped forward with [illegible] ions, as it were with stings, to make way for the poison to enter, hath no small force to deceive the simple. But the best is, we are assured, that they shall not prevaile finally, but in them whom the Lord acknowledgeth not for his. In the meane time, not onely the remedy of true and sincere translation, out of the fountaine and originall Text, is to be opposed, but also the fraud of the adversary, as occasion serveth, to be discovered and laid open.

RHEM. 6 Which causeth the holy Church not to forbid utterly any Catholike translation, though she allow not the publishing or reading of any absolutely, and without exception or limitation: knowing by her divine and most sincere wisdome, how, where, when, and to whom, these her Masters and Spouses gifts are to be bestowed, to the most good of the faithfull: and therefore neither generally permitteth that which must needs doe hurt to the unworthy, nor absolutely condemneth that which may do much good to the worthy. Whereupon, the order which many a wise man wished for before, was taken by the Deputies of the late famous Councell of Trent in this behalfe, and confirmed by supreme authority, that the holy Scriptures, though truly and Catholikely translated into vulgar tongues, yet may not be indifferently read of all men, nor of any other then such as have expresse licence thereunto of their lawfull Ordinaries, with good testimony from their Curats or Confessors, that they be humble, discreet, and devout persons, and like to take much good & no harme therby. Which prescript, though in these dayes of ours it cannot be so precisely observed, as in other times and places, where there is more due respect of the Churches authoritie, rule, and discipline: yet we trust all wise and godly persons will use the matter in the meane while with such moderation, meeknesse, and subiection of heart, as the handling of so sacred a Booke, the sincere senses of Gods truth therein, and the holy Canons, Councels, Reason, and Religion doe require.

The Churches order and determination concerning the reading of Catholike translations of the Bible in vulgar tongues.

Ind. lib. prohibit regula 4.

FVLKE 6 The Popish Church arrogating to her selfe divine wisdome, in restraining that which God hath left to be most free and generall, declareth, that she is the Babylonicall harlot, the Spouse of Antichrist, who exalteth himselfe above all divine authority, and controlleth the wisdome of God in every thing, that is contrary to his devillish presumption: as in the use of Images, of the Cup in the Lords Supper, of marriage in the Church Ministers, of meats in times made by him more religious, and such other. The true Church of God teacheth the true use of the Scriptures, even out of the Scriptures themselues, and discourageth not men from reading of them, as it were from a dangerous discourse, whereby they are like to take harme, knowing that none but Spiders can sucke poison out of wholesome flowers, which poison yet is not in the good flowers, but in the evill nature of the Spider. The holy Scriptures, learned even from a mans infancy, are able to make him wise unto salvation, and being well studied of the man of God, are able to make him perfect and ready unto all good workes, and to execute every part of his office, 2 Tim. 3. 15, &c.

RHEM. 7 Wherein, though for due preservation of this divine worke from abuse and profanation, and for the better bridleing of the intollerable insolencie of proud, curious, and contentious wits, the Governours of the Church, guided by Gods Spirit, as ever before, so also upon more experience of the maladie of this time then before, have taken more exact order both for the Readers and Translatours of these later ages, then of old: yet we must not imagine, that in the Primitive Church, either every one that understood the learned Tongues, wherein the Scriptures were written, or other Languages into which they were translated, might without reprehension reade, reason, dispute, turne and tosse the Scriptures: or that our forefathers suffered every Schoolemaster, Scholer, or Grammarian, that had a little Greeke or Latine, straight to take in hand the holy Testament: or that the translated Bibles into the vulgar Tongues, were in the hands of every Husbandman, Artificer, Apprentice, Boyes, Girles, Mistresse, Maid, Man: that they were sung, played, alledged, of every Tinker, Taverner, Rimer, Minstrell: that they were for Table-talke, for Ale-benches, for Boats and Barges, and for every profane person and company. No, in those better times men were neither so ill, nor so curious of themselves, so to abuse the blessed Booke of Christ: neither was there any such easie meanes, before Printing was invented, to disperse the copies into the hands of every man, as now there is.

The holy Scriptures never read of all persons indifferently, at their pleasure.

FVLKE 7 That the Governours of the Popish Church have taken straighter order for Readers and Translatours of the Scriptures, then the Fathers of the Primitive Church of Christ did: it is not to preserue the Word of God from profanation, or to bridle the proud curiositie of the contentious, as it is pretended, but to ſuppreſſe the light of truth, which bewrayeth their groſſe and palpable abuſes, both in doctrine and converſation.

But where you ſay, that the holy Scriptures were never read of all perſons indifferently, it is a moſt impudent aſſertion, ſet down without any ſhew of proofe, and contrary to moſt manifeſt arguments of antiquity. We acknowledge, the Fathers of the ancient Church were carefull to keepe the holy treaſure of Gods word from abuſe: but that they did not, by prohibiting or reſtraining the reading of it, but by diligent teaching and exhorting of men, to the right uſe of it. Therefore where you ſay, We muſt not imagine that in the Primitive Church, every one which underſtood the Scriptures in the learned tongues, wherein they were written, or in other Languages, into which they were tranſlated, might without reprehenſion reade, reaſon, diſpute, turne and toſſe the Scriptures: it is utterly falſe; for with reverence of Gods myſteries, and to the end they were given, every man might not onely, without reprehenſion, but with good liking and commendation of all the ancient Fathers, read, reaſon, diſpute, and ſearch, which is to turne and toſſe the bookes of the Scriptures. It is recorded generally of all the faithfull in Berhœa, that they daily ſearched the Scriptures, even to examine the doctrine of the Apoſtles by them, Acts 17. 11. Lib. 2. cap. 35. Irenæus ſaith, That all the Scriptures, both of the Prophets, and of the Goſpels, may be alike heard of all men. Chryſoſtome exhorteth all men indifferently to reade the Scriptures, and to call their neighbours to the hearing of them, in Gen. Hom. 7. Alſo he taketh away the vaine excuſes of them which alledged, that they were worldly men, had wife, children, and houſhold to looke unto, and prayeth, that they would not deceive themſelves, ſaying, That they which are intangled with ſuch cares, have more need to ſeeke remedy, by reading of the holy Scriptures, in Gen. Hom. 21. And Hom. 2. Comment. in Matth. he ſaith, The reading of the Scripture is more neceſſary for Lay-men, then for the Monkes. And Hom. 5. he ſaith, The people ought as ſoone as they come at home from the Church, to turne over the holy Bookes, and to call their wives and children together to the conference of thoſe things which are ſaid. Againe, It is no excuſe (ſaith he) to ſay, I have not read what Paul ſaith, but a fault, in Epiſt. ad Heb. Hom. 17. Further, where you ſay, we muſt not imagine, that our forefathers ſuffered every Schoole-maſter, Scholer, or Grammarian, that had a little Greeke or Latine, ſtraight to take in hand the holy Teſtament: S. Auguſtine is plainely againſt you, for he ſaith, That they which turned the Scriptures out of the Hebrew tongue into the Greeke tongue, may be numbred, but the Latine interpreters cannot be numbred: For in thoſe firſt times of the faith, as the Greeke bookes came into any mans hands, which ſeemed to himſelfe to have ſome skill in both the tongues, he was bold to tranſlate it, De Doctrin. Chriſt. lib. 2. cap. 11. That the tranſlated Bibles were in the hands and godly uſe of all ſorts of men, women, children, how baſe ſoever their degree and calling was, is partly ſhewed already: and more particularly S. Hieronyme ſaith, That in the Countrey of Bethlehem, the Huſbandman, the Ploughman, the Shepherd, the Reaper, the Vine-dreſſer, did ſing the Pſalmes of David, and made none other noiſe, Paul & Euſtoch. ad Marcel. Chryſoſtome ſaith, the knowledge of the Scripture is moſt neceſſary for children, Pueris, boyes and girles, becauſe you ſo terme them, and exhorteth their parents to cauſe them for their tender yeeres to be exerciſed in the reading of the holy Scriptures, in Epiſt. ad Epheſ. Hom. 20. That the Scriptures may be read at the Table, he ſheweth, in Gen. Hom. 10. And that Players, Rimers, and Ieſters, in ſtead of their lewd practices, ſhould be commanded, in recompence of their entertainement, to reade the holy Scriptures, whereby the ſervants, apprentices, ſlaues and drudges of the houſe may be made equall with Angels, Com. in Matth. Hom. 49. S. Auguſtine alſo exhorteth the people to reade the Scripture at the table, and meats, de Temp. 56. As for Boats and Barges, which ſerue for mens travell, ſeeing God commanded his Lawes to be ſpoken of in iourneys, and Chriſt himſelfe preached out of Boats or Barges, there is no cauſe why his holy Scriptures may not be reade in them alſo. Neither did the ancient Fathers account any true Chriſtian, or company of Chriſtians, to be a profane perſon, or company, but rather, of a company of profane perſons, by diligent reading of the Scriptures, to be made an holy Church of God, Chryſoſtome in Mat. Hom. 49. And although there was not ſo eaſie meanes, before Printing was invented, to diſperſe the copies of the Bibles into every mans hand, yet by the continuall labour of the Stationers, Notaries, or Booke-writers, which in thoſe times ſupplied the want of Printers, there was a ſufficient number of copies for them that would buy them: or elſe Chryſoſtome ſhould in vaine have exhorted the Lay-men of his time to buy them Bibles, or at the leaſt the New Teſtament. Audite, obſecro ſeculares omnes, &c. Heare I pray you all you Lay-men. Provide you Bibles, which are the medicines of the ſoule: if you will nothing elſe, at leaſtwiſe get the new Teſtament, the Apoſtle, the Acts, the Goſpels, continuall and diligent Teachers, in Epiſt. ad Coloſſ. Hom. 9. It is a frivolous pretence therefore, of the ſcarcity of copies: for whatſoever will be commonly ſold, and well payed for, by diligence of workemen will ſoone be made plentifull.

Where and in whoſe hands the holy Scriptures were in the Primitive Church.

Rhem. 8 They were in Libraries, Monaſteries, Colledges, Churches, in Biſhops, Prieſts and ſome other devout principall Lay-mens houſes and hands, who uſed them with feare and reverence, and ſpecially ſuch parts as pertained to good life and manners, not medling, but in pulpit and Schooles (and that moderatly) with the hard and high myſteries and places of greater difficulty. The poore ploughmen could then, in laboring the ground, ſing the Hymnes & Pſalmes either in known or unknowne languages, as they heard them in the holy Church, though they could neither reade nor know the ſenſe, meaning, and myſteries of the ſame. Such holy perſons of both ſexes, to whom S. Hierome in divers Epiſtles to them, commendeth the reading and meditation of holy Scriptures, were diligent to ſearch all the godly hiſtories and imitable examples of chaſtity, humility, obedience, clemencie, poverty, penance, renouncing the world: they noted ſpecially the places that did breed the hatred of ſinne, feare of Gods judgement, delight in ſpirituall cogitations: they referred themſelves in all hard places, to the judgement of the ancient Fathers, and their maſters in Religion, never preſuming to contend, controule, teach, or talke of their owne ſenſe or fantaſie, in deepe queſtions of Divinity. Then the virgines did meditate upon the places and examples of chaſtity, modeſty, and demureneſſe: the married on conjugall faith and continencie: the parents, how to bring up their children in faith and feare of God: the Prince, how to rule: the ſubject, how to obey: the Prieſt, how to teach: the people, how to learne.

How the laity of thoſe dayes did read them, with what humility and religion; and information of life and manners.

Fulke 8 They were in all mens hands, that were deſirous to reade them, and were to be bought of common Stationers, or Booke-ſellers, as it appeareth by the ſaying of Chryſoſtome, quoted in the Section next before: not onely in Liberaries, Monaſteries, &c. and ſome devout principall Lay-mens houſes and hands. And as devout Lay-men did uſe them well then, ſo doe ſuch men uſe them well now, learning out of them ſuch things, as be neceſſary and profitable for them to know, and leaving higher myſteries, and hard places to the diſcuſſing of the learned. That the Huſbandmen of whom S. Hieronyme ſpeaketh, ſing the Pſalmes in an unknowne tongue, which they could neither reade nor know the ſenſe, meaning, or myſteries of them, it is boldly affirmed, and impoſſible to be proved. Such ſinging of Pſalmes with the lips, not underſtood with the heart, no godly wiſe man would have allowed, much leſſe commended, as he doth, calling them their ſongs of love, the ſhepherds whiſtles, the inſtruments of tillage. And as thoſe holy perſons of both ſexes, to whom S. Hieronyme commendeth the reading and meditation of the Scripture, uſed them to the glory of God, and the building up of their ſoules in faith and godlineſſe: ſo God be thanked, at theſe dayes, many thouſands of faithfull Chriſtians, with like zeale, reverence, humility, and all other vertues requiſite, doe reade the holy Scriptures in their mother tongue, and by daily reading, doe greatly profit in piety and charity, as well virgines as married folke, Parents and children, Princes and ſubjects, Paſtors and people.

The fathers ſharply reprehend as an abuſe, that all indifferently ſhould reade, expound, and talke of the Scriptures.

Rhem. 9 Then the Scholer taught not his Maſter, the Sheepe controlled not the Paſtor, the yong Student ſet not the Doctor to ſchoole, nor reproved their fathers of errour and ignorance. Or if any were in thoſe better dayes (as in all times of Hereſie ſuch muſt needs be) that had itching eares, tickling tongues and wits, curious and contentious diſputers, hearers, and talkers, rather then doers of Gods word: ſuch the Fathers did ever ſharply reprehend, counting them unworthy and unprofitable readers of the holy Scriptures. S. Hierome in his Epiſtle to Paulinus, after declaration that no Handie-craft is ſo baſe, nor liberall Science ſo eaſie, that can be had without a maſter (which S. Auguſtine alſo affirmeth, De utilitate Cred. cap. 7.) nor that men preſume in any Occupation to teach that they never learned, Onely (ſaith he) the art of Scripture is that which every man challengeth: this the chatting old wife, this the doting old man, this the brabling Sophiſter, this on every hand, men preſume to teach before they learne it. Againe, ſome with poiſe of lofty words deviſe of Scripture matters among women: otherſome (fie upon it) learne of women what to teach men, and leſt that be not enough, by facility of tongue, or rather audacity, teach that to others, which they underſtand never a whit themſelves. To ſay nothing of ſuch as be of my faculty: who ſtepping from ſecular learning to holy Scriptures, and able to tickle the eares of the multitude with a ſmooth tale, thinke all they ſpeake to be the Law of God. This he wrote then, when this maladie of arrogancie and preſumption in divine matters, was nothing ſo outragious as now it is. Hiero. Epiſt. 103. cap. 6.

Fulke 9 There were in thoſe times ſome arrogant and preſumptuous abuſers of the holy Scriptures, and will be in all times, as of all other good gifts of God: whoſe miſbehaviour, as it was ſharply and juſtly reprehended by the goldy Fathers (as appeareth by the places by you noted) ſo was it not thought any cauſe, to reſtraine the multitude from the lawfull and neceſſary uſe of Gods bookes, as it is now pretended by the Papiſts. For that as ſome ſwelled in pride, and vaniſhed in curioſity, ſo many profited in humility, and all other vertues neceſſary vnto true Chriſtianity. And even ſo the caſe ſtandeth at this time: ſome, unlearned and ungodly, pervert the Scriptures to their own condemnation: yet many uſe them wholeſomely, to their comfort and edification.

Rhem. 10 S. Gregorie Nazianzene made an Oration of the moderation that was to be uſed in theſe matters:

ters: where he ſaith, that ſome in his time thought themſelves to have all the wiſdome in the world, when they could once repeat two or three words, and them ill couched together, out of Scriptures; but he there divinely diſcourſeth of the orders and differences of degrees, who in Chriſts myſticall body, ſome are ordained to learne, ſome to teach: that all are not Apoſtles, all Doctors, all Interpreters, all of tongues and knowledge, not all learned in Scriptures and Divinity: that the people went not up to talke with God in the mountaine, but Moſes, Aaron, and Eleazar*: nor they neither, but by the difference of their callings; that they that rebell againſt this Ordinance, are guilty of the conſpiracie of* Core and his complices: that in Scripture there is both milke for babes, and meat for men, to be diſpenſed, not according to every ones greedineſſe of appetite, or wilfulnes, but as is moſt meet for each ones neceſſity, and capacity: that as it is a ſhame for a Biſhop or Prieſt to be unlearned in Gods myſteries, ſo for the common people it is oftentimes profitable to ſalvation, not to be curious, but to follow their Paſtors in ſincerity and ſimplicity: whereof excellently ſaith S. Auguſtine, Fidei ſimplicitate & ſinceritate lactati, nutriamur in Chriſto: & cum parvi ſumus, majorum cibos non appetamus: that is, Being fed with the ſimplicity and ſincerity of faith, as it were with milke, ſo let us be nouriſhed in Chriſt: and when we are little ones, let us not covet the meats of the elder ſort. *Who * in another place teſtifieth, that the word of God cannot be preached, nor certaine myſteries uttered to all men alike, but are to be delivered according to the capacity of the hearers: as he proveth both * by S.* Paul's *example, who gave not to every ſort ſtrong meat, but milke to many, as being not ſpirituall, but carnall and not capable: and * by our Lords alſo, who ſpake to ſome plainely, and to others in parables, and affirmed, that he had many things to utter which the hearers were not able to heare.*

The Scriptures muſt be delivered in meaſure and diſcretion, according to each mans need and capacity.

FVLKE 10 Every word of this Section being granted to be as true as the Goſpel, it cannot be inferred, that therefore it is not convenient, that the holy Scriptures ſhould be in the mother tongue, that they may be read of all ſorts of Chriſtians, without exception of any. For the holy Scriptures teach that moderation which Nazianzene requireth, that meaſure and diſcretion which Auguſtine commendeth, and reprehend that arrogancie reproved by Gregorie, and the raſhneſſe and intemperance deteſted by Auguſtine. So that by diligent reading of the holy Scriptures, the Chriſtian may learne to imbrace the vertues, and to abhorre the vices.

RHEM. 11 How much more may we gather, that all things that be written, are not for the capacity and diet of every of the ſimple readers, but that very many myſteries of holy Writ, be very farre above their reach, and may and ought to be (by as great reaſon) delivered them in meaſure and meane moſt meet for them? which indeed can hardly be done, when the whole booke of the Bible lieth before every man in his mother tongue, to make choice of what he liſt. For which cauſe the ſaid Gregorie Nazianzene wiſheth the Chriſtians had as good a law as the Hebrewes of old had, who (as S. Hierome alſo witneſſeth) tooke order among themſelves, that none ſhould reade the Cantica Canticorum, nor certaine other pieces of hard Scriptures, till they were thirty yeeres of age.

The Iewes Law for not reading certaine bookes of holy Scripture untill a time.

FVLKE 11 Although there be many things in the Scriptures, unmeet for all mens capacities, becauſe of the difficulty of them, yet is there nothing unmeet to be read of any man, neither are there any myſteries of holy Writ unmeet for Chriſtian men to know and underſtand, as you ſeeme to inſinuate. The Eunuch did reade the prophecie of Eſay, which he did not underſtand, yet was he not in danger to take any hurt by it, and God ſending him an Interpreter, ſhewed, as Chryſoſtome ſaith, That it is impoſſible, that he which with great ſtudy and fervent deſire is occupied in the holy Scriptures, ſhould alwayes be neglected, but although the inſtruction of man be wanting unto us, the Lord himſelfe, entring into our hearts from above, doth lighten our minde, ſpreadeth his beames into our reaſon, openeth things hidden, and becommeth teacher of thoſe things which we know not, &c. In Gen. Hom. 34. And ex Luc. cap. 16. After moſt vehement exhortation unto the people, to reade the Scriptures, which if they neglect, he ſaith, it is not poſſible for them to attaine to ſalvation, he addeth, Maxime quidem, &c. Yea ſpecially, although thou doeſt not underſtand ſuch things as are hidden in them, yet of the very reading much holineſſe groweth. Therefore Gregorie Nazianzene wiſheth not to have the Iewes tradition, for not reading of the Scriptures, or any part thereof (if you marke him ſpeaking in his owne language) but a like order, to reſtraine young men from being too bold in expoſition, and contentious in diſputing of the myſteries of the holy Scriptures. Neverthleſſe David, wiſer then all the authors of that tradition, asking whereby a young man ſhall cleanſe his wayes, anſwereth, By ſtudy, meditation, and keeping of the Law of God, Pſal. 119. Neither doth Hieronymo commend the tradition of the Iewes, which permitteth not the beginning of Geneſis, the Canticles of Salomon, and the beginning and end of the Prophet Ezechiel, to be read of young men, being under thirty yeeres of age, but only ſaith, that the difficulty of the Prophecie of Ezechiel is proved by that tradition.

RHEM. 12 And truly there is no cauſe why men ſhould be more loth to bee ordered and moderated in this *point by G[illegible], when they are in the uſe of [illegible]. for which as Chr[illegible]s and Miniſters, at whoſe [illegible] and not be our [illegible]: ſo hath he given us * Doctors, Prophets, Expounders, Interpreters, Teachers and Preachers, to take the Law and our faith at their mouthes: becauſe our faith and religion commeth not to us properly or principally by reading of Scriptures, but (as the Apoſtle ſaith) by hearing of the Preachers lawfully ſent: though reading in order and humility, much confirmeth and advanceth the ſame. Therefore this holy booke of the Scriptures, is called of S.* Ambroſe, Liber Sacerdotalis, The booke of Prieſts, at whoſe hands and diſpoſition we muſt take and uſe it, Lib.2.ad Grat.

Rom.10.17.

FVLKE 12 No true Chriſtian, will be loth to be ordered by the Paſtors, Doctors, Prophets, Expounders, Teachers, and the Preachers of the Church, which Chriſt hath given unto us, that we ſhould take the Law and inſtruction of faith at their mouthes: And although faith come not principally by onely reading of the Scriptures, but by hearing of the Preachers lawfully ſent, yet you muſt give them leave, to ſearch the Scriptures daily, as the Berheans did, to ſee whether thoſe things which their Paſtors, Preachers and Teachers doe deliver, be even ſo, Acts 17.11. ſeeing alſo you confeſſe, that reading in order and humility (and none other reading doe we allow) doth much confirme and advance our faith. That the booke of Scripture, is called of S. Ambroſe, Liber Sacerdotalis, you muſt give us a better quotation then Lib.2.ad Grat. not ſo much for the terme, but for that you inferre thereof, that we muſt take and uſe it at the hands and diſpoſition of Prieſts. Ambroſe wrote five bookes De fide ad Gratianum, and three De Spiritu ſancto; I feare your note booke deceived you.

RHEM. 13 *The wiſe will not here regard what ſome wilfull people doe mutter, that the Scriptures are made for all men, and that it is of envy that the Prieſts doe keepe the holy Booke from them. Which ſuggeſtion commeth of the ſame ſerpent * that ſeduced our firſt parents, who perſwaded them, that God had forbidden them that tree of knowledge, leſt they ſhould be as cunning as himſelfe, and like unto the Higheſt. No, no, the Church doth it to keepe them from blinde ignorant preſumption, and from that which the Apoſtle calleth* Falſi nominis ſcientiam, Knowledge falſly ſo called: and not to embarre them from the true knowledge of Chriſt. She would have all wiſe, but Vſque ad ſobrietatem, Vnto ſobriety, as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh: ſhe knoweth the Scriptures be ordained for every ſtate, as meats, elements, fire, water, candle, knives, ſword, and the like: which are as needfull (moſt of them) for children as old folkes, for the ſimple as the wiſe: but yet would marre all, if they were at the guiding of other then wiſe men, or were in the hands of every one, for whoſe preſervation they be profitable. She forbiddeth not the reading of them in any language, envieth no mans commodity, but giveth order how to doe it to edification, and not to deſtruction: how to doe it without caſting the holy to dogs, or pearles to hogs: (See S. Chryſoſtome Hom. 24. in Matth. declaring theſe hogs and dogs to be carnall men and heretikes, that take no good of the holy myſteries, but thereby doe both hurt themſelves and others:) how to doe it agreeably to the ſoveraigne ſincerity, majeſtie, and depth of myſtery contained in the ſame. She would have the preſumptuous Heretike, notwithſtanding he alledge them never ſo faſt, flying as it were thorow the whole Bible, and quoting the Pſalmes, Prophets, Goſpels, Epiſtles, never ſo readily for his purpoſe, as Vincentius Lirinenſis ſaith ſuch mens faſhion is: yet ſhe would according to Tertullians rule, have ſuch meere uſurpers quite diſcharged of all occupying and poſſeſſion of the holy Teſtament, which is her old and onely right and inheritance, and belongeth not to Heretikes at all, whom Origen calleth Scripturarum fures, theeves of the Scriptures. *She would have the unworthy repelled, the curious repreſſed, the ſimple meaſured, the learned humbled, and all ſorts ſo to uſe them or abſtaine from them, as is moſt convenient for every ones ſalvation: with this generall admonition, that none can underſtand the meaning of God in the Scriptures * except Chriſt open their ſenſe, and make them partakers of his holy Spirit, in the unity of his myſticall body: and for the reſt, ſhe committeth it to the Paſtor of every province and people, according to the difference of time, place, and perſons, how and in what ſort the reading of the Scriptures is more or leſſe to be procured or permitted.*

Orig. in 2. ad Rom.

The popular objections of withholding the Scriptures from the people, anſwered.

Why the Church permitteth not every one at their pleaſure to reade the Scriptures.

The holy Scriptures to carnall men and heretikes, are as pearles to ſwine.

FVLKE 13 That the Scriptures were made for all Chriſtian mens inſtruction, when you have wrangled as much as you can, you are driven in the end to confeſſe. That Popiſh Prieſts, not onely of envy, but alſo of devilliſh pollicie, leſt their falſe doctrine and wicked life might be reproved, have kept that holy Booke from the people, though you will not acknowledge, yet the children of God, whoſe eyes he hath opened, doe plainely ſee and perceive. Your compariſon unto the devils ſuggeſtion, will then ſeeme to be like, when you can ſhew Gods prohibition from reading the Scripture, as our parents could, for eating of the tree of knowledge. But when Chriſt ſaith expreſly to all Chriſtians, Search the Scriptures, Your cavilling is like the ſerpents ſuggeſtion, which contrary to the expreſſe word of God, ſaid, You ſhall not die, but God knoweth, &c. So you would beare men in hand, that albeit God command them to ſearch the Scripture, yet there is great danger in reading of them, and therefore they were better not to reade them: Yea your predeceſſors have condemned for

In Gen. hom. 9

Heretikes, ſuch as did reade them, though now you goe about to excuſe the [illegible] and ſay, that you meant nothing, but that the people ſhould beware of blinde preſum[illegible] learne to be wiſe unto ſobriety: as though theſe leſſons are not better learned, by reading them in the booke of God, then by your reſtraining them, from reading them at all, or not but at your pleaſure. But let us conſider, why the Popiſh Church permitteth not every one at their pleaſure, to reade the Scripture, She knoweth (ſay you) the Scriptures be ordained for every ſtate, as meat, elements, fire, water, candle, kniues, ſword, and the like: we know by the Scriptures the word of God to be ordained, as meat and other things moſt neceſſary and comfortable, but not as fire, water, candles, kniues, ſwords, and like matters of danger, whereof men ſhould be rather afraid to meddle with them, except it were for neceſſity. And yet there is as great neceſſity of the holy Scriptures, as of any thing you have named, and in them (as S. Chryſoſtome ſaith) we may not ſuſpect any danger to be, as is in fire, water, candles, kniues, ſwords, and ſuch like. All the danger, is in the affection of him that abuſeth them to his owne condemnation, whereas fire, water, ſwords, kniues, cannot alwayes be ſo governed by the wiſeſt, but that they prove hurtfull ſometimes to the occupiers of them.

Whereas you ſay, the Popiſh Church forbiddeth not the reading of the holy Srriptures in any language, it is falſe: For whatſoever ſhe doth now, certaine it is that her Miniſters hath forbidden it in times paſt, and immediately before, you ſhew reaſons, why ſhe doth not permit every one to read the Scriptures: So ſoone you have forgotten your ſelfe, Except perhaps you will ſay, ſhe forbiddeth not ſuch as underſtand them in Latine, to reade them alſo in Engliſh, which is a poore permiſſion: but if ſhe envieth no mans commodity (as you ſay) why doth ſhe not permit all men, to take that commodity which they may receive by reading of them? you anſwere, ſhe giveth order how to doe it to edification, and not to deſtruction, it were well if ſhe did ſo, for that care were ſeemely for the Spouſe of Chriſt. But as you affirme before in the ſixt Section, ſhe hath taken order, that the holy Scriptures though truly tranſlated into vulgar tongues, yet may not be indifferently read of all men, nor of any other then ſuch as have expreſſe licence thereunto, of their lawfull Ordinaries, with good teſtimony from their Curates or Confeſſors, that they be humble, diſcreet, and devout perſons, and like to take much good and no harme thereby: by which order it appeareth, that they which have moſt need to reade the Scriptures, are utterly debarred: many other, by the difficulty of obtaining licence, diſcouraged; and eſpecially that none, but ranke and obſtinate Papiſts, may be allowed, for thoſe onely of the Popiſh Curates, Confeſſors and Ordinaries, ſhall be counted humble, diſcreet, and devout perſons. Let all godly wiſe men judge therefore, whether the Popiſh Church, although you profeſſe that ſhe envieth no mans commodity, yet by this order, hindereth not as much as in her lieth, the profit of all men. But you anſwere, that carnall men and heretikes, be hogs, and dogs, to whom pearles and holy things, ſuch as the Scriptures be, are not to be caſt, which if it were a right interpretation of our Saviours commandement, it were not lawfull to attempt the converſion of Heretikes, by preaching the truth, nor to procure the repentance of carnall men, by exhorting them to the love of heavenly things. But as by preaching and exhortation, ſo by diligent reading and meditation of the holy Scriptures, many Heretikes are made Catholikes, many carnall men are made ſpirituall. Therefore not all that be carnally minded, or infected with errour, but onely deſperate, profane and malicious contemners of the truth, are thoſe hogs and dogs, to whom the precious holy myſteries of the Goſpel, are not to be any more offered, when they have plainely declared themſelves to be ſuch. Chryſoſtome, whom you cite ſpeaketh expreſly of ſuch, and not of all carnall men. For in the next Section, you deſcribe the people of Conſtantinople, whom he exhorteth to the reading of the Scriptures, to be very carnall men, and ſo they were indeed, yet he judgeth the reading of the Scripture, moſt neceſſary for them. And Hom. ex Luc. cap. 16. after a moſt vehement exhortation, to reade the Scriptures, he addeth, Magna adverſus peccata, &c. The reading of the Scripture, is a great defence againſt ſin, the ignorance of the Scriptures, is a great downefall, and a deepe dungeon, it is a great loſſe of ſalvation, to know nothing of Gods Lawes, this thing hath both bred hereſies, and brought in corrupt life, this hath turned all things out of order upſide downe. Thus ſaith Chryſoſtome. But even that ignorance, which he ſo deteſteth, is of you Papiſts, counted good Catholike devotion, or the mother thereof. And what other was the ſtate of the moſt, in the blinde dayes of Popery, but even a groſſe ignorance, of all the holy Scriptures? Where the people might not know what they beleeved, what they praied, what God commanded, or any thing pertaining to Chriſtian religion, but either of dumbe Images, or of dumbe Prieſts, except once in ſeven yeeres perhaps, of ſome prating Frier, or other Popiſh Preacher, which rather turned them from Chriſt, then ſhewed the right way to God by him.

You adde further, that you would have Heretikes quite diſcharged, from all occupying and poſſeſſion of the holy Teſtament. It muſt firſt be proved who be Heretikes, and which is the true [illegible] that hath right and intereſt in the Scriptures: [illegible] your challenging of [illegible] of the Church, will be ſufficient to prove you ſo [illegible], nor the terming of any [illegible] to be Heretikes, except you be able out of the word of God, to convince them to be [illegible].

Finally, for the right uſe of the holy Scripture, the Paſtours of the true Church of Chriſt, doe diligently inſtruct their ſheepe, out of the holy Scriptures, with what moderation, humility, reverence, deſire to profit by them, and invocation of Gods Spirit, they ought to reade them, how carefully they muſt avoid all preſumption, curioſity, raſhneſſe, profaneneſſe, and ſuch like vices, which may not onely hinder their profit in the Scriptures, but alſo cauſe all their travell in them to turne to their utter deſtruction.

These things, the true Paſtors and Governours of the Church can teach, without arrogating unto themſelves any preſumptuous authority, to reſtraine or permit according to their judgement, that which our Saviour Chriſt hath left generally to all the members of his myſticall body, which is his holy Church, and to every one of them.

S. Chryſoſtomes exhortations to the reading of holy Scriptures, & when the people is ſo to be exhorted.

Wherein, the variety of circumſtances cauſeth them to deale diverſly: as we ſee by S. Chryſoſtome's people of Conſtantinople, who were ſo delicate, dull, worldly, and ſo much given to dice, cardes, ſpecially Stage playes or Theaters (as S. Gregorie Nazianzene *witneſſeth) that the Scriptures, and all holy lections of divine things were loathſome unto them: whereby the holy Biſhop was forced * in many of his Sermons to cry out againſt their extreme negligence and contempt of Gods word, declaring, that not onely Eremites and Religious (as they alledge for their excuſe) but Secular men of all ſorts reade the Scriptures, and often have more need thereof in reſpect of themſelves, then the other that live in more purity and contemplation: further inſinuating, that though divers things be high and hard therein, yet many godly hiſtories, lives, examples and precepts of life and doctrine be plaine: and finally, when the Gentiles were ſo cunning and diligent to impugne their faith; it were not good for Chriſtians to be too ſimple and negligent in the defence thereof: as (in truth) it is more requiſite for a Catholike man in theſe dayes when our adverſaries be induſtrious to impeach our beliefe, to be ſkilfull in Scriptures, then at other times when the Church had no ſuch enemies.*

Ad Pop. Antioch. hom. 3.

Chryſoſtome not in reſpect of ſuch varietie of circumſtances, as you ſpeake of, but abſolutely, and moſt vehemently, commendeth, not onely the lawfulneſſe, but alſo the neceſſity of reading the holy Scriptures by the Lay-men, as it appeareth in many places before cited and quoted, out of his Homilies, and many other, which for tedious neſſe are omitted, ſeeing the matter by you is partly confeſſed. Yet one or two, ſhall not be amiſſe, to prove that I have ſaid: Firſt, he doth not onely exhort the people of Conſtantinople, which were ſo worldly minded, as you write, but alſo the people of Antioch, whom he greatly commendeth for their vertue and godlineſſe, he calleth upon very earneſtly, to be diligent in reading of the holy Scriptures, ad Pop. Antioch. Hom. 22. 42. &c. Againe, for the neceſſity of ſtudying the Scriptures, he ſaith, Qui ſalutem conſequi volunt, &c. They that will attaine to ſalvation, let them exerciſe themſelves in the Scriptures, in epiſt. ad 1. Cor. Hom. 6. Where you thinke it requiſite in theſe times, for a Popiſh Catholike to be ſkilfull in the Scriptures, I would many of them were of your minde, for then I would not doubt, but ſome of them, by Gods grace would become Chriſtian Catholikes.

RHEM. 15

S. Chryſoſtome maketh nothing for the popular and licentious reading of Scriptures uſed among the Proteſtants now adayes. Every ſimple artificer among them readeth much more the deepeſt & hardeſt queſtions of holy Scripture, then the morall parts.

1 Tim. 6.

2 Pet. 3.

To this ſenſe ſaid S. Chryſoſtome divers things, not as a teacher in the ſchoole, making exact and generall rules to be obſerved in all places and times; but as a pulpit man agreeable to that audience and his peoples default: nor making it therefore (as ſome perverſly gather of his words) a thing abſolutely needfull for every poore Artificer to reade or ſtudy Scriptures, nor any whit favouring the preſumptuous, curious, and contentious jangling and ſearching of Gods ſecrets, reproved by the foreſaid fathers, much leſſe approving the exceſſive pride and madneſſe of theſe dayes, when every man and woman is become not onely a reader, but a teacher, controuler, and judge of Doctors, Church, Scriptures and all: ſuch as either contemne or eaſily paſſe over all the morall parts, good examples, and precepts of life, (by which as well the ſimple as learned might be much edified) and only in a maner, occupie themſelves in dogmaticall, myſticall, high, and hidden ſecrets of Gods counſels, as of Predeſtination, Reprobation, Election, Preſcience, forſaking of the Iewes, vocation of the Gentiles, and other incomprehenſible myſteries, Languiſhing about queſtions of onely faith, fiduce, new phraſes, and figures, ever learning, but never comming to knowledge, reading and toſſing in pride of wit, conceit of their owne cunning, and upon preſumption of I cannot tell what ſpirit, ſuch Bookes ſpecially and Epiſtles, as S. Peter foretold that the unlearned and inſtable would deprave to their owne damnation.

FULKE 15

All that Chryſoſtome ſaith, to this purpoſe, is wiped away with this reprochfull gloſſe, that he ſpake, not as a teacher in ſchoole, making exact & general rules to be obſerved in al places and times, but as a pulpit man agreeable to that audience and his peoples default. Belike pulpit men, with you, doe more regard their credit before a few captious ſcholers in their ſchoole, then they do reverence the preſence of Chriſt, before whom they ſhould prepare to ſpeak,

He ſpake in the pulpit, that he was able to juſtifie in the Schooles.

when they preach in the Church of God. And therefore, albeit in figures, [illegible] manner of handling, there is ſome difference, betweene a preacher before the [illegible] a reader before the learned, yet no learned godly man, ſuch as we acknowledge S. [illegible] to have beene, will ſo adviſedly, ſo vehemently, ſo oftentimes as he did, utter any thing in the pulpit, before the ignorant, the truth whereof, he is not able to juſtifie in the Schooles before the beſt learned. Beſide that your reſtriction of his rules unto his audience, and peoples default of Conſtantinople, is before proved to be both frivolous, and falſe, ſeeing he commendeth the ſtudy and reading of the holy Scriptures, no leſſe generally to the people of Antioch, which were not a little more ſpiritually affected, then they of Conſtantinople. And to that you ſay, he maketh it not a thing abſolutely needfull, for every poore Artificer to reade or ſtudie Scripture, as ſome perverſly gather of his words. Let his owne words teſtifie for him, both already cited, and other beſide. Audite quotquot eſtis mundani, &c. Heare all ye that be Secular or Lay-men, and have the governement of wives and children, how the Apoſtle commandeth you ſpecially, to reade the Scriptures, and that not ſimply, nor as it were by occaſion, but with great diligence. Doth not omnes mundani, all Secular men, include, as well every poore Artificer, as every rich Merchant, or landed Gentleman? Or is not a thing abſolutely needfull, which the holy Ghoſt commandeth all men to doe? I might adde hereunto, that he ſaith in another place, It cannot poſſibly be, I ſay, it cannot poſſibly be, that any man can attaine to ſalvation, except he be continually converſant in ſpirituall reading. But here you would quarrell, that he maketh no exact rule, becauſe many men attaine to ſalvation, which cannot reade at all. Yet his meaning is plaine, and his words agreeable, that none can be ſaved, but by that knowledge, which is gotten by continuall reading of the Scriptures, whether a man reade them himſelfe, or heare other.

In Epiſt. ad Col. hom. 9.

Ex Luc. c. 16.

That he favoureth not preſumptuous, curious and contentious jangling, and ſearching of Gods ſecrets, it is true, no more do we, and much leſſe the pride and madneſſe of them, that will be teachers, controllers, and judges of Doctors, Church, Scriptures and all.

Ceſarius Arelatenſis, Hom. 13. exhorting the ignorant people to repeate among themſelues what they had learned in the Sermon, ſaith, Alius referat, ego retineo dixiſſe Epiſcopum meum, ut qui novit literas, Scripturam Divinam ſtudeat legere: qui verò non novit, quærat ſibi & roget qui illi debeat præcepta relegere, ut quod legerit, poſſit Deo adjuvante complere.

Neither are you ever able to prove, that every Artificer among us, readeth the deepeſt and hardeſt queſtions of holy Scripture, rather then the morall part, albeit that ſeeing whatſoever is written, is written for our learning, that through patience and comfort of the holy Scriptures, we might have hope: no ſimple Artificer amongſt us, is forbidden reverently to reade any queſtion of the Scripture, which is either neceſſary, or profitable for him to know. If there were in the Apoſtles time, vaine minded men that languiſhed about queſtions, and perverted the Scriptures to their owne deſtruction, it is no marvell though there be ſome ſuch in theſe dayes. But as the Apoſtles neuer reſtrained or forbad the reading of the holy Scriptures, for the miſbehaviour of ſuch as abuſed the ſame, no more doe we. And ſurely this argument of yours (though it came from Rhemes) taken of mens abuſe, will carry leſſe weight in the Schooles, againſt the generall liberty for all men to reade the Scriptures, then the authority of Chryſoſtome, though he in your judgement, were but a pulpit man, for the contrary.

Where you account onely faith, and fiduce to be new phraſes, and figures, the one, faith onely, may be ſhewed by twenty authorities, to have been uſed, more then twelue hundred yeeres agoe, by writers of the Church, both Greekes and Latines: the other fiduce, is a new phraſe, and for ought I know, of your owne framing, and none of ours: as for the Latine word, fiducia, and that which it ſignifieth, truſt and confidence, I doubt not, but they which are meanely read in the Scriptures, doe know them to be both ancient and uſuall.

RHEM. 16 They delight in none more then the Epiſtle to the Romans, the Cantica canticorum, the Apocalyps, which have in them as many myſteries as words; they finde no difficultie in the ſacred booke claſped with ſeven ſeales, they aske for no Expoſitour* with the holy* Eunuch; they feele no ſuch depth of Gods ſcience in the Scriptures, as S. Aug. did, when he cried out, Mira profunditas eloquiorum tuorum, mira profunditas, (Deus meus) mira profunditas: horror eſt intendere in eam, horror honoris, & tremor amoris; that is, O wonderfull profoundneſſe of thy words: wonderfull profoundneſſe, my God, wonderfull profoundneſſe: it maketh a man quake to looke on it: to quake for reverence, and to tremble for the love therof. They regard not that which the ſame Doctor affirmeth, that the depth and profundity of wiſdome, not only in the words of holy Scripture, but alſo in the matter and ſenſe, is ſo wonderfull, that live a man never ſo long, be he of never ſo high a wit, never ſo ſtudious, never ſo fervent to attaine the knowledge thereof, yet when he endeth, he ſhall confeſſe he doth but begin; they feele not with S. Hierome, that the text hath a hard ſhell to be broken, before we come to the kernell; they will not ſtay themſelves in onely reading the ſacred Scriptures thirteene yeeres together, with S. Baſil, and S. Gregorie Nazianzene,

They preſuppoſe no difficulties, which all the learned fathers felt to be in the Scriptures.

FULKE 16 [illegible] affected, it is a most [illegible] ſlander. [illegible] word of God and [illegible], of [illegible] comfort, and [illegible] of godlineſſe. Where you [illegible] then in the Epiſtle to the Romanes, I marvell, why you [illegible] that the true faith of the Church of Rome, w[illegible] in no part of Scripture, is more plainely [illegible] Epiſtle, w[illegible] the Doctor and Apoſtle of the Gentiles, did write [illegible] ſtood, of every ſimple Artificer [illegible] were in Rome, beloved of God, and [illegible].

Rom. 1. 7.

As for the C[illegible], I [illegible] all the brazen faces that conſpired to write this Preface, cannot [illegible] three ſimple Artificers in England, that [illegible] more in that booke, then any other of the Scripture: for [illegible], I know none. Neither is there any Treatiſe of the holy Scripture, which is [illegible] ſtudied, either of the learned, or unlearned. But becauſe it is a continuall allegory, the difficulty thereof ſerved well, to make a ſhew of your ſlander, before them whom you have inchanted to beleeve every lie, that your impudent mouth is not aſhamed to pronounce. The Apocalyps alſo, though it be hard to underſtand, and be full of myſteries, yet may it be read as other parts of holy Scriptures, and there are many things in it, that are plaine and eaſie to be underſtood of every Artificer. But perhaps you are more unwilling, they ſhould reade the Apocalyps, becauſe it doth deſcribe the Whore of Babylon, the City of Rome, ſo plainely, and the Epiſtle to the Romanes liketh you not, becauſe it is ſo plaine for juſtification by faith without workes. The reſt that, you ſay, of the difficulty of ſome part of the Scriptures, the ſimple and godly Artificers among us, doe acknowledge, and either ſeeke the interpretation of them at the mouth of their learned Paſtour, or elſe are content to be ignorant in the expoſition of them, knowing as they are taught by the learned out of S. Auguſtine, that in thoſe places which are plainely ſet downe in the Scripture, are found all thoſe things which concerne faith and good living. De doct. Chriſt. lib. 2. cap. 9. which is as much as is neceſſarie, for every Chriſtian man to learne for his ſalvation.

The example of S. Baſil and Gregorie, in ſtudying the Scriptures thirteene yeeres, before they expounded them, pertaineth not to every ſimple Artificer, but to the Paſtours and Teachers of the Church. And God be thanked, our Church hath many godly learned Teachers, that have ſtudied more then fourteene yeeres before they have openly expounded the Scriptures, and which follow the underſtanding of them, not out of their owne preſumption, but out of the writings and authoritie of their Ancients or Elders, whom it is knowne to have received the rule of underſtanding, by ſucceſſion Apoſtolike, which are the words of Ruffine, whom you quote, who ſpeaketh not one word of uniforme conſent or Apoſtolike tradition. If you alledge, that all our Preachers, are not of ſo many yeeres ſtudy; I anſwere, their example maketh no law, eſpecially where the neceſſity of the Church requireth men of leſſe time, yet ſufficient to teach the truth. Neither are the moſt of your Seminarie Prieſts, whom you ſend over to diſturbe the State of governement, as well as the peace of our Church, of thirteene yeeres ſtudy in the Scripture, ſeeing we knew ſome of them, but the other day, runnagate unlearned boyes, from our Vniverſities, but being come to you, they are ſuddenly become great Clerkes, and profound Teachers, whoriſh impudence ſerving them in ſtead of all learning.

RHEM. 17 If our new Miniſters had had this cogitation and care that theſe and all other wiſe men have, and ever had, our Countrey had never fallen to this miſerable ſtate in religion, and that under pretence, colour, and countenance of Gods word: neither ſhould vertue and good life have beene ſo pittifully corrupted in time of ſuch reading, toyling, tumbling and tranſlating the booke of our life and ſalvation: whereof the more precious the right and reverend uſe is, the more pernicious is the abuſe and profanation of the ſame: which every man of experience by theſe few yeeres proofe, and by comparing the former dayes and manners to theſe of ours, may eaſily trie.

Manners and life nothing amended, but much worſe, ſince this licentious toſſing of holy Scripture.

FULKE 17 Gods name bee praiſed, a great number of our Miniſters, have had as good cogitation, and care, as is meet for that calling, and thereby have brought our Countrey into that flouriſhing ſtate in religion, that, vertue and good life in them that diligently reade the holy Scripture tranſlated into the mother tongue, never more ſhined in any age, then it hath done ſince the light of the Goſpel hath driven away the clouds of Po[illegible] chuse bu[illegible]. [illegible] so forg[illegible] you [illegible] Chri-stians in this time? [illegible] your dri[illegible] [illegible] rous [illegible] [illegible] for-mer da[illegible] and m[illegible] foeth [illegible] where it is detected, in al[illegible] men, and are openly [illegible]ed, as Stewes be in Popery.

RHEM. 18 Looke whether your men be more vertuous, your women more chaste, your children more obedient, your servants more trusty, your maids more modest, your friends more faithfull, your laitie more iust in dealing, your Clergie more devout in praying: whether there be more religion, feare of God, faith and conscience in all states now, then of old, when there was not so much reading, chatting, and jangling of Gods word, but much more sincere dealing, doing, and keeping the same. Looke whether through this disorder, women teach not their husbands, children their parents, yong fooles their old and wise fathers, the scholers their masters, the sheepe their pastor, and the people the Priest. Looke whether the most chaste and sacred sentences of Gods holy word, be not turned of many into mirth, mockerie, amorous ballets, and detestable letters of love and lewdnesse: their delicate rimes, tunes, and translations much increasing the same.

Scriptures as profanely cited as heathen Poets.

FVLKE 18 We yeeld humble thankes unto God, that although the fruits of the Gospel, be not so plentifull, as it were meet after so long teaching; yet the word of God hath not beene preached and read in vaine, but that great and notable effects thereof doe appeare, in the life and conversation of the faithfull. And that all sorts and degrees of men, women, and children, which be diligent in reading and hearing the word of God, be reformed in all vertue and godly behaviour. And that there is more religion, feare of God, faith, and conscience, in all such persons, then was in any superstitious hypocrite, that lived in the darke dayes of Papistry. Neither doe women teach their husbands, children their parents, young men the old, scholers their master, and sheepe their shepherd, except perhaps, where there is greater knowledge in the woman, then in the man, in the childe then in the parent, in the yong, then in the old, in the scholer, then in the master, in the people, then in him that occupieth the place of the Pastor, in which case, it is not against Gods ordinance, that the inferiour should instruct the superiour. The Prophet David saith, that he had more understanding then his Elders, because he studied the Law of God, that he became wiser then all his teachers, because his meditation was in the Lords testimonies. But where the husband, parents, old men, masters and pastors, are as they ought to be, better learned in the holy Scriptures, then their inferiours, there is no such disorder amongst us, as you speake of, if you except a few schismatikes departed from us, and condemned of us. Neither are the sentences of Gods holy word, by any of us, abused into mirth, and mockerie, and such other wickednesse, but either by Papists, or profane unreligious persons, which have brought that horrible profanation of the Scriptures, from the common practice in Popery. Neither make we or alow we any such rimes, tunes, or translations, as may give just occasion to increase such impiety.

RHEM. 19 This fall of good life and profaning the divine mysteries, every body seeth: but the great corruption and decay of faith hereby, none see but wise men, who only know, that, were the Scriptures never so truly translated, yet heretikes and ill men, that follow their owne spirit and know nothing, but their private fantasie; and not the sense of the holy Church and Doctors, must needs abuse them to their damnation: and that the curious simple and * sensuall men which have no taste of the things that be of the Spirit of God, may of infinite places take occasion of pernicious errours; for though the letter or text have no errour, yet (saith S. Ambrose*) the Arrian, or (as we may now speake) the Calvinian interpretation hath errors,* l. 2. ad Gratianum c. 1. and Tertullian saith, The sense adulterated is as perillous as the stile corrupted. Scriptures erroneously expounded according to every wicked mans private fancie.

* 1 Cor. 2.

All Heretikes pretend Scriptures.

* Matth. 4.

FVLKE 19 These Papists, are able to follow no argument against us, with any apparence of truth, but that which is grounded on petition or begging of principles. For who will grant them, the fall of good life and profaning the divine mysteries, in and by them, which use to reade the holy Scriptures amongst us, as they are taught by us to reade them? yet they [illegible]. And as for that which they call the great corruption, and decay of [illegible], [illegible] and increase of faith. That Heretikes, [illegible] which [illegible] the Scriptures [illegible] part. But that [illegible] will [illegible] in the Scriptures, by the [illegible] to find [illegible] of the Church, & of the Doctors, [illegible] of the Scrip-[illegible] of the Scriptures themselves [illegible] of Clemens [illegible] Dist. 37 [illegible] Scriptures with the assistance of Gods Spirit, may be found the true sense of the holy Church, and the Doctors thereof. But that the [illegible] which know [illegible] nothing, but their private fantasie, may easily be deceived, & that Heretiks, Wolves, & the devils [illegible] pretend the holy Scriptures, it needed not so many authorities to prove, because it is acknowledged of al men that have but meane knowledge: Yet it followeth not which you conclude, that the vulgar or common people, in these daies of generall disputes, cannot but be in extreme danger of error, by reading the Scriptures truely translated, but rather by reading of them, may be preserved from danger of error, if in humblenesse of heart, and desire to know the truth, they seeke, knock, & pray to him which hath promised that they shal find, enter, & receive.

RHEM. 20. But the case [illegible] more lamentable: for the Protestants, and such as S. Paul calleth ambulantes in astutia, walking in deceitfulnesse, have so abused the people, and many other in the world, not unwise, that by their false translations, they have instead of Gods Law and Testament, and for Christs written will and word, given them their own wicked writing & phantasies, most shamefully in all their versions, Latine, English, and other tongues, corrupting both the letter and sense by false translation, adding, detracting, altering, transposing, pointing, and all other guilefull meanes: specially where it serveth for the advantage of their private opinions. For which, they are bold also, partly to dis-authorise quite, partly to make doubtfull, divers whole bookes allowed for canonicall Scripture by the universall Church of God these thousand yeeres and upward: to alter all the authenticall and Ecclesiasticall words used sithence our Christianitie, into new prophane novelties of speaches agreeable to their doctrine: to change the titles of workes, to put out the names of the Authors, * charge the very Evangelist with following untrue translation, to adde whole sentences proper to their sect, into their Psalmes in meeter, * even into the very Creed in rime, all which the poore deceived people say and sing, as though they were Gods owne word, being indeed through such sacrilegious treachery, made the devils word.

2 Cor. 4.

The Scriptures have bin falsly and heretically translated into the vulgar tongues, and sundry other waies sacrilegiously abused, and so given to the people to reade.

* Beza annot. in c. 1. Luc. v. 78.

* See the tenth article of their Creed in meeter.

FVLKE 20. You slander the Protestants, in saying they walke in deceitfulnes, and abuse men by false translations, corrupting, adding, detracting, &c. the particulars whereof, as they occurre in these annotations, shall receive their answer to your shame. And as for that booke wherein they are set foorth more at large, by which you meane, Martynes Discovery, the Author did well to terme it an handmaid to this great gentlewoman, the glosse of your annotations, specially in respect of her modestie, that being once rebuked of her fancies, she holdeth her peace, and doth not reply. So that these five or sixe yeeres having none amongst you, that dare set pen to paper, to defend her after the death of her father, she hath kept silence to the shame of all Papists. Therefore for a large and particular confutation of all those slanders, I referre the Reader to a booke set forth in confutation of that discovery, called A defence of the sincere and true translation of the holy Scriptures into the English tongue, &c. And that which you write in the margent, specially against Beza, is confuted in the answer to Martins Preface, Section 18. 19. 20. 21. 22.

The last quarrell against our translation, is, for adding whole sentences to the Psalmes in meeter, and even to the Creed in rime. By as good reason you might have brought out all bookes that we write in English, to prove that our translations of the Bible are faultie. For all reasonable men know, that the turning of the Psalmes into meeter, is no translation, neither is the Creed any part of the Text of the holy Scripture, although good regard should be had as well in the one, as in the other, that nothing be added to the sense, though the number of words cannot possibly be kept, as for the most part I hope it is. Where you say the poore deceived people say and sing those meeters, as though they were Gods own word, you measure their understanding by the blindnesse of your ignorant Papists. But assure your selfe, our people are not so ignorant, but they can distinguish the very text of the Scripture translated into English, from the Paraphrase of the Psalmes brought into meeter, knowing that this later must be consonant in sense unto the former, or else it is not the divine Scripture, no not although it bee agreeable unto it. That our translation maketh of Gods word the Devil's word, it is a rayling sentence grounded upon no truth, nor argument sounding like truth, and therefore I passe it over.

RHEM. 21. To say nothing of their intollerable liberty & licence, to change the accustomed callings of God, Angels, men, places, and things used by the Apostles & al antiquity, in Greeke, Latin, & al other languages of Christian Nations, into new names, sometimes falsly, & alwaies ridiculously & for ostentation taken of the Hebrews: to frame & fine the phrase of holy Scriptures after the forme of profane writers, sticking not, for the same to supply, add, alter or diminish as freely as if they translated

All this their dealing is noted (as occasion serveth) in the [illegible] upon this [illegible] ſtated Liuie, Virgil, or Terence. *Hauing no religious reſpect to keep either the maieſty or ſincere ſimplicity of that venerable ſtile of Chriſts Spirit, as S.Aug. ſpeaketh, which kind the holy Ghoſt did chuſe of infinit wiſdom to haue the diuine myſteries rather vttered in, then any other more delicate, much leſſe in that meretricious maner of writing, that ſundry of theſe new tranſlators do vſe: of which ſort Caluin himſelfe and his pew-fellows ſo much complaine, that they profeſſe, Satan to haue gained more by theſe new interpreters (their number, leuity of ſpirit, and audacitie increaſing daily) then he did before by keeping the Word from the people. And for a patterne of this miſchiefe they giue Caſtalion, adiuring all their Churches and Schollers to beware of his tranſlation, as one that hath made a very ſport and mockery of Gods holy Word. So they charge him: themſelues (and the Zuinglians of Zuricke, whoſe tranſlations Luther therefore abhorred) handling the matter with no more fidelitie, grauitie, or ſincerity then the other: but rather with much more falſification, or (to vſe the Apoſtles words) cauponation and adulteration *of Gods word then they. Beſides many wicked gloſes, prayers, confeſſions of faith, containing both blaſphemous errours * and plaine contradictions to themſelues, and among themſelues, all priuiledged and authoriſed to be ioyned to the Bible, and to be ſaid and ſung of the poore people, and to be beleeued as Articles of faith, and wholly conſonant to Gods word.*

* Caluin complaineth of the new delicate tranſlatours, namely Caſtalion: himſelfe and Beza being as bad or worſe.

2 Cor.2.17.

* See the fourth articles of their Creed in meeter, where they profeſſe that Chriſt deſcended to deliuer the Fathers, and afterward in their confeſſion of their faith, they deny Limbus patrum.

FVLKE 21 All theſe quarrels and falſe accuſations, are anſwered ſufficiently in the booke before remembred, & as they ſhal be touched in theſe annotations, they ſhal here alſo be confuted.

That Caluin, the Church of Zurich, and other, complaine of the licentious and profane tranſlation of Caſtalion, it ſheweth indeed, that we approue none, but that is ſincere and true, although without proofe you accuſe ours to be as bad or worſe. If Luther in his heat miſliked the Tigurine tranſlation, it is not ſufficient to diſcredit it, ſeeing truth, and not the opinion or authority of men, is to be followed in ſuch matters.

The gloſes, prayers, and confeſſions, though they be printed, and bound in the ſame volume with the Bible, yet they be not priuiledged and authoriſed to be ſo ioyned with the Bible, as part of it, or yet ſo wholly conſonant vnto it, but that they are to be examined according to the text of the Scripture, and not otherwiſe to be receiued, then ſo far forth, as they are agreeable thereunto. Vnleſſe perhaps you thinke, that we vſurpe ſuch Lordſhip ouer mens faith, as you doe practiſe, which require all theſe your ſlanders, contained in your Preface, and all other errors comprehended in your annotations, to be taken for articles of faith, wholly conſonant to the Catholike Religion. The contradiction that you note in the fourth Article of the Creed in meeter, with the confeſſion of our faith denying Limbus patrum, if you were not malicious enemies, might be auoided, either by acknowledging that the Authour of that meeter is to be vnderſtood ſo, as his words may agree with the Article of the confeſſion, or elſe, that he vttered his priuate opinion, diſagreeing from the iudgement of the whole Church.

RHEM. 22 *We therefore hauing compaſſion to ſee our beloued country-men, with extreme danger of their ſoules, to vſe only ſuch profane tranſlations, and erronious mens meere fantaſies, for the pure and bleſſed word of truth, much alſo moued therunto by the deſires of many deuout perſons: haue ſet forth for you (benigne Readers) the new Teſtament to begin withall, truſting that it may giue occaſiō to you, after diligent peruſing therof, to lay away at leaſt ſuch their impure verſiōs as hitherto you haue beene forced to occupie. How well we haue done it, we muſt not be iudges, but referre all to Gods Church and our Superiours in the ſame. To them we ſubmit our ſelues, & this, and all other our labours, to be in part, or in the whole, reformed, corrected, altered, or quite aboliſhed: moſt humbly deſiring pardon, if through our ignorance, temerity, or other humane infirmity we haue any where miſtaken the ſenſe of the holy Ghoſt, further promiſing, that if hereafter we eſpie any of our owne errors, or if any other, either friend of good will, or aduerſarie for deſire of reprehenſion, ſhall open vnto vs the ſame: we will not (as Proteſtants do) for defence of our eſtimation, or of pride and contention, by wrangling words wilfully perſiſt in them, but be moſt glad to heare of them, and in the next edition, or otherwiſe to correct them: for it is truth that we ſeek for, and Gods honor: which being had either by good intention, or by occaſion, all is well. This we profeſſe onely, that we haue done our endeauour with prayer, much feare and trembling, leſt we ſhould dangerouſly erre in ſo ſacred, high, and diuine a work: that we haue done it with all faith, diligence, and ſincerity: that we haue vſed no partiality for the diſaduantage of our aduerſaries, nor no more licence then is ſufferable in tranſlating of holy Scriptures: continually keeping our ſelues as neere as is poſſible to our text, and to the very words and phraſes which by long vſe are made venerable, though to ſome profane and delicate eares they may ſeeme more hard or barbarous, * as the holy ſtile of Scripture doth lightly to ſuch at the beginning: acknowledging with S.* Hierom, that in other writings it is enough to giue in tranſlation, ſenſe for ſenſe, but that in Scriptures, leſt we miſſe the ſenſe, we muſt keepe the very words, Ad Pammach, ep. 101. c.2. in prin. We muſt ſaith S. Auguſtine, ſpeak according to a ſet rule, leſt licence of words breed ſome wicked opinion concerning the things contained vnder the words, De ciu.l.10.c.12. Wherof our holy fore-fathers and ancient Doctors had ſuch a religious care, that they would not FVLKE 22 Theſe forty or fifty yeres being void of compaſſion, you haue ſuffered the people to be without a Popiſh tranſlation, while you had any hope to perſwade the world, that ignorance of the holy Scriptures is more meet for them, then knowledge in the ſame. But being beaten from that moſt impudent aſſertion by ſhame, and the conſcience of all Papiſts that are of any equity or indifferent iudgment crying out againſt it, and ſeeing that you haue labored in vaine to bring in blinde ignorance: you haue yeelded by obſcure tranſlation, partly to dimme the light of the Scripture, and by hereticall Annotations, to peruert the ſenſe of the holy Ghoſt, to the vpholding of the kingdome of Antichriſt. That our true and ſincere tranſlations, out of the originall tongues (which you ſay men hitherto haue beene inforced to occupie) being laid aſide, your miſtes of darke ſpeeches, and wicked obſeruations might come in place. What you profeſſe and proteſt of your care and ſincerity, may be credited of them that be deuote vnto you: but all reaſonable men may take a taſte of your credit by this. In the anſwer to Martines booke called the Diſcouery, &c. you were admoniſhed of manifeſt corruptions, and falſe tranſlations, euen of your vulgar Latine text, but where is the promiſe of reformation theſe fiue or ſix yeeres? Your like fidelity in citing and applying the ſayings of the ancient Fathers, ſhall God willing be laid open in this anſwere to your Annotations: but as for the humble acknowledging of your errors, & the correction of the ſame, we haue ſmall hope to ſee. For ſo long as your heads be occupied in contriuing moſt horrible conſpiracies, of treaſon and murder of the moſt Honourable Prince in the world, your naturall ſoueraigne Lady and Queene, and the ouerthrow of your owne Countrey which hath bred and nouriſhed you: we cannot be perſwaded that any heauenly wiſdome can enter into ſo malicious ſoules, or that there is any feare of God, regard, honour or loue of his truth, that moueth you to any thing, whatſoeuer you pretend: But euen as the booke you lately wrote againſt the murdering of Princes, had no other purpoſe of the ſetters forth, but to make our Prince and her Counſell ſecure of your deuilliſh practices, while you intended nothing ſo carefully, as the moſt cruell and vnnaturall ſlaughter of her ſacred perſon, and of all her faithfull Counſellers and truſtie ſubiects, by that helliſh and Sathanicall conſpiracie of Sauadge, Ballard, Babington, and the reſt, by Gifford and Allen, principall pillars of that your Seminary of Rhemes, enchanted and confirmed thereunto, openly teſtified by their owne confeſſions, at their arraignements. That in tranſlation of the Scriptures, the very words muſt be kept, as neere as it is poſſible, and the phraſe of the tongue into which we tranſlate will beare, we doe acknowledge with S. Hier. ad Pammach. That which you cite out of S. Auguſtine, is not to be found in the place by you quoted: but whereſoeuer it is written, it ſeemeth to be intended of termes vſuall in the Church, againſt Heretikes, rather then of tranſlation. That the ancient Doctors refuſed not the barbariſmes and ſolæciſmes of the vulgar Latine tranſlation, which they then had, it was becauſe they did write in Latin, to be vnderſtood of the common people, to whom the Latine tongue was vulgar, and that tranſlation familiar: not that thoſe barbariſmes and ſolæciſmes by long vſe became venerable, or that it is any example for you, to bring in Latine and Greeke words into the Engliſh text, neither vſed before, nor vnderſtood now of the Engliſh people. Although the place you cite out of S. Ambroſe, is by him defended to be a commendable phraſe, by authority of thoſe which made choice of words and eloquent ſpeeches, of which one ſaid, Loco editiore quam victoribus decebat. Neither doth S. Hierom in the Epiſtle to Damaſus, ſay, that he keepeth religiouſly theſe and ſuch like barbarous ſpeeches, although he vſe ſome of them in his Commentaries, for the cauſe before alledged, but rather he ſheweth, that recourſe muſt be had to the originall truth of the Greeke text. Neuertheleſſe he ſaith, he hath ſo tempered his pen, that thoſe things onely being corrected that might ſeeme to change the ſenſe, he ſuffered the reſt to remaine as they were.

Cap.10.ſec.12

De ciuit. lib. 10.cap.12.

Neither had S. Auguſtine any Religion in falſe or barbarous Latine, although he did beare with [illegible] was willing to vſe it where it was beſt vnderſtood, or did [illegible] the originall Greeke. For in the firſt place by you quoted, hee would have the [illegible] out of which the [illegible] is made, to be looked vnto, & that which is barbarous & obſcure, to be corr[illegible] by it, as in ſtead of vitul[illegible], he would have plantationes: that which Sapien. 4. is commonly vnderſtood, to be borne with, if it cannot be amended, and [illegible] example Pſal. 131. of That, which [illegible] he) we cannot take away frõ the mouth of the people [illegible] Vpon him ſhal my ſanctifi[illegible] flouriſh, where the barbarous word floriet, doth nothing hinder the ſenſe: yet a cunning hearer had rather have it corrected, that it might be ſaid, not floriet, but florebit. And no- thing doth hinder the correction, but the cuſtome of the ſingers. But theſe things may be eaſily con-tẽned. Lo this is the moſt religious care, that he hath to keepe barbariſmes & ſolecismes, this is the ſpeciall pride & infirmity that he counteth in them, that would have them corrected.

In the ſecond place by you noted, for avoiding of ambiguity, he ſaith, he had rather ſpeake barbarouſly then purely: as where the text is, Non eſt abſconditum à te os meum, becauſe os ſignifieth a mouth & a bone, the certainty muſt be learned out of the Greek tongue, Wherefore many times (ſaith he) the vulgar cuſtome of ſpeaking is more profitable for ſignification of things, Pſal. 138. then the learned purity. For I had rather it be ſaid with barbariſme, Non eſt abſconditum à te oſſium meum, then that it ſhould be therefore leſſe plaine, becauſe it is more Latine-like. His meaning is, he had rather have a barbarous word uſed (that is underſtood of the cõmon people) then a pure Latine word, either not underſtood, or uncertaine how it ſhould be underſtood.
In the third place he ſaith, that ſanguines, in the plurall, is no good Latine word, yet becauſe it is the plurall number in the Greeke, the Interpreter did chuſe rather to expreſſe the truth according to the ſound of words, though he ſpake not ſo pure Latine, according to the Grammarians, for if he had ſpoken it in the ſingular number, he had not expreſſed the Apoſtles meaning: Therefore let vs ſpeake (ſaith he) and not be afraid of the Grammarians pal- mer, ſo that we may come to the ſound and more certaine truth.

These things I haue examined particularly, though the matter be not weighty, that the Reader may ſee how ſoundly and ſincerely, you gather out of the Fathers, where no great need inforceth you, that he may the rather ſuſpect your dealing with them in matters of greater importance.

Of the Annotations why they were made, and what matter they containe.

RHEM. 23 Now, though the text thus truly tranſlated, might ſufficiently, in the ſight of the learned, & al in- different men, both controule the aduerſaries corruptions, & prove that the holy Scripture, whereof they have made ſo great vaunts, make nothing for their new opiniõs, but wholy for the Catholike Churches beleefe and doctrine, in all the points of difference betwixt vs: yet knowing that the trary, men take it for a figuratiue ſpeech: for theſe cauſes, and ſomewhat to helpe the faithfull Reader in the difficulties of diuers places, we haue alſo ſet forth large Annotations, thereby to ſhew the ſtudious reader in moſt places pertaining to the controuerſies of this time, both the here-ticall corruptions and falſe deductions, and alſo the Apoſtolike tradition, the expoſitions of the holy Fathers, the decrees of the Catholike Church and moſt ancient Councels: which meanes whoſoeuer truſteth not, for the ſenſe of holy Scriptures, but had rather follow his private judgement, or the arrogant ſpirit of theſe Sectaries, he ſhall worthily through his owne wilfulneſſe be deceived; beſeeching all men to looke with diligence, ſinceritie, and indifferencie, into the caſe that concerneth no leſſe then every ones eternall ſaluation or damnation.

FVLKE 23 Although the text be not truly tranſlated by you, yet ye are not able by it to diſprove the truth of our doctrine, nor to defend your owne hereſies. Whatſoeuer in your Annota- tions, you have obſerved to charge vs with hereticall corruptions, or falſe deductions, hath for the one beene ſufficiently confuted already, the other ſhall receive anſwere now. As for the old brag of Apoſtolike tradition, expoſition of Fathers, decrees of Church and Coun-cels, ſhall be declared now to be as vaine as ever it was. And whoſoeuer with diligence, ſincerity, and indifferencie will vouchſafe to reade, as well your Annotations, as our anſwer to the ſame, I doubt not but they ſhall acknowledge more to be performed concerning this matter in the end, then we promiſe in the beginning. As for the wilfull blinde, that will be led by none other, but by your blinde Pharizaicall guides, we muſt let them alone, to fall together with you, into the pit of everlaſting deſtruction.

RHEM. 24 Which if hee do, we doubt not but he ſhall to his great contentment, find the holy Scriptures moſt clearly & invincibly to prove the articles of cat[illegible] doctrine againſt our aduerſaries, which perhaps he had thought before this diligẽt ſearch, either not to be conſonant to Gods word, or at leaſt not

In Pſalm. 67. prope finem. not contained in the ſame, and finally he ſhall prove this ſaying of S, Aug. to be moſt true. Multi ſenſus, &c. Many ſenſes of holy Scriptures lie hidden, and are knowne to ſome few of greater underſtanding: neither are they at any time avouched more commodiouſly and acceptably then at ſuch times, when the care to anſwer Heretikes doth force men thereunto. For then, euen they that be negligent of matters of ſtudy and learning, ſhaking off ſluggiſhneſſe, are ſtirred vp to diligent hearing, that the Aduerſaries may be refelled. Againe, how many ſenſes of holy Scriptures, concerning Chriſts God-head, haue beene avouched againſt Photi- nus: how many of his Man-hood, againſt Manichans: how many, of the Trinity, againſt Sabellius: how many, of the unity in Trinity, againſt the Arrians, Eunomians, Macedoni- ans: how many of the Catholike Church diſperſed thorowout the whole world, and of the mixture of good and bad in the ſame, untill the end of the world, againſt the Donatiſts and Luciferians, and other of the like errour: how many againſt all other Heretikes, which it were too long to rehearſe? Of which ſenſes and expoſitions of holy Scripture the approved authours and avouchers, ſhould otherwiſe either not be knowne at all, or not ſo well knowne as the contradictions of proud Heretikes haue made them.

Hereſies make Catholikes more diligent to ſearch and find the ſenſes of holy Scripture for refelling of the ſame.

FVLKE 24 We may ſee, there is no ſmall account made of theſe your annotations, that you promiſe the diligent Reader, ſuch ſatisfaction and contentment in them, as he could not find in all the Popiſh Treatiſes, that haue beene ſet forth theſe thirty yeeres. Well, the triall is all. For my part, by the aſſiſtance of Gods grace, I nothing doubt, but as I haue in twenty other of your Treatiſes, laid open the weakneſſe of your part, with the lewde meanes you uſe to uphold it, in ſuch ſort as you haue no liſt to reply: ſo in this worke, I ſhall performe the like, that the ſaying of S. Auguſtine, by you ſet downe, ſhall be found moſt true. That the contradiction of Papiſts (as of all other like Heretikes) is the occaſion, that the true meaning of the Scripture by diligent ſearch is better underſtood, then it were like to haue beene, if no ſuch Hereſie had ariſen, and that the true Catholikes be better diſcerned from the arrogant 1 Cor. 11. Heretikes, according to the ſaying of the Apoſtle. There muſt be Hereſies, that they which are approved may be made manifeſt. So the malice of Satan, the father of lies, is by the invincible power of God, converted to the avouching of the truth, and to the benefit of the Church, which by Hereſies the Deuill ſeeketh to overthrow.

RHEM. 25 Thus he ſaith of ſuch things as not ſeeming to be in holy Scriptures to the ignorant or heretikes, yet indeed be there. But in other points doubted of, that indeed are not decided by Scripture, he giueth vs this godly rule to be followed in all, as he exemplifieth in one. Thẽ we do hold, ſaith he, the verity of the Scriptures, when we do that which now hath ſeemed good to the Vniuerſall Church, which the authority of the Scriptures themſelues doth cõmend: ſo that, foraſmuch as the holy Scriptures cannot deceive, whoſoeuer is afraid to be deceived with obſcuritie of queſtions, let him therein aske counſell of the ſame Church, which the holy Scripture

FVLKE 25 Your application of S. Auguſtines place, is as true as your quotation: for you quote, cap.
13. inſtead of 33. cap. And he ſpeaketh not of points of doctrine, that indeed are not decided by Scripture, for the point of doctrine in controverſie betweene him and the Donatiſts, that ſuch as were baptized by Heretikes, might not be rebaptized, hee ſaith in the Chap. going before, Sequimur ſane nos in hac re etiam Canonicarum authoritatem certiſ- ſimam Scripturarum. Truly we follow in this thing alſo, the moſt certain authority of the Canonicall Scriptures. And a little before, he had alledged for the ſame queſtion among other au-Ioan. 13. thorities of Scriptures, the ſaying of our Saviour Chriſt to Peter: He that is once waſhed, need not to be waſhed againe. But the matter that was not to be found in the Scripture, was an example of one baptized by Heretikes, received by the Church without re-baptiſme.
For he had alſo before alledged the ſame example of the Samaritanes, who being circumciſed in Schiſme and Hereſie, were not circumciſed againe, when they were converted to the true Religion of the Iewes: which prooveth the point of doctrine invincibly. But the contentious heretike, would ſtill urge the like example to be ſhewed of Baptiſme, where-upon Saint Auguſtine ſaith, Proinde quamvis hujus rei certè de Scripturis canonicis, non profera- tur exemplum, &c. Therefore although indeed, an example be not brought forth of this thing, out of the canonicall Scriptures, yet in the ſame thing alſo the truth of the ſame Scriptures is holden of vs, when we doe that which hath now pleaſed the whole Church, whom the authority of the Scriptures themſelues doth commend, that for as much as the holy Scripture cannot deceive, whoſoeuer feareth to be deceived with the obſcurity of this queſtion, let him aske counſell of the ſame Church, which the holy Scripture without all ambiguity, doth demonſtrate or ſet out. The obſcurity of this queſtion, grew by the contrary iudgement and practice of S. Cyprians time, which the whole Church, by authority of the Scriptures, had reformed in S. Augu- ſtines time. He ſaith not therfore, that of points not decided by ſcriptures, the church muſt be cõ- ſulted, but where queſtion of contrary iudgment & practice doth ariſe, the iudgment of the whole Church muſt be enquired, what is agreeable to the holy Scriptures, and preferred

before the particular opinions and practiſes of any other, though otherwiſe godly and learned, as Cyprian was.

The Church therefore hath wiſdome to decide queſtions by Scripture, not authority to determine of points of doctrine, not decided by the Scriptures, for there are none ſuch neceſſary for Gods people, to know or practiſe.

RHEM. 26 Now to give thee alſo intelligence in particular, moſt gentle Reader, of ſuch things as it behoveth thee ſpecially to know concerning our Tranſlation: We tranſlate the old vulgar Latine text, not the common Greeke text, for theſe cauſes. Many cauſes why this new Teſtament is tranſlated according to the ancient vulgar Latine text.

It is moſt ancient. 1. It is ſo ancient, that it was vſed in the Church of God above 1300. yeeres agoe, as appeareth by the Fathers of thoſe times.

FVLKE 26 You tranſlate the vulgar Latine text, and not the originall Greeke text, for ten cauſes. The firſt is the Antiquity, that it was in vſe the in Church of God aboue 1300. yeeres agoe. This is more boldly affirmed, then it can be ſoundly proved: for it appeareth not by the Fathers of thoſe times, that any one tranſlation was generally uſed. S. Auguſtine, as we ſhewed before, ſaith, There was an infinite variety of Latine tranſlations. S. Hieronym in effect ſaith as much in præfat. ad Damaſum in 4. Euang. Yea, it will be hard for you to name any one Father of the Latine Church, that vſed it more then 1300. yeeres agoe.

Cont. Marc. lib. 5. In ep. ad Gal. ca. 6. in 1 Cor. 1. c. 1. & Rom. cap. 1. First, Tertullian vſed it not, as appeareth by an hundred texts that he citeth, differing from it: one or two ſhall ſuffice for example. Your vulgar Latine hath Alter alterius onera portate, Tertullian citeth it: Onera veſtra invicem ſuſtinete. Your text hath, prudentiam prudentium reprobabo, Tertullians text was, irritam faciam. Your text hath, Non enim erubeſco Evangelium, Tertullians text was, Non enim me pudet Evangelij.

S. Cyprian vſed it not, as appeareth by infinite texts, which he citeth in his bookes of Teſtimonies ad Quirinum, and thorowout his workes, whereof I will ſhew a few examples. Your text hath Matth. 3. Non ſum dignus calceamenta portare. Cyprians text had, Non ſum idoneus; ad Quirinum, lib. 1. num, 12. Againe, Luke 1. Your text hath, Quia viſitavit & fecit redemptionem plebis ſuæ: Cyprians text was, Quia proſpexit redemptionem populo ſuo, lib. 2. num. 7. Againe, your text Iohn 1. hath In principio erat verbum. S. Cyprians text had, In principio erat Sermo, lib. 2. num. 6. Your text Rom. 2. hath, An divitias bonitatis ejus & patientiæ, & longanimitatis contemnis? S. Cyprians tranſlation had, An numquid opulentiam bonitatis ejus & ſuſtinentiam & patientiam contemnis? lib. 3. num. 35. The Clergie of Rome in S. Cyprians time, uſed not your vulgar Latine text, as appeareth by divers texts cited in their Epiſtles: As for example, Your text hath, Mat. 18. Omne debitum dimiſi tibi quoniam rogaſti me. The Romanes text had, Donavi tibi omne debitum quia me rogaſti, Cler. Rom. epiſt. 31. Your text hath, Rom. 1. Quia fides veſtra annunciatur in univerſo mundo. Their text had, Quia fides veſtra prædicatur in toto mundo.

Irenæus, or he that tranſlated him into Latine, which is very ancient, followed another tranſlation, then your vulgar Latine. I will forbeare examples, which are many, becauſe it is not certaine of what time the tranſlatour of Irenæus lived, who is thought to have written in Greeke.

Com. in Pſal. 67. In Pſal. 106. Arnobius an ancient writer uſed not your text, as appeareth by divers places which he citeth: for example, Your text hath, 1 Ioh. 2. Filioli noviſſima hora eſt. Arnobius did reade, Pueri noviſſima hora, &c. Your text, Luk. 22. hath, Satanas expetivit vos ut cribraret. Arnobius did reade, ventilet. Your text ſaith, Ego autem rogavi; Arnobius ſaith, Ego autem interceſſi.

S. Hilarie uſeth not your vulgar Latine text, as appeareth thorow all his Commentarie upon S. Matthew, whereof take theſe examples: Your text hath Mat. 7. In quo enim judicio judicaveritis judicabimini. S. Hilarie ſaith, Iudicabitur de vobis.

Againe, cap. 11. your text hath, Arundinem vento agitatam; Hilarie readeth, vento moveri. Your Latine text hath, Matth. 26. Extendens manum exemit gladium ſuum & percutiens ſervum principis Sacerdotum amputavit auriculam ejus. S. Hilarie ſaith, gladium exerens ſervo principis Sacerdotum aurem abſcidit.

S. Ambroſe you confeſſed before, to uſe a more ancient tranſlation, then your vulgar Latine, and leſt the unlearned Reader ſhould thinke it were in that one only place, I will give a few examples, whereby it may appeare, that he uſed not your vulgar Latine in his whole Commentarie upon S. Luke, which is his without controverſie. In the Angels ſalutation, Luke 1. your text hath, in mulieribus. S. Ambroſe ſaith, inter mulieres. In the anſwere of Mary, your text hath, fiat mihi. Ambroſe ſaith, contingat mihi. In the 12. cha. where your text hath ager, Ambroſe hath poſſeſſio. Yours hath Quid induamini, Ambroſe hath, quid veſtiamini.

Pacianus uſed it not, as Ep. 1. Luc. Dignus eſt mercenarius, your text is, Operarius. 2 Cor. 2. Non enim verſutias ejus ignoramus. Yours, Non enim ignoramus cogitationes ejus.

Iulius Firmicus, tra. 1. Qui aufert. Vul. Qui tollit. Apo. 5. Proſtraverunt ſe. Vul. Ceciderunt. Victorinus Col. 1. ſedes. Vulg. throni. Condita. Vulg. creata. 1 Tim. 3. myſterium Vulg. Sacramentum. Receptum, Vulg. aſſumptum.

Gaudentius

Gaudentius Brixianus uſed it not, as appeareth, Ep. ad Germinium, where he rehearſeth the whole parable of the unjuſt Steward out of another tranſlation.

Sect. 22. Seeing none of theſe Fathers of theſe times, uſed your vulgar Latine text, I pray you tell us in good earneſt, what Fathers you meane? for theſe are the chiefe, and almoſt all, whoſe workes remaine of thoſe times. Againe, where you ſay in the margent, it is moſt ancient, you forget what you ſaid before, that Ambroſe followed an elder tranſlation then the vulgar Latine tranſlation.

RHEM. 27 2 It is that (by the common received opinion, and by all probability) which S. Hierome afterward corrected according to the Greeke, by the appointment of Damaſus then Pope, as he maketh mention in his preface before the foure Evangeliſts, unto the ſaid Damaſus: and in Catalogo in fine, and ep. 102. Corrected by S. Hieronym.

FVLKE 27 The places by you quoted, doe ſhew, that Hieronym did correct a vulgar Latine text, that was much uſed before his time, at the requeſt of Damaſus, but the common received opinion of Papiſts, which call it S. Hieronymus tranſlation, is no good argument to prove it to be the ancient vulgar text of his correction. All probability, is but your owne authority. For it is againſt all probability, that Hieronym who corrected it, according to the Greeke, as he profeſſeth, would have left ſo many places, that are not warranted by any Greeke copie.

Againe, there are in it, ſome of thoſe faults which S. Hieronym did correct, as in S. Marke the firſt, the name of Eſay, which he thinketh to be the fault of the writers, Com. in Matth. cap. 3. The like is in ſome copies of the vulgar Latine, Iudæa for Iudæ. Matth. 2. and cap. 6. he correcteth the word exterminant, which remaineth in your vulgar Latine text.

Alſo cap. 16. 4. it appeareth that S. Hieronymus text was vade retro me, yours is vade poſt me.

In the Epiſtle to the Gal. cap. 1. where your vulgar Latine hath expugnabam illam, S. Hieronym in his Commentarie, rehearſeth the text & devaſtabam illam. Likewiſe for acquievi in the ſame chapter, he correcteth contuli according to the Greeke. Againe, vpon the third chapter he ſaith expreſly, Legitur in quibuſdam codicibus, quis vos faſcinavit non credere veritati? Sed hoc quia in exemplaribus Adimantij non habetur, omiſſimus. In ſome bookes it is read, Who hath bewitched you not to beleeve the truth? but becauſe it is not found in the copies of Origens, we have omitted it. But thoſe words which he ſaith he hath omitted, your vulgar text hath. Therefore with greater probability, may I ſay, that your vulgar text is not that which S. Hieron. corrected, but rather the ſame text uncorrected, then you can affirme, that by all probability, it is that which he corrected. Many like examples might be brought out of his Commentaries vpon the Epiſtle to the Epheſians, and to Philemon, and to Titus, where he ſheweth his correction out of the Greeke, which is not obſerved in your vulgar Latine text. Therefore your vulgar Latine text is not that which he corrected.

RHEM. 28 3 Conſequently it is the ſame which S. Auguſtine ſo commendeth and alloweth in an Epiſtle to S. Hierome.*

FVLKE 28 The antecedent being proved falſe, the conſequent cannot be true. S. Auguſtine commendeth S. Hieronymus labour and diligence in that correction of the vulgar Latine, but we have declared before, this is not that which he corrected, therefore it is not the ſame which Auguſtine ſo commendeth. Neither doth Auguſtine uſe your vulgar Latine text, as I might ſhew by five hundred examples, but a few ſhall ſuffice to give a taſte. * Epiſt. 10. Commended by S. Auguſtine.

In the 9. of S. Iohn your vulgar Latine text hath, fecit lutum ex ſputo, & linivit lutum ſuper oculos ejus. S. Auguſtines tranſlation was de ſaliva ſua lutum fecit & inunxit oculos cæci. Tract. in Ioan. 44. Alſo Iohn 13. your vulgar Latine hath poſt buccellam. S. Auguſtines booke had, poſt panem, or poſt panem intinctum. In the firſt chapter of the firſt Epiſtle of S. Iohn, your vulgar Latine text hath, & teſtamur & annunciamus vobis vitam æternam, quæ erat apud patrem & apparuit nobis. S. Auguſtines text had, & teſtes ſumus & annunciamus vobis vitam æternam, quæ erat apud patrem & manifeſta eſt in nobis. Alſo in the ſecond chapter, to the fift verſe, he addeth theſe words, Si in illo perfecti fuerimus, which are not in your vulgar Latine text, in the ſame place he readeth dilectio Dei, where your text hath charitas. In the fourth chapter of the ſame Epiſtle, your text hath Omnis ſpiritus qui ſolvit Ieſum. S. Auguſtines text had omnis ſpiritus, qui non confitetur Ieſum in carne veniſſe, &c. By theſe it is manifeſt that S. Auguſtine followed not your vulgar Latine text, which it is like he would have done, if it had beene the ſame which S. Hieron. corrected, & which he ſo commended & allowed.

RHEM. 29 4 It is that which for the moſt part ever ſince hath beene uſed in the Churches ſervice, expounded in Sermons, alledged and interpreted in the Commentaries and writings of the ancient Fathers of the Latine Church. Vſed and expounded by the Fathers.

FVLKE 29 You are not able to prove your Church ſervice to be ſo ancient as S. Auguſtines time, for many of your Church Leſſons are taken out of Beda, and other writers, which lived many hundred yeeres after S. Auguſtines age. And ſuch parts of the Scripture, as ſeeme to have beene of moſt ancient time uſed in the Church of Rome, are not taken out of your vulgar Latine text. In the Lords prayer, it is panem noſtrum quotidianum, in your vulgar text ſuperſubſtantialem, Likewiſe for gloria in excelſis, your vulgar Latine hath gloria in altiſſimis. So out of Matthew 21. your Church ſervice hath, Benedictus qui venit in nomine Domini, Hoſanna in excelſis, your vulgar Latine hath in altiſſimis.

That it hath not beene euer ſince S. Hieronyms time alledged, and interpreted in the writings and Commentaries of the ancient Fathers of the Latine Church ſhall appeare by theſe teſtimonies following; Your text hath Matt. 16. portæ inferi non prævalebunt. Optatus Milevitanus alledgeth, portæ inferorum non vincent. Alſo Matth. 7. your vulgar Latine hath converſi dirumpant vos. Optatus read, converſi elidant vos, Againe, Luc. 18. in your vulgar Latine it is thus written, dixit autem & ad quoſdam qui in ſe confidebant tanquam juſti, & aſpernabantur cæteros. Optatus ſaith it is written, Dicebat Ieſus hanc ſimilitudinem propter eos qui ſe ſanctos putant, & contemnunt cæteros.

Fulgentius another ancient Father of the Latine Church, alledged not alwayes your Latine text, as appeareth Ad Traſimundum lib. 1. c. 5. Omnis ſpiritus qui non confitetur Ieſum Chriſtum in carne veniſſe, ex Deo non eſt. Your text hath, qui ſoluit Ieſum, 1 Ioan. 4. Alſo lib. 2. c. 18. his text had conforme corpori, where your text hath configuratum, Phil. 3.

Primaſius another old father of the Latine Church, in his Commentarie vpon the Epiſtle to the Hebrewes c. 1. hath Oleo lætitiæ præ conſortibus, where your text hath, oleo exultationis præ participibus. And cap. 3. ad Gal. in his expoſition he followeth that, which he ſaith was the Latine text, Quibus ad horam ceſſimus: whereas the Latine now is negatiuely, neque ad horam. And although the Writers or Printers have prefixed the vulgar Latine before his Commentaries: yet it appeareth b ymany places of his Commentaries, that he followed another text.

Proſper Aquitanicus ſomewhat elder then he, alledged Scripture out of another tranſlation, then your vulgar Latine: as de promiſſ. part. 3, pro. 1. out of Ioan. 1. dic, ut habeamus renunciare his, your text is, ut reſponſum demus. In the ſame place, vox clamantis in eremo, parate viam, &c. your text is in deſerto, dirigite. And out of the Acts 13. he citeth this text, Cum impleretur curſus Ioannes dixit, quem me ſuſpicamini eſſe, non ſum ego, ſed ecce venit poſt me, de cujus pedibus non ſum dignus ſolvere corrigiam calceamentorum ejus. Your text is, cum impleret autem Ioannes curſum ſuum dicebat, quem me arbitramini eſſe non ſum ego, ecce venit poſt me cujus non ſum dignus calceamenta pedum ſolvere. It were folly to adde more examples in a caſe ſo manifeſt.

Leo Biſhop of Rome, expoundeth not your vulgar Latine text, and therefore it is not like to be that which S. Hieronym corrected: for in his Hom. in feſt. omn. ſanctorum, interpreting the beginning of S. Matthewes Goſpel: next after Beati pauperes, he placeth Beati qui lugent, as it is in the Greeke, Poſt prædicationem, &c. After the commendation of this moſt happy poverty, our Lord added, ſaying, Bleſſed are they that mourne. Your vulgar text placeth, Beati mites, quoniam ipſi poſſidebunt terram. And Leo when he commeth to the third beatitude, he readeth hæreditate poſſidebunt terram, more expreſſing the Greeke word. Gregorie indeed, who was three hundred yeeres after the time by you before named, uſed your vulgar Latine text, and that ſo preciſely, that where there is a manifeſt corruption, not of the tranſlator, but of the writers, Luk. 15. evertit domum, for everrit, he neuertheleſſe expoundeth the text according to that corruption, although he confeſſeth that in another tranſlation it was emundat, which is more agreeable to the Greeke. But this errour of Gregorie, you are content to give over, for in your tranſlation you ſay, ſhe doth ſweepe the houſe, according to the truth of the originall Greek, being aſhamed to follow the groſſe error of the beſt Biſhop of Rome, of all the number that followed him.

Vigilius an ancient Father uſeth not your tranſlation, as appeareth in many places: Lib. 2. he citeth the text thus, Luc. 2. Puer autem creſcebat & confortabatur, repletus ſapientia, & gratia Dei ſuper eum. Your text hath, Plenus ſapientia, & gratia Dei erat in illo. Againe, this text Heb. 2. he citeth, Nam paulò minùs minoratum vidimus Ieſum, &c. Your text is, Eum autem qui modicè quam Angeli minoratus eſt. In the ſame place after ſome Greeke copies Vigilius readeth, Sine Deo, where your text is, Gratia Dei.

Gildas our countreyman, Matth. 5. 16. Magnificent patrem veſtrum. Vulg. Glorificent. Matth. 7. 3. Trabem in oculo tuo non conſideras. Vulg. Non vides, 1 Timoth. 3. Si quis Epiſcopatum cupit, bonum opus cupit. Vulg. Deſiderat.

RHEM. 30 Seſſ. 4. 5. The holy Councell of Trent, for theſe and many other important conſiderations, hath declared and defined this only of all other Latine tranſlations, to be authenticall, and ſo only to be uſed and taken in publike leſſons, diſputations, preachings and expoſitions, and that no man preſume upon any pretence to reject or refuſe the ſame.

Only authenticall by the holy Councell of Trent.

FULKE 30 The profane particular Chapter of Trent, hath no authority to preferre any tranſlation, much leſſe one ſo corrupted and depraved as that is, before the originall text of the Apoſtles and Evangeliſts owne enditing: nor to forbid any man to reject that, which is found found diſagreeing from the originall verity. No [illegible] (which your good heads and leaders of the Popiſh French Church, will not acknowledge the Tridentine to have any authority againſt the truth, but onely for it, as S. Paul ſaith of himſelfe and other Apoſtles. 2 Cor. 13.

RHEM. 31 6. It is the graveſt, ſincereſt, of greateſt majeſtie, leaſt partialitie, as being without all reſpect of controverſies, and contentions, ſpecially theſe of our time, as appeareth by thoſe places which Eraſmus and others at this day tranſlate much more to the advantage of the Catholike cauſe.

Moſt grave, leaſt partiall.

FULKE 31 In gravity, ſincerity, and maieſty, it is not to be compared with the authenticall Greeke text, beſide that in many places it is ridiculous, vnſincere, vntrue, and conſequently of no authority, much leſſe maieſty. And although the tranſlator was not partiall in reſpect of the controuerſies of our time, yet his vnapt tranſlation ſometime is abuſed of you, to the maintenance of your errours, as in anſwering your annotations it will appeare.

RHEM. 32 7. It is ſo exact and preciſe according to the Greeke, both the phraſe and the word, that delicate Heretikes therefore reprehended it of rudeneſſe. And that it followeth the Greeke farre more exactly then the Proteſtants tranſlations, beſide infinite other places, we appeale to theſe, Tit. 3. 14. Curent bonis operibus præeſſe. προΐστασθαι Engl. Bibl. 1577. to maintaine good works. and Heb. 10. 20. Viam nobis initiavit. ἐνεκαίνισεν. Engl. Bible, He prepared. So in theſe words. Iuſtificationes, Traditiones, Idola, &c. In all which they come not neere the Greeke, but avoide it of purpoſe.

Preciſe in following the Greeke.

FULKE 32 The tranſlatour indeed according to his knowledge, did purpoſe to tranſlate exactly, both words and phraſes: but being neither very good Grecian, nor good Latiniſt, beſide that he erred in many places from the true ſenſe, he hath tranſlated many places barbarouſly, as is confeſſed by Lindanus, Iſidorus Clarius, and other of indifferent iudgement among you. What hurt is it then, if by learned men of theſe times, which have exact iudgement in both the tongues, that rudenes be amended: Is the Scripture of more credit in falſe Latine or in barbarous Latine, then in true and cleane Latine? No verely, but that you preferre old errours, before old truth newly reſtored. If that vulgar tranſlation follow the truth more exactly then ours, I would wiſh ours were reformed according to the Greeke. Concerning the examples you bring, I anſwer to the firſt, that your (præeſſe) doth not follow the Greeke more exactly, then our words, to maintaine, or, to ſhew foorth. For προΐστασθαι doth ſignifie as well that which we tranſlate, as that which your vulgar text hath. We tranſlate it alſo to excell, as Beza doth ſay, Præſtantes eſſe: and the Greeke ſignifieth all three indifferently, as euery man that is learned therein, will confeſſe, and the Lexicons beare witneſſe. To the ſecond I ſay, The word, Dedicated, as Beza tranſlateth it, had beene more proper, then Prepared: yet, becauſe the word ſignifieth to renew, and mention is made before of the new way, it is no hurt to the ſenſe, to ſay, He prepared a new way. As for the words, Iuſtificationes, Traditiones, Idola, we expound truly according to the Greeke, as is declared at large, in the booke of the Defence of our tranſlations, vnto which I referre the Reader.

RHEM. 33 8. The Adverſaries themſelues, namely Beza, preferreth it before all the reſt, In præfat. no. Teſt. an. 1556. And againe he ſaith, that the old Interpreter tranſlated very religiouſly, Annot. in Luk. 1. v. 1.

Preferred by Beza himſelfe.

FULKE 33 Beza preferreth it before the licentious tranſlations of Caſtalion, Illyricus, and ſuch like, and it is not to be denied, that the old Interpreter of the new Teſtament, according to his knowledge, and after the copy which he followed, tranſlated religiouſly: yet, partly for want of knowledge, partly for lacke of conference of other copies, or iudgement to diſcerne them, he hath tranſlated many things obſcurely, many things vntruly, ſome things ambiguouſly, and often times barbarouſly.

RHEM. 34 9. In the reſt, there is ſuch diverſity, and diſſention, and no end of reprehending one another, and tranſlating every man according to his fantaſie, that * Luther ſaid, If the world ſhould ſtand any long time, we muſt receive againe (which he thought abſurd) the Decrees of Councels, for preſerving the unity of faith, becauſe of ſo divers interpretations of the Scripture. And Beza (in the place above mentioned) noteth the itching ambition of his fellow-tranſlators, that had much rather diſagree and diſſent from the beſt, then ſeeme themſelues to have ſaid or written nothing. And Beza's tranſlation it ſelfe, being ſo eſteemed in our countrey, that the Geneva Engliſh Teſtaments be tranſlated according to the ſame, yet ſometime goeth ſo wide from the Greeke, and from the meaning of the holy Ghoſt, that themſelues which proteſt to tranſlate it, dare not follow it. For example,* Luke 3. 36. They have put theſe words, The ſonne of Cainan, which he wittingly and wilfully left out: and Act. 1. 14. they ſay, With the women, agreeable to the vulgar Latine: where he ſaith, Cum uxoribus, with their wives.

All the reſt miſliked of the Sectaries themſelues, each reprehending another.

* The new Teſt. printed the yere 1580 in the Title.

FULKE 34 The diſſention of interpreters, muſt be decided by the originall Greeke, as S. Auguſtine ſheweth, and S. Hierome thinketh as much. Neither is there greater diſſention of our interpreters, then is of the copies of your vulgar Latine text: neither is it like, neither is there any cauſe why Luther ſhould ſo ſay, as you report out of his aduerſary Coclæus. For ſo long as the Greeke text remaineth, the diuerſity of tranſlations cannot bring the truth in vncertainty, but they that be learned, and louers of truth, may plainly ſee it. Nor yet is Bezas tranſlation ſo wide from the Greeke, that it is forſaken of vs: but we vſe our iudgement freely in thoſe points, and are not tied vnto his authority. The ſon of Cainan, though it be a ſuperfluous and falſe addition, yet becauſe it is in moſt of the Greek copies, we are content to let it ſtand, as the name of Ieremie in S. Matth. Goſpel, which yet we doubt not to be a corruption in ſtead of Zacharie, or elſe that there ſhould be neither of both named. Yet Beza by authority of Moſes, and of a very ancient Greeke copie, now remaining in the Librarie of the Vniuerſitie of Cambride, doth leaue it out in his tranſlation.

Cap. 27. 9.

The other example, Cum uxoribus, with their wiues, is nothing wide from the Greeke text, but very aptly agreeth therewith, yet becauſe the word ſignifieth women alſo generally, and becauſe it might be, that there were other godly women, beſide the wiues of the Apoſtles, our tranſlator thought good to tranſlate it by the word women, which comprehendeth as well wiues as other women.

RHEM. 35 It is not onely better then all other Latine tranſlations, but then the Greeke text it ſelfe, in thoſe places where they diſagree.

It is truer then the vulgar Greeke text it ſelfe.

FVLKE 35 This onely argument, if it were well proued, might iuſtifie your tranſlation out of the vulgar Latine text. The other nine reaſons, if they were all granted (as there is not one of them all true and good) are not ſufficient to proue, that you ought to tranſlate out of the Latine, rather then out of the Greeke. Seeing the water is moſt pure out of the ſpring, and not out of ponds and ditches, that are deriued from it.

The ancient Fathers for proofe hereof, and the aduerſaries themſelues.

RHEM. 36 The proofe hereof is euident, becauſe moſt of the ancient Heretiks were Grecians, and therfore the Scriptures in Greeke were more corrupted by them, as the ancient fathers often complaine, Tertullian noteth the Greeke text which is at this day (1 Cor. 15. 47.) to be an old corruption of Marcion the Heretike, and the truth to be as in our vulgar Latine, Secundus homo de cœlo cœleſtis, The ſecond man from heauen heauenly. *So reade other * ancient fathers, and* Eraſmus thinketh it muſt needs be ſo, and Calvin himſelfe followeth it, Inſt. l. 2. c. 13. parag. 2. Again, S. Hierome noteth that the Greeke text (1 Cor. 7. 33.) which is at this day, is not the Apoſtolicall verity, or the true text of the Apoſtle: but that which is in the vulgar Latine, Qui cum uxore eſt, ſolicitus eſt quæ ſunt mundi, quomodo placeat vxori, & diuiſus eſt. He that is with a wife, is carefull of worldly things, how he may pleaſe his wife, and is diuided or diſtracted. The Eccleſiaſticall hiſtorie called the Tripartite, noteth the Greeke text that now is (1 Ioh. 4. 3.) to be an old corruption of the ancient Greeke copies, by the Neſtorian Heretikes, and the true reading to be as in our vulgar Latine, Omnis ſpiritus qui ſoluit Ieſum, ex Deo non eſt. Euery ſpirit that diſſolueth Ieſus, is not of God: and Beza confeſſeth that Socrates in his Eccleſiaſticall hiſtory readeth ſo in the Greeke, πᾶν πνεῦμα ὃ λύει τὸν Ἰησοῦν Χριστὸν, &c.

Lib. 7. c. 32.

FVLKE 36 The proofe is like your accuſtomed proofes, where you heap on words with a little apparance to deceiue the ignorant, which being rightly weighed, haue no ſubſtance at all of truth in them. Your firſt argument is, that moſt of the ancient Heretiks were Grecians, which did corrupt the Scriptures in Greeke. A feeble reaſon, as though the prouidence of God, which cauſed the new Teſtament to be written in Greek, either could not, or would not, preſerue it from the corruption of Heretikes, in Greeke, as well as in Latine. But ſome of theſe corruptions, you ſay, remaine in the Greeke books unto this day: it may be in ſome copies they do, which yet are conuinced by other copies. But that you deny: and for example you ſay, Tertullian affirmeth the Greeke text, which is at this day, 1 Cor. 15. 47. to be an old corruption of Marcion the Heretike, and the truth to be as your vulgar Latine hath: but Lindanus whom you follow, miſtooke Tertullian greatly, and ſo doth Beza. For Tertullian laieth not Marcions corruption in that verſe, but in the 45. verſe, and by authority of the Apoſtle in the 47. ver. diſcouereth his corruption, as well as by the order of the ſame verſ. For after he hath proued out of the Apoſtle againſt Marcion, that the reſurrection pertaineth vnto the body, and not unto the ſoule onely: he declareth that the Apoſtle confirmeth the ſame of Chriſt himſelfe, where he ſaith, Factus primus Adam, &c. The firſt Adam was made a liuing ſoule, the laſt Adam a quickning ſpirit, although the moſt fooliſh Heretik would not haue it to be ſo: for he hath placed the laſt Lord, in ſtead of the laſt Adam, fearing indeed, leſt if he ſhall haue the Lord to be the laſt Adam, we alſo might defend Chriſt in the laſt Adam, to be of the ſame nature, whereof the firſt Adam was. But the falſhood doth plainly appeare: for why is there the firſt Adam, but becauſe there is the laſt Adam? There is no order of things one to another, except they be equall, and be either of the ſame name, or ſubſtance, or author: For although in diuers things alſo, there may be one thing firſt, and another laſt, yet they muſt be of one author. But if the author be another, he alſo may be called the laſt: yet that which he hath brought in, is firſt, but laſt, if it be equal to the firſt, but equal to the firſt it is not, becauſe it is not of the ſame author: after the ſame manner he ſhall be conuinced in the name of man. The firſt man (ſaith he*) is of the earth earthly, the the ſecond is the Lord from heauen. Why is he called the ſecond, if he be not a man as the firſt? or is the firſt the Lord, if the ſecond be? But it ſufficeth, if in the Goſpell he calleth Chriſt the ſonne of man, and man, and in the man Adam, cannot deny him. The words following alſo, doe proue him together: for when the Apoſtle ſaith, ſuch as he is which is of the earth, namely the man, ſuch are the men earthly. Therefore ſuch as the man is, that is from heauen, ſuch are the men which are from heauen. This place of Tertullian being rightly vnderſtood, doth not charge the Greeke text with any corruption, but rather reproueth the corruption of Marcion in the 45. verſe, and is a good teſtimonie for the antiquitie of that reading, which is now of that 47. verſe in the Greeke text. And whereas in his booke, De reſurrectione carnis, it is now read, Secundus homo de Cælo: it ſeemeth that Dominus is left out, through fault of the writers, ſeeing he addeth immediately, id eſt ſerm[illegible], id eſt Chriſtus, which agreeth properly to Dominus, and addeth not Cæleſtis, as it is in the vulgar Latine. And although ſome ancient Fathers of the Latine Church, as Ambroſe, and Hieronyme doe reade ſo, and Caluine miſliketh not the ſenſe, which is true: yet all the Greeke copies, and ancient Fathers of the Greeke Church, as Athanaſius alledging it againſt Marcion himſelfe, Euthy. Pan. part. 1. tit. 9. Chryſoſtome, Damaſcen, and Oecumenius, holding the Greeke text, and the ſenſe thereof, being good and godly, there is no reaſon why it ſhould be counted a corruption. Another corruption, of the Greeke text, you ſay, is noted by S. Hierom. in 1 Cor. 7. 33. Aduerſus Iouinian. lib. 1. where indeed he ſaith, that the Latine bookes of his time, were as the Greeke is now, and that the Apoſtolike truth is as your vulgar text is, and as he in that place tranſlateth: yet he confeſſeth, that he hath cited it otherwiſe, and ſo he doth in his booke againſt Heluidius, and in Ep. ad Euſtoc. de Virgin. cuſtodia. But ſeeing S. Baſil that was ſomewhat elder then he, and a father of the Greeke Church, doth oftentimes cite the text as we reade it now, and ſo doth Chryſoſtome likewiſe reade and expound it, Oecumenius alſo, and Theophylactus: and almoſt all the old Greeke copies doe agree in this reading, with that which was the ancient Latine text in S. Hieronymus time: it is rather like S. Hieronymus Greeke booke was faulty, and lacked the coniunction, then that all the Greeke Church was deceiued in it. The third corruption, you ſay, is noted by the Tripartite hiſt. li. 12. c. 4. in 1 Ioan. 4. 3. and the true reading to be omnis ſpiritus qui ſoluit Ieſum, as alſo Socrates contendeth, affirming that text which we now reade, is a corruption of the Neſtorians, as Beza confeſſeth. But Beza telleth you alſo that S. Cyprian l. 2. aduerſ. Iudæos c. 8. citeth it in Latine, according to that we now reade in the Greeke, who ſeeing he liued certaine hundred yeres before Neſtorius: Socrates, or Caſſiodorus, which liued ſo long after him, doe vniuſtly charge him with corruption, although ſome old copies in their time, whom your vulgar interpreter followed, might haue λύει τὸν Ἰησοῦν, as Socrates ſaith. Yet all the Fathers of the Greeke Church, as appeareth by Oecumenius, retaining the Greeke text, as it is now, and all the ancient copies thereunto agreeing, and the Syrian tranſlation confirming it, the teſtimonie of one no very ancient Hiſtorian, Socrates, and that manifeſtly falſe, is not ſufficient to conuince the Greeke Teſtament of corruption: eſpecially, ſeeing not onely Cyprian, and long before him Tertullian de præſcriptionibus aduerſ. hæret. and after them Auguſtine, and other ancient fathers of the Latine Church, doe acknowledge this reading, to be the true text and word of God.

De virginitate.

RHEM. 37 But the proofe is more pregnant, out of the Aduerſaries themſelues. They forſake the Greeke text as corrupted, & tranſlate according to the vulgar Latine, namely, Beza and his ſcholers the Engliſh tranſlatours of the Bible, in theſe places, Heb. c. 9. ver. 1. ſaying, The firſt couenant, for that which is in the Greeke, The firſt Tabernacle, where they put couenant, not as of the text, but in another letter, as to be underſtood according to the vulgar Latine, which moſt ſincerely leaueth it out altogether ſaying, Habuit quidem & prius iuſtificationes, &c. The former alſo indeed had iuſtifications, &c. Againe, Rom. 12. verſ. 11. They tranſlate not according to the Greeke text. Tempori ſeruientes, ſeruing the time, which Beza ſaith muſt needs be a corruption: but according to our vulgar Latine, Domino ſeruientes, ſeruing our Lord. Againe, Apo. 11. v. 2. they tranſlate not the Greeke text, Atrium quod intra templum eſt, the court which is within the temple, but cleane contrary according to the vulgar Latine, which Beza ſaith is the true reading, Atrium quod eſt foris templum, the court which is without the temple. Only in this laſt place one Engliſh Bible of the yeere 1562. followeth the error of the Greeke. Againe, 2 Tim. 2. v. 14. they adde, but, more then is in the Greeke, to make the ſenſe more commodious and eaſie, according as it is in the vulgar Latine. Againe, Iam. 5. v. 12. they leaue the Greeke, and follow the vulgar Latine, ſaying, Leſt you fall into condemnation. I doubt not (ſaith Beza) but this is the true and ſincere reading, and I ſuſpect the corruption in the Greeke came thus, &c. It were infinite to ſet downe all ſuch places, where the Aduerſaries (ſpecially Beza) follow the old vulgar Latine and the Greeke copie agreeable thereunto, condemning the Greeke text that now is of corruption.

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

The Caluiniſts themſelues often forſake the Greeke as corrupt, and tranſlate according to the ancient vulgar Latine text.

FVLKE 37 It is a ſhameleſſe cauillation to ſay, we acknowledge the Greeke text to be corrupt, becauſe [illegible] in ſome few places, where the Greeke copies doe vary, through the [illegible] of the [illegible] being deceived by ſimilitude of letters, or otherwiſe, we chuſe that reading which being [illegible] agreeable to the circumſtance of the text, is confirmed alſo by [illegible] of the vulgar Latin tranſlation: as in the firſt example you bring out of Heb.9.1. Some Greeke copies [illegible] the word tabernacle, which is in many copies [illegible] to the circumſtance of the place requireth. The ſame is the interpretation of Photius and Oecumenius, and before them of Chryſoſtome, in whoſe copy it was left out. The Syrian tranſlation alſo omitteth it, as well as the vulgar Latine. Is the Greeke text then corrupted (though many coppies be corrupted) when we have ſo good teſtimony of the true reading thereof, both out of ſome ancient Greeke copies yet extant, out of the ancient Fathers of the Greeke text, and alſo out of the ancient tranſlations into other Languages?

The ſecond, *Rom.*12. likewiſe, hath moſt of the ancient Greeke copies to warrant it, beſide the authoritie of Clemens Alexandrinus, Baſil, Chryſoſtome, Photius, Oecumenius, Theophylactus, old writers of the Greeke Church, the Syrian tranſlation, and the vulgar interpreter of the Latine: yet forſooth we forſake the Greeke text as corrupted, when in diverſitie of Greeke readings, we follow that which is ſo ſubſtantially advouched.

The third example, *Apoc.*11. beſides the Complutenſe Edition, which doubtles followed ſome ancient Greeke copies, hath the authority of Arethas, and thoſe ancients of the Greeke Church, out of whom he gathered his Commentarie, which is ſufficient to iudge of that diverſitie, which is in miſtaking of one onely letter in the Greeke word,

The fourth, 2.*Tim.*1.14. is no departing or forſaking of any Greeke text, but only a neceſſary explication of that Greeke according to our Engliſh phraſe. In ſo infinite a number of places, as you ſpeake of in the end of this ſection, you had ſmall wit to bring this for one, but that you were come to the end of your quarrels, though you place another after it for a faſhion. You your ſelues have other manner of additions then this is, in your tranſlation, whereof ſome are neceſſary, and ſome needleſſe: yet you would not be charged to forſake the Latine text as corrupt, although ſometimes you doe, and cleave to the Greeke, wherein no wiſe man will blame you.

The laſt example, *Ioh.*5. 11. hath alſo ancient Greeke copies, the Syrian tranſlation, and the iudgement of Oecumenius, with ſuch ancient Fathers as he doth follow, together with the vulgar Latine.

To conclude, we forſake not the Greek text as corrupted, when we forſake the fault of the Printer, or of the writer, and follow the Greek text, which is warranted by ancient copies, written or printed, and by the authorities of ancient Fathers, the ſenſe of the holy Ghoſt, and the circumſtances of the places agreeing that to be the very true reading of the Greeke text, and the right Scripture of God, no more then you forſake the vulgar Latine text as corrupted, when you leave the common reading, and follow that which out of ſome ancient written coppies, is placed in the Margent, as I noted before, of the text of Luke, evertit domum, for everrit, & yet the error of evertit, is above nine hundred yeere old, as appeareth by Gregorie. And you your ſelues acknowledge in the ende of this Preface, that ſometimes you tranſlate the word that is in the Latine margent, and not that in the text, when by the Greeke, or the Fathers, we ſee it is a manifeſt fault of the writer thereof, that miſtooke one word for another. And may not we doe the ſame in the Greeke, which you doe in the Latine, without forſaking the Greek text as corrupted. O conſcience of Papiſts!

Superfluities in the Greeke, which Eraſmus calleth trifling and raſh additions.

Againe, Eraſmus the beſt tranſlatour of all the later, by Bezas iudgement, ſaith, that the Greeke ſometime hath ſuperfluities corruptly added to the text of holy Scripture, as Mat.6. to the end of the Pater noſter, theſe words, Becauſe thine is the kingdome, the power, and the glory for evermore. Which he calleth, nugas, trifles, raſhly added to our Lords prayer, and reprehendeth Valla for blaming the old vulgar Latine becauſe it hath not. likewiſe, Rom, 11, 6. theſe words in the Greeke, and not in the vulgar Latine: But if of works, it is not now grace: otherwiſe the worke is no more a work. and Mar.10.29. theſe words, or wife, *and ſuch like. Yea the Greeke text in theſe ſuperfluities condemneth it ſelfe, and iuſtifieth the vulgar Latine exceedingly: as being marked throughout in a number of places, that ſuch and ſuch words or ſentences are ſuperfluous in all which places our vulgar Latin hath no ſuch thing, but is agreeable to the Greeke, which remaineth after the ſuperfluities be taken away. [illegible] [illegible] Eraſmus, or any other man, ſhall reiect out of the Greeke [illegible] [illegible] doth reade it and expound it. Therefore [illegible] the Lords Prayer in the fifth Tome, where it is omitted, [illegible] of the Latine Church, rather then by Chryſoſtome. [illegible] agree with the exception of [illegible] brought in [illegible] by S. Cyprian, [illegible] who gathered his expoſition out of [illegible] ancient Fathers of the Greeke Church, doth in like manner reade it and expound it. The Syrian interpretation alſo, which is very ancient, doth acknowledge it. So doth the Hebrew text, [illegible] of S. Matthew, yet it is very ancient.

The Latine Church indeed [illegible] in the forme of Prayer, becauſe it is not a petition, but [illegible] of the [illegible] glory of God, to whom the petitions are directed. Yet it [illegible] that Tertullian did reade it: for although in his booke De Oratione, where he [illegible] the petitions, he make no mention of it, yet lib. 4. adverſ. Mar. it is very like he hath reſpect vnto it, where after a ſhort conviction of the hereticke out of every petition of the Lords Prayer, he addeth, Proinde à quo petam, &c. Therefore of whom ſhall I aske, that I may receive? At whom ſhall I ſeeke, that I may finde? At whom ſhall I knocke, that it may be opened unto me? Who hath to give to him that asketh? but he whoſe are all things, whoſe alſo I am which doe aske.

And whereas ſome ancient Greeke copies, whom it ſeemeth that the vulgar Latine Interpreter did follow, as the booke came into his hand, doe lacke this concluſion, yet it followeth not that it is raſhly added in all the reſt, and ſo raſhly received of the Greeke Church, but rather it is moſt like, that the writers of thoſe copies omitted it as a thing commonly knowne, and daily rehearſed of every man: by which meanes alſo, it is like the omiſſion of certaine petitions in S. Lukes Goſpel came.

Concerning the ſecond example of ſuperfluity noted by Eraſmus, Rom. 11. 6. Seeing all the Greeke copies that we can heare of extant in theſe dayes (except one) doe agree in this text: And the ancient Fathers, Chryſoſtome in his Commentary upon this place: Likewiſe Photius, Oecumenius, and Theophylact doe reade it, and the text requireth it to make a perfect antitheſis, we muſt rather thinke it a defect in your vulgar Latine text, then a ſuperfluitie in the Greeke: For the third ſuperfluity of the word wife, Marke 10. 29. Eraſmus hath nothing but his bare conjecture, all the Greeke copies, none excepted, being againſt him. But it is a proper device that you have found out, to make the Greeke text condemne it ſelfe of ſuperfluity, and to juſtifie the vulgar Latine exceedingly. Becauſe the Printers Stevens and Criſpine doe ſet a marke at thoſe words or ſentences, which are found in the moſt of the written copies, yet not in all: that the Readers may know, that ſuch words or ſentences are not found in every written copie: which by no Logicke in the world argueth the one of ſuperfluity, more then the other of defect, but leave it to the judgement and diſcerning of the learned, whether is moſt agreeable to the truth. Your owne vulgar Latine text printed by Plantine, and corrected by Hentenius, hath more then 200 places in the new Teſtament, marked with an Obeliske, that are more then is found in divers ancient copies. Wherefore if Popiſh Logicke be as good againſt Latine, as againſt Greeke, I may be bold likewiſe to conclude, that the vulgar Latine text in theſe ſuperfluities, condemneth it ſelfe, and juſtifieth the Greeke text exceedingly, as being marked thorowout in a number of places, that ſuch and ſuch words and ſentences are ſuperfluous, in which our Greeke text hath no ſuch thing: for example, Acts 5.8. this word mulier, woman, hath a marke of ſuperfluitie. And in the ſame Chapter, verſe 15. this ſentence, Et liberarentur omnes ab infirmitatibus ſuis, and might be all delivered from their infirmities. And Chap. 15.41. this ſentence is noted with a marke of ſuperfluity, præcipiens cuſtodire præcepta Apoſtolorum & Seniorum, commanding them to keepe the precepts of the Apoſtles and Elders, not one of all which is in our Greeke text, and therefore prove the Greek to be better and more ſincere then the Latine. This is your owne argument, therefore you may not deny it.

The vulgar Latin tranſlation agreeth with the beſt Greeke copies by Beza's owne judgement.

Whereupon we conclude of theſe premiſes, that it is no derogation to the vulgar Latine text, which we tranſlate, to diſagree from the Greek text, whereas it may notwithſtanding be not only as good, but alſo better; and this the adverſary himſelfe, their greateſt and lateſt tranſlatour of the Greeke, doth avouch againſt Eraſmus in behalfe of the old vulgar Latine tranſlation, in theſe notorious words. How unworthily and without cauſe (ſaith he) doth Eraſmus blame the old interpreter, as diſſenting from the Greeke? he diſſented, I grant, from thoſe Greeke copies which he had gotten: but we have found, not in one place, that the ſame interpretation which he blameth, is grounded upon the authority of other Greeke copies, and thoſe moſt ancient. Yea in ſome number of places we have obſerved, that the reading, or the latin text

[illegible] the beſt tranſlation.

When the Fathers ſay, that the Latine text muſt yeeld to the Greek, and be corrected by it, they meane the true & uncorrupted Greeke text.

FVLKE 39 How good your concluſion is, I have ſhewed before: but [illegible], you ſhould ſay, that it is no derogation to the vulgar Latine [illegible] every Greeke copie, ſo it agree with the moſt, or [illegible]. But to diſa[illegible] es) from al, ſometimes from [illegible] and the [illegible] it muſt ne[illegible] be [illegible].

The teſtimony of [illegible] you cite, is no[illegible] aga[illegible], neither doe[illegible] juſtifie your vulgar [illegible] where it followed [illegible] copies of the Greeke text, as ſome [illegible]: unto which you doe well confeſſe with S. Auguſtine, that the Latine tranſlations that faile in any thing, muſt needs yeeld. But the chiefeſt matter is, to prove firſt, that it was tranſlated out of the more learned and diligent Greeke copies, partly extant, partly not extant. And ſecondly, that it hath ſo continued ever ſince, without alteration or corruption. The firſt you take upon you to prove by eight reaſons, all which ſhall be ſeverally examined.

RHEM. 40 1. If it agree with the Greeke text (as commonly it doth, and in the greateſt places concerning the controverſies of our time, it doth moſt certainly) ſo far the adverſaries have not to complaine: unleſſe they will complaine of the Greeke alſo, as they doe, Iam. 4. v. 2. and 1 Pet. 3. v. 21. where the vulgar Latine followeth exactly the Greeke text, ſaying, Occiditis: and Quod vos ſimilis formæ, &c. But Beza in both places correcteth the Greeke text alſo as falſe.

The vulgar latine tranſlation is many wayes juſtified by moſt ancient Greeke copies, and the Fathers.

FVLKE 40 If it agree with the true and uncorrupted Greeke text, we will not complaine, but you muſt remember that every Greeke copy, either extant or not extant, is not ſufficient to excuſe it: Neither can you prove, that it agreeth with the true and uncorrupted text in all places, as where it is not onely againſt all old copies extant, but alſo againſt the reading and interpretation of all the fathers of the Greeke Church. Where you doubt, leſt we will forſake the Greeke, it is needleſſe. Beza in Iam. 4. 2. with Eraſmus, ſuppoſeth a letter might be changed through default of the writers, in a matter of no controverſie or advantage againſt you. In the other place he maketh no queſtion, but ſheweth how the Greeke word is taken, even in the ſame ſenſe that your vulgar Tranſlatour doth.

RHEM. 41 2. If it diſagree here and there from the Greeke text, it agreeth with another Greeke copie ſet in the margent, whereof ſee examples in the foreſaid Greeke Teſtament of Robert Stevens and Criſpin thorowout, namely, 2 Pet. 1. 10. Satagite ut per bona opera certam veſtram vocationem faciatis. [illegible] and Mar. 8. 7. Et ipſos benedixit, [illegible].

FVLKE 41 Sometimes it doth agree with other Greeke copies ſet in the margent, but not alwaies, and therefore this is no good argument to iuſtifie it to agree with the Greeke in all places. Secondly, if it did alwayes agree with that which is in the margent, it were not enough to warrant it, except you could prove all that is in the margent to be alway the true and uncorrupted, the more learned and diligent Greeke copie.

RHEM. 42 3 If theſe marginall Greeke copies be thought leſſe authenticall then the Greeke text, the adverſaries themſelves tell us the contrary, who in their tranſlations often follow the marginall copies, and forſake the Greeke text: as in examples above mentioned, Rom. 11. Apoc. 11. 2 Tim. 2. Iam. 5. &c. it is evident.

FVLKE 42 You make very good concluſions, all of particulars: we our ſelues doe ſometimes follow the marginall copies as the true text, and leave the common reading, Ergo the marginall copies be alwayes the true text. In the examples by you noted, I have ſhewed you what reaſons we have to preferre theſe marginall copies. Bring you the like for thoſe which agree with your vulgar Latine, diſſenting from the common Greeke reading, and then your argument will be of ſome force, otherwiſe you may be aſhamed to uſe it.

RHEM. 43 4 If all Eraſmu's Greeke copies have not that which is in the vulgar Latine, Beza had copies which have it, and thoſe moſt ancient (as he ſaith) and better. And if all Beza's copies faile in this point, and will not helpe us, Gagneie the French Kings Preacher, and he that might command in all the Kings Libraries, he found Greeke copies that have juſt according to the vulgar Latine: and that in ſuch place as would ſeeme otherwiſe leſſe probable, as Iac. 3. v. 5. Ecce quantus ignis quam magnam ſilvam incendit! Behold how much fire what a great wood it kindleth! A man would thinke it muſt bee rather as in the Greeke text. A little fire what a great wood

FVLKE 43 [illegible] the ſame with the former. Therefore, except you prove that which any copie of Eraſmus, Beza, Gagneie, or any other may [illegible] Latine, to be a true, uncorrupted, and more learned and diligent copie, then the common Greeke text, you ſay nothing to the purpoſe. For the Latine text (as you ſaid before in the margent) muſt yeeld and be corrected, according to the Fathers meaning, by the true and uncorrupted Greeke text, and by S. Auguſtines iudgement, by the more learned and diligent copies, therefore cannot be juſtified by following any Greeke copie, though it be falſe, corrupted, leſſer learned, and more negligent. And as for ſome Greeke copies, it is [illegible] like but they have by ſome perverſe writers, beene altered according to the Latine, or negligently beene [illegible] copied out of more truer copies.

RHEM. 44 5 If all [illegible] copies be not ſufficient, the ancient Greeke Fathers had copies and expounded them, agreeable to our vulgar Latine, as 1 Tim. 6. 20. Prophanas vocum novitates. So readeth S. Chryſoſtome, and expoundeth it againſt hereticall and erronious novelties. Yet now we know no Greeke copie that readeth ſo. Likewiſe Ioh. 10. 29. Pater meus quod mihi dedit majus omnibus eſt; ſo readeth S. Cyril, and expoundeth it, lib. 7 in Ioh. cap. 10. Likewiſe 1 Ioh. 4. 3. Omnis ſpiritus qui ſolvit Ieſum, ex Deo non eſt; ſo readeth S. Irenæus, l. 3. c. 18. S. Auguſtine, tract. 6. in Io. S. Leo ep. 10. c. 5. beſides Socrates in his Eccleſiaſticall hiſtory, l. 7. c. 22. and the Tripartite, l. 12. c. 4. who ſay plainely, that this was the old and true reading of this place in the Greeke. And in what Greeke copie extant at this day is there this text, Ioh. 5. 2. Eſt autem Hieroſolymis probatica piſcina? and yet S. Chryſoſtome, S. Cyril, and Theophylact read ſo in the Greeke, and Beza ſaith it is the better reading, and ſo is the Latine text of the Roman Maſſe booke juſtified, and eight other Latine copies that reade ſo; for our vulgar Latine here, is according to the Greeke text, Super probatica; and Rom. 5. v. 17. Donationis & juſtitiæ, ſo readeth Theodoret in Greeke; and Luke 2. v. 14. Origen and Chryſoſtome reade, Hominibus bonæ voluntatis, and Beza liketh it better then the Greeke text that now is.

The Greeke Fathers.

FVLKE 44 This reaſon hath more pith then all the foure that went before, therefore whereas your vulgar Latine hath the conſent of the ancient Fathers of the Greeke Church, although there be no Greeke copie extant at this day to warrant it, yet will we not condemne it, as diſagreeing from the Greeke text. As in the firſt example you bring, 1 Tim. 6. 20. Although Oecumenius doth reade, as the common reading is now, yet he telleth you that Chryſoſtome did reade as your vulgar Latine hath. Beza addeth, Baſil; and of the Latine Fathers, Ambroſe and Auguſtine, and confeſſeth that it hath a very good ſenſe, yet he preferreth the other, peradventure being moved by the authority of the Syrian Interpreter, who tranſlateth it vanities and not novelties. But in your ſecond example of Ioan. 10. 29. you were fowly beguiled to ſay, So readeth S. Cyril, and expoundeth it, lib. 7. in Ioan. cap. 10. For that ſeventh booke, as the fifth, the ſixth, the eighth, are none of S. Cyrils bookes, nor of any ancient Fathers, but were added by Iodocus Clicthoveus, a very late writer, becauſe theſe foure bookes of Cyril are loſt, and are no where extant at this day. You ſhew your ſelves to be diligent readers of antiquity, by this example. And yet you might have bin admoniſhed, to beware of this ridiculous errour at this time, if you would have vouchſafed to peruſe my rejoynder to Briſtow, ſometime one of your crew, who made ſport with this authority of Cyril, to defend the vulgar Latine ones before, and was well laught at for his labour, as you are much more, among all the learned, which by his ſtumbling in the darke, could not beware of falling in the broad day light.

Your third example is of 1 Ioh. 3. Omnis ſpiritus qui ſolvit Ieſum, which Ireneus readeth ſo, but of Ireneus there may be a doubt, becauſe he did write in Greeke, and is tranſlated into Latin by one that followed the vulgar Latine text very much, and was not ſo preciſe in expreſſing the words of Ireneus, as may appeare by that parcell of Ireneus in Greeke, which is reſerved in Epiphanius, if any man will beſtow a little time in comparing them. As for S. Auguſtine in tract. 6. in Ioannem, readeth this text before his Treatiſe, according to the Greeke text that now is, and afterward diſcourſeth at large upon it. But towards the end, he repeateth the text according to the vulgar Latine, and doth briefly expound it, whereby it ſeemeth, that his booke had both the texts. Except we ſhould ſuſpect, that thoſe few lines which concerne the vulgar Latine, were interlaced by ſome that would ſhew what ſenſe the words of the vulgar Latine might have. And indeed the words in the concluſion, Quid nos docet, niſi ut facta interrogemus, verba non credamus, doe very aptly agree with the end of the ſentence immediately before thoſe lines, adeo ut noveritis, quia ad facta retulit.

But

for let the much of [illegible] be examined by the ancient [illegible] ſine. Ludovicus Vives noteth [illegible] inſerted in his booke De Civitate Dei, which in other ancient copies were not to be found.

Section 36. Leo indeed, which lived after S. Auguſtine, and was a Biſhop of Rome, [illegible] herein the vulgar Latine text. Socrates and the Tripartite ſtory, which is but a repetition of Socrates, I have anſwered before. So that except you had Irenaus in Greeke, you have gained little certainety out of the ancient Fathers. Tertullian and Cyprian being for the Greeke reading that now is, as I have ſhewed before, with all the Greeke Church.

Touching your fourth example, Ioan.5.2. if you can be content to let Piſcina be the Nominative caſe, and by probatica underſtand a gate of Ieruſalem neere to the Temple ſo called, your vulgar Latine text is agreeable to the Greeke text, and need not to be altered. And this is Beza's iudgement for the name of that gate, citing, Nehe.3.1.&c. And although Chryſoſtome and Cyril, and Theophylact deceived by them, reade otherwiſe, yet Euthymius, who followed other ancient Fathers of the Greeke Church, readeth agreeably to the Greeke text that now is, and to the vulgar Latine.

Concerning your fifth example, Theodoret (as Beza telleth you) readeth the copulative coniunction ϗ, betweene the two Nownes, ſignifying gift and iuſtice, but it appeareth not ſo by his Commentary. And his reading is not ſufficient to controule all the copies, and all other the Fathers of the Greeke Church, as Chryſ. Phot. Oecum. Theoph. Laſt of all, Luc.2.14. the vulgar Latine is maintained not onely by Origen and Chryſoſtome, but alſo by a moſt ancient copie which Beza had, now kept in the Library of the Vniverſity of Cambridge, and is not miſliked of Beza, although he follow the common reading warranted by all the reſt of his Greeke copies, and many other of the ancient Fathers. To conclude, if all the varieties of the vulgar Latine, had ſome ancient Greeke Father, or ſome old copy to avouch them, as a great number have not: yet were that not ſufficient to iuſtifie them, if the better learned and more diligent copies be againſt them, and the ſenſe of the place doe plainely require another reading.

RHEM. 45 6 Where there is no ſuch ſigne or token of any ancient Greeke copie in the Fathers, yet theſe latter interpreters tell us, that the old Interpreter did follow ſome other Greeke copie, as Marke 7.3. Niſi crebro laverint. Eraſmus thinketh that he did reade in the Greeke πυκνῇ, often: and Beza and others commend his coniecture, yea and the Engliſh Bibles are ſo tranſlated, whereas now it is πυγμῇ, which ſignifieth the length of the arme up to the elbow. And who would not thinke that the Evangeliſt ſhould ſay, The Phariſees waſh often, becauſe otherwiſe they eat not, rather then thus, Vnleſſe they waſh vp to the elbow they eat not?

FVLKE 45 We thinke verely, that the old Interpreter did follow ſome Greeke copie which he had, in places where he hath not been depraved. But whether it was alwayes a true & incorrupted copy which he followed, we muſt be bold to examine by other copies, by conſent of the Greeke Fathers, by diligent marking the ſcope of the text, and by the ancient tranſlations, which ſeeing they are often againſt your vulgar Latine text, although the Interpretour followed ſome Greeke copie, whether extant or not extant, he is not altogether to be excuſed, nor his tranſlation, according to ſome corrupt copie to be embraced as authenticall. Beſide this, it is oftentimes manifeſt, that when his reading was the ſame that ours is, yet ſomtimes becauſe he underſtood not the property of the Greeke word or phraſe, ſometime becauſe he was not able to expreſſe it aptly in the Latine tongue, he hath committed many errours meet to be amended, as in the annotations of Beza, Eraſmus, and others, a great number may be ſeene. This reaſon therefore is of no force, to make it better then the Greeke generally, though the truth of πυκνῇ, for πυγμῇ, were granted vnto you: no more then a beggars cloake with a hundred patches in it, is better then a faire gowne of velvet, that hath but one ſtitch amiſſe in it. Now as for the word in queſtion, if it ſignifie vp to the elbow, as Theophylact and Euthymius doe take it, I ſee no abſurditie, although the Popiſh Prieſt at Maſſe waſheth only his fingers ends, (as ſuperſtition is ſometimes nice, ſomtimes inſatiable) if we thinke that the Phariſees waſhed their hands to the elbowes. And peradventure it is more probable that they waſhed to the elbow, then that they waſhed oftentimes before every meale. But ſeeing the word commeth of πυγμῆς, which ſignifieth a fiſt, the meaning may be, they waſhed diligently, as they doe which oftentimes rub one fiſt in another: and ſo it may be taken for often waſhing, as the Interpretour of Euthymius ſaith it is taken of all the Interpretours.

RHEM. 46 7 If all ſuch coniectures, and all the Greeke Fathers helpe vs not, yet the Latine Fathers with great conſent will eaſily iuſtifie the old vulgar tranſlation, which for the moſt part they follow and expound, as Ioh.7.39. Nondum erat ſpiritus datus; ſo readeth S. Auguſt. l.4. de Trin. c.20. and l.83. quaeſt. q.62. and tract.52. in Ioan. Leo ſer.2. de Pentecoſte. Whoſe authoritie were ſufficient, but indeed Dydimus alſo a Greeke Doctor readeth ſo; lib.2. de Spirit. Sancto, tranſlated by S. Hierom, and a Greeke copie in the Vaticane, and the Syriake new Teſtament.

The Latine Fathers.

Likewiſe

Likewiſe Ioh.21.22. Si eum volo manere, ſo read S. Ambroſe in Pſal.45. and Pſal.118. octonario Reſ. S. Auguſtine and venerable Bede upon S. Iohns Goſpel.

FVLKE 46 The conſent of the Latine Fathers which followed the vulgar text, which S. Hieronym in his time confeſſed to be corrupted, will not iuſtifie the vulgar tranſlation againſt all the Greeke copies, all the Fathers, all old tranſlations, all circumſtances of the text, and that which you adde, all ſuch coniectures.

The former example is not agreeable to the rule, for (as you ſay) it hath a Greeke copie in the Vaticane, it hath the Syriake tranſlation, and a Greeke author to warrant it, beſide the authoritie of Auguſtine and Leo, Fathers of the Latine Church. And yet two make not ſo great a conſent, to carry the matter from all copies, Fathers, tranſlations, circumſtances and coniectures. But in truth, your vulgar text, in ſome copies, hath according to the Greeke, Spiritus ſanctus, and leaveth out datus, yet indeed, this is not to be accounted a fault or varitie, though it be not preciſely according to the word, which expreſſeth the true meaning of the text, as all men, except Macedonian Heretikes (which deny the Divinity of the holy Ghoſt) will confeſſe.

In your ſecond example, you have ſmall conſent, ſeeing Eraſmus telleth you, that Auguſtine is corrupted, and Hieronymus (as you confeſſe in the next Section) is againſt you, and ſo are ſome copies of your vulgar tranſlation. Then have you no more but S. Ambroſe: for venerable Beda hath according to the Greeke, ſi eum volo manere, by whom the corruption of S. Auguſtine is plainely diſcovered, ſeeing he hath nothing in a manner of his owne, but the very words of S. Auguſtine upon that place.

RHEM. 47 8 And laſtly, if ſome other Latine Fathers of antient time reade otherwiſe either here, or in other places, not all agreeing with the text of our vulgar Latine, the cauſe is, the great diverſitie and multitude that was then of Latine copies, (whereof S. Hierom complaineth) till this one vulgar Latine grew only into uſe. Neither doth their divers reading make more for the Greeke, then for the vulgar Latin, differing oftentimes from both, as when S. Hier: in this laſt place readeth, Si ſic eum volo manere, lib.1 adu.Iou. it is according to no Greeke copie now extant. And if yet there be ſome doubt, that the readings of the Greeke or Latine Fathers, differing from the vulgar Latine, be a checke or condemnation to the ſame: let Beza, that is, let the Adverſary himſelfe, tell us his opinion in this caſe alſo. Whoſoever, ſaith he, ſhall take upon him to correct theſe things, (ſpeaking of the vulgar Latine tranſlation) out of the ancient Fathers writings, either Greeke or Latine, unleſſe he doe it very circumſpectly, and adviſedly, he ſhall ſurely corrupt all, rather then amend it, becauſe it is not to be thought, that as often as they cited any place, they did alwayes looke into the booke, or number every word. As if he ſhould ſay, We may not by and by thinke that the vulgar Latine is faulty and to be corrected, when we reade otherwiſe in the Fathers, either Greeke or Latine, becauſe they did not alwayes exactly cite the words, but followed ſome commodious and godly ſenſe thereof.

Præfat. in 4. Evang. ad Damaſum.

FVLKE 47 I perceive you will needs have your vulgar Latine text to ſtand, though it have neither Greeke copies, nor Greeke Fathers, nor good reaſon, which you call coniectures, nor the conſent of the Latine Fathers, to maintaine it. For the divers reading of the Latine fathers, maketh no more for the Greeke, then for the vulgar Latine (you ſay) differing oftentimes from both. Admit it bee ſo, when they differ from both, yet when they agree with the Greeke, as you cannot deny, but oftentimes they doe, they make more for the Greeke, then for the vulgar Latine. And where you ſay, they differ often from both, that one example that you bring, argueth that you have no great ſtore of examples, where they differ from both. For the place of Hieronymus agreeth fully with the ſenſe of the Greeke, although hee adde the word ſic, which is not in the Greeke, yet maketh no alteration in the ſentence, which is conditionall, whereas your vulgar Latine is abſolute, without condition.

But to put the matter out of doubt, that no readings of ſome Latine or Greeke Fathers, differing from the Latine, is a checke or condemnation to the ſame, Beza his authoritie is cited, ſaying, That whoſoever ſhall take upon him to correct the vulgar Latine tranſlation, out of the ancient Fathers writings, Greeke or Latine, unleſſe he doe it very circumſpectly and adviſedly, he ſhall rather marre then mend. This is your uſuall kinde of reaſoning, of a particular to inferre an univerſall. But what if he doe it circumſpectly and adviſedly? what if he have not onely ſome Fathers writing, but alſo ſome Greeke copies, or all, or moſt that are extant? What if he have good reaſons taken of the ſcope of the text, and circumſtances thereof? May he not then be bold to correct ſomething in the vulgar Latine tranſlation? As whenſoever Beza, or any other learned man reproveth the vulgar Latine interpreter, he doth it not upon the onely writing of ſome Father, who had not alwayes the booke by him, when hee cited places of the Scripture, but either all or ſome of thoſe proofes, leading him to approve the writing of that Father, to be the true text, and ſpecially ſome Greeke copie to warrant it.

RHEM. 48 Thus then we ſee that by all meanes the old vulgar Latine tranſlation is approved good, and better then the Greeke text it ſelfe, and that there is no reaſon why it ſhould give place to any other text, copies, or readings. Mary if there be any faults evidently crept in by thoſe that heretofore wrote or copied out the Scriptures (as there be ſome) them we grant no leſſe, then we would grant faults now adayes committed by the Printer, and they are exactly noted of Catholike writers, namely in all Plantines Bibles, ſet forth by the Divines of Lovan: and the holy Councell of Seſſ. 4. Trent willeth that the vulgar Latine text be in ſuch points thorowly mended, and ſo to be moſt authenticall. Such faults are theſe, In fide, for, in fine: Præſcientiam, for præſentiam: Suſcipiens, for ſuſpiciens: and ſuch like very rare, which are evident corruptions made by the copiers, or growne by the ſimilitude of words. Theſe being taken away, which are no part of thoſe corruptions & differences before talked of, we tranſlate that text, which is moſt ſincere, and in our opinion, and as we have proved, incorrupt. The Adverſaries contrary, tranſlate the text, which themſelues confeſſe, both by their writings and doings, to be corrupt in a number of places, and more corrupt then our vulgar Latine, as is before declared.

The few and ſmall faults negligently crept into the vulgar Latine tranſlation.

FVLKE 48 They have very dimme eyes, that thorow theſe groſſe paralogiſmes, can ſee the vulgar Latine tranſlation, in all points approved good, yea better then the true text it ſelfe of the Greeke, ſo that it may not give place to any other text, copies, or readings, except it be in ſuch faults as are evidently crept in by the negligence of the writers, which you affirme to be very rare. But if you would correct your bookes, but euen according to ſome ancient readings and copies, obſerved in Plantines Bible, which you ſpeake of, you ſhould reforme many hundred places even in the new Teſtament, and make them to be more agreeable to the Greeke text, then that you take to be your vulgar Latine tranſlation. But except it be groſſe corruptions, that may be felt with the hand, you will not bend one ioynt to the Greeke text, ſuch malice you beare againſt the truth. Neuertheleſſe, you tranſlate that text (you ſay) which in your opinion is uncorrupt, we tranſlate the Greeke, which we confeſſe to be corrupt, as you have declared. What you have declared, we have I hope ſufficiently confuted: it is now time to ſee what you have more to charge vs, with confeſſion of corruption in the Greeke text.

RHEM. 49 And if we would here ſtand to recite the places in the Greeke, which Beza pronounceth to be corrupted, we ſhould make the Reader to wonder, how they can either ſo plead otherwiſe for the Greeke text, as though there were no other truth of the new Teſtament but that: or how they tranſlate onely that (to deface, as they thinke, the old vulgar Latine) which themſelues ſo ſhamefully diſgrace, more then the vulgar Latine, inventing corruptions where none are, nor can be, in ſuch univerſall conſent of all, both Greeke and Latine copies. For example, Matth. 10. The firſt Simon, who is called Peter, I thinke (ſaith Beza) this word πρῶτος, firſt, hath been added to the text, of ſome that would eſtabliſh Peters Primacie. Againe, Luke 22. The Chalice, that is ſhed for you. It is moſt likely (ſaith he) that theſe words being ſometime but a marginall note, came by corruption out of the margent into the text. Againe, Act. 7. Figures which they made, to adore them. It may be ſuſpected (ſaith he) that theſe words, as many other, have crept by corruption into the text, out of the margent. And 1 Cor. 15. He thinketh the Apoſtle ſaid not νῖκος, victorie, as it is in all Greeke copies, but νεῖκος, contention. And Act. 13. he calleth it a manifeſt errour, that in the Greeke it is 400. yeeres, for three hundred. And Act. 7. v. 16. he reckoneth up a whole catalogue of corruptions, namely, Mark. 12. v. 42. ὅ ἐστι κοδράντης, which is a farthing. And Act. 8. v. 26. αὕτη ἐστὶν ἔρημος, This is deſert. And Act. 7. v. 16. the name of Abraham, and ſuch like. All which he thinketh to have beene added or altered into the Greeke text by corruption.

* In Annot. Nou. Teſt. an. 1556.

The Calviniſts confeſsing the Greeke to be moſt corrupt, yet tranſlate that onely, and hold that only for authenticall Scripture.

FVLKE 49 The Calviniſts (you ſay) confeſſe the Greeke text to be moſt corrupt, and yet tranſlate it onely: yes forſooth, they have tranſlated the Syriake, and ſome parts of the Arabike, as they could get the copies. But who are they, that confeſſe the Greeke text to be moſt corrupt? You anſwere, Beza, bringing in his ſuſpicion onely, in foure places. But a ſuſpicion or opinion, is neither an affirmation, nor a confeſſion. Yet let vs ſeverally examine them. In the firſt place, he doth not ſo much as ſuſpect the matter, but onely maketh an obiection, and anſwereth it, approving alſo with the ancient Fathers, the Primacie of Peter, the Primacie of order (I ſay) not of dignity. Yea, he is ſo farre from ſuſpicion of this matter, that Mar. 3. 16. he readeth Simon the firſt, where neither your vulgar Latine readeth ſo, nor the common printed Greeke text hath it ſo.

In the ſecond place, Luk. 22. 20. he ſaith it may be, that it came out of the margent into the text, but he doth not affirme it. He ſaith further, that Baſile readeth the Participle, with his Article in the Dative caſe, which taketh away all difficulty, yet becauſe all the copies extant, have it in the Nominative caſe, he concludeth in the end, that the ſolæciſme may be excuſed by the property of the Hebrew tongue, expreſſed ſometime in the Greeke, as I have ſhewed at large in mine anſwere to Gregorie Martin, cap. 1. ſect. 37, 38, 39.

In the third place, he hath ſome light ſuſpicion, that the words, to adore them, might be removed out of the margēt into the text, as in all written books, many ſuch like words have beene.

beene. The ground of this ſuſpicion, is the authority of Iuſtinus Martyr, who citing this place againſt Tryphon the Iew, leaveth out theſe words, to adore them, yet he ſheweth how it may ſtand with the ſenſe of the Hebrew text of the Prophet Amos: and ſpeaketh never a word of corruption.

In the fourth place, he noteth the grounds of his ſuſpicion, to be the Greeke text of Oſee, and the authority of Auguſtine, in Ioan. tract. 12. who readeth, Vbi eſt mors contentio tua? whereby it appeareth that the tranſlation which he followed, did reade νεῖκος, and not νῖκος. So readeth S. Cyprian ad Quirinum l. 3. c. 58. and Tertullian de reſur. carn. yet becauſe of the generall conſent of all copies, and other writers, Beza retaineth the uſuall reading.

Now come we to thoſe places, which are paſt ſuſpicion, as being manifeſtly affirmed to be corruptions. Of the firſt (you ſay) he calleth it a manifeſt errour, that in the Greeke it is 400 yeeres for 300 yeeres, Act. 13. but that is not ſo: for rehearſing many accounts, of Beroaldus, of Iunius, and other, he ſuſpecteth onely with Luther, that error to be in the number, he doth not affirme it to be manifeſt.

The next place is, Act. 7. 15. where he thinketh the name of Abraham, by ſome unskilfull perſon to be added, as the name of Ieremie, Mat. 27. and of Eſay, Mar. 1 and Matth. 13. as Hieronym confeſſeth in ſtead of Aſaph, where neither of both is read, at this day. And certaine it is, that Abraham bought his field of Ephron, not of the ſonnes of Emor. And Iacob it was that purchaſed the field of Emor, the father of Shechem, as Saint Hierom ſaith. Now if you can give the true ſenſe, not leaving out the name of Abraham, you ſhall deſerve great commendation. In the meane time, Beza telleth you, it maketh no uncertaintie or corruption in the Scripture, if a name or two, by errour of ſome bold Writers, not of the Authour, be placed amiſſe, which by conference of other places, may eaſily be eſpied, and reformed. The place, Marke 12. 42. though he was long troubled, as he confeſſeth, about the reckoning of it, yet in the end he findeth out the true account, how two mites make a quadrant, and ſuſpecteth no manner of corruption at all.

Neither in the laſt place, doth he ſo much as ſuſpect any corruption or addition, but onely referreth the word Deſert, to the way, and not to the Citie: although the Citie of Gaza at that time was not inhabited. This Section therefore proveth not, that the Calviniſts, (as you terme them) confeſſe the Greeke to be moſt corrupt. For here is onely one name certainly iudged to be untruly added, as all men confeſſe, the name of Ieremie, Matth. 27. to be, and two or three light and uncertaine ſuſpicions, about matters of ſmall weight, and ſuch as can make no alteration of doctrine, the reſt are falſe and uniuſt accuſations.

RHEM. 50 But among other places, he laboureth exceedingly to prove a great corruption, Act. 7. ver. 14. where it is ſaid (according to the Septuaginta, that is, the Greeke text of the old Teſtament) that Iacob went downe into Egypt with 75. ſoules. And Luc. 3. v. 36. he thinketh theſe words, τοῦ Καϊνᾶν, Which was of Cainan, *to be ſo falſe, that he leaveth them out in * both his editions of the new Teſtament: ſaying, that he is bold ſo to do, by the authority of* Moſes. Whereby he will ſignifie that it is not in the Hebrew text of Moſes, or of the old Teſtament, and therefore it is falſe in the Greeke of the new Teſtament. Which conſequence of theirs (for it is common among them, and concerneth all Scriptures) if it were true, all places of the Greeke text of the new Teſtament, cited out of the old according to the Septuaginta, and not according to the Hebrew (which they know are very many) ſhould be falſe, and ſo by tying themſelues onely to the Hebrew in the old Teſtament, they are forced to forſake the Greeke of the new: or if they will maintaine the Greeke of the new, they muſt forſake ſometime the Hebrew in the old, but this argument ſhall be forced againſt them elſe where.

* Ann. Dom. 1556. & 1565.

They ſtanding preciſely vpon the Hebrew of the old, and Greeke text of the new Teſtament, muſt of force deny the one of them.

FVLKE 50 He ſheweth out of Hieron. that the Greeke text of the Septuaginta, in his time, agreed with the originall of the Hebrew in the number of 70. and therefore he thinketh πέντε is but in ſtead of πάντες. But all men be not of his opinion, therefore although the matter be not great, it is no reaſon, that the whole Church, (for that they meane by the Calviniſts) ſhould be charged for one mans opinion, (and that but in one matter of no moment, to change the doctrine) to confeſſe the Greeke text to be moſt corrupt.

In the place, Luc. 3. 36. he iudgeth τοῦ Καϊνᾶν, to be falſly added to S. Luke, not onely by authority of Moſes, which were ſufficient, but alſo by teſtimony of an ancient Greeke copie, which now is at Cambridge. But all your quarrels, touching Qui fuit Cainan, I have confuted in my Defence againſt Gregorie Martine, in the Preface, Sect. 18. 20.

RHEM. 51 By this little, the Reader may ſee what gay patrones they are of the Greeke text, and how little cauſe they have in their owne iudgement to tranſlate it, or vaunt of it, as in derogation of the vulgar Latine tranſlation, and how eaſily we might anſwere them in a word, why we tranſlate not the Greeke: forſooth becauſe it is ſo infinitely corrupted. But the truth is, we doe by no meanes grant it ſo corrupted as they ſay, though in compariſon we know it leſſe ſincere and incorrupt then the vulgar Latine, and for that cauſe and others before alledged, we preferre the ſaid Latine, and have tranſlated it.

They ſay the Greek is more corrupt then we will grant them.

The

FVLKE 51 The Greeke text of the new Testament needeth no patronage of [illegible] which is the very word and truth of God. The sincerity of our translations, against all your frivolous cavillations, hath hitherto, thankes be to God, beene so strongly defended, as you have no liſt any more to aſſaile it. And as touching your eaſie anſwere that you can make, why you tranſlate not the Greeke, forſooth becauſe it is ſo infinitely corrupted, all men of reaſonable underſtanding may conceive, how well you have proved this infinite corruption. The ſumme of all your reaſons being drawne together, your argument is this: One man ſuſpecteth here and there, in three or foure places, ſome depravation, or elſe in a name and a number, thinketh there is ſome corruption, ergo by confeſſion of all the Calviniſts, the Greeke text is infinitely corrupted. But you tell vs, you will not grant the Greeke to be ſo corrupt, as we ſay, though you know it leſſe ſincere, and uncorrupt then the Latine, and therefore you preferre it, and have tranſlated it. Well, if you know the Greeke text that now is, to be ſincere, where any of us hath but ſuſpected or iudged it to be corrupt; and we have proved it to be ſincere, where you have ſlandered it to be corrupt: there is no reaſon, why you ſhould not acknowledge it to be very perfect, and therefore have tranſlated it, rather then the vulgar Latine: which your owne Bibles of Plantines edition, whereunto you referre vs, doe convince of infinite variety, which as S. Hieronym ſaith, is a manifeſt argument of falſhood; and as yet it is not decided among you, in that variety, which reading is to be followed, as true and authenticall.

Praefat. ad Damaſ. in 4. Evangelia.

RHEM. 52 If yet there remaine one thing which perhaps they will ſay, when they cannot anſwere our reaſons aforeſaid: to wit, that we preferre the vulgar Latine before the Greeke text, becauſe the Greeke maketh more againſt vs: we proteſt that as for other cauſes we preferre the Latine, ſo in this reſpect of making for us or againſt us, we allow the Greeke as much as the Latine, yea in ſundry places, more then the Latine, being aſſured that they have not one, and that we have many advantages in the Greeke, more then in the Latine, as by the Annotations of this new Teſtament ſhall evidently appeare: namely in all ſuch places where they dare not tranſlate the Greeke becauſe it is for us, and againſt them, as when they tranſlate, δικαιώματα, ordinances, and not iuſtifications, and that of purpoſe, as Beza confeſſeth, Luc.1.6. παραδόσεις, ordinances, or inſtructions, and not traditions, in the better part, 2 Theſſ. 2. 15. πρεσβυτέρους, Elders, and not Prieſts: εἴδωλα, Images, rather then Idols, and ſpecially when S. Luke in the Greeke ſo maketh for us, (the vulgar Latine being indifferent for them and us) that Beza ſaith it is a corruption crept out of the margent into the text. What need theſe abſurd devices and falſe dealings with the Greeke text, if it made for them more then for us, yea if it made not for us againſt them? But that the Greeke maketh more for us, ſee 1 Corinthians 7. In the Latine, Defraud not one another, but for a time, that you give your ſelves to prayer, in the Greeke, to faſting and prayer. Act.10.30. In the Latine Cornelius ſaith, From the fourth day paſt, vntill this houre I was praying in my houſe, and behold a man, &c. in the Greeke, I was faſting, and praying. 1 Ioh. 5. 18. In the Latine, We know that every one which is borne of God, ſinneth not; but the generation of God preſerveth him, &c. in the Greeke, but he that is borne of God preſerveth himſelfe. Apoc.22.14. In the Latine, Bleſſed are they that waſh their garments in the blood of the Lambe, &c. in the Greeke, Bleſſed are they that doe his Commandements. Rom 8.31. Certus ſum, &c. I am ſure that neither death nor life, nor other creature is able to ſeparate vs from the charity of God, as though he were aſſured, or we might and ſhould aſſure our ſelves of our predeſtination. In the Greeke, πέπεισμαι, I am probably perſwaded that neither death nor life, &c. In the Evangeliſts, about the Sacrifice and bleſſed Sacrament, in the Latine thus, This is my blood that ſhall be ſhed for you: and in S. Paul, This is my body which ſhalbe betrayed or delivered for you: both being referred to the time to come, and to the ſacrifice on the Croſſe. In the Greeke, This is my blood which is ſhed for you: & my body which is broken for you: both being referred to that preſent time when Chriſt gave his body & blood at his Supper, then ſhedding the one, & breaking the other, that is, ſacrificing it ſacramentally & myſtically. Loe theſe & the like our advantages in the Greeke, more then in the Latine.

We prefer not the vulgar Latine text, as making more for vs.

The Greeke text maketh for vs more then the vulgar Latine.

FVLKE 52 A great token of your true meaning, that you preferre not the vulgar Latine, as making more for you, in which reſpect in theſe Annotations it ſhall appeare, that you have more advantage in the Greeke, then in the Latine, being aſſured that we have not one, and you many advantages in the Greeke. Theſe Popiſh brags, all that reade your writings, are ſo well acquainted with them, that we need not ſtand in doubt of them: having tried by often experience, that when the matter commeth to approovement, your arguments are no better then a falſe and feeble cauſe can affoord you, as in anſwere to the Annotations, by Gods helpe, it will be made manifeſt: In the meane ſpace, you note vnto vs certaine places, where you have more advantage in the Greeke, then in the Latine. Firſt, in ſuch places where we dare not tranſlate the Greeke, becauſe it maketh for you, againſt vs. Secondly, where the Greeke hath ſome words making for you, which the Latine hath not. Of the firſt ſort, is the word Iuſtificationes, Luke 1. which we call ordinances of purpoſe (as Beza confeſſeth) and why ſhould we not of purpoſe avoid that terme, which may be the cauſe of [illegible] errour, when the word in that place ſignifieth another thing? as I have ſhewed at large in my Defence againſt Martine, Cap. 1. Sect. 50. and Cap. 8. Sect. 1. and the other Sections following.

For the word Traditiones, mine anſwere is, Cap. 2. in all the Sections: for the words, Elders, and Prieſts, Cap. 6. for Images and Idols, Cap. 3. for the place of Luke 22. 20. as I have ſhewed before, Cap. 1. Sect. 37. 38, 39.

But to come to the latter ſort, firſt you bring two texts, 1 Cor. 7. and Act. 16. 30. where faſting is mentioned in the Greeke text, which is not in the vulgar Latine. O impudent ſlanderers, doe we deny faſting, becauſe we deny your Antichriſtian prohibition and abſtinence from meats, to be Chriſtian faſting? God be praiſed, our doctrine is ſound for faſting, would God our practice were as often, as our iudgement is pure and agreeable to the holy Scriptures, in an hundred places almoſt, that commend faſting.

Your next advantage is for free-will, not flat Pelagianiſme I hope, but catercouſin with it, that mans will being holpen with Gods grace, is free: and we hold, that it is free from conſtraint, but not from bondage of ſin, Rom. 7. And what other things can you prove out of that text, 1 Ioh. 5. 18. He that is borne of God, preſerveth himſelfe: dare you ſay by force of free-will, and not by the ſtrength of Gods grace? Make your ſyllogiſme, and give vs a plaine concluſion, and wee ſhall ſee what advantage the Greeke text giveth you.

Another giveth you advantage againſt onely faith. What is that, I pray you, Apoc. 22. 14. Bleſſed are they that doe his Commandements: a goodly advantage, I promiſe you. They that are iuſtified by faith only in his merits doe his Commandements and none other. Againſt ſpeciall aſſurance of ſalvation, you have, Rom. 8. 38. S. Paul ſaith not as it is in the Latine, Certus ſum, I am ſure, but πέπεισμαι, I am probably perſwaded. Verily, either the Greeke word ſignifieth I am ſure, ſo as I cannot bee deceived, or elſe your vulgar Latine tranſlation is falſe. And where he ſaith, I am perſwaded, he noteth the certainety of the word and Spirit of God, whereby he hath this aſſurance.

Your laſt advantage is about the ſacrifice of the bleſſed Sacrament, where the Greeke text uſeth the preſent tenſe, referring that breaking of his body, and ſhedding of his blood, to the preſent ſacrificing of it ſacramentally, and myſtically: but I would adviſe you to beware, leſt while you ſeeke advantage for a ſacrifice, you leeſe your beſt argument for the reall preſence, as you terme it. For you are wont to reaſon thus: He gave that which ſhould be crucified, but his naturall body was crucified, therefore he gave his naturall body: and ſo he did, to be received ſpiritually, as in a Sacrament or myſterie. But to ſhut you from your ſacrifice, the word of ſhedding ſo often repeated will be ſufficient, except you have forgotten your old diſtinction of his unbloody ſacrifice from his bloody ſacrifice: if his blood be ſhed in the Sacrament, then is the Sacrament alſo a bloody ſacrifice. When you have weighed all, I hope you will ſee, it is ſmall gaines that you gather by this advantage, that you need not to cry out and ſay, Loe theſe and the like our advantages in the Greeke, more then in the Latine. Nay rather theſe bee your fantaſies of the Greeke, and of the Latine.

RHEM. 53 But is the vulgar tranſlation for all this Papiſticall, and therefore doe we follow it? (for ſo ſome of them call it, and ſay it is the * worſt of all other.) If it be, the Greeke (as you ſay) is more, and ſo both Greeke and Latine, and conſequently the holy Scripture of the new Teſtament is Papiſticall. Againe if the vulgar Latine be Papiſticall, Papiſtry is very ancient; and the Church of God for ſo many hundred yeeres wherein it hath uſed and allowed this tranſlation, hath beene Papiſticall. But wherein is it Papiſticall? forſooth in theſe phraſes and ſpeeches, Poenitentiam agite. Sacramentum hoc magnum eſt. Aue gratia plena. Talibus hoſtijs promeretur Deus. *and ſuch like. FVLKE 53 There is none of us, that calleth the vulgar tranſlation of the new Teſtament Papiſticall, as though it were tranſlated by Papiſts, or elſe made ſo greatly for Papiſts, when it is rightly underſtood: but becauſe it is ſo magnified by the Papiſts, that it is preferred before the Greeke, which is the originall tongue, in which the new Teſtament was written, and commanded by the Tridentine Papiſts, to be counted the only authenticall text. And he that ſaid, the vulgar tranſlation is worſt of all, ſpake of the vulgar tranſlation of the whole Bible, in compariſon of the Hebrew of the old Teſtament, and of the Greek of the new Teſtament, and of the Septuaginta in Greeke, and the Latine thereof. Your fond concluſions, the Greeke is more Papiſticall, and Papiſtry is very ancient, if the vulgar tranſlation be Papiſticall, be as good as your antecedent: Some of them call it ſo, which I am ſure, no man of learning hath done, otherwiſe then I have before declared, except it be for that it is abuſed of Papiſts, to maintaine Popery, when indeed the tranſlatour had no ſuch meaning, as in the three firſt examples it is manifeſt: for by pœnitentiam agite, he meant not Popiſh doing of penance, but true and Chriſtian repentance: yet you will not give over the ſhew of Popiſh penance and ſatisfaction, that you have by that tranſlation. Likewiſe, by Sacramentum, Epheſ.5.32. he meant nothing but a myſterie generally, as the truth of the Greeke is, and as you doe well prove out of his tranſlation of the ſame word, Apoc.17. Neverthеleſſe, if you give over the hold, you would ſeeme to have of that tranſlation, to make Matrimonie a Sacrament of the new Teſtament, in that ſenſe that Baptiſme and the Lords Supper are called Sacraments: you ſhall have no ſhew in the Scriptures to dazell the eyes of the ignorant. For Gratia plena, I thinke, if he had underſtood the force of the Greeke word rightly, he would have tranſlated it otherwiſe. That he tranſlateth the very like word, plenus ulceribus, which we alſo tranſlate, full of ſores, it may excuſe him of partiall affection, but cannot defend his tranſlation, to expreſſe the ſenſe of the Greeke word. For the very like word he tranſlateth iuſtificati, being iuſtified, or made iuſt, not full of iuſtice, Rom.3.24. and 1 Cor.4.4. Iuſtificatus ſum, I am iuſtified. But concerning the laſt phraſe, Heb.13: becauſe he could not expreſſe his owne minde in Latine, I know not what his meaning was, but leave it to God and himſelfe. Neverthеleſſe it is certaine, that it is not onely barbarous, but alſo falſe and blaſpemous to ſay, that by good workes Gods favour is deſerved.

The active of this verbe, Heb.11.5.& 6. he tranſlateth placuiſſe and placere, to pleaſe and to have pleaſed: what elſe can the paſſive then ſignifie, but to be pleaſed? which perhaps he meant, if he had knowne any Latine word of the paſſive voyce that had ſignified ſo much, for lacke of which, he uſed that terme, which was of the common people uſed in that ſenſe.

Now where he uſeth the word mereri, Heb.10.29. you ſay we like it well enough: but how know you our liking ſo well? we may allow the ſenſe of the tranſlation as good, becauſe wicked men are thought worthy puniſhment according to their deſerts: but we doe not allow the tranſlation, to be agreeable to the ſenſe of the Greeke word ἀξιωθῆτε, and therefore he could not have ſaid truly, according to the ſame Greeke verbe: watch that you may deſerve to eſcape all theſe things, and to ſtand before the ſonne of man, and ſo of the reſt: for not onely his tranſlation had beene untrue, but the ſentences thorow his untrue tranſlation had beene falſe: for though men deſerve, and are accounted worthy of puniſhment and damnation by ſin, yet they deſerve not Gods graces and his kingdome by their works, but are accounted worthy of his bleſſing and eternall felicity, for Chriſts ſake of Gods meere mercy. But you aske whether Primaſius, S. Auguſtines ſcholer, were a Papiſt for uſing this text, & all the reſt that have done the like? I anſwer no. For Primaſius meaneth nothing elſe, but that God is pleaſed, (as the Greeke word ſignifieth) to accept ſuch ſacrifices. Talibus enim hoſtijs & muneribus eleemoſynarum, promeretur Deus adipiſci, vnde dicit per Prophetam, Miſericordiam volo & non Sacrificium: non eſt conſiderandus pauper, qui videtur accipere, ſed potius qui iuſſit dare: eleemoſyna enim quæ pauperi largitur in terra, à Deo recipitur in cœlo. Et noli attendere quod hoc ſit tibi redditurus quod accepit: tu enim terrena dediſti, æterna mercaberis. With ſuch ſacrifices and gifts God is pleaſed to receive them: wherfore he ſaith by the Prophet, I will mercy and not ſacrifice. The poore man is not to be conſidered, which ſeemeth to receive, but rather he which commanded to give: for the almes which is given to the poore man upon earth, is received of God in heaven. And thinke not that he will render unto thee that which he hath received: for thou haſt given earthly things, but thou ſhalt purchaſe eternall

things. Theſe be the words of Primaſius upon that text, which declare, that promereor was vulgarly taken for delector, to be pleaſed or delighted. Neither doth he meane any meriting by the name of purchaſing, which he uſeth: for he was an utter enemy to the Pelagians, as his Maſter Auguſtine was, but onely, that God of his mercy doth crowne and reward his owne gifts, not our merits, as S. Auguſtine ſaith. And when he uſeth the name of merits, he meaneth ſimply, workes, as many of the old Writers did in that time: for otherwiſe there is no Father ſo cleere for iuſtification by faith onely, as Primaſius is, Rom.3. upon theſe words, being iuſtified freely. Audi gratis (ſaith he) & tace de meritis: Heare this word freely, and hold thy peace of merits. Likewiſe upon Rom.4. and many other places; and who ſo uſed this text according to this meaning, we take them not for Papiſts.

But further you demand, whether S. Cyprian was a Papiſt, for uſing ſo often this ſpeech, Promereri Dominum iuſtis operibus, pœnitentia, &c. I anſwere as before. The uſing of the words maketh not a Papiſt, but the Popiſh meaning, which S. Cyprian hath not, but that God is pleaſed with iuſt workes and obedience, repentance and humility, not merited or deſerued: for he citeth the Scripture plentifully, that we ought to glory in nothing, ſeeing nothing is ours. Teſt. ad Quirin, cap.4. And that we muſt put our onely truſt in God, and glory in him. cap.10. Your laſt queſtion, Was it Papiſtry to ſay Senior for Presbyter, &c. is fooliſh trifling: We accuſe not your Tranſlatour of Papiſtry, though you abuſe his untrue or unperfect tranſlations ſometime to the defence of Papiſtry.

RHEM. 54 Matth. 16. Iohn 20. Matth. 16. Iames 2. 1.Tim.5. 1 Iohn 5. Heb.12.

Againe, was he a Papiſt in theſe kinde of words onely, and was he not in whole ſentences? as, Tibi dabo claves, &c. Quicquid ſolveris in terra, erit ſolutum & in cœlis; and, Quorum remiſeritis peccata, remittuntur eis; and Tunc reddet unicuique ſecundum opera ſua; and Nunquid poterit fides ſalvare eum; Ex operibus iuſtificatur homo & non ex fide tantum; and Nubere volunt, damnationem habentes, quia primam fidem irritam fecerunt; and Mandata eius gravia non ſunt; and Aſpexit in remunerationem. Are all theſe, and ſuch like Papiſticall tranſlations, becauſe they are moſt plaine for the Catholike faith which they call Papiſtrie? Are they not word for word as in the Greeke? and the very words of the holy Ghoſt? And if in theſe there be no accuſation of Papiſticall partiallity, why in the other? Laſtly, are the ancient Fathers, generall Councels, the Churches of all the Weſt part, that uſe all theſe ſpeeches and phraſes now ſo many hundred yeeres, are they all Papiſticall? Be it ſo, and let vs in the name of God follow them, ſpeake as they ſpake, tranſlate as they tranſlated, interpret as they interpreted, becauſe we beleeve as they beleeved. And thus far for defence of the old vulgar Latine tranſlation, and why we tranſlate it before all others. Now of the maner of tranſlating the ſame.

The Pa thereof (as they terme it) is in the very ſentences of the holy Ghoſt, more then in the tranſlation.

FVLKE 54 We have anſwered before of the words: and for the ſentences we ſay, they are no Papiſticall tranſlations, neither doe they any thing in the world favour Papiſtry: for they are well tranſlated, and they are the very words of the holy Ghoſt: when you can conclude any Papiſtry out of theſe ſentences in good and lawfull forme of arguments, we will yeeld to your Papiſtry. Finally, the ancient Fathers, generall Councels, and Churches of the Weſt part, that uſed theſe ſpeeches before Papiſtry was hatched and fully ſhapen, were not all Papiſts, but moſt of them profeſſed enemies to the uſurped tyrannie of the Pope, to the pride of his Clergie, to merit of works and of free-will: and were maintainers of iuſtification by faith onely, of the marriage of them that were not able to keepe the vow of continence (as in anſwere to theſe Annotations it ſhall more fully appeare) and by their owne words not mangled, gelded, and falſified, as they are in your Annotations, but truly ſet downe as their bookes ſhall teſtifie, whereby it ſhall be evident, that you beleeve not as they beleeved, nor interpret as they interpreted, as you uſe not the tranſlation that many of them uſed, nor ſpeake as they ſpake.

RHEM. 55 *In this our Tranſlation, becauſe we wiſh it to be moſt ſincere, as becommeth a Catholike tranſlation, and have endeavoured ſo to make it: we are very preciſe and religious in following our copie, the old vulgar approved Latine: not onely in ſenſe, which we hope we alwayes doe, but ſometimes in the very words alſo and phraſes, which may ſeeme to the vulgar Reader, and to common Engliſh eares not yet acquainted therewith, rudeneſſe or ignorance: but to the diſcreet Reader that deeply weigheth and conſidereth the importance of ſacred words and ſpeeches, and how eaſily the voluntary tranſlatour may miſſe the true ſenſe of the holy Ghoſt, we doubt not but our conſideration and doing therein ſhall ſeeme reaſonable and neceſſarie: yea, and that all ſorts of Catholike Readers, will in ſhort time thinke that familiar, which at the firſt may ſeeme ſtrange, and will eſteeme it more, when they ſhall * otherwiſe be taught to underſtand it, then if it were the common knowne Engliſh.*

The maner of this tranſlatiō, and what hath been obſerved therein.

* See the laſt Table at the end of the booke.

For example, we tranſlate often thus, Amen, Amen, I ſay vnto you. Which as yet ſeemeth ſtrange: but after a while it will be as familiar, as Amen in the end of all prayers and Pſalmes; and even as when we end with Amen, it ſoundeth farre better then So be it: ſo in the beginning, Amen, Amen, muſt needs by uſe and cuſtome ſound farre better then Verily, Verily. Which indeed doth not expreſſe the aſſeveration and aſſurance ſignified in the Hebrew word; beſides that it is the ſolemne and uſuall word of our Saviour * to expreſſe a vehement aſſeveration, and therefore is not changed, neither in the Syriake, nor Greeke, nor vulgar Latine Teſtament, but is preſerved and uſed of the Evangeliſts and Apoſtles themſelves, even as Chriſt ſpake it, propter ſanctiorem authoritatem, as S. Auguſtine ſaith of this and of Allelu-ja, for the more holy and ſacred authority thereof, lib.2. doct.Chriſt. cap.11. And therefore doe we keepe the word Allelu-ja, Apoc. 19. as it is both in Greeke and Latine, yea and in all the Engliſh tranſlations, though in their bookes of Common prayer, they tranſlate it, Praiſe ye the Lord. Againe, if Hoſanna, Raca, Belial, and ſuch like, be yet untranſlated in the Engliſh Bibles, why may not we ſay, Corbana, and Paraſceve: ſpecially, when they Engliſhing this latter thus, The preparation of the Sabbath, put three words more into the text, then the Greeke word doth ſignifie; Matt.27. 62. And others ſaying thus, After the day of preparing, make a cold tranſlation and ſhort of the ſenſe, as if they ſhould tranſlate, Sabbath, the reſting; for * Paraſceve is as ſolemne a word for the Sabbath eve, as Sabbath is for the Iewes ſeventh day, and now among Chriſtians much more ſolemner, taken for good friday onely. Theſe words then we thought it farre better to keepe in the text, and to tell their ſignification in the margent or in a table for that purpoſe, then to diſgrace both the text and them with tranſlating them. Such are alſo theſe words, The Paſche. The feaſt of Azymes. The bread of propoſition. Which they tranſlate, The Paſſeover, The feaſt of ſweet bread, The ſhew bread. But if Pentecoſt, Act. 2. be yet untranſlated in their Bibles, and ſeemeth not ſtrange: why ſhould not Paſche and Azymes ſo remaine alſo, being ſolemne feaſts, as Pentecoſt was? or why ſhould they Engliſh one rather then the other? ſpecially whereas Paſſeover at the firſt was as ſtrange, as Paſche may ſeeme now, and perhaps as many now underſtand Paſche, as Paſſeover; and as for Azymes, when they Engliſh it, The feaſt of ſweet bread, it is a falſe interpretation of the word, and nothing expreſſeth that which belongeth to the feaſt concerning unleavened bread. And as for their tearme of ſhew bread, it is very ſtrange and ridiculous. Againe, if Proſelyte be a received word in the Engliſh Bibles, Mat.23. Act.2. Why may not wee bee bold to ſay, Neophyte, 1 Tim.3? ſpecially when they tranſlating it into Engliſh, doe falſly expreſſe the ſignification of the word thus, a young ſcholer. Whereas it is a peculiar word to ſignifie them that are lately baptized, as Catechumenus, ſignifieth the newly inſtructed in faith not yet baptized, who is alſo a young ſcholer rather then the other, and many that have beene old ſcholers, may be Neophytes by differring baptiſme. And if Phylacteries be allowed for Engliſh, Mat. 23. we hope that Didragmes alſo, Prepuce, Paraclete, *and ſuch like, will eaſily grow to be currant and familiar. And in good ſooth there is in all theſe ſuch neceſſity, that they cannot conveniently be tranſlated; as when S.*Paul ſaith, Conciſio non circumciſio: how can we but follow his very words and alluſion? And how is it poſſible to expreſſe Evangelizo, but as we doe Evangelize? for Evangelium being the Goſpell, what is Evangelizo or to Evangelize, but to ſhew the glad tidings of the Goſpell, of the time of Grace, of all Chriſts benefits? All which ſignification is loſt, by tranſlating as the Engliſh Bibles doe, I bring you good tidings, Luc.2.10. Therefore we ſay Depoſitum, 1 Tim.6. and, He exinanited himſelfe, Phil. 2. and, You have reflouriſhed, Phil. 4. and to exhauſt, Heb. 9. 28. becauſe we cannot poſſibly attaine to expreſſe theſe words fully in Engliſh, and we thinke much better, that the Reader ſtaying at the difficultie of them, ſhould take an occaſion to looke in the table following, or otherwiſe to aske the full meaning of them, then by putting ſome uſuall Engliſh words that expreſſe them not, ſo to deceive the Reader. Sometime alſo we doe it for another cauſe, as when we ſay, The advent of our Lord, and Impoſing of hands; becauſe one is a ſolemne time, the other a ſolemne action in the Catholike Church: to ſignifie to the people, that theſe and ſuch like names come out of the very Latine text of the Scripture. So did Penance, doing penance, Chalice, Prieſt, Deacon, Traditions, Altar, Hoſt, and the like (which we exactly keepe as Catholike termes) proceed even from the very words of the Scriptures.

Not the deſire of ſincerity, but rather of obſcurity, hath made you to thruſt in a great number of words, not onely Hebrew, or Syriake, which are found in the Greeke text, but alſo Greeke and Latine words, leaving the Engliſh words of the ſame, which by long uſe, are well knowne and familiar in the Engliſh tongue. And as for Hebrew and Syriake words, which are found in the Greeke text, it is not to be miſliked that they ſhould bee brought alſo into the Engliſh tongue: becauſe the Spirit of God, not without cauſe writing Greeke, did thinke it meet to reteine them. And therefore in our tranſlations, we reteine them all, except a few that are uſually expreſſed in Engliſh: as Amen, Amen, in the begining of a ſentence, which might well have beene uſed, but that the tranſlatour ſtudied to be more plaine, and to expreſſe the meaning of that aſſeveration. Allelu-ja we uſe in the new Teſtament, becauſe we finde it in the Greeke Teſtament: but when we tranſlate the old Teſtament, there is no reaſon why we ſhould not tranſlate it into Engliſh, as well as other words of the text. We ſay alſo Hoſanna, Raca, Belial, yea, and Corbona, becauſe we finde them in the originall text. But as for Greeke termes which may well enough be expreſſed in the Engliſh tongue, we ſee no cauſe why we ſhould reteine them; as Paraſceve, Azymes, Azymes, Neophyte. And if you had [illegible] in [illegible] Greeke [illegible] in your Engliſh [illegible] you [illegible] theſe have [illegible] like Greeke [illegible], Magi, Eccleſia, A[illegible], Encaenia, [illegible]is, Pyra, Nauclerus, [illegible], Bolis, Artemon, Dithalaſſus. [illegible], Encenes, Dyſ[illegible], Pyre, Nauclere, Typhonike, Bole, Artemon, Dithalaſſe, and not as you have done, Sages, Church, chiefe [illegible], Dedication, Wayward, Fire, Maſter of the ſhip, Tempeſtuous, Sownd, Mainſaile, a place betweene two Seas; where if we ſhould picke quarrels as you doe againſt us, we ſhould make our ſelves, to all wiſe people, ridiculous, as you are. You neither like that our tranſlation calleth Paraſceve, the day of preparing, nor the preparation of the Sabbath, and yet both are true, according as the word is taken in that place. You ſay it is a ſolemne word for the Sabbath Eve: but you are ſhort of the ſenſe, for it is taken for a whole day before the Evening, and for the day of preparing: neither of which things are contained in your Popiſh terme, Eve. Where you ſay, it is taken for good Friday onely; Ignatius is againſt you, Epi.5. uſing it for every Friday. We tranſlate Paſcha, Eaſter, or Paſſeover, the one being the uſuall Engliſh terme for that Feaſt, the other expreſſing the meaning of the Hebrew word. And what ſignifieth Azyma but ſweet Bread, and unleavened Bread, as we tranſlate it, and Panes propoſitionis but ſhew Bread, or bread that is ſhewed? Yet you ſay, that the one is falſe, the other ridiculous and ſtrange: nevertheleſſe, ſome of the beſt learned among you, have uſed thoſe termes, as Heskins, lib.1. cap.15. and 22. Stapleton's tranſlation of Beda, lib. 5. cap.22. You miſlike that Neophytus is tranſlated a young ſcholer, and will have it reſtrained to thoſe that are newly baptized, though they be old ſcholers. We know, that Neophytus doth ſignifie one lately planted, and ſo were they called, that were lately baptized, in as much as by the viſible ſigne of Baptiſme they were newly ingraffed into the faith: but if any ſuch were well learned, he was not excluded from the office of a Biſhop, from which S. Paul excludeth Neophytum, as appeareth by the ſtory of S. Ambroſe, who was choſen Biſhop before he was baptized, and ordained Biſhop the eighth day after he was baptized. Neither doth Catechumenus ſignifie alway him that is not baptized, for S. Paul uſeth it, Gal.6.6. for every one that is inſtructed. If Phylacteria could as well be Engliſhed either for ſenſe or terme, as Didragma, Paracletus, and ſuch like, I thinke the tranſlatours would not have fained a terme of the Greeke word: although the word Phylacteries was uſuall in the Engliſh tongue, before our tranſlations, as appeareth in the Homel. of Wickleffe upon Tueſday in the ſecond weeke of Lent, where he ſheweth alſo what they were. Conciſion we uſe alſo, to expreſſe the alluſion unto Circumciſion: but there is no ſuch like reaſon, for Prepuce, Depoſitum, Gratis, and ſuch like Latine words as you uſe. Evangelium ſignifieth the glad tidings of the Goſpel, and ſo we tranſlate, Luke 2. Evangelizo, I bring you glad tidings. And yet Iodochus Lorichius a Popiſh Doctor, in his Goſpel, contendeth that Evangelium ſignifieth properly Bonum nuntium, Good tidings, rather then glad tidings. So that by his iudgement, that which you reprove, is the better tranſlation. But why doe you not call Evangelium the Evangile, as the Scotes doe? as well as Evangelizare to Evangelize, but that you affect novelty of words, to obſcure the Goſpel, as much as you can. In the reſt which you call Catholike termes, you are glad to have a ſound of words out of the Scripture for a ſhew, ſeeing you have no matter at all to iuſtifie your Popiſh Advent, Penance, Traditions, and ſuch like.

Evangelium Lorichij.

Moreover, we preſume not in hard places to mollifie the ſpeeches or phraſes, but religiouſly keepe them word for word, and point for point, for feare of miſſing, or reſtraining the ſenſe of the holy Ghoſt to our fantaſie, as Epheſ. 6. Againſt the ſpirituals of wickedneſſe in the celeſtials; and, What to me and thee woman? wherefore ſee the Annotations upon this place; and, 1 Pet. 2. As infants even now borne, reaſonable, milke without guile deſire ye. We doe ſo place reaſonable, of purpoſe, that it may be indifferent both to infants going before, as in our Latine text: or to milke that followeth after, as in other Latine copies, and in the Greeke. Ioh.3. we tranſlate, The Spirit breatheth where he will, &c. leaving it indifferent to ſignifie either the holy Ghoſt, or wind: which the Proteſtants tranſlating wind, take away the other ſenſe more common and uſuall in the ancient Fathers. We tranſlate, Luke 8. 23. They were filled, not adding of our owne, with water, to mollifie the ſentence, as the Proteſtants doe; and cap. 22. This is the Chalice, the new Teſtament, &c. not, This Chalice is the new Teſtament; likewiſe Marke 13. Thoſe dayes ſhall bee ſuch tribulation, &c. not as the Adverſaries, In thoſe dayes, both our text and theirs being otherwiſe; likewiſe Iac. 4. 6. And giveth greater grace, leaving it indifferent to the Scripture, or to the holy Ghoſt, both going before. Whereas the Adverſaries too too boldly preſumptuouſly adde, ſaying, The Scripture giveth, taking away the other ſenſe, which is farre more probable; likewiſe, Heb.12. 21. we tranſlate, So terrible was it which was ſeene, Moſes ſaid, &c. neither doth Greeke or Latine permit us to adde, that Moſes ſaid, as the Proteſtants preſume to doe. So we ſay, Men brethren, A widow woman, A woman a ſiſter, ſiſter, Iames of Alphæus, and the like. Sometime alſo we folow of purpoſe the Scripture phraſe, as, The hell of fire, according to the Greeke and Latine; which we might ſay perhaps, the fiery hell, by the Hebrew phraſe in ſuch ſpeeches, but not, hell fire, as commonly it is tranſlated; likewiſe Luke 4. 36. What word is this? that in power and authoritie he commandeth the uncleane ſpirits? as alſo Luke 2. Let us paſſe over, and ſee the word that is done, Where we might ſay, thing, by the Hebrew phraſe, but there is a certaine maieſtie and more ſignification in theſe ſpeeches; and therefore both Greeke and Latine keepe them, although it is no more the Greeke or Latine phraſe, then it is the Engliſh. And why ſhould we be ſo ſquemiſh at new words or phraſes in the Scripture, which are neceſſary: when we doe eaſily admit and follow new words coined in court and in courtly or other ſecular writings?

FVLKE 56 By all meanes you labour to ſuppreſſe the light of truth, under one pretence or another. For what preiudice had it beene to the ſenſe, if you had tranſlated ſpirituales nequitiæ, ſpirituall wickedneſſe, as you doe deſiderijs carnis luxuriæ, the deſires of fleſhly riotouſneſſe, 2 Pet. 2. 18? Your ſecond example, Iohn 2. is no hard phraſe in Greeke, but very vulgar and common, ſignifying as we have tranſlated, What have I doe with thee woman? but that you are angry with Chriſt for reprehending his mother, when ſhee was in fault: whom you hold to be void of all ſinne, even originall; contrary to the Scriptures. Otherwiſe you are not ſo preciſe in the ſame phraſe: For Mat. 8. 29. Quid nobis & tibi, you tranſlate, What is betweene us and thee?

In the third example, ſome of your old copies agreeing with the truth of the Greeke, why doe you follow the error of the reſt of your copies, but that you love darkneſſe rather then light? In the fourth example, the words of the Text following, Thou heareſt the ſound thereof, doe plainely argue, that ſpiritus in that place ſignifieth the wind, and not the holy Ghoſt. For the ſound or noiſe of the holy Ghoſt is not heard. Neither doe the ancient Fathers otherwiſe tranſlate it, though by that text, as they may well, they prove the free working of Gods Spirit.

In the fifth, it is plaine both out of the text, and out of S. Matthew 8. 24. that the veſſell was filled with the waves of water. In the ſixth example, Luke 22. 5. S. Paul, 1 Corinth. 11. doth warrant us, that this is S. Lukes meaning, This cup is the new Teſtament. But you know why you would have hidden it as much as is poſſible, becauſe it is direct againſt Tranſubſtantiation. In the ſeventh, our tranſlation is according to the meaning, as appeareth, Matt. 24. 21. though yours be more preciſe to the word of S. Marke.

In the eighth place, you ſay, that we too too boldly and preſumptuouſly adde the word Scripture, Iames 4. 6. ſaying, the Scripture giveth greater grace, whereas you leave it indifferent to the Scripture, and the holy Ghoſt, both going before. By which reprehenſion you verifie the ſaying of the Apoſtle, The ſpirit that dwelleth in you luſteth to envie. For except envie of our well doing, had blinded your eyes, you would never have ſaid, that the holy Ghoſt is that Spirit that luſteth unto envie, as both your uulgar tranſlation, and you your ſelues doe render the text.

In the ninth, you ſeeke a knot in a ruſh, Heb. 12. 21. for whether this word (that) be added or omitted, the ſenſe is all one. And you your ſelues adde many other words for explication, as it is neceſſary for every tranſlatour.

Men and brethren, is our Engliſh phraſe, as Maſters and friends, of the ſame perſons. And what difference is there betweene a widow woman, and a wowan that was a widow? A woman a ſiſter, the originall text ſaith not, 1 Cor. 9. but a ſiſter to wife: for it were abſurd to ſay, A ſiſter a woman. But where you ſay, the hell of fire, ſeeing your Latine is gehenna ignis, why ſay you not, the gehenna of fire, as you ſay, Paſche, and not Paſſeover, Amen, Amen, and not verily, verily? If you may expreſſe not onely the phraſe, but alſo the Hebrew word in Engliſh, without offence againſt the maieſtie of that ſpeech, we may be bold to bring the Hebrew phraſe into the Engliſh tongue, ſo as it may be underſtood of Engliſh men.

By the exhortation wherewith wee alſo are exhorted; the Greeke ſignifieth alſo conſolation, &c. and 2 Cor. 10. But having hope of your faith increaſing, to be, &c. where the Greeke may alſo ſignifie, as or when your faith increaſeth. Sometime for advantage of the Catholike cauſe, when the Greeke maketh for us more then the Latine, as, Seniores, πρεσβυτέρους. Vt digni habeamini, ἵνα ἀξιωθῆτε. Qui effunditur, τὸ ἐκχυνόμενον. Præcepta, παραδόσεις; and Iohn 21. ποίμαινε, Paſce & rege. And ſometime to ſhew the falſe tranſlation of the heretike; as when Beza ſaith, Hoc poculum in meo ſanguine qui; τὸ ποτήριον ἐν τῷ αἵματί μου τὸ ἐκχυνόμενον, Luk. 22. and Quem oportet cœlo contineri; ὃν δεῖ οὐρανὸν δέξασθαι, Act. 3. Thus we uſe the Greeke divers wayes, and eſteeme of it as it is worthy, and take all commodities thereof for the better underſtanding of the Latine, which being a tranſlation, cannot alwayes attaine to the full ſenſe of the principall tongue, as we ſee in all tranſlations.

FVLKE 57 Seeing that you confeſſe, that the Latine being a tranſlation, cannot alwayes attaine to the full ſenſe of the principall tongue, why did you not tranſlate out of the Greeke which is the principall tongue? And why doth the Tridentine aſſembly authorize that tranſlation for onely authenticall, which neither doth nor can attaine to the full ſenſe of the principall tongue, before the text of the principall tongue it ſelfe? As for the advantage of your cauſe whereof you ſpeake, hath beene exactly examined already, and more ſhall be in the proper places.

The latin text ſomtime noted in the margent

RHEM. 58 Item we adde the Latine word ſometime in the margent, when either we cannot fully expreſſe it, (as Act. 8. They tooke order for Stevens funerall, Curaverunt Stephanum; and, All take not this word, Non omnes capiunt) or when the Reader might thinke, it cannot be as we tranſlate, as Luke 8. A ſtorme of wind deſcended into the lake, and they were filled, & complebantur; and Iohn 5. when Ieſus knew that he had now a long time, quia jam multum tempus haberet; meaning, in his infirmity.

FVLKE 58 If you added the Latine word every time that you give not the preciſe ſignification thereof, you ſhould make you ſelues ſometimes, and ſometimes your vulgar Latine tranſlation ridiculous, even to children that are young Grammarians, as when you tranſlate fœnerator, a creditour, Luke 7. ſtabulum, an inne, Luke 10. navis, a boat, Marke 8. navicula, a ſhip, Luke 5. Non quia de egenis pertinebat ad eum, Not becauſe he cared for the poore, and ſuch like.

In the beginning of bookes, Matth. Paul, &c. not S. Matthew, S. Paul, &c.

RHEM. 59 This preciſe following of our Latine text, in neither adding nor diminiſhing, is the cauſe why we ſay not in the title of Bookes, in the firſt page, S. Matthew, S. Paul: becauſe it is ſo neither in Greeke nor Latine; though in the tops of the leaves following, where we may be bolder, we adde S. Matthew, &c. to ſatiſfie the Reader. Much unlike to the Proteſtants our adverſaries, which make no ſcruple to leave out the name of Paul in the title of the Epiſtle to the Hebrewes, though it be in every Greeke booke which they tranſlate. And their moſt authorized Engliſh Bibles leave out (Catholike) in the title of S. Another reading in the margent.

Item we give the Reader in places of ſome importance, another reading in the margent, ſpecially when the Greeke is agreeable to the ſame, as Ioh. 4. tranſiet de morte ad vitam. Other Latine copies have tranſijt, and ſo it is in the Greeke.

FVLKE 59 How preciſe you are, let thoſe few examples laſt before remembred teſtifie. And for adding, let your owne confeſſion beare witneſſe, Curaverunt Stephanum. They tooke order for Stevens funerall. Where a plaine dreſſing of his battered body unto buriall is ſignified, and no pompous funerall. And if I ſhould follow ſuch ſmall quarrels, as you doe, I might bring in plenty of examples, as 2 Cor. 8. Qui multum, he that had much, and Qui modicum non minoravit, he that had little, wanted not. 2 Cor. 1. Supra virtutem, above our power, 1 Cor. 13. Evacuavi quæ erant parvuli, I did away the things that belonged to a little one.

For diminiſhing, take theſe examples. 1 Cor. 14. Si quid autem volunt diſcere, but if they learne any thing, Will or deſire left out. Act. 25. Feſtus autem reſpondit ſervari Paulum in Cæſarea. But Feſtus anſwered that Paul is in Cæſarea, this word (kept) being omitted. But Act. 10. 41. in a place of great importance, and a matter of ſome controverſie, the text is diminiſhed of a whole clauſe, teſtibus præordinatis à Deo, for which you give us no Engliſh at all. Likewiſe Heb. 7. 28. in a matter of controverſie, where the Latine is, Lex enim homines conſtituit Sacerdotes, infirmitatem habentes, you tranſlate for the Law appointeth Prieſts, them that have infirmity, leaving out homines; where the antitheſis is betweene the Prieſthood of men, and of the Sonne of God.

Greeke

G[illegible] in a [illegible]; yet you [illegible], in the title of [illegible] to the [illegible] of the Epistle of S. I[illegible]s. [illegible] the titles are [illegible] of [illegible] of God; yet [illegible] tles in some of our [illegible]tions. And one [illegible] copie [illegible] Paul. Againe, those other five Epistles are [illegible] or Gen[illegible] the doctrine of them, were more sound and Catholike then the do[illegible] of S. Paul's [illegible]istles, but because they are directed to no speciall city or countrey, but either univers[illegible]y to all Christians, or to all Iewes, inhabiting many nations.

Rhem. 60 We binde not our selues to the points of any one copy, print, or edition of the vulgar Latine in places of no controversie, but follow the pointing most agreeable to the Greeke, and to the Fathers Commentaries. As Col. 1. 10. Ambulantes dignè Deo, per omnia placentes. Walking worthy of God, in all things pleasing. ἀξίως τοῦ κυρίου εἰς πᾶσαν ἀρεσκείαν. Eph. 1. 17. We point thus, Deus Domini nostri Iesu Christi, Pater gloriæ; as in the Greeke, and S. Chrysostome, and S. Hierom both in text and Commentaries. Which the Catholike Reader specially must marke, lest he finde fault, when he seeth our translation disagree in such places from the pointing of his Latine Testament.

The pointing sometime altered.

We translate sometime the word that is in the Latine margent, and not that in the text, when by the Greeke or the Fathers we see it is a manifest fault of the writers heretofore, that mistooke one word for another; as in fine, not in fide, 1 Pet. 3. v. 8. præsentiam, not præscientiam, 2 Pet. 1. v. 16. Heb. 13. latuerunt, not placuerunt.

The margent reading sometime preferred before the text.

Thus we have endeavoured by all meanes to satisfie the indifferent Reader, and to helpe his understanding every way both in the text, and by annotations: and withall to deale most sincerely before God and man, in translating and expounding the most sacred text of the holy Testament. Farewell good Reader, and if we profit thee any whit by our poore paines, let us for Gods sake be partakers of thy devout prayers, and together with humble and contrite heart call upon our Saviour Christ to cease these troubles and stormes of his derest Spouse: in the meane time comforting our selues with this saying of S. Augustine: That Heretikes, when they receive power corporally to afflict the Church, doe exercise her patience: but when they oppugne her onely by their evill doctrine or opinions, then they exercise her wisedome, De civit. Dei, lib. 18. cap. 51.

Fvlke 60 You take enough unto you, to use your iudgement in pointing, which may alter the whole sense, and sometimes give a contrary meaning. And as you are bold sometime to preferre the margent reading, before the text, when by the Greeke or the Fathers, you see it is a manifest fault of the writer, so might you have done in many more places, and made your translation more agreeable to the truth of the Greeke text: if you had not rather to flie from the truth, then to come no neerer then you be inforced.

Now that I also in a word, may let the Reader understand my purpose in answere to the Annotations: I meane not to strive for every word in the margent, as the names of Popish feasts, and such like, neither to meddle with those Annotations, which although they be not rightly gathered out of the text, yet containe no impiety or slander of the Church, or the true members thereof. But onely with such as are framed against the truth, and the maintainers thereof.

S. Augustine lib. 11. cont. Faustum cap. 5.

THE excellencie of the Canonicall authoritie of the Old and New Testament, is distincted from the bookes of latter Writers: which being confirmed in the Apostles times, by the successions of Bishops, and propagations of Churches, is placed as it were in a certaine Throne on high, whereunto every faithfull and godly understanding must be subiect and obedient. There, if any thing move or trouble thee as absurd, thou mayest not say, The Author of this booke held not the truth: but either the copie is faulty, or the Translatour erred, or thou understandest not. But in the works of them that wrote afterward, which are contained in infinite bookes, but are in no case equall to that most sacred authority of Canonicall Scriptures: in which soever of them is found even the same truth, yet the authority is farre unequall.

2 The RHEM. A. 2 The diſcerning of Canonicall from not Canonicall, and of their infallible truth, and ſenſe, commeth unto us, onely by the credit we give unto the Catholike Church: through whoſe commendation wee beleeve both the Goſpel and Chriſt himſelfe. Whereas the Sectaries meaſure the matter by their fanſies and opinions.

S. Auguſtine cont. Epiſt. fundament. cap. 5.

I for my part, would not beleeve the Goſpel, unleſſe the authoritie of the Catholike Church moved me. They therefore whom I obeyed, ſaying, Beleeve the Goſpel: why ſhould I not beleeve them, ſaying, Beleeve not * Manichæus? Chuſe whether thou wilt. If thou wilt ſay, Beleeve the Catholikes: loe they warne me that I give no credit unto you: and therefore beleeving them, I muſt needs not beleeve thee. If thou ſay, Beleeve not the Catholikes: it is not the right way, by the Goſpel to drive me to the faith of Manichæus, becauſe I beleeved the Goſpel it ſelfe by the preaching of Catholikes.

Luther, Calvin.

Againe, lib. de utilit. credend. cap. 14.

I ſee that concerning Chriſt himſelfe, I have beleeved none, but the confirmed and aſſured opinion of peoples and nations: and that theſe peoples have on every ſide poſſeſſed the myſteries of the Catholike Church. Why ſhould I not therefore moſt diligently require, ſpecially among them, what Chriſt commanded, by whoſe authority I was moved to beleeve that Chriſt did command ſome profitable thing? Wilt thou (O Heretike) tell me better what he ſaid? whom I would not thinke to have beene at all, or to be, If I muſt beleeve becauſe thou ſayeſt it. What groſſe madneſſe is this, to ſay, Beleeve the Catholikes, that Chriſt is to be beleeved: and learne of us, what he ſaid.

Thou ſeeſt then in this matter what force the authority of the Catholike Church hath, which even from the moſt grounded and founded ſeats of the Apoſtles, is eſtabliſhed untill this day, by the line of Biſhops ſucceeding one another, and by the conſent of ſo many peoples. Whereas thou ſayeſt, This is Scripture, or, this ſuch an Apoſtles, that is not: becauſe this ſoundeth for me, and the other againſt me. Thou then art the rule of truth, whatſoever is againſt thee, is not true.

FULKE A The truth and ſenſe of the Scripture commeth not onely by the credit we give unto the Church, but alſo by the Spirit of God which giveth witneſſe to his word, as the Prophet ſaith, * My Spirit which is within thee, and my word which I have put in thy mouth, and the mouth of thy ſeed, ſhall not faile for ever. And therefore you falſifie S. Auguſtines authority, in tranſlating Commoveret, moved. For he ſaith, as there were many things, which held him in the Catholike faith, ſo if he were an infidell, he would not beleeve the Goſpel, unleſſe the authority of the Church Commoveret, with other things did move him. And although the authority of the Church (for the moſt part) doe firſt move the outward man to know and reverence the Scriptures: yet afterward by the Spirit and the Word, hee is confirmed in the faith of them, ſo that now he beleeveth not onely for the authority of the Church, which conſiſteth of men, but by the aſſurance of the Spirit of God, and the authority of the word it ſelfe, expreſſed in the Scriptures. And therefore S. Auguſtine in the 14. Chapter of the ſame Booke, ſaith of the Manichees, as we may ſay of the Papiſts; what have we to doe but to forſake them, that invite us to know things certaine, and afterward command us to beleeve uncertaine things: and to follow them which invite us firſt to beleeve, that which we are not yet able to behold, that being made ſtronger through faith it ſelfe, we may attaine to underſtand that wee beleeve, now not men, but God himſelfe, confirming and lightening our minds inwardly. The other two ſentences of S. Auguſtine, although they bee not truly and wholly cited, yet they containe nothing for the Popiſh Church which is not Catholike, but particular and hereticall, yea Antichriſtian, and

* Eſay 51.

Many borne and bred in ſchiſme and hereſie, are even by heretiks and ſchiſmatiks moved firſt to give credit to the Scriptures.

and hath no ſucceſſion of doctrine, from the Apoſtles and the Biſhops of the Primitive Church, whoſe doctrine it hateth and perſecuteth. For it is continuance in the ſame doctrine, that S. Auguſtine commendeth, and not ſitting in the ſame place, where the Apoſtles, and ancient Biſhops ſate.

RHEM. B. 3 No Heretikes have right to the Scriptures, but are uſurpers: the Catholike Church being the true owner and faithfull keeper of them. Heretikes abuſe them, corrupt them, and utterly ſeeke to aboliſh them, though they pretend the contrary.

Tertullian lib. De præſcriptionibus, bringeth in the CATHOLIKE CHURCH ſpeaking thus to all Heretikes.

Who are you, when, and from whence come you? What doe you in my poſſeſſion, that are none of mine? By what right (Marcion) doeſt thou cut downe my wood? Who gave thee licence (O Valentine) to turne the courſe of my fountaines? By what authority (Apelles) *doeſt thou remove my bounds? And * you the reſt, why doe you ſow and feed for theſe companions at your pleaſure? It is my poſſeſſion, I poſſeſſe it of old, I have aſſured origins thereof, even from thoſe Authors whoſe the thing was. I am the heire of the Apoſtles. As they provided by their Teſtament, as they committed it to my credit, as they adjured me, ſo doe I hold it. You ſurely they diſherited alwayes, and have caſt you off, as forreiners, as enemies.*

O Luther, Zuinglius, Calvin.

* Their ſcholers and followers.

Againe in the ſame booke.

Encountring with ſuch by Scriptures, availeth nothing, but to overturne a mans ſtomacke or his braine. This Hereſie receiveth not certaine Scriptures: and if it doe receive ſome, yet by adding and taking away, it perverteth the ſame to ſerve their purpoſe: and if it receive any, it doth not receive them wholly: and if after a ſort it receive them wholly, neverthleſſe by deviſing divers expoſitions, it turneth them cleane another way, &c.

FULKE B. Luther, Zuinglius and Calvin, which received and beleeved all the Scriptures of God, and alwayes gave ſoveraigne authoritie onely unto them, are unfitly compared with ſuch Heretikes, as Tertullian named, which refuſed what Scriptures they would, and corrupted the reſt at their pleaſure. Therefore although all their Hereſies are condemned by the Scriptures, which is ſufficient to eſtabliſh the faithfull, yet it was in vaine to encounter with them, by authority of the Scriptures, which they did not admit; whereas by the argument of preſcription, they were plainely convinced. For as Tertullian ſaith, That it is true which is firſt, and that is falſe which is latter, which is the meaning of Tertullian, and his ſcope in that booke of Preſcription againſt Heretikes.

RHEM. C. 4 Yet doe they vaunt themſelves of Scriptures exceedingly, but they are never the more to be truſted for that.

S. Hierom adverſus Luciferianos in fine.

Let them not flatter themſelves, if they ſeeme in their owne conceit to affirme that which they ſay, out of the Chapters of Scriptures: whereas the Devill alſo ſpake ſome things out of the Scriptures, and the Scriptures conſiſt not in the reading, but in the underſtanding.

Vincentius Lirinenſis lib. cont. profanas hæreſum Novationes.

Here perhaps ſome man may aske, whether Heretikes alſo uſe not the teſtimonies of divine Scriptures. Yes indeed doe they, and that vehemently: For thou ſhalt ſee them flie thorow every one of the ſacred Bookes of the Law, thorow Moſes, the Bookes of the Kings, the Pſalmes, the Apoſtles, the Goſpels, the Prophets. For, whether among their owne fellowes, or ſtrangers: whether privately, or publikely: whether in talke, or in their Bookes: whether in banquets, or in the ſtreets: they (I ſay) alledge nothing of their owne, which they indeavour not to ſhadow with the wordes of Scripture alſo. Reade the workes of Paulus Samoſatenus, of Priſcillian, of Eunomian, of Iovinian, * of the other plagues and peſtilences: thou ſhalt finde an infinite heape of examples, no page in a manner omitted or void, which is not painted and coloured with the ſentences of the new or old Teſtament. But they are ſo much the more to bee taken heed of, and and to be feared, the more ſecretly they lurke under the ſhadowes of Gods divine Law. For they know their ſtinkes would not eaſily pleaſe any man almoſt, if they were breathed out nakedly and ſimply themſelves alone, and therefore they ſprinkle them as it were with certaine precious ſpices of the heavenly word: to the end that he which would eaſily deſpiſe the errour of man, may not eaſily contemne the Oracles of God. So that they doe like unto them, which when they will prepare certaine bitter potions for children, doe firſt annoint the brimmes of the cup with honey, that the unwary age, when it ſhall firſt feele the ſweetneſſe, may not feare the bitterneſſe.

FVLKE C. The Papiſts in this point of vaunting, are not behinde, as appeareth in the Preface. And wherefore ſerue theſe Annotations, but to vaunt themſelves of the Scriptures? But they are never the more to be truſted for that, but the Scriptures more diligently to bee ſearched, and ſtudied, that their falſhood in perverting them, may the better be eſpied and diſcovered.

Calvin and Iewell have their pages garniſhed not onely with authorities of Scripture, but alſo with ſentences of the ancient Fathers of the Primitive Church, which by the judgement of Vincentius, are meanes to bring them to the true underſtanding of the Scriptures, and are teſtimonies, that they teach not their owne new inventions, as Samoſatenus, Priſcillian, Eunomius, Iovinian, &c. but the ancient faith of the Church, planted by the Apoſtles, and continued by the ancient Fathers, for many hundred yeeres after Chriſt, even untill the Apoſtacie was made by Antichriſt.

RHEM. D. 5 The cauſe why, the Scriptures being perfect, yet we uſe other Eccleſiaſticall writings and traditions.

Vincentius Lirinenſis in his golden booke before cited, adverſus profanas hæreſum Novationes.

Here ſome man perhaps may aske, foraſmuch as the Canon of the Scriptures is perfect, and in all points very ſufficient in it ſelfe, what need is there, to ioyne thereunto the authority of the Eccleſiaſticall underſtanding? for this cauſe ſurely, for that all take not the holy Scripture in one and the ſame ſenſe, becauſe of the deepeneſſe thereof; but the ſpeeches thereof, ſome interpret one way, and ſome another way, ſo that there may almoſt as many ſenſes be picked out of it, as there be men; for* Novatian doth expound it one way; and Sabellius another way; otherwiſe Donatus; otherwiſe Arius, Eunomius, Macedonius; otherwiſe Photinus, Apollinaris, Priſcillianus; otherwiſe Iovinian, Pelagius, Celeſtius; laſtly, otherwiſe Neſtorius. * And therefore very neceſſary it is, becauſe of ſo great windings and turnings of divers errours, that the line of Propheticall and Apoſtolicall interpretation, be directed according to the rule of the Eccleſiaſticall and Catholike ſenſe or underſtanding.

* So he calleth the Churches ſenſe, and the Fathers interpretations of Scriptures.

* Otherwiſe Wicleffe, Luther, Calvin, Puritanes.

S. Baſil. lib. de Spiritu ſancto cap. 27.

Of ſuch Articles of religion as are kept and preached in the Church, ſome were taught by the written word, other ſome we have received by the tradition of the Apoſtles, delivered unto us as it were from hand to hand in myſtery ſecretly: both which be of one force to Chriſtian Religion: and this no man will deny that hath any little skill of the Eccleſiaſticall rites or cuſtomes; for if we goe about to reject the cuſtomes not contained in Scripture, as being of ſmall force, we ſhall unwittingly and unawares mangle the Goſpel it ſelfe in the principall parts thereof, yea rather, we ſhall abridge the very preaching of the Goſpel, and bring it to a bare name.

FVLKE D. While you hold tradition beſide the Scripture to be neceſſary, you cannot defend the Scripture to bee perfect and ſufficient by it ſelfe, unto all points of faith, as Vincentius ſaith, Whom you falſifie in tranſlating, ad omnia, in all points; and leaving out, that he ſaith before, of the meanes to defend faith, which are the authority of Gods Law, and the tradition of the Catholike Church, which tradition bringeth in nothing that is left out of the Scriptures (as yours doe) but containeth the ſumme of Catholike doctrine grounded in the Scriptures. As appeareth plainly by the words of the ſame Father, abridging his former ſentence.

Diximus

Diximus in ſuperioribus hanc fuiſſe ſemper & eſſe hodieque Catholicorum conſuetudinem, ut fidem veram duobus his modis approbent. Primum divini Canonis authoritate, deinde Eccleſiæ Catholicæ traditione, non quia Canon ſolus non ſibi ad univerſa ſufficiat, ſed quia verba divina pro ſuo plerique arbitratu interpretantes, varias opiniones & errores concipiant. Atque ideo neceſſe ſit, ut ad unam Eccleſiaſtici ſenſus regulam Scripturæ cœleſtis intelligentia dirigatur, in his duntaxat præcipue quæſtionibus, quibus totius Catholici dogmatis fundamenta nituntur. We have ſaid before, that this hath alwayes beene, and is alſo at this day, the cuſtome of the Catholikes, to approve the true faith, by theſe two meanes. Firſt by the authority of the divine Canon, afterward by tradition or delivery of the Catholike Church, not becauſe the Canon alone, is not by it ſelfe ſufficient unto all things: but becauſe many interpreting the words of God after their owne pleaſure doe conceive divers opinions and errours. And therefore it is neceſſary that the underſtanding of the heavenly Scripture be directed to one rule of Eccleſiaſticall ſenſe, onely in thoſe queſtions chiefly, on which the foundations of the whole Catholike doctrine doe leane.

By which ſaying it is plaine, that Vincentius allowed another manner of perfection and ſufficiencie of the holy Scriptures, then you doe acknowledge, which teach, that there be Articles of faith neceſſary to be beleeved, which are not to be proved out of the Scripture, but ſtand only upon credit of tradition, as prayer for the dead, invocation of Saints, &c. whereas Vincentius ſpeaketh of no tradition but that which is grounded upon the Canon of the Scriptures.

In the ſecond teſtimony of S. Baſil alſo, you falſifie his meaning, tranſlating Dogmata Articles of Religion, whereby you would have it thought, that he ſpeaketh of Articles of faith and doctrine, preached in the Church, which have no warrant out of the Scriptures, whereas he ſpeaketh onely of formes of ſpeech, by which the Articles of faith taught in the Scripture, are expreſſed, and of Rites or Ceremonies uſed in the Church in his time. As that they uſed to ſing in the Church: Glory be to the Father, and to the Sonne, with the holy Ghoſt. The Heretikes objected, that this forme of ſpeech, with the holy Ghoſt, was not found in the Scriptures. S. Baſil proveth by the Scripture, that equall glory is due to the holy Ghoſt, with the Father, and the Sonne. But touching the uſe of the prepoſition σὺν, in that forme of glorifying the holy Trinity, which of ancient time had beene uſed in the Church, he referreth it to Apoſtolike tradition, as hee doth a number of Ceremonies beſide, and formes of publike Service then uſed in the Church: which he calleth δόγματα, that are not ſpoken of in the Scriptures, at leſtwiſe not plainly and expreſly, for he defendeth ſome of them to have their reaſon out of the Scriptures: counting among them the forme of this confeſſion: to beleeve in the Father, in the Son, & in the holy Ghoſt, which forme of words in ſo many ſyllables, is not found in all the Scriptures, yet the truth and ſubſtance of this confeſſion is moſt plainly and perfectly contained in the holy Scriptures. S. Baſil therefore is no Patrone of traditions, that bring in Articles of faith or religion, not contained in the Scriptures, as it is evident by other places of his writings, as in his morall, Reg. 26. Every word and deed ought to be warranted by teſtimony of the Scripture inſpired of God. And againe, Reg. 8. If whatſoever is not of faith is ſin (as the Apoſtle ſaith) and faith is of hearing, and hearing by the word of God, whatſoever is without the holy Scripture, ſeeing it is not of faith, is ſin. The ſame judgement he ſheweth in many other parts of his workes, as he that will, may ſee; Tract. de vera & pia fide; in regul. brev. inter 1. & 95. & 98. Epiſt. 80.

The ſtory hereof is written by foure: who in Ezechiel _and in the_ Apocalypſe _are likened to_ foure living creatures, every one according as his booke beginneth. S. Matthew _to a man, becauſe_ Eze. 1.
he beginneth with the pedegree of Chriſt as he is man. S. Marke _to a lion, becauſe he beginneth_ Apoc. 4. with the preaching of S. Iohn Baptiſt, _as it were the roaring of a lion in the wilderneſſe._ S. Luke to a calfe, becauſe he beginneth with a Prieſt of the Old Teſtament (to wit Zacharie _the father_ _of_ S. Iohn Baptiſt) _which Prieſthood was to ſacrifice calves to God._ S. Iohn _to an Eagle, becauſe_ he beginneth with the Divinity of Chriſt, flying ſo high as more is not poſſible.

The firſt three do report at large what Chriſt did in Galilee, after the impriſonment of S. Iohn Baptiſt. _Wherefore S._ Iohn _the Evangeliſt writing after them all, doth omit his doings in Galilee_ (ſave only one, which they had not written of, the wonderfull bread which he told the Capharnaites he could and would give, Io. 6.) _and reporteth firſt, what he did whiles_ Iohn Baptiſt _as yet_ was preaching and baptizing: then, after Iohns _impriſoning, what he did in Iury every yere about_ Eaſter. But of his Paſſion all foure doe write at large.

Where it is to be noted, that from his baptizing (which is thought to have beene upon twelfth day, what time he was beginning to be about 30 yeeres old, _Luke 3.) unto his paſſion, are numbred_ three moneths and three yeeres, in which there were alſo foure Eaſters.

THE ARGVMENT OF S. MATTHEVVES GOSPEL.

RHEM. _Saint Matthevves Goſpel may be well divided into five parts. The firſt part, as touching the Infancie of_ our Lord Ieſus; Chap. 1. & 2.
The ſecond, of the preparation that was made to his manifeſtation, Chap. 3. _and a piece of the 4._
The third, of his manifeſting of himſelfe by preaching and miracles, and that in Galilee: the other piece of the 4. Chap. _unto the_ 19.
The fourth, of his comming into Iurie, toward his Paſsion, Chap. 19, 20.
The fifth, of the holy weeke of his Paſsion in Hieruſalem, Chap. 21. _unto the end of the booke._

_Of S._ Matthew _we have_ Mat. 9. Mar. 2. Luc. 5. _How being before a Publican, he was called of our Lord, and made_ a Diſciple. Then Luc. 6. Mar. 3. Mat. 10. _How out of the whole number of the Diſciples, he was choſen to be one of the_ twelve Apoſtles, and out of them againe he was choſen (and none but he and S. Iohn) _to be one of the foure Evangeliſtes._
Among which foure alſo, he was the firſt that wrote, about 8. or 10. yeeres after Chriſtes Aſcenſion.

17 Therefore all the generations from Abraham unto David, fourteene generations. And from David to the Tranſmigration of Babylon, fourteene generations. And from the Tranſmigration of Babylon unto CHRIST, fourteene generations.

18 And the generation of CHRIST, was in this wiſe. When his mother MARY was ſpouſed to Ioſeph, before they came together; ſhe was found to be with childe by the holy Ghoſt.

19 Whereupon Ioſeph, for that he was a juſt man, and would not * put her to open ſhame: was minded ſecretly to dimiſſe her.

20 But as he was thus thinking, behold the Angel of our Lord appeared to him in ſleepe, ſaying: Ioſeph ſonne of David, feare not to take MARY thy wife; for that which is || borne in her, is of the holy Ghoſt.

21 And ſhe ſhall bring forth a Sonne: and thou ſhalt call his name † IESVS: For hee ſhall ſave his people from their ſinnes.

22 And all this was done that it might be fulfilled which our Lord ſpake by the Prophet, ſaying, 23 Behold || a Virgine ſhall be with childe, and || bring forth a Sonne, and they ſhall call his name Emmanuel, which being interpreted is God with us.

24 And Ioſeph riſing up from ſleepe, did as the Angel of our Lord commanded him, and tooke his wife.

16 Iacob begat Ioſeph the husband of Mary, of whom was borne Ieſus, that is called Chriſt.

17 And ſo all the generations from Abraham to David, are fourteene generations: and from David untill the carying away into Babylon, are fourteene generations: and from the carrying away into Babylon unto Chriſt, are fourteene generations.

*18 * The birth of Ieſus Chriſt was on this wiſe. When as his mother Mary was betrothed to Ioſeph (before they came together) ſhe was found with childe of the holy Ghoſt.* Luke 1.27.

*19 Then Ioſeph her husband, being a righteous man, * and not willing to make her a publique example was minded privily to put her away.* Deut.24.1.

20 But while he thought theſe things, behold, the Angell of the Lord appeared unto him in a dreame, ſaying, Ioſeph thou ſonne of David, feare not to take unto thee Mary thy wife, for that which is conceived in her, is of the holy Ghoſt.

*21 She ſhall bring forth a Sonne, * and thou ſhalt call his name Ieſus: for he ſhall ſave his people from their ſinnes.* Luke 1.31. acts 4.12.

22 (All this was done, that it might be fulfilled, which was ſpoken of the Lord by the Prophet ſaying, *23 * Behold, a Virgin ſhall be with child, and ſhall bring forth a Sonne, and they ſhall call his Name Emmanuel, which is by interpretation God with us.)* Eſay 7.14.

24 Then Ioſeph, being raiſed from ſleepe, did as the Angel of the Lord had bidden him, and he tooke his wife:

25 And knew her not, till ſhe had brought forth her firſt borne Sonne, and called his Name Ieſus.

MARGINALL NOTES. CHAP. I.

RHEM. 1 1 The booke.] This Goſpel is moſt ſolemnely ſung in holy Church at Mattens upon Chriſtmas day. As alſo it is the Goſpell of the Conception and Nativity of our bleſſed Lady: becauſe here is declared the pedegree of her alſo.

FVLKE 1 You muſt underſtand this note, where there is a Prieſt or Deacon, that c[illegible] it luſtily, as in Cathedrall Churches, or other great Quieres: as for poore countrey Churches, [illegible]e there is none but one hedge Prieſt that can neither [illegible] or [illegible] is mumbled u[illegible] as the reſt of the [illegible] Maſſe, unleſſe wee ſhall thinke [illegible] poore Churches [illegible] no part of the Popes holy Church. To the feaſts of the Conception and Nativity of your Lady, [illegible] a very idoll, you might have added the Viſitation of Mary, of the common [illegible] Lady day. [illegible] you [illegible] and [illegible] of your o[illegible]. [illegible] ted th[illegible] f[illegible] of the Conception [illegible] Nativity, bec[illegible] to the [illegible] the b[illegible] Mary was conceived and borne without the ſpo[illegible] 5. 12. [illegible] And therefore, in ſtead of honouring her with the [illegible] priviledge of Chriſt the [illegible] and [illegible] both of her and us, you honour an idoll, and not her: for [illegible] idoll is nothing in the world. And ſo [illegible] man or woman which is conceived without originall ſinne, except our Saviour C[illegible], who was conceived by the holy Ghoſt, as none other ever was or ſhall be. Likewiſe when you call the bleſſed Virgine our Lady, as you call God and Chriſt our Lord, what doe you but make her equall with God [illegible] Chriſt, in power and redemption? In which reſpect God is called our Lord. For it is no [illegible]rme of civill or temporall dignity and authority, as when we ſay, Our ſoveraigne Lady the Queene, but a re[illegible]us and divine honour that you aſcribe unto her, calling her abſolutely, Our Lady, as blaſphemouſly, as the Frenchmen doe ridicuouſly call other Saints, Monſieur S. pierre, Monſieur S. peter, or my Lord S. peter, and Madame S. Genofefa, Miſtreſſe S. Genofefa, or, My Lady S. Genofefa, &c. In which appellation, as in offering of candles, and other things unto her image and worſhipping thereof, you reſemble the old Collyridian heretikes, againſt whom, and generally againſt the worſhipping of images, Epiphanius writeth, Hæreſ. 78. & 79. calling the making of images to be worſhipped, a deviliſh intent, and the worſhipping of them and of the Virgine Mary, to be a deifying of her, and a blaſphemous and wicked worke. What would he have written if he had ſeene the horrible idolatrie committed by the Papiſts in the pilgrimages to the images of the bleſſed Virgine, where you called, and yet call ſtockes and ſtones your Lady, as, Our Lady of Walſingham, Ypſwich, Paris, Antwerp? What elſe were they but dead images at thoſe places? If he had heard your blaſphemies uttered in the ſolemne * feſtivities, that you hold in her honour, contained in Hymnes, Anthemes, and eſpecially in that execrable Pſalter of Bonaventure, who perverteth whatſoever the holy Ghoſt hath uttered in praiſe of God, abuſing it to magnifie the Virgine Mary.

1 Cor.8.4.

ANNOTATIONS CHAP. I.

RHEM. 3 Thamar.] Chriſt abhorred not to take fleſh of ſome that were ill, as he choſe Iudas among his Apoſtles: Let not us diſdaine to receive our ſpirituall birth and ſuſtenance, of ſuch as be not alwayes good.

Numb. 36. 16 Ioſeph.] Ioſeph *marrying our Lady as neere of kin (for ſo was the * Law) by his pedegree ſheweth hers, and conſequently Chriſts pedegree from* David.

16 Husband.] True and perfect marriage, and continuall living in the ſame, without carnall copulation, Aug. lib. 2. Conſen. Evang. cap. 1.

RHEM. 2 20 Borne in her.] The triple good or perfection of marriage accompliſhed in the parents of Chriſt, to wit, Iſſue, Fidelity, Sacrament, Aug. de Nup. & Conc. lib. 1. cap. 11.

FVLKE 2 S. Auguſtine in the place quoted, by the word Sacrament, meaneth the holy myſtery that is in marriage, of the inſeparable conjunction of Chriſt with his Church, therefore he ſaith Sacramentum, quia nullum divortium; Sacrament, becauſe there was no divorce. Not that Matrimony is a Sacrament of the new Teſtament (ſeeing it was inſtituted in Paradiſe before the fall of man) as Baptiſme and the Lords Supper are called Sacraments, which he ſaith, are feweſt in number, and findeth no more in the Canonicall Scriptures, Epiſt. ad Ianuar. 118. But as he calleth generally every ſacrifice of the old Teſtament, a Sacrament, that is, an holy ſigne of the inviſible ſacrifice, De Civ. Dei lib. 10. cap. 5. And as he calleth that bread, which in that time was given to young novices in Chriſtian religion, before they were baptized, an holy Sacrament, though it was not the body of Chriſt, De pec. mer. & remiſſ. lib. 2. cap. 26. Likewiſe in Pſal. 44. he ſo calleth all the myſteries of Chriſtian doctrine uttered in divers tongues, Sacramenta doctrinæ, Sacraments of doctrine. Sacraments.

RHEM. 3 23 A Virgine.] Our Saviour borne in marriage, but yet of a Virgine, would honour both ſtates: and withall teacheth us againſt Iovinian the old heretike, and theſe of our time, that virginity and the continent life are preferred before marriage that hath carnall copulation. See Hier. adv. Iov. & S. Gr. Naz. Ser. 20. de ſtudio in pauperes, in initio. Virginity preferred.

FVLKE 3 This is a meere ſlander of the true Catholikes, whom you call heretikes of theſe times, that we teach with Iovinian, that virginity and the continent life are not to be preferred before marriage. For we teach even as S. Paul doth 1 Cor. 7. although we teach that marriage is better then ſingle life, where virginitie or chaſtitie are not kept, but counterfeited. And ſo held Epiphan. and the Church in his time, Cont. Apoſt. hær. 61. Likewiſe Hieron. ad Demetr. Virginitie. Marriage. Single life.

RHEM. 23 A Virgin.] As our Lady both a Virgin and a mother, brought forth Chriſt the head corporally: ſo the Church a Virgin and a mother bringeth forth the members of this head ſpiritually, Aug. lib. de Virg. cap. 2.

RHEM. 4 23 And bring forth.] The heretike Iovinian is here refuted, holding that her virginity was corrupted in bringing forth Chriſt, Aug. hær. 28. l. 1. cont. Iulian. c. 2. Our bleſſed Ladies perpetuall virginity.

FVLKE 4 See Ioan. 20. Sect. 2.

RHEM. 5 25 Till. Firſt-borne.] Helvidius of old abuſed theſe words, till, and firſt-borne, againſt the perpetuall virginity of our bleſſed Lady, Hier. cont. Helv. which truth, though not expreſſed in Scripture, yet our adverſaries alſo doe grant, and Helvidius f[illegible] thereof was condemned for an heretike by tradition onely, Aug. hær. 84.

FVLKE 5 You doe moſt impudently alledge Auguſtine, to teſtifie that Helvidius was condemned for an Heretike by tradition onely; for Auguſtine hath no word ſounding to that purpoſe. And Epiphanius (whom he ſuppoſeth to have underſtood Helvidians by Antidicomarianites) laboureth to convince that errour by Scriptures. And S. Hierom. in his booke againſt Helvidius, ſheweth that he was condemned for affirming that (of the Virgine Mary) which is not read in the Scriptures, in theſe words. Sed ut hæc quæ ſcripta ſunt non negamus, ita ea quæ non ſunt ſcripta renuimus. N[illegible] Deum eſſe de Virgine credimus, quia legimus Mariam nupſiſſe poſt partum, non credimus, quia non legimus. But as we deny not theſe things that are written, ſo we reiect thoſe things that are not written. That God was borne of a Virgin we beleeve, becauſe we reade it: that Mary had matrimoniall company with her husband after her delivery, we doe not beleeve, becauſe we reade it not. Behold what a friend S. Hierom was to unwritten tradition? Tradition unwritten.

CHAP. II.

The Gentiles come unto Chriſt with their offrings, and that ſo openly, that the Iewes cannot pretend ignorance. 3 The Iewes with Herod conſpire againſt him. 13 He thereupon fleeth from them into Ægypt. 16 They afterward, ſeeing their ſubtilty prevailed not, imagined to oppreſſe him by open perſecution. 19 But they at length died, and he returneth to the land of Iſrael: all according to the Scriptures.

The holy feaſt of the Epiphany, called Twelfth day, the ſixt of Ianuary, upon which day this is the Goſpel L[illegible] 2.7.

WHen IESVS therefore was * borne in Bethlehem of Iuda in the daies of Herod the King, || behold, there came Sages from the Eaſt to Hieruſalem, 2 Say-

*WHen * Ieſus was borne in Bethlehem, a city of Iury, in the dayes of Herod the King: behold, there came wiſe men from the Eaſt to Hieruſalem,* Luke 2,6.

2 Saying, where is he that is borne King of the Iewes? For we have ſeene his || Starre in the Eaſt, and || are come to adore him.

3 And Herod the King hearing this, was troubled, and all Hieruſalem with him.

4 And aſſembling together all the high Prieſts, and the Scribes of the people, hee || enquired of them where Chriſt ſhould bee borne.

5 But they ſaid to him, In Bethlehem of Iuda. For ſo it is written by the Prophet:

6 And thou Bethlehem the land of Iuda, art not the leaſt among the Princes of Iuda: for out of thee ſhall come forth the Captaine that ſhall rule my people Iſrael.

7 Then Herod ſecretly calling the Sages, learned diligently of them the time of the Starre which appeared to them:

8 And ſending them into Bethlehem, ſaid, Goe and inquire diligently of the Childe: and when you ſhall finde him, make report to me, that I alſo may come and adore him.

9 Who having heard the King, went their way: and behold the Star which they had ſeene in the Eaſt, went before them, untill it came and ſtood over, where the Childe was.

10 And ſeeing the Starre, they reioyced with exceeding great ioy.

11 And entring into the houſe, they found the Childe with MARY his mother, and falling downe || adored him: and opening their || treaſures, they offered to him* || gifts: gold, frankincenſe, and myrrhe. 71.10.

12 And having received an anſwere in ſleepe that they ſhould not returne to Herod, they went backe another way into their countrey. ☞

Goſpel Childermas 13 And after they were departed, behold an Angel of our Lord appeared in ſleepe to Ioſeph, ſaying, Ariſe, and take the Childe and his mother, and flee into Ægypt: and be there untill I ſhall tell thee. For it will come to paſſe that Herod will ſeeke the Childe to deſtroy him.

14 Who aroſe and tooke the Childe and his mother by night, and retired into Ægypt: and he was there untill the death of Herod:

15 That it might be fulfilled which was ſpoken of our Lord by the Prophet, ſaying,  Out of Ægypt have I called my Sonne.* Oſee 11.1.

The Martyrdome of the holy Innocents whoſe holy day is kept the 28. of Decem. 16 Then Herod perceiving that hee was deluded by the Sages, was exceeding angry: and ſending || murdered all the men children that were in Bethlehem, and in all the borders thereof, from two yeeres old and under, according to the time which he had diligently ſought out of the Sages.

17 Then was fulfilled that which was ſpoken by Ieremie the Prophet, ſaying,

2 Saying, Where is he that is borne King of the Iewes? For we have ſeene his Starre in the Eaſt, and are come to worſhip him.

3 When Herod the King had heard theſe things, he was troubled, and all the Citie of Hieruſalem with him.

4 And when he had gathered all the chiefe Prieſts and Scribes of the people together, hee demanded of them where Chriſt ſhould be borne.

5 And they ſaid unto him, At Bethlehem in Iury: For thus it is written by the Prophet,

*6 * And thou Bethlehem* in the land of Iuda, art not the leaſt among the Princes of Iuda: For out of thee ſhall there come a Captaine, that ſhall governe my people Iſrael. Mich. 5. 2. Iohn 7.41.

7 Then Herod, when he had privily called the Wiſe men, enquired of them diligently what time the Starre appeared.

8 And hee ſent them to Bethlehem, and ſaid, Goe, and ſearch diligently for the yong Childe, and when ye have found him, bring me word againe, that I may come and worſhip him alſo.

9 When they had heard the King, they departed, and loe, the Starre which they ſaw in the Eaſt, went before them, till it came and ſtood over the place wherein the young Childe was.

10 When they ſaw the Starre, they reioyced exceedingly with great ioy.

11 And went into the houſe, and they ſaw the young Childe with Mary his mother, and fell downe and worſhipped him: and when they had opened their treaſures, preſented unto him gifts, gold, and frankincenſe, and myrrhe.

12 And after they were warned of God in a dreame that they ſhould not returne to Herod, they departed into their owne countrey another way.

13 When they were departed, behold, the Angel of the Lord appeared to Ioſeph in a dreame, ſaying, Ariſe, and take the yong Childe, and his mother, and flee into Ægypt, and bee thou there till I bring thee word: for it will come to paſſe, that Herod ſhall ſeeke the yong Childe, to deſtroy him.

14 When he aroſe, he tooke the yong Childe, and his mother by night, and departed into Ægypt.

*15 And was there unto the death of Herod, that it might be fulfilled which was ſpoken of the Lord by the Prophet, ſaying, * Out of Ægypt have I called my Sonne.* Oſee 11. 1.

16 Then Herod, when he ſaw that he was mocked of the Wiſe men, was exceeding wroth, and ſent forth, and ſlew all the children that were in Bethlehem, and in all the coaſts thereof, as many as were two yeeres old and under, according to the time, which he had diligently ſearched out of the Wiſe men.

17 Then was fulfilled that which was ſpoken by Ieremie the Prophet, ſaying,

Iere.31.15. 18 A voyce in Rama was heard, crying out and much wailing: Rachel bewailing her children, and would not be comforted, becauſe they are not. ☞

The Goſpel on Twelfth eve. 19 But when Herod was dead, behold an Angel of our Lord appeared in ſleepe to Ioſeph in Ægypt.

20 Saying, Ariſe, and take the childe and his mother, and goe into the land of Iſrael, for they are dead that ſought the life of the childe.

21 Who aroſe, and tooke the childe and his mother, and came into the land of Iſrael.

22 But hearing that Archelaus raigned in Iewry for Herod his father, he feared to goe thither: and being warned in ſleepe, retired into the quarters of Galilee.

23 And comming hee dwelt in a City, called Nazareth: that it might bee fulfilled which was ſaid by the Prophets: That hee ſhall be called a Nazarite.

*18 In Rama was there a voyce heard, * lamentation, weeping, and great mourning, Rachel weeping for her children, and would not be comforted becauſe they were not.* Iere.31.

19 But when Herod was dead, behold, an Angel of the Lord appeareth in a dreame to Ioſeph in Ægypt, 20 Saying, Ariſe, and take the young childe and his mother, and goe into the land of Iſrael: For they are dead, which ſought the yong childes life, 21 And he aroſe, and tooke the young childe and his mother, and came into the land of Iſrael.

22 But when he heard that Archelaus did reigne in Iury in the roome of his father Herod, he was afraid to goe thither: notwithſtanding, after he was warned of God in a dreame, he turned aſide into the parts of Galilee:

23 And when he was come thither, he dwelt in a City, which is called Nazareth, that it might be fulfilled which was ſpoken by the Prophets, He ſhall be called a Nazarite.

RHEM. 1 Pilgrimage. 2 Come to adore.] This comming ſo farre of devotion to viſite and adore Chriſt in the place of his birth, was properly a pilgrimage to his perſon: and warranteth the faithfull in the like kinde of externall worſhip done to holy perſons, places, and things.

FVLKE 1 This comming was by divine inſpiration, and oracle: for the Starre onely could not tell them that Chriſt was borne in Iury. Their comming (ſaith Saint Hierom) was to the confuſion of the Iewes, that they might learne the birth of Chriſt by the Gentiles, Chryſoſtom. Hom. 6. in Matth. Becauſe Chriſt was come to make an end of the old Teſtament, and to call the whole world to adore him, who was to be worſhipped by ſea and land, from the very beginning of his Nativitie, he openeth the doore to the Gentiles; and ſo inſtructeth his domeſticall, that he alſo inviteth ſtrangers; and therefore hath no reſembling to Popiſh Pilgrimage, which is idolatry. Neither doth their example of comming to Chriſt, warrant the faithfull in the like kinde of externall worſhip, done to holy perſons, places, and things. For what faithfull Chriſtian will grant, that whatſoever may bee done to Chriſts owne perſon, their King, the ſame or the like may be done to any of his ſubjects? much leſſe to any places or other dead things. Such ſhameleſſe collections as this, may warrant all Idolatry and Hereſie.

RHEM. 2 4 Inquired of them.] The high prieſts were rightly conſulted in queſtion of their law and religion, and be they never ſo ill, are often forced to ſay the truth by priviledge of their unction: as here and after, they did concerning the true Meſſias.

FVLKE 2 Not the priviledge of their unction forceth the Prieſts ſometimes to ſay the truth, for then they ſhould never lie, becauſe that priviledge remaineth ſtill with them, but the will of God ſometimes expreſſeth the confeſſion of truth, even out of his adverſaries, Chryſoſt. in Matth. Hom. 7. The very enemies of the truth are forced for the truth to reade the Scriptures, and to interpret the propheſie of Chriſt to them that were ignorant, although they would not publiſh the whole truth.

RHEM. 3 Adoration of the bleſſed Sacrament. 11 Adored him.] This body (ſaith S. Chryſoſtome) the Sages adored in the cribbe. Let us at the leaſt imitate them: thou ſeeſt him not now in the cribbe, but on the altar: not a woman holding him, but the Prieſt preſent, and the holy Ghoſt powred out abundantly upon the ſacrifice, Hom. 24. in 1 Cor. Hom. 7. in Mat. de ſanct. Philogonio.

FVLKE 3 Adoration of the bleſſed Sacrament. Chryſoſtome ſpeaketh not of adoration of the Sacrament, but of the reverent comming to the participation of the Lords Table, that they receive it not unworthily, as the words going before and after do plainly declare; Immediately before he ſaith, How much the greater the benefit is which we receive, ſo much the more we ſhall be puniſhed, when we appeare unworthy of it. And after he hath ſet forth the example of the wiſe men, with many amplifications, he concludeth in theſe words: Let us be ſtirred up therefore, and be afraid, and ſhew forth greater piety, that comming neither negligently, nor coldly, we offer our head to a more vehement fire. This I ſay not, that we ſhould not come at all, but that we ſhould not come raſhly. It is reverence of the holy myſteries that he requireth, not worſhipping of the outward elements, as his owne words declare. Thou ſeeſt him, &c. not with the bodily eyes, but with the eyes of faith, as thou ſeeſt the holy Ghoſt powred forth, whoſe nature to the bodily eye is altogether inviſible: yet with the eyes of faith is ſeene, that is, certainely knowne to worke in the divine myſteries, not tranſubſtantion, whereof he never heard or thought, but the ſpirituall feeding of the faithfull, with the body and bloud of Chriſt. Wherefore aſcend (ſaith he) to the gates of heaven, and marke diligently, yea rather not of heaven, but of the heaven of heavens, and then thou ſhalt behold that we ſay: for that which is worthy of higheſt honour, I will ſhew thee in earth: meaning the body of Chriſt, which (ſaith he) thou doeſt not onely ſee, but alſo handle and eat, &c. All which ſpeeches muſt be of neceſſity underſtood of a ſpirituall manner of ſeeing, handling, and eating by faith of the inward man, whereof he ſaith, Wipe thy ſoule therefore from all filthineſſe, and prepare thy minde to the receiving of theſe myſteries.

Likewiſe Hom. 7. in Matth. he ſaith, they are like Herod, that abuſe unworthily the communion [illegible] [illegible] Kings.

FULKE 4 It is a meere fable without ground of antiquity, or any probability, that theſe Philoſophers, were Kings, which being much for the honour of Chriſt (as you ſay) the Evangeliſt would not have omitted. Chryſoſtome ſaith, that the Iewes ought to have perceived, how great dignitie was added unto them, by the Nativity of ſo great a King, which by his triumphant birth, had drawne the King of Perſians unto him, and under whom they might ſubdue all people. But it is againſt reaſon, that the King of Perſia, which was at that time a great Monarch, came to Hieruſalem. And Chryſoſtome ſpeaking of the Magi, never giveth them any honourable title meet for Kings, but ſpeaketh more contemptibly of them then he ſhould; for he ſaith they were ungodly and barbarous men, 1 Cor. Hom.24. Therefore he meaneth not, that the King of Perſia came in perſon, but that by preaching of the wiſe men, when they returned into their countrey, the King of Perſia might bee brought to the knowledge of his Nativity.

[illegible] Kings of Theophylact a more late Writer, ſaith, the Iewes ſhould have rejoyced, that they ſhould have ſuch a King, as ſhould bee worſhipped of the Perſian Kings. Where, if he meane that theſe Magi were Kings, hee goeth againſt all ſtories, which tell that there was but one King of the Perſians at once. And for the number of them, the Author of the unperfect worke, that goeth under the name of Chryſoſtome, being as ancient as he, out of an old ſtory ſaith, they were twelve in number, Philoſophers, and Wiſe men, not Kings. Gaudentius Epiſtol. ad Paulum. Legati univerſarum gentium Magi. Syneſius Hym. 7. Magorum ſapiens ars, ex Stellæ ortu obſtupuit dubia. Coſmas Hieroſ. calleth them Aſtrologians, Hym. 1. Beda in Matth. Magi non propter Magicam artem ſic nominantur, ſed propter aliquam Philoſophiam in qua Balaam ſucceſſores creduntur. But they that fained the names, might faine the number, and the deportation of their bodies from the Eaſt, where they ſlept many hundred yeeres, to Collen. Saving that it is too impudent a fiction, to place them in two Cities at once, for Millain maketh as good claime, and ſheweth as good evidence for their bodies, as Collen. But the monſters of Popiſh reliques paſſe all Ovids Metamorphoſes.

Reliques.

RHEM. 11 Gifts.] Theſe Sages were three, and their gifts three, and each one offered every of the three, to expreſſe our faith of the Trinity. The Gold, to ſignifie that he was a King: the Frankincenſe, that he was God: the Myrrhe, that he was to be buried as man, Auguſt.Ser.1.de Epiph.

RHEM. 15 Out of Ægypt.] This place of the Prophet (and the like in the New Teſtament) here applied to Chriſt, whereas in the letter it might ſeeme otherwiſe, teacheth us how to interpret the Old Teſtament, and that the principall ſenſe is of Chriſt and his Church.

RHEM. 5 16 Murdered.] By this example we learne how great credit we owe to the Church in Canonizing Saints, and celebrating their holy dayes: by whoſe onely warrant, without any word of Scripture, theſe holy Innocents have beene honoured for Martyrs, and their holy day kept ever ſince the Apoſtles time; although they died not voluntarily, nor all perhaps circumciſed, and ſome the children of Pagans, Aug.epiſt.28.Orig.hom.3.in diverſos.

Canonizing of Saints.

FULKE 5 Sect. 2. Neither Origen, nor Auguſtine, nor any ancient Writer affirmeth, that every one of thoſe children was an holy Martyr, neither are you able to prove it. Macrobius writeth, that one of the ſonnes of Herod himſelfe, that was nurſed in thoſe parts, was ſlaine among the reſt. I ſuppoſe it is not neceſſary to beleeve, that Herods childe was a Saint. Neither doe I thinke, that they which inſtituted that feaſt, meant to canonize him for a Saint, or every Pagans ſonne, if any ſuch were amongſt them. As for them that were not circumciſed, becauſe they were not eight dayes old, there is no cauſe, why we ſhould thinke them to be damned, ſeeing the Sacrament of Circumciſion could not be miniſtred before the eighth day. Before which age, it is not to be doubted, but that many thouſands of the Iewes infants died. Where you ſay, their holy day hath beene kept ever ſince the Apoſtles time, you are bold to affirme that you are not able to prove. Auguſtine ſpeaketh but of his owne time. The Homilies in diverſos, which goe under Origens name, (as Eraſmus telleth you) be not all his, but written by ſome Latine Authour, and thoſe that were his, are corrupted by Ruffine. So that you come not clearely to the time of Origen, and though you did, you were ſhort of the Apoſtles time. And the Authour of that Homilie in diverſos, alledgeth the holy Fathers, not the Apoſtles, for commanding the celebration of their memory. And certaine it is, that before the time of Conſtantine the great, that gave peace to the Church, there were not many feſtivall dayes obſerved. Inſomuch, that the feaſts of the Nativity of Chriſt, Eaſter, and Pentecoſt, were not uniformely obſerved in all places, for many yeeres after, as appeareth by Concil. Aurel. 4. cap. 1. Toletan. 10. cap. 1. Brac. 2. cap. 9. And Beda in divers places, De temporis ratione, &c. Finally, what judgement ſoever the Church in old time had in canonizing of Saints, as you terme it, or in defining who were holy, nothing pertain[illegible] to the Popes manner of canonization, which is a curious, coſtly, and theatricall pom[illegible] [illegible] for the ſimplicit[illegible] of the Church of Chriſt, and meet for the bravery of the [illegible] of [illegible]. Of whose profession yet Iohn the Baptist was [illegible] Authour, [illegible] doth any of the old Fathers so call him, [illegible] some say, he was [illegible] life [illegible] whereof you may read more at large in my Treatise [illegible] see [illegible] of Master Charkes booke, [illegible] 2. The Centurists indeed say, that Chrysostome [illegible] [illegible] against the truth of the [illegible], where he maketh Iohn Baptist, Prince of all Monkes, [illegible] Mar. and Hom. 69. in 21. Mat. not content to say, they leade an Angels life, and talke freely with God, but also, [illegible] soule is without all griefes and passion, [illegible] body is such [illegible] before his sin, which is contrary to the doctrine of Originall sinne. Now whether these things were written by Chrysostome advisedly, and truly, I appeale to your owne judgements, which I know to be very corrupt, yet I thinke none of you hath the face to defend all those words, as they lie, without any cavilation, to be true and Catholike doctrine. But hereof I have written more at large in the overthrow of the answere of Master Charkes [illegible] face, pag. 81. and so forth to pag. 94. where also the other slander of the austerity of S. Iohns life, perverted by Protestants, is thorowly handled. Therefore I will briefly touch it in this place. First, all Protestants doe grant the austerity of S. Iohns life, in the place of his abode, in his apparell, and in his diet: yet they doe not place it onely in these. And although they say, the desert had townes and villages not farre off, as the truth is, yet they acknowledge it was a solitary place. They that say his garment was Chamblet, speake not of fine Chamblet, but of a rough and course cloth, made of the great and hard haires of Camels, not of the fine and soft haires, called Camels wooll, whereof our Chamblet and Grograine are made. For his meat, they say, it was Locusts, which are usuall to be eaten in that countrey: and wilde honey, or dew honey, which [illegible] Not thereby making him a common man, or a delicate person, but a man of straight life, [illegible] conversation, whereof in the place before noted, you may see more at large, what the Protestants write thereof.

RHEM. 2 2 Doe penance.] So is the Latine word for word, so readeth all antiquity, namely, S. Cyprian. ep. 52. often, and S. Augustine l. 13. Penance. μετανοεῖν. μετάνοια.

FVLKE 2 When you understand by penance, satisfaction for sinne, doe penance, is not the English for the Latine, Agite pœnitentiam, neither in word, nor sense. And that your interpreter meant no more in Agite pœnitentiam, then repentance, his [illegible] translation of the same Greeke word, [illegible] k. 1. 15. is manifest, where you are content to say, be penitent. [illegible] pœnitentiam [illegible] aliud est, quam [illegible] st ulterius non peccaturum, Lact. de [illegible] c. [illegible] lib 6. c. 13. Perfecta est autem pœnitentia, præterita deflere & futura non admittere, Isid. orig. lib. 6. c. de officijs. Againe, to require satisfaction in them that are to be baptized, is against your owne Popish learning: for many of you hold, that there is free remission of all sinnes without any satisfaction in Baptisme. As for the painefull satisfaction, that S. Cyprian speaketh of, is meant of satisfaction unto the Church, that is offended, to be made by them, that had fallen unto deniall of Christ, or idolatry, through terrour of persecution; by such meanes to give outward testimony of the inward sorrow of their hearts, for so grievous offences, not to make amends to the justice of God for their sinne. Neither was that publike satisfaction required of every one that sinned, but onely of those that had fallen openly and grievously into some hainous crime. And Beza doth justly mislike your translation, because in shew of words, though not in the meaning of the translator, it favoureth that blasphemous doctrine of satisfaction for sinne unto the righteousnesse of God, which was thorowly performed by the sacrifice of Christs death. But that the Greeke word signifieth satisfactorie penance, you send us first to Mat. 11. 21. where our Saviour saith, Tyre and Sidon would have repented in sackecloth and ashes, but never a word of satisfaction: for sitting in sackcloth and ashes, is no satisfaction for sinne, but an outward signe of true sorrow for sinne, and humbling of the soule to desire forgivenesse of sins. Neither is there one word more, Luke 10. 13. whither you send us next. In the third place, 2 Cor. 7. 9. Paul saith, hee is glad that they sorrowed unto repentance, for the sorrow that is after God worketh repentance unto salvation, not to be repented of. What word is here sounding for satisfaction? As for godly sorrow and griefe of minde, to be necessary unto true repentance, we never will deny, but that this sorrow is any satisfaction to Gods justice (as an horrible blasphemy) we utterly abhor to heare of it. But where Scripture [illegible] that S. Basil calleth the Ninevites repentance, with fasting, haire-cloth, and ashes, by [illegible] and we acknowledge as much, [illegible] our Saviour Christ calleth [illegible] [illegible], Mat. 12. 41. FVLKE 5 They that heare us preach, can testifie that you lie: although we exhort not men to doe good onely, or chiefly in hope of reward, nor to avoid sinne onely for feare of hell, but rather in duty and thankfulnesse to God, that God may be glorified by their good conversation, and not dishonoured by their wickednesse, which professe his Name, and despise his Lawes.

RHEM. 6 11 In water.] Iohns Baptisme did not remit sinnes, nor was comparable to Christs Baptisme, as here it is plaine, and in many other places, Hieró. adv. Lucifer. Aug. de Bapt. cont. Donat. lib. 5. cap. 9, 10, 11. Yet it is an article of our Adversaries that the one is no better then the other: which they say not to extoll Iohns, but to derogate from Christs Baptisme, so far, that they make it of no more valure or efficacie for remission of sinnes, and grace, and iustification, [illegible] Iohns: thereby to maintaine their manifold heresies, that Baptisme taketh not away sinnes, that a man is no cleaner nor iuster by the Sacrament of Baptisme then before, that it is not necessary for children unto salvation, but it is enough to be borne of Christian parents, and such like erroneous positions well knowne among the Calvinists.

Iohns baptisme and Christs.

FVLKE 6 Remission of sinnes is proper unto God, as well in Iohns Baptisme, as in the Baptisme of Christ. Iohn here compareth the ministery of man with the authority and power of God. The outward Baptisme with the spirituall Baptisme: whereof the first is done by the hand of man, the other is peculiar onely unto our Saviour Christ. And though some of the ancient Fathers were of another opinion, yet S. Marke saith expresly, that Iohn preached the Baptisme of repentance, unto forgivenesse of sinnes. And who can separate [illegible] of sinnes from true repentance? when the Lord promiseth, at what time soever the sinner repenteth, to pardon his sinne. The seale of Baptisme also, added to the doctrine of repentance, must needs testifie remission of sinnes; namely, the soule to be washed by mercy, as the body is with water. Neither doth this doctrine derogate any thing from the Baptisme of Christ, seeing it is Christ that forgiveth sinnes, and giveth grace in the Baptisme ministred by Iohn, and ministred by his Apostles. For Iohns Baptisme was of Gods institution, and not of Iohns devising. Gaudentius Bishop of Brixia, Resp. ad Paul. Diac. saith, That Christ came to Iohns Baptisme as a sinner to wash away our sinnes in his body, which could not be, if Iohns Baptisme did not wash away sins at all. And touching the manifold heresies that you charge us with, I answere, that God by Batisme assureth his children of the remission of their [illegible], not the act of Baptisme (as your heresie maintaineth) of the worke wrought, taketh away sinne, though a man were baptized being asleepe. To the second I answer, that a true Christian is assured by the Sacrament of Baptisme, of salvation, and therefore to be cleansed and justified from his sinnes, not onely that he committed before Baptisme, but that of frailty he committeth to the end of his life. Which your heresie will not allow, extending the effect and vertue of B[illegible] onely to the time before the Sacrament received, which in them that are baptized being infants, is but short, and for little more then originall sinne. For the third we answere, that the salvation of children dependeth not upon the outward signe, and yet it is necessary, that the children of Christian [illegible] be baptized, if they may attaine to the Sacrament, according to Christs institution. For the contempt, and not the want of Baptisme (where there is no default in the party) is damnable.

FVLKE 7 We abhorre the heresie of them, that hold the Church visible or militant in earth, to consist onely of the good. But the heavenly Ierusalem, which is the mother of us all, the universall Church and body of [illegible], consisteth onely of Gods elect, and members of Christ, ordained to eternall salvation.

RHEM. 8 16 Opened.] To signifie that heaven was shut in the old Law, till Christ by his Passion opened it, and so by his Ascension was the first that entred into it: contrary to the doctrine of the Heretikes, See Heb. 9. 8. and 11. 40.

FVLKE 8 Christ was the first, that ascended in body into heaven, as he was the first fruits of the dead: the [illegible] rose againe to live ever. But seeing the vertue of his death and resurrection were as availeable to the Fathers under the Law, as unto us: to satisfie for their sinnes, and to make them righteous, as it is to [illegible] doubt not, but the soules of the Fathers were in heaven, paradise, or Abrahams bosome, even where the [illegible] of the faithfull departed are now. For the Apostle Heb. 9. 8. meaneth that the way to [illegible] opened by the Priesthood and Sacrifices of the Law, but by the Priesthood and Sacrifice of [illegible] Heb. 11. 40. where he saith, the Fathers received not the promises, it is plaine, he speaketh of the [illegible] of them, which now shall receive untill the end of the world, when they with us, and we [illegible] made perfect together.

ANNOTATIONS CHAP. IIII.

RHEM. 1 1 Deſert.] As Iohn the Baptiſt, ſo our Saviour by going into the deſert, and there living in contemplation even among bruit beaſts, and ſubiect to the aſſaults of the Devill for our ſinnes, giveth a warrant and example to ſuch holy men as have lived in wilderneſſe for penance and contemplation, called Eremites. Eremites.

FVLKE 1 Chriſt went into the wilderneſſe, neither for penance, nor contemplation, but as the text ſaith, that hee might be tempted of the Devill. Which no Chriſtian ought to doe, to offer himſelfe to temptation, therefore his going is no warrant, nor example unto Heremites. Secondly, he went by ſpeciall inſtinct, and leading of the Spirit, which warranteth not men that are led by their owne will and affection. Thirdly, Chriſt remained in the wilderneſſe, for a ſhort ſeaſon. Therefore is no example for them that ſpend their life in the wilderneſſe. Fourthly, he faſted forty dayes, which no man can doe of his owne ſtrength. And yet condemne we not the contemplative life of them, that of old went into the wilderneſſe, ſo the Church had no need of their ſervice in townes and cities, but to ſhew the vanity of your collection. As for your Popiſh Heremites in England, they never came into the wilderneſſe, but oftentimes in the cities and townes: ſomtime, by your leave in the ſtewes. As Stephen Gardiner, if he were living could teſtifie, of one brought before him. Eremites.

RHEM. 2 2 Faſted forty dayes.] Elias and Moſes (ſaith S. Hierome ) by the faſt of forty dayes were filled with the familiarity of God, and our Lord himſelfe in the wilderneſſe faſted as many, to leave unto us the ſolemne dayes of faſt (that is, Lent) Hier.in c.58. Aug.Ser.69. de temp.

FVLKE 2 Montanus the Heretike (as Euſebius teſtifieth out of Apollonius) was the firſt that preſcribed lawes of faſting, Eccl.hiſt.l.5.c.18. And Irenæus ſaith in his Epiſtle to Victor, that as there was in his time variety of obſerving the Feaſt of Chriſts reſurrection, ſo in keeping the Faſt that went before it. For ſome (ſaith he) thought they ought to faſt one day, ſome two dayes, ſome more, ſome forty houres day and night, which diverſity of faſting (he ſaith) commendeth the unity of faith and religion, Euſeb.l.5.c.26. Irenæus therefore diſchargeth your forty dayes Lent of the Apoſtles inſtitution. So doth Dionyſ. Alexand. Ep. ad Ba. who ſheweth, that ſome faſted ſix dayes before Eaſter, ſome two dayes, ſome three, ſome foure, ſome none. Now let us examine, what you bring out of later Writers, among whom I account Ignatius, though his Epiſtle have the name of a more ancient Writer. But S. Hierome in Cat. knew no Epiſtle of his to the Philippians. And the authenticall teſtimony of Irenæus cited by Euſebius, of the diverſity of faſting, manifeſtly declareth, that there was no ſuch Lent, as that Epiſtle nameth, in the dayes of Ignatius, who was an immediate ſucceſſour of the Apoſtles. And albeit there was an ancient Faſt of forty dayes before Eaſter, yet was not that your Popiſh Lent, where fleſh is prohibited, and fiſh permitted, but a time of abſtinence indeed. The teſtimony of S. Hierome, which you expound for Lent, hath never a word of Lent, nor for Lent. For there were other ſolemne dayes of faſting in the Church, then Lent. S. Auguſtine indeed ſaith, that the forty dayes Faſt, hath authority of the example of Moſes, Helias, and Chriſt, and that the conſent of the Church hath eſtabliſhed the ſame forty dayes to be kept before Eaſter, not as a thing neceſſary, but as other rites, which he nameth, not now obſerved of the Papiſts themſelves. And further, the abſtinence from fleſh as uncleane, he condemneth as hereſie. And Hierome againſt Montanus, although he aſcribe the forty dayes Faſt to Apoſtolicall tradition, becauſe it hath no ground in the Scripture, yet he ſheweth plainely, that it was of good will, and not of neceſſity. Whereas the Heretikes had three Lents in the yeere, which they commanded to be kept of neceſſity, but it is one thing (ſaith Hierome) to Lent Faſting.

Luke 12.58. 26 * Be at agreement with thy adverſary betimes, whiles thou art in the way with him: leſt perhaps the adverſary deliver thee to the judge, and the judge deliver thee to the officer, and thou be caſt into ‡ priſon.

27 Amen I ſay to thee, thou ſhalt not goe out frõ thẽce, till thou repay the laſt farthing.

28 You have heard, that it was ſaid to them Exod. 20.14. of old, * Thou ſhalt not commit advoutry.

29 But I ſay to you, that whoſoever ſhall ſee a woman to luſt after her, hath already committed advoutry with her in his heart.

30 And if thy right eye ſcandalize thee, plucke,

*and perſecute you, and ſhall ſay all maner of * evill ſaying againſt you for my ſake.* 1 Pet. 4.14.

12 Rejoyce ye, and be glad, for great is your reward in heaven. For ſo perſecuted they the Prophets which were before you.

*13 * Ye are the ſalt of the earth. But if the ſalt become unſavery, wherein ſhall it be ſalted? It is thenceforth good for nothing, but to be caſt out, and to be troden under foot of men.* Marke 9.50. Luke 14.34.

14 Ye are the light of the world. A city that is ſet on an hill, cannot be hid.

*15 * Neither doe men light a candle, and put it under a buſhell: but on a candleſticke, and it giveth light unto all that are in the houſe.* Marke 4.21. Luke 8.16. and 11.33.

*16 Let your light ſo ſhine before men, * that they may ſee your good workes, and glorifie your Father which is in heaven.* 1 Pet. 2.12.

17 Thinke not that I am come to deſtroy the Law, or the Prophets. I am not come to deſtroy, but to fulfill.

*18 For truly I ſay unto you, * Till heaven and earth paſſe, one jot or one title of the Law ſhall not ſcape, till all be fulfilled.* Luke 17.10.

*19 * Whoſoever therefore ſhall breake one of theſe leaſt Commandements, and ſhall teach men ſo, he ſhall be called the leaſt in the kingdome of heaven: but whoſoever ſhall doe and teach ſo, the ſame ſhall be called great in the kingdome of heaven.* James 2.10.

*20 For I ſay unto you, * Except your righteouſneſſe ſhall exceed the righteouſneſſe of the Scribes and Phariſees, ye ſhall in no caſe enter into the kingdome of heaven.* Luke 11.39.

*21 Ye have heard, that it was ſaid to them of old time, * Thou ſhalt not kill: whoſoever killeth, ſhall be in danger of judgement.* Exod. 20.13. Deut. 5.17.

22 But I ſay unto you, that whoſoever is angry with his brother unadviſedly, ſhall be in danger of judgement: And whoſoever ſhall ſay unto his brother, Racha, ſhall be in danger of a councell: but whoſoever ſhall ſay thou foole, ſhall be in danger of hell fire.

23 Therefore if thou bring thy gift to the Altar, and there remembreſt that thy brother hath ought againſt thee:

24 Leave there thy gift before the Altar, and go thy way, firſt be reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer thy gift.

*25 * Agree with thine adverſary quickly whiles thou art in the way with him: leſt at any time the adverſary deliver thee to the judge, and the judge deliver thee to the miniſter, and then thou be caſt into priſon.* Luke 12.58.

26 Verely I ſay unto thee, thou ſhalt by no meanes come out thence, till thou haſt paid the uttermoſt farthing.

*27 Ye have heard, that it was ſaid unto them of old time, * Thou ſhalt not commit adultery.* Exod. 20.14.

28 But I ſay unto you, that whoſoever looketh on a woman to luſt after her, hath committed adultery with her already in his heart.

*29 * If thy right eye offend thee, plucke it out,* Math. 18.1. and Marke 9.47.

plucke it out, and caſt it from thee; for it is expedient for thee that one of thy limmes periſh, rather then thy whole body be caſt into hell.

31 And if thy right hand ſcandalize thee, cut it off, and caſt it from thee: for it is expedient for thee that one of thy limmes periſh, rather then that thy whole body go into hell.

Deut. 24.1. Mat. 19.7. 32 It was alſo ſaid, * whoſoever ſhall dimiſſe his wife, let him give her a bill of divorcement.

Exod. 20.7. Levit. 19.11. 34 Againe you have heard that it was ſaid to them of old, * Thou ſhalt not commit perjury: but thou ſhalt performe thy oathes to our Lord.

36 Neither ſhalt thou ſweare by thy head, becauſe thou canſt not make one haire white or blacke.

37 Let your talke be, Yea, yea; No, no; and that which is over and above theſe, is of evill.

Exod. 21.24. 38 You have heard that it was ſaid, * An eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth.

39 But I ſay to you || not to reſiſt evill: but if one ſtrike thee on thy right cheeke, turne to him alſo the other:

MARGINALL NOTES.

Rhem. 1 26. Priſon.] This priſon is taken of very ancient Fathers, for Purgatory: namely, S. Cyprian Epiſt. ad Antonianum. 6.

Fvlke 1 This priſon by Carpocrates, a very ancient Heretike, was taken for the bodies, into which the ſoule was removed by the devill, untill it was thorowly purified, Irenæus lib. 1. c. 24. But of Montanus an old Heretike alſo, it was taken for a place in hell, where every ſmall offence is puniſhed in ſoule, although it ſhall be ſaved in the reſurrection, as teſtifieth Tertullian de anima cap. de infer. & An aliquid patiantur, &c. By which it appeareth, that the opinion of Purgatorie is very ancient. Neverthelesse, it is not like that Cyprian, who was farre from theſe Hereſies, in the forenamed Epiſtle, ſpeaketh of Purgatory: for he onely alludeth to the text, and to the 1. Cor. 3. comparing the excellencie of them that ſuffered martyrdome, above them that had fallen in time of perſecution, and were received againe into the Church, either by pardon of their exercises of repentance, that were preſcribed unto them, or after they had thorowly performed them: becauſe Antonianus, to whom he did write, being ſomewhat enclined to the errour of the Novatians, feared leſt by the receiving of them that had fallen, and by remitting thoſe exerciſes of repentance, vertue would be diminiſhed, and martyrdome decay. But Cyprian anſwereth, that Chaſtitie and Virginitie had their due praiſe, though Adulterers upon their repentance were received: For it is one thing (ſaith he) to ſtand at pardon, another thing to come to glory. It is one thing for him that is caſt in priſon, not to come out untill he hath paid the uttermoſt farthing, another thing ſtraightway to receive the reward of faith and vertue, &c. S. Auguſtine expoundeth the place cleerely of hell and eternall paines, Serm. Dom. in monte, lib. 1. So doth S. Hierome in Lament. lib. 1. cap. 1. Euſeb. Emiſſ. Hom. in domi. 6. poſt. pent. Carcer iſte infernus eſt. Theoph. Antioch. In carcerem, id eſt, in Gehennam, and Chromatius in 5. Mat. and many other of the ancient Fathers. And the text is plaine, that he which is out of charity, hath deſerved hell fire: and I ſuppoſe the Papiſts will not ſend him to Purgatory, that dieth out of charity.

Purgatory.

ANNOTATIONS. CHAP. V.

Rhem. 10 For juſtice.] Heretikes and other malefactors ſometime ſuffer willingly and ſtoutly: but they are not bleſſed, becauſe they ſuffer not for iuſtice. For (ſaith S. Auguſtine*) they cannot ſuffer for iuſtice, that have divided the Church: and, where ſound faith or charity is not, there cannot be iuſtice,* Cont. Epiſt. Parm. l. 1. c. 9. Epiſt. 50. Pſal. 34. Conc. 2. And ſo by this Scripture are excluded all falſe Martyrs, as S. Auguſtine often declareth, and S. Cyprian. de Vnit. Eccleſ. num. 8.

False Martyrs.

Rhem. 2 12 Reward.] In Latine and Greeke the word ſignifieth very wages and hire due for workes, and ſo preſuppoſeth a meritorious deed.

Merces. Μισθὸς.

Fvlke 2 The reward is promiſed of the free mercy of God, of whoſe Grace, commeth ſtrength to endure perſecution, and not of the merit of the worke: For whence ſhould I have ſo great merit (ſaith S. Ambroſe) ſeeing mercie is my crowne? ad Virg. Exhort. He crowneth thee (ſaith S. Auguſtine) becauſe he crowneth his giftes, not thy merits, in Pſal. 101.

Merite.

Rhem. 3 15 The light.] This light of the world, and city on a mountaine, and candle upon a candleſticke, ſignifieth the Clergie, and the whole Church ſo built upon Chriſt the mountaine, that it muſt needs be viſible, and cannot be hid nor unknowne. Aug. cont. Fulg. Donat. c. 18. l. 16. cont. Fauſt. c. 17. And therefore, the Church being a candle not under a buſhell, but ſhining to all in the houſe (that is) in the world, what ſhall I ſay more, (ſaith S. Auguſtine*) then that they are blinde which ſhut their eyes againſt the candle that is ſet on the candleſticke?* Tract. 2. in ep. Io.

The Church viſible.

Fvlke 3 When S. Auguſtine ſaith, the Church cannot be hid, he meaneth from them, that will diligently ſeeke her in the Scriptures, where onely the certaine knowledge of her is to be found, de Vnitat. Eccleſ. cap. 2. & 3. & 16. de paſt. Cap. 14. Neverthelesse, he compareth her to the Moone, which is often hid, and ſo may the Church in divers reſpects be hidden, in Pſal. 10. Alſo he acknowledgeth, that the Church may be ſo ſecret, that the members know not one another, de Bapt. cont. Don. lib. 6. cap. 4. And the Catholike Church which is the whole myſticall body of Chriſt, being an Article of faith, is alwayes inviſible, Euſebius Emiſſ. Hom. in Natal. Confeſſ. Sic ſunt Apoſtoli & Epiſcopi ſupra Eccleſiam, ſicuti civitas ſupra montem. Non poſſunt abſcondi, altius ſedent, omnium oculi ad eos reſpiciunt.

Viſibility of the Church.

Rhem. 17 Your light.] The good life of the Clergie edifieth much, and is Gods great honour: whereas the contrary diſhonoureth him.

Rhem. 4 20 One of theſe.] Behold how neceſſary it is, not onely to beleeve, but to keepe all the commandements, even the very leaſt.

Fvlke 4 It is neceſſary for every Chriſtian man, not onely to beleeve, but to endeavour himſelfe to keepe even the leaſt of Gods Commandements: yet is he juſtified, and hath remiſſion of his ſinnes, and tranſgreſſions of Gods Commandements, onely by faith in the mercy of God, Rom. 3. 28. Galat. 2. 16.

Rhem. 5 21 Your Iuſtice.] It is our iuſtice, when it is given us of God, Aug. in Pſ. 30. conc. 1. De Sp. & lit. c. 9. So that Chriſtians are truly iuſt, and have in themſelves inherent iuſtice, by doing Gods Commandements; without which iuſtice of workes no man of age can be ſaved. Aug. de fid. & oper. c. 16. whereby we ſee ſalvation, iuſtice, and iuſtification, not to come of onely faith, or imputation of Chriſts iuſtice.

True inherent juſtice.

Fvlke 5 The vertue of juſtice, whereby we love and keepe Gods Commandements (though no man doth either of both perfectly) is undoubtedly the gift of God, and is inherent in us, that are juſtified by the grace and mercie of God through faith, and of this unperfect juſtice, we are truly, yet unperfectly, declared to be juſt, without the workes whereof, no man of age can be ſaved. But yet for all this, we are juſtified, or made juſt in the ſight of God, by faith onely, through the imputation of Chriſts juſtice, and not by the workes of juſtice, which as S. Auguſtine ſaith, doe follow him that is iuſtified, doe not goe before him that is to be iuſtified, in Pſal. 102. de fid. & oper. cap. 14.

Rom. 4.

Iuſtice inherent.

Rhem. 6 23 Hell of fire.] Here is a plaine difference of ſinnes, ſome mortall, that bring to hell, ſome leſſe, and leſſe puniſhed, called veniall.

Veniall ſinnes.

Fvlke 6 The difference of ſinnes proveth not that ſome are mortall, and ſome veniall: for all of their owne nature are mortall. The reward of ſinne (ſaith the Apoſtle) is death, Rom. 6: 23. and all ſinnes to him that is truly penitent, are pardonable by Gods mercy. He that ſinneth againſt the holy Ghoſt, is never truly penitent, nor his ſinne ever remitted, Heb. 6. Matth. 12.

Veniall ſinnes.

Rhem. 24 Gift at the Altar.] Beware of comming to the holy Altar or any Sacrament out of charity. But be firſt reconciled to thy brother, and much more to the Catholike Church, which is the whole brotherhood of Chriſtian men, Heb. 13. 1.

Rhem. 7 32 Excepting the cauſe of fornication.] This exception is onely to ſhew, that for this one cauſe a man may put

CHAP. VI.

In this ſecond chapter of his ſermon, he controuleth the Phariſees iuſtice (that is, their almes, prayer, and faſting) ſ[illegible] the ſcope and intention thereof, which was vaine glory. 19 Their end alſo was to be rich, but ours muſt not be ſo much as in neceſſaries.

TAke good heed that you doe not your ||juſtice before men, to be ſeen of them: otherwiſe reward you ſhall not have with your Father which is in heaven.

2 Therefore when thou ‡ doeſt an almeſdeed, ſound not a trumpet before thee, as the hypocrites doe in the Synagogues and in the ſtreets, that they may be honoured of men: Amen I ſay to you, they have received their reward:

‡ The firſt worke of juſtice.

3 But when thou doeſt an almeſdeed, let not thy left hand know what thy right hand doth:

4 That thy almeſdeed may be in ſecret, and thy father which ſeeth in ſecret, will || repay thee.

5 And when ye ‡ pray, you ſhall not be as the || hypocrites, that love to ſtand and pray in the Synagogues and corners of the ſtreets, that they may be ſeene of men: Amen I ſay to you, they have received their reward.

‡ The ſecond worke of juſtice.

6 But thou when thou ſhalt pray, enter into thy chamber, and having ſhut the doore, pray to thy Father in ſecret: and thy Father which ſeeth in ſecret, will repay thee.

7 And when you are praying, ſpeake not much, as the heathen. For they thinke that in their || much ſpeaking they may be heard.

8 Be not you therefore like to them, for your Father knoweth what is needfull for you, before you aske him.

Luke 11. 2. The Pater Noſter.

10 Let

TAke heed that ye do not your almes before men, to the intent that ye would be ſeene of them, or elſe yee have no reward of your Father, which is in heaven.

2 *Therefore, * when thou doeſt thine almes, doe not blow a trumpet before thee, as hypocrites doe in the Synagogues, and in the ſtreets, that they might bee eſteemed of men. Verily I ſay unto you, they have their reward.*

Rom. 12. 8.

3 But when thou doeſt almes, let not thy left hand know, what thy right hand doth:

4 That thine almes may be in ſecret: And thy Father which ſeeth in ſecret, himſelfe ſhall reward thee openly.

5 And when thou prayeſt, thou ſhalt not be as the hypocrites are: for they love to pray ſtanding in the Synagogues, and in the corners of the ſtreets, that they may be ſeene of men. Verely I ſay unto you, they have their reward.

6 But when thou prayeſt, enter into thy cloſet, and when thou haſt ſhut thy doore, pray to thy Father which is in ſecret, and thy Father which ſeeth in ſecret, ſhall reward thee openly.

7 But when yee pray babble not much, as the heathen doe. For they thinke that they ſhall be heard for their much babblings ſake.

8 Be not ye therefore like unto them: For your Father knoweth, what things ye have need of, before ye aske of him.

9 *After this maner therefore pray ye: * O our Father which art in heaven, hallowed be thy Name.*

15 But if you will not forgiue men, neither will your Father forgiue you your offences.

16 And when you ‡ faſt, be not as the hypocrites, ſad. For they disfigure their faces, that they may appeare unto men to faſt. Amen I ſay to you, that they haue receiued their reward.

17 But thou when thou doſt faſt, annoint thy head, and waſh thy face:

ANNOTATIONS CHAP. VI.

Rhem. 1 1 Iuſtice.] Hereby it is plaine, that good workes be juſtice, and that [illegible] them, doth juſtice, and is thereby juſt and juſtified, and not by faith only. And which juſtice of a Chriſtian man, our Sauiour here compriſeth in theſe three [illegible] workes; to almes, faſting, and prayers, [illegible] lib. perf. juſt. c. 8. So that to giue almes, is to doe juſtice, and the workes of mercy are juſtice, Aug. in Pſ. 49. v. 5.

Fulke 1 Good workes are the fruits of Iuſtification, proceeding from a juſtified man, and doe juſtifie (as S. Iames ſaith) that is, declare a man to be juſt, and ſo a man is juſtified by workes, and not by faith onely. But they doe not juſtifie a man in the ſight of God, who requireth perfect juſtice, and not imperfect, ſuch as good workes of men are, which follow the juſtified man (as S. Auguſtine ſaith) doe not goe before man to be juſtified, in Pſal. 102. de fid. & oper. cap. 14. Wherefore a man is juſtified in the ſight of God, by imputation of the juſtice of Chriſt, which is moſt perfect, through the onely grace and mercy of God, apprehended by faith onely, Rom. 3. and 4. Gal. 2.

Iuſtification.

Neither is all the juſtice of a Chriſtian man, that is juſtified, compriſed in almes, faſting, and prayers, but in obedience of all Gods Commandements, and yet all that is imperfect, as S. Auguſtine proveth in the place quoted, de perfect. juſt. and ſaith not that all juſtice is compriſed in theſe three workes. This is our juſtice now (ſaith S. Auguſtine) in which we come hungring and thirſting to the perfection and fulneſſe of juſtice, that hereafter we may be filled therewith. And in Pſal. 49. he ſaith, Who are juſt? but they that liue of faith, doing the workes of mercy, for theſe workes are the workes of juſtice. Therefore by his judgement, the life of a juſt man is faith, the fruit, workes of mercy and juſtice.

Rhem. 2 4 Repay.] This repaying and rewarding of good workes in heauen, often mentioned here by our Sauiour, declareth that the ſaid workes are meritorious, and that we may doe them in reſpect of that reward.

Merit.

Fulke 2 This repaying and rewarding, proveth, that the reward is due, but not that the workes are meritorious. The reward is due by Gods promiſe, his meere mercy moved him to promiſe. And we may be encouraged in reſpect of the reward to doe good workes, but not onely nor chiefly in that reſpect, but eſpecially to ſhew our ſelues thankfull, and dutifull, that God may be glorified by our good workes, whoſe glory ought to moue us more, than the reward, if that we loue God as we ought with all our heart.

Rhem. 5 Hypocrites.] Hypocriſie is forbidden in all theſe three workes of juſtice, and not the doing of them openly to the glory of God, and the profit of our neighbour, and our owne ſaluation: for Chriſt before (c. 5.) biddeth, ſaying: Let your light ſo ſhine before men, &c. And in all ſuch workes S. Gregories rule is to be followed, The worke ſo to be in publike, that the intention remaine in ſecret, Hom. 11. in Euang. cap. 10.

Hypocriſie.

Rhem. 3 7 Much ſpeaking.] Long prayer is not forbid, for Chriſt [illegible] *ſpent whole nights in prayer, and he ſaith, * we muſt pray alwayes, and * the Apoſtle exhorteth to pray without intermiſſion, and the holy Church * from the beginning hath had her Canonicall houres of prayer: but idle and voluntary babbling, either of the Heathen to their gods, or of Heretikes, that by long Rhetoricall prayers thinke to perſwade God: whereas the Collects of the Church are moſt briefe and moſt effectuall. See S. Auguſt. ep. 121. c. 8, 9, 10.*

Luc. 6. 12. 18, 1. 21, 36.
1 Theſſ. 5. 17.
Cypr. de orat. Do. in fine.

Fulke 3 Long prayer is not forbidden, but Popiſh prayer in an unknowne tongue is idle babling, as ill, as that which the Heathen uſed. The Scripture teſtifieth (as S. Cyprian ſheweth) that the third houre of the day, the ſixt, and the ninth, were uſed for prayer, by Daniel, the three Children, S. Paul, and S. Peter, and S. Iohn. Which proveth not your Popiſh Canonicall houres, that is a kinde of Service which you call ſo, mumbled up of your Prieſts oftentimes in an houre or leſſe, to be of ſuch antiquitie, or to be diſcharged from much babling or lip-labour. Neither is it meant, that all thoſe three houres were ſpent onely in prayer, but that at thoſe three times of the day, the godly uſed to pray: Namely, in the midſt of the time, from the Sunne riſing to noone, at noone, and in the midſt of the time, betweene noone and the Sunne ſetting; whereas all your Canonicall houres in the Popiſh Church, are diſpatched before noone. Cyprian therefore ſpeaketh not of any ſet formes of prayers, but of times meet for all Chriſtians to pray in, not only at thoſe three houres, but alſo at the Sunne riſing, and at the Sunne ſetting, and in the night ſeaſon, and generally at all houres, as our Sauiour Chriſt teacheth. Not maintaining the hereſie of the Euchites, which did nothing but pray with their lips: but requiring the heart to be alwayes lifted up in affection of prayer, which is by faith to looke for all good things of God onely, and at certaine times alſo, to uſe words of Petition, to admoniſh us of our neceſſities, and to ſtirre up our deſire to be more feruent. What other thing is it (ſaith S. Aug.) to pray without intermiſſion, but without intermiſſion to deſire that bleſſed life, as which is none but that which is eternall, of him who onely can giue it? Therefore let us deſire this alwayes of the Lord God, and let us pray alwayes, ep. 121. c. 9. The praiers of heretikes, whether they be long or ſhort, rude or rhetoricall, pleaſe not God, neither yet of hypocrites. As for the ſhort collects of the Church, are no prejudice to long prayers, where the forme of words is not longer then the ſincere affection of prayer continueth.

Canonicall houres.

Rhem. 4 τὸν ἐπιούσιον. 11 Superſubſtantiall bread.] By this bread ſo called here according to the Latine word and the Greeke, we aske not onely all neceſſary ſuſtenance for the body, but much more all ſpirituall food, namely the bleſſed Sacrament it ſelfe, which is Chriſt the true bread that came from heauen, and the bread of life to us that eat his body,

FVLKE 4 S. Luke [illegible] who ſheweth, that it ſignifieth [illegible] day. Comprehending all things [illegible] for this preſent life [illegible] neceſſity, which in the [illegible] is asked [illegible] of this forme of prayer. Notwithſtanding, upon the ambiguity of the Greeke word, ſome of the Fathers referre this petition to ſpirituall food eſpecially, among which, the Lords Supper (being a [illegible] of our ſpirituall nouriſhment by the body and blood of Chriſt, unto eternall life) is a part, as the preaching of Gods word is another part noted alſo by the Fathers to be deſired in this petition. Aug. de ſer. Dom. in monte [illegible]

RHEM. 5 12 Debts.] Theſe debts doe ſignifie not onely mortall ſinnes, but alſo veniall, as S. Auguſtine often teacheth: and therefore every man, be he never ſo iuſt, yet becauſe he cannot live without veniall ſinnes, may very truly and ought to ſay this prayer, Aug. cont. duas epi. Pelag. l. 1. c. 14. l. 21. de Civ. c. 27.

Veniall ſinnes.

FVLKE 5 S. Auguſtine doth often teach the difference of ſinnes, ſome great, ſome leſſe, but never your Popiſh diſtinction of mortall and veniall, as you doe, and in the places quoted ſpeaketh of ſmall ſinnes, but not of veniall. In the former place he ſaith, a man may be ſine crimine, that is, without heinous offence: but not, ſine peccato, without ſinne. In the latter he nameth peccata parva, ſmall ſins, diſtinguiſhing them from great and heinous wickedneſſe.

RHEM. 6 13 Leade us not] S. Cyprian readeth, Ne patiaris nos induci Suffer us not to be led, as S. Auguſtine noteth l. de bo. perſev. c. 6. and ſo the holy Church underſtandeth it, becauſe God (as S. Iames ſaith) tempteth no man: though for our ſinnes, or for our probation and crowne, he permit us to be tempted. Beware then of Beza's expoſition upon this place, who (according to the Calviniſts opinion) ſaith, that God leadeth them into tentation, into whom himſelfe bringeth in Satan for to fill their hearts: ſo making God the Authour of ſinne.

de expoſ. orat. Iac. 1.

God is not author of evill.

FVLKE 6 Howſoever any man hath read, the text is plaine, Leade us not, whereby is proved, not onely a permiſſion, but an action of God, in them that are led into temptation. Therefore S. Auguſtine after a long diſputation againſt Iulian the Pelagian, bringeth alſo this petition for an argument, to prove, that God as a righteous Iudge, puniſheth ſinne by ſinne, by delivering the reprobate into the power of Satan. Quid eſt autem, &c. And what is that which we ſay daily, Leade us not into temptation, but that we be not delivered unto our owne concupiſcences? Againe, Tradit ergo Deus, &c. Therefore God delivereth into ignominious paſſions, that thoſe things may be done, which are not convenient, but he delivereth conveniently, and the ſame ſinnes are made both puniſhments of ſinnes paſt, and deſerts of puniſhments to come. As he delivered Achab into the lie of the falſe prophets; as he delivered Roboam into falſe counſell. Theſe things he doth by marvellous and unſpeakable meanes, who knoweth how to worke his iudgements, not onely in mens bodies, but alſo in their very hearts, Cont. Iul. lib. 5. cap. 3. Neither doth Beza's expoſition make God Authour of ſinne, but uſing the phraſe of S. Auguſtine, he ſaith, The Lord leadeth into temptation them, whom as a iuſt iudge, not as an author of ſinnes, he permitteth unto the will of Satan, that he may fill their heart, as S. Peter ſpeaketh, Act. 5. And it is a moſt deteſtable ſlander, that Calvin, or they that follow his iudgement, make God the Authour of ſinne.

RHEM. 14 If you forgive.] This point of forgiving our brother when we aske forgiveneſſe of God, our Saviour repeateth againe, as a thing much to be conſidered: and therefore commended in the parable alſo of the ſervant that would not forgive his fellow-ſervant, Matth. 18.

16 Faſt.] He forbiddeth not open and publike Faſts, which in the * Scriptures were commanded and proclaimed to the people of God, and the Ninivites by ſuch faſting appeaſed Gods wrath: but to faſt for vaine glory and praiſe of men, and to be deſirous by the very face and looke to be taken for a faſter, that is forbidden, and that is hypocriſie.

Publike faſts.

RHEM. 7 20 Treaſures in heaven.] Treaſures laid up in heaven, muſt needs ſignifie, not faith onely, but plentifull almes and deeds of mercy and other good workes, which God keeping as in a booke, will reward them accordingly: as of the contrary, the Apoſtle ſaith, He that ſoweth ſparingly, ſhall reape ſparingly, 2 Cor. 9.

Meritorious workes.

FVLKE 7 Treaſures laid up in heaven in this place, properly ſignifie, neither faith nor workes, much leſſe meritorious workes, but rather the reward of the heavenly life, which God of his mercy giveth to them that beleeve, according to their workes, rewarding their plentifull ſowing, with plentifull reaping. Chryſoſt. Hom. 21. in Mat. He ſheweth both that this earthly treaſure lieth open to hurt: and alſo, that the heavenly treaſure is cleare from all ſpot, and moſt ſafe either in reſpect of the place, or of the excellencie of thoſe rewards.

Merits.

RHEM. 8 24 Two Maſters.] Two religions, God and Baal, Chriſt and Calvin, Maſſe and Communion, the Catholike Church and hereticall Conventicles. Let them marke this leſſon of our Saviour, that thinke they may ſerve all maſters, all times, all religions. Againe theſe two maſters doe ſignifie God and the world, the fleſh and the ſpirit, iuſtice and ſinne.

FVLKE 8 No Chriſtian man ſerveth Calvin as his Maſter, but God onely. Neverthelesſe, ſo long as Calvin teacheth that which he learned of Chriſt, Calvin may be imbraced as a ſervant of Chriſt, neither did he ever deſire to be taken otherwiſe. But when the Pope commandeth things contrary to God, as worſhipping of Images, Communion under one kinde, and ſuch like, and will be honoured as a moſt holy Lord that cannot erre, it may be ſaid moſt truly, No man can ſerve God and the Pope.

FULKE 5 Theſe men ſay, Lord, Lord, without a true and a lively faith. For he that in true faith ſhall invocate or call upon the Lord, ſhall be ſaved, Rom. 10. We confeſſe, it is not enough, to beleeve, neither doth Luther teach, that onely infidelity is ſinne, but that it is the root of all ſinne. Neither doe we hold, that by the faith of working miracles, which apprehendeth onely the power of God, any man ſhall be iuſtified, but by faith in Gods promiſes, which laieth hold of the mercy which God offereth. Finally, he that is iuſtified by faith onely, doth the will of God his heavenly Father, though not perfectly, yet gladly and cheerefully. God be thanked, we doe not ſet little by good workes, which we acknowledge to be the neceſſary effects of iuſtifying faith, though we renounce our owne iuſtice, that we may be partakers of the iuſtice of God in Chriſt, *Philip.*3.9.

ANNOTATIONS CHAP. VIII.

Rhem. 1 4 Prieſt.] The Prieſts of the old Law (ſaith S. Chryſoſtome) had authority and priviledge onely to diſcerne who were healed of leproſie, and to denounce the ſame to the people: but the Prieſts of the new law have power to purge in very deed the filth of the ſoule. Therefore whoſoever deſpiſeth them, is more worthy to be puniſhed then the rebell Dathan, and his complices, S. Chryſoſt. lib. 3. de Sacerd. Prieſts forgive ſinnes.

Fvlke 1 The words of Chryſoſtome are theſe. The Prieſts of the Iewes, had authority to put away leproſie of the body, or rather not to put it away at all, but onely to diſcerne them that were rid of it, and thou knoweſt, how greatly their prieſthood was to be eſteemed. But theſe have received authority, not to diſcerne the leproſie of the body, being rid away but altoget[illegible] the [illegible] of the ſoule. Th[illegible] them are more wicked then Dathan, and [illegible]. Fvlke 2 Tranſubſtantiation. The body and blood of Chriſt, is to be received with all humility and reverence: yet not imagining tranſubſtantiation. For that materiall part of the Sacrament, which entreth into the mouth, Origen ſaith, it goeth the way of all meats, in Matth. 15. Chryſoſtomes Liturgie was made long after Chryſoſtomes time, as appeareth by a prayer for the Emperour Alexius, in whoſe dayes it was made. Auguſtine ep. 118. uſeth the example of the Centurion, to ſhew that neither they that receive the Sacrament dayly, nor they that receive it ſeldome, diſhonour the body of Chriſt, having either of them their ſeverall reaſons, as Zacheus, which received our Saviour Chriſt into his houſe ioyfully, and the Centurion, who acknowledged, that he was unworthy to receive him under his roofe.

Rhem. 3 14 His wives mother.] Of Peter ſpecially among the reſt it is evident that he had a wife, but (as S. Hierome ſaith) after they were called to be Apoſtles, they had no more carnall company with their wives, as he proveth there by the very words of our Saviour, *He that hath left wife, &c. And ſo in the Latine Church hath been alwayes uſed, that married men may be and are dayly made Prieſts, either after the death of the wife, or with her conſent to live in perpetuall continencie. And if the Greekes have Prieſts, that doe otherwiſe, S. Epiphanius a Greeke Doctor telleth them that they doe it againſt the ancient Canons, and * Paphnutius plainely ſignifieth the ſame in the firſt Councell of Nice. But this is moſt plaine, that there was never either in the Greek Church or the Latine, autheticall example of any that married after holy Orders. Prieſts [illegible] Lib. 1. adv. [illegible] cap. 4. Math. 19. Epiph. hær[illegible] * [illegible] cap. 22. Socrat. l. 1. c. 8.

Fvlke 3 Marriage of Prieſts. S. Hierome againſt Iovinian, hath many feeble arguments, among which this is one, that the Apoſtles had no carnall copulation with their wives, becauſe Chriſt ſaith, He that hath left wife, &c. Mat. 19. 29. For our Saviour Chriſt ſpeaketh of none other forſaking of wives, then is neceſſary for all married men, to leave their wives as well as their parents, children, brethren, houſes, lands, namely in carnall affection, or worldly love, not in lawfull uſe. And Clement Alexandrinus much ancienter then Hierome, and neerer the Apoſtles times, ſaith, that Peter and Philip begat ſonnes, and Philip gave his daughters in marriage, Stromat lib. 3. Euſeb. Emiſ. in nat. Ioa. Ev. iſte (Petrus) uxorem & prolem habuit. And by whom had Peter his daughter Petronilla? of whom the Popiſh Legends write much holineſſe, if not by companying with his owne wife, and that ſince he was an Apoſtle, and had the ſurname of Peter; which her age alſo doth argue: for ſhe was ſo yong in the time of the perſecution of Domitian the Emperour, that Flaccus the County, deſired to have her in marriage, whereas if ſhe had beene borne before Peters calling to the Apoſtleſhip, ſhe ſhould have beene almoſt threeſcore yeeres old at that time. In the Romiſh Church where Antichriſt was to have his ſeat, the myſterie of iniquity begin to worke, and ſhew it ſelfe in prohibition of marriage ſomewhat timely: yet are you not able to prove, that none but ſuch as profeſſed continencie, were in the Latine Church ever admitted to the miniſtery. Tertullian was a married man in the miniſtery, without any ſuch profeſſion of continencie, as appeareth by his bookes written to his wife. Where, in the firſt hee exhorteth her, after his departure, not to marry againe. In the ſecond, that if the infirmity of her body was ſuch, as ſhee muſt needes marry, that ſhee marry not an Infidell. This exhortation had beene needleſſe, if ſhee had already profeſſed continencie: neither needed Tertullian to have ſet before her the example of many other, that in marriage, by conſent, tooke away the debt of marriage, to perſwade her, that ſhe might be able, if ſhe would endeavour, to live unmarried. And if he, before he entred into Eccleſiaſticall order, with her conſent, had promiſed perpetuall continencie; ſhee ſhould have had experience in her ſelfe in her younger time, how able ſhe was to live without the uſe of an husband. But Epiphanius (you ſay) telleth the Greeke Prieſts, that they doe againſt the ancient Canons, which keepe company with their wives: yet doth he confeſſe immediately, that thoſe Canons were not kept in his time. But where you adde, that Paphnutius in the firſt Councell of Nice, doth plainely ſignifie the ſame, it is falſe. For Socrates thus writeth of the matter, [illegible], &c. It pleaſed the Biſhops to bring in a new law into the Church, that thoſe that were dedicated to the holy miniſtery, namely, Biſhops, Prieſts, or Elders and Deacons, ſhould not ſleepe with their wives which they had married when they were Lay-men: and after they had conſulted of this matter, Paphnutius ſtood up in the midſt of the company of Biſhops, and cryed out aloud, that they ſhould not lay ſo heavy yoke upon the men dedicated to the holy miniſtery, ſaying, that the bed was honourable, and the Matrimony unpolluted, leſt with too much preciſeneſſe, they ſhould rather hurt the Church: for all men could not beare the exerciſe of continencie, and peradventure chaſtitie ſhould not be kept of every ones wife: and he called the company with a mans lawfull wife, chaſtity. That it was ſufficient, that they which had obtained Clergie before marriage, ſhould not come to marriage any more, according to the ancient tradition of the Church, but that no man ſhould be ſeparated from her, whom he had married being a Lay-man. The very ſame in ſubſtance reporteth Sozomen. And Clemens affirmeth, that the Apoſtle alloweth the husband of one wife, whether hee bee Prieſt, or Deacon, or Lay-man, uſing Matrimony without reprehenſion, Stromat. lib. 3. But there was never any example autheticall (you ſay) of any that married after holy Orders. Of examples, I ſuppoſe you doubt not but that there were many, which tooke wives after they were made Biſhops, Prieſts, and Deacons, becauſe in the later Councels, there be ſo many Canons to puniſh them that ſo married, and to prohibite them to marry. And certaine it is by ſtories, and other monuments of antiquity, that in England Prieſts did marry commonly, even after the decree made againſt it, by Lanfrancus Archbiſhop of Canterbury in a Synode holden at Winchester, Anno Dom. 1076. For Gerardus Archbiſhop of Yorke, writing to Anſelmus Archbiſhop of Canterbury, certifieth him, that thoſe whom he invited to take Orders, would not conſent in their ordination, to profeſſe chaſtity, that is, not to marry, as the Decree of Lanfrancus required. But theſe examples, you will ſay, were not autheticall, becauſe they were againſt the ancient tradition of the Church, alledged even by Paphnutius, and againſt the Canons of ſo many Councels. Whereunto I reply, that ſeeing they were to bee warranted by the word of God, no tradition or decree of men, can make that unlawfull, which by Gods word is not onely at liberty, but alſo commanded, namely, that to avoid fornication let every man have his wife, and if they cannot containe let them marry, and of virginity, and continencie, there is no commandement of the Lord, but every man may uſe the liberty that God hath given, yea though hee hath the gift of continencie. And therefore therefore S. Paul being unmarried, affirmeth that it was lawfull for him to leade about with him a ſiſter to wife, as the reſt of the Apoſtles did, even the Lords brethren and Cephas: Ergo it was lawfull for him to have married, being an Apoſtle. The liberty therefore given by God to all, and the commandement of God to them which have not the gift of continencie) to marry, doth make the examples of them that married after holy orders taken, in the account of God, and all that be godly, to be authenticall. And although Paphnutius accounteth the tradition of the Church ancient, by which they were prohibited to marry, that were not married before they were ordained: yet it appeareth by Tertullian, that it was not ſo ancient as his time. For in his booke of Monogamie againſt ſecond marriages, written when he was an Heretike, he derideth the Catholike Biſhops, which thought it lawfull for them to marry againe, when their firſt wife was dead, perverting the meaning of S. Pauls words, which ſaith, A Biſhop muſt be the huſband of one wife, to the maintenance of his hereſie, as the Papiſts doe: He ſaith the holy Ghoſt foreſaw there ſhould come ſome that would affirme all things to be lawfull for Biſhops: For how many are there among you (ſaith he) that governe the Church, which have married the ſecond time; inſulting againſt the Apoſtle, and not bluſhing, when theſe words are read under them. This place ſheweth, that that which was thought unlawfull by the Heretike, was counted lawfull and authenticall by the Catholike Church. Long after Tertullians time, was the Ancyran Councell, where the tenth Canon decreeth thus: That whoſoever being ordained Deacons at the time of their ordination, doe proteſt and ſay, that they muſt marry, becauſe they cannot remaine unmarried: if they marry afterward, let them continue in the miniſtery becauſe the Biſhop hath granted them ſo to doe. This Canon teſtifieth of many authenticall examples of them that married, and might marry, after holy orders taken. Moreover, in the dayes of Iulian the Apoſtata we reade, that Baſilius a Prieſt or Eldee of the Church of Ancyra, and Eupſychius of Ceſarea of Cappadocia, which had lately taken to wife a Gentlewoman, and was but even as a Bridegroome, ended their lives by martyrdome, Sozom. lib.5.c.11.& hiſt.Tripartit.lib.6.cap.14. And many hundred yeeres after this, Balſamon maketh mention of a conſtitution of Leo the Emperour, by which it appeareth that there was a cuſtome in his time, that thoſe which had taken holy orders might marry lawfull wives, within two yeeres after their ordination, Balſ. in Can. 10. Conc. Ancyr. So long the authority of Gods word in the Greeke Church, prevailed againſt the Decrees of men, and in the Church of England much longer, untill within theſe foure or five hundred yeeres at the moſt.

MARGINALL NOTES.

RHEM. 1 15 Then they ſhall.] Chriſt ſignifieth that the Church ſhall uſe faſting dayes after his Aſcenſion. Epiphan. in Comp. fid. Cath. Aug. Epiſt. 80.

FVLKE 1 Neither Epiphanius nor Auguſtine, ſpeake of Popiſh faſting dayes, which conſiſt in abſtinence from fleſh: But Epiphanius ſaith, the Apoſtles appointed the Wedneſday and Friday, to be faſting dayes, (how truly, let the Papiſts themſelves judge) and that on thoſe dayes, the faſting was appointed untill the ninth houre of the day, which is three houres before night. Auguſtine Epi. 86. acknowledgeth faſting, but no certaine faſting dayes, otherwiſe then the cuſtome of every Church required, according to the anſwere of S. Ambroſe made unto him concerning faſting on Saturday, which was obſerved at Rome, but not at Millaine. Popiſh faſting dayes.

RHEM. 2 22 Thy faith hath.] Loe her devotion to the hemme of his garment, was not ſuperſtition, but a token of greater faith: ſo is the devout touching of holy reliques.

FVLKE 2 She had no devotion to the hemme of his garment, but becauſe ſhe was kept off by the preaſe, ſo that ſhee could not come neere to deſire his aid, as others did, ſhe ſaid within her ſelfe; If I ſhall but onely touch the hemme of his garment, &c. But the Popiſh touching of reliques, which neither have any vertue in them, nor any promiſe of God annexed to the touching of them, for health either of body or ſoule, cannot be excuſed from ſuperſtition. And this is a very blunt compariſon of reliques of dead men, with the preſence of the Sonne of God: who was willing to ſhew his divine power by his word onely, or by outward ſignes of touching with his hand, or touching his garment, or anointing with oyle, or making of clay with his ſpettle, and ſuch like; as it pleaſed him in healing mens bodies. By what word of God are we certified that he will doe the like, yea grant ſpirituall holineſſe, by touching of reliques? If we have not Gods word, what faith can we have, but a ſuperſtitious credulity? Superſtitious touching of reliques. Mat.14.36. mar.6.13. Iohn 6.9.

RHEM. 3 34 In the Prince.] In like manner ſay the Heretikes, calling all miracles done in the Catholike Church, the lying ſignes of Antichriſt.

FVLKE 3 The miracles ſaid to be done in the Popiſh Church, are counterfeit fables for the moſt part, rather then illuſions of devils, as hath beene proved by many experiences, and yet are they falſe or lying ſignes of Antichriſt. The divine power of Chriſt, was manifeſt in caſting out of devils. Popiſh miracles.

ANNOTATIONS CHAP. XI.

RHEM. 4 3 He blaſphemeth.] When the Iewes heard Chriſt remit ſinnes, they charged him with blaſphemy, as Heretikes now charge his Prieſts of the new Teſtament, for that they remit ſinnes: to whom he ſaid, Whoſe ſinnes you ſhall forgive, they are forgiven, &c. *Ioh.*20.

FVLKE 4 The Miniſters of the new Teſtament, have authority to forgive ſinnes, and to retaine them, by declaring herein the will of God, as his ambaſſadours and meſſengers. The Iewes charged our Saviour Chriſt with blaſphemy, becauſe they acknowledged not his divinity. For the Prieſts in the Law, were alſo Miniſters, not authors of forgiveneſſe of ſinnes, whereof they were not ignorant. Remiſſion of ſinnes.

RHEM. 5 5 Whether is eaſier.] The faithleſſe Iewes thought (as Heretikes now adayes) that to forgive ſinnes was ſo proper to God, that it could not be communicated unto man: but Chriſt ſheweth that as to worke miracles is otherwiſe proper to God onely, and yet this power is communicated to men, ſo alſo to forgive ſinnes. Men have power to forgive ſinnes.

FVLKE 5 Chryſoſtome ſaith, He did not refute their opinion which ſaid it was proper onely to God to forgive ſinnes, but did approve it. For if he had not beene equall unto his Father, he would have ſaid: Surely you iudge rightly, I am farre from that ſo great power, but now he ſaith no ſuch thing, but contrariwiſe affirmeth it both by word and ſigne. So becauſe it is wont to be unpleaſant to the hearers, that any man ſhould ſpeake openly of himſelfe: by the words of other men, and by a ſigne or miracle, he ſheweth that he is God equall to his Father, And ſo forth in *Mat. Ho.*30. S. Hilarie is of the ſame judgement, ſaying, Movet Scribas, &c. It moveth the Scribes, that ſin ſhould be forgiven by a man: for they beheld in Ieſu Chriſt onely a man, and that to be forgiven by him, which the Law could not releaſe. For faith onely iuſtifieth. Afterward the Lord looketh into their murmuring, and ſaith: that it is eaſie for the Sonne of man on earth to forgive ſinnes. For it is true, no man can remit ſinnes but God onely, therefore he which remitteth ſinnes is God, becauſe no man forgiveth ſinnes but God, In Mat. Can. 8. S. Ambroſe is worthy to be heard in the ſame caſe, Chriſt forgave ſinnes as God. Matth.14.30. Fides enim ſola iuſtificat.

FVLKE 7 Let [illegible] upon theſe words of the text. Concluſa ſunt omnia ſuo ordine, &c. All things are concluded in their [illegible], and now the feare of derogation ceaſing, honour is rendred to God, becauſe he hath given ſo great power to men, but this was due onely to Chriſt, it was familiar to him onely, to doe theſe things, by the communion or participation of his Fathers ſubſtance. Therefore this is not to be marvelled, that he can doe theſe things, (for what ſhall not God be beleeved to be able to doe?) or elſe the praiſe ſhould have beene of one man, not of many, but hereof is the cauſe of the honour given to God, becauſe power is given to men, by this way through his word, both of remiſſion of ſinnes, and of reſurrection of the body, and of returning into heaven. In theſe words S. Hilarie ſheweth what is proper to Chriſt as God, and what is granted to his miniſters, to preach and declare by his word. That which is proper to the Divinity, cannot be communicated to any creature. Such is the abſolute power to forgive ſinnes, which are committed againſt the Law of God, and therefore proper onely to God. The authority, which God hath given to men, to aſſure the faithfull penitent, of remiſſion of ſinnes, nothing derogateth from the glory of God, but greatly ſetteth forth the glory of his mercy. Remiſſion of ſinnes.

RHEM. 8 8 To men.] Not onely Chriſt as he was man, had power to forgive ſins, but by him and from him the Apoſtles, and conſequently Prieſts, Mat.28. All power is given me, Mat.18. Whatſoever you ſhall looſe in earth, ſhall be looſed in heaven, Ioan.20. Whoſe ſinnes you ſhall forgive, they are forgiven.

FVLKE 8 Chriſt gave power to his Apoſtles, and the miniſters of the Church to forgive ſinnes, not abſolutely and properly, as God forgiveth, but to be witneſſes and miniſters of Gods forgiveneſſe: whereof S. Ambroſe ſaith, Quamvis enim magnum ſit, &c. Although it be a great matter to forgive ſinnes unto men, (for who can forgive ſinnes but onely God, who alſo forgiveth by them, to whom he hath given the power of forgiving) yet it is a much more divine thing to give reſurrection to the bodies. Thus you ſee this Fathers judgement, that man when he forgiveth ſinnes, by power granted of God, doth not forgive properly, but God, to whom it is proper to forgive ſinnes, forgiveth by man. Remiſſion of ſinnes.

RHEM. 13 Not ſacrifice.] Theſe are the words of the prophet, who ſpake them then even when ſacrifices were offered by Gods Commandement: ſo that it maketh not againſt ſacrifice, but he ſaith that ſacrifice onely without mercy and charity, and generally with mortall ſinne, is not acceptable. The Iewes offered their ſacrifices duly, but in the meane time they had no pity nor mercy on their brethren: that is it which God miſliketh. Externall Sacrifice.

14 Faſt often.] By the often faſting of his Diſciples, we may eaſily gather that he appointed them a preſcript maner of faſting: as it is certaine he taught them a forme of prayer, Luke 5. and 11. Faſting.

17 New wine.] By this new wine, he doth plainly here ſignifie faſting and the ſtraiter kinde of life: by the old bottles, them that cannot away therewith.

19 Twelve yeeres.] This woman a Gentile had her diſeaſe twelve yeeres, and the Governours daughter a Iew (which is here raiſed to life) was twelve yeeres old, Luc.8. Marke then the allegory hereof in the Iewes and Gentiles: As that woman fell ſicke when the wench was borne, ſo the Gentiles went their owne wayes into idolatry, when the Iewes in Abraham beleeved. Againe, as Chriſt here went to raiſe the wench, and by the way the woman was firſt healed, and then the wench revived: ſo Chriſt came to the Iewes, but the Gentiles beleeved firſt and were ſaved, and in the end the Iewes ſhall beleeve alſo, Hierom. in Mat.

RHEM. 9 21 Touch onely.] Not only Chriſts words, but his garment and touch thereof or any thing belonging to him might doe and did miracles, force proceeding from his holy perſon to them. Yea this woman returning home ſet up an Image of Chriſt, for memory of this benefit, and the hemme of the ſame Image did alſo miracles. This Image Iulian the Apoſtata threw downe, and ſet up his owne in ſtead thereof, which was immediatly deſtroyed by fire from heaven. But the Image of Chriſt broken in pieces by the Heathen, the Chriſtians afterward gathering the pieces together, placed it in the Church: where it was (as Sozomenus writeth) unto this time. Reliques and Images. Euſeb.l.7.c.14. hiſt. Li.5.c.20.

FVLKE 9 Chriſt by his word, and without his word, by outward ſignes, and without any at all, did onely worke miracles, and the force or vertue did not proceed into his garment, but immediatly from him ſelfe: Therefore Chriſt ſaid not, there is vertue proceeded from my garment, but there is vertue proceeded from me, Luke 8. 46. There was no vertue in his garments, when the ſouldiers parted them among them: nor while he ware them, for the people that thronged him, received no benefit by them, but ſhe onely, and they that touched him by faith. Now concerning the Image that this woman is ſaid to have ſet up: Euſebius reporteth the ſtory, not of his owne knowledge, but of hearesay. That in Cæſarea Philippi, where this woman dwelled, over againſt her doore, upon an high ſtone, was a brazen Image of a woman kneeling, and holding up her hands, as though ſhe made an humble ſuit: over againſt which there was another brazen Image of a man, which was ſaid to be of Chriſt, reaching his hand to the woman, at whoſe feet upon the ſame pillar, a ſtrange kinde of herbe did ſpring, which when it came up to the hemme of his brazen garment, it was a medicine for all diſeaſes. This Image Euſebius confeſſeth to have remained unto his time, as was teſtified by them that travelled to that city, and ſaw it. But of the miraculous herbe, how true it is, he ſaith not. Now what his judgement was of them that did ſet up this Image, he declareth in theſe words: Καὶ θαυμαστὸν οὐδὲν, &c. And it is not to be marvelled, that thoſe of the Gentiles, which received benefits of our Saviour of old time, did theſe things, ſeeing we have ſeene the images of his Apoſtles Paul and Peter, yea and of Chriſt himſelfe preſerved, being painted Reliques. ANNOTATIONS CHAP. X.

RHEM. 1 Power.] Miracles were ſo neceſſary to the confirmation of their doctrine beginning then to be preached, that not onely Chriſt himſelfe did miracles but alſo he gave to his Apoſtles power to doe them.

RHEM. 1 2 Firſt Simon.] Peter the firſt, not in calling, but in preeminence, for as (S. Ambroſe ſaith in 2 Cor. 12.) Andrew firſt followed our Saviour before Peter: and yet the Primacie Andrew received not, but Peter: which preeminence of S. Peter above the other Apoſtles is ſo plainly ſignified in this word Firſt, by the iudgement even of Heretikes, that Beza, notwithſtanding he confeſſeth the conſent of all copies both Latine and Greeke, yet is not aſhamed to ſay that he ſuſpecteth that this word was thruſt into the text by ſome favourer of Peters Primacie: whereby we have alſo that they care no more for the Greeke then for the Latine, when it maketh againſt them: but at their pleaſure ſay [illegible] corrupted.

Peters Primacie. Beza in Annot. novi Teſt. 1556.

FULKE 1 S. Ambroſe acknowledgeth the Primacie, but not the preeminence of Peter above the other Apoſtles. For in the place quoted, he ſaith, that Paul was not inferiour to the other Apoſtles that were before him (among which Peter was one) in dignity, but in time: And in his booke De Incarn. Dom. c. 4. he acknowledgeth the Primacie of Peter. Primatum confeſſionis utiq; non honoris, &c. The Primacie of confeſſion verely not of honour or preeminence, the primacie of faith, not of degree. Likewiſe De Spir. Sancl. l. 2. c. 2. he ſaith, Paul was not inferiour to Peter. And In Ep. ad Galat. he declareth, that Paul had the Primacie over the Gentiles, as Peter over the Iewes. The reſt that you ſay of Beza is an impudent ſlander, anſwered in the confutation of your Preface, Sect. 49.

RHEM. 9 Doe not poſſeſſe.] Preachers may not carefully ſeeke after the ſuperfluities of this life, or any thing which may be an impediment to their function. And as for neceſſaries, they deſerve their temporall living at their hands for whom they labour ſpiritually.

RHEM. 12 Peace to this houſe.] As Chriſt himſelfe uſed theſe words as their bleſſing often, Peace be to you, *ſo here he biddeth his Apoſtles ſay the like to the houſe where they come: And ſo it hath beene alwayes a moſt godly uſe of Biſhops * to give their bleſſing where they come: which bleſſing muſt needs be of great grace and profit, when the worthy perſons (as here we reade) might take good thereof: and when it is never loſt, but returneth to the giver, when the other party is not worthy of it. Among other ſpirituall benefits it taketh away veniall ſinnes,* Amb. in 9. Luc.

* Aug. de civit. li. 22. c. 8. Leo Imp. in vit. S. Chryſ. Socrat. l. 6. c. 14.

FULKE 2 We doubt not, but the bleſſing or godly prayers, as of the Apoſtles, ſo alſo of godly Biſhops, and other Miniſters of the Church, is greatly to be eſteemed: but the Popiſh Biſhops bleſſing with his fingers, is not worth a ſtraw, neither doth any ancient Father commend ſuch a bleſſing. S. Auguſtine ſaith, that he and others departing from Aurelius a godly Biſhop, received benediction of him, that is, a godly and Chriſtian farewell. In Socra. lib. 6. cap. 14. is no mention of Biſhops bleſſing, but rather of banning. For Socrates reporteth, yet doubting whether it was true, that Epiphanius and Chryſoſtome being fallen out, Chryſoſtome ſhould ſay, I hope thou ſhalt never come to thy countrey: and Epiphanius anſwered, I hope thou ſhalt not die Biſhop? But whether they ſaid ſo or no, Epiphanius died in the way homeward, and Chryſoſtome was depoſed from his Biſhopricke. I ſuppoſe this ſtorie maketh little for the Biſhops bleſſing. But it taketh away veniall ſinnes (you ſay) by authority of Ambroſe, in Luc. 9. But in truth, there is never a word of the Biſhop, or of his bleſſing, or of veniall ſinnes, but of the benefit which men receive by entertaining of Preachers of the Goſpel. Ut non ſolum pacem [illegible] ſpiritibus, verum etiam ſi qua eos terrenæ [illegible] delicta levitatis, roboris Apoſtolicæ prædicati [illegible] veſtigiis, auferantur. We do not only give peace to them that entertaine us, but alſo if any affection of earthly lightneſſe [illegible] them, after the ſteps of the Apoſtolike preaching be received, they are taken away. The meaning is, they receive great benefit both by the prayers and by the doctrine of the Preachers, if they entertaine it as well as their perſons. RHEM. 4 25 How much more.] No marvell therefore if Heretikes call Chriſts Vicar Antichriſt, when their forefathers the faithleſſe Iewes called Chriſt himſelfe Beelzebub.

FULKE 4 He that calleth himſelfe the Vicar of Chriſt, and putteth himſelfe in the ſtead of Chriſt, by the very ſignification of the word, is Antichriſt. So doth the Pope: having no warrant out of the word of God, to be ſo much as a member of Chriſt. Becauſe his doctrine, decrees and life, are contrary to Chriſt, as in the booke called Antitheſis Chriſti & papæ, and many other godly Treatiſes, is manifeſtly declared.

Confeſſion of Chriſt and his truth. Act. 9.

RHEM. 5 34 Not peace but ſword.] Chriſt came to breake the peace of worldlings and ſinners: as when the ſon beleeveth in him, and the father doth not: the wife is a Catholike, and the husband is not. For to agree together in infidelity, hereſie, or any other ſin, is a naughty peace. This being the true meaning of Chriſts words, marke that the Heretikes interprete this to maintaine their rebellions and troubles which their new Goſpel breedeth, Beza in no. Teſt. an. 1565.

FULKE 5 This is a meere ſlander againſt Beza: for our Goſpel which we preach, neither breedeth, nor alloweth any rebellions. But your helliſh Father the Pope, raiſeth rebellions, as it is moſt notorious, againſt our ſoveraigne Lady the Queene, of her ſubjects in the North, and ſendeth both his Legats, and his banner of rebellion, to raiſe rebellion in Ireland, hireth, bleſſeth, and pardoneth, horrible traitours, to murder their moſt loving and naturall Prince, and you traitours of Rhemes, are joyned with them in their moſt devilliſh conſpiracies, procuring and comforting them, that enterpriſe ſuch monſtrous impiety: and ſhame you nothing, to charge Beza with maintaining of rebellion? As for the civill warres in France, let all the Kings edicts of pacification, that hitherto have come forth, teſtifie, that thoſe of the reformed religion, in taking armes to defend the lawes and liberties of their countrey, againſt private perſons, have done nothing but in the Kings ſervice.

Slander. D. Morton. D. Sander. Parry and the reſt executed.

RHEM. 37 More then.] No earthly thing, nor duty to Parents, wife, children, countrey, or to a mans owne body or life, can be any iuſt excuſe why a man ſhould doe, or faine himſelfe to doe or beleeve any thing, againſt Chriſt or the unity and faith of his Church.

RHEM. 6 41 In the name.] Reward for hoſpitality, and ſpecially for receiving an holy perſon, as Prophet, Apoſtle, Biſhop, or Prieſt perſecuted for Chriſts ſake. For by receiving of him in that reſpect as he is ſuch an one, he ſhall be partaker of his merits, and be rewarded as for ſuch an one. Whereas on the contrary ſide, he that receiveth an Heretike into his houſe, and a falſe preacher, doth communicate with his wicked workes, Ep. 2. Io.

FULKE 6 Our Saviour Chriſt promiſeth a reward to them that entertaine the godly, perſecuted, or not perſecuted, but not out of the merite of him that is received, which is nothing unto ſalvation, but of his owne abundant grace, by which, the Prophet and the righteous man, receive their reward, and not of their owne merits, Leo. Pro calice aquæ frigidæ præmium habuit gratuita largitio, Ser. 4. de quadrageſ. Provided, that Ieſuites, Seminarie Prieſts, and ſuch other, that come to ſtirre up rebellion, procure murder of their Prince, and invaſion of their countrey by ſtrangers, or to infect the people with Popiſh hereſies, be not accompted, but as falſe prophets, hypocrites, traitors, and heretikes, not Prophets, juſt men, or true Chriſtian Catholikes.

CHAP. XI.

Iohn the Baptiſt in priſon, alſo doing his diligence, ſendeth ſome of his Diſciples to Chriſt: that as they heard, ſo they might alſo ſee his miracles with their eyes. 7 Afterward Chriſt declareth how worthy of credit Iohns teſtimony was: 16 and inveigheth againſt the Iewes, who with neither of their manners of life could be wonne: 20 no nor with Chriſts infinite miracles: 25 praiſing Gods wiſedome in this behalfe, 27 and calling to himſelfe all ſuch as feele their owne burdens.

FVLKE 1. When men of rare holineſſe, have beene in the wilderneſſe, (which hath not beene in all ages) men have reſorted to them to be partakers of their prayers, and ghoſtly counſell. But this pertaineth not to Popiſh Heremites, which dwelled commonly ſcarce a quarter of a mile from cities and populous townes, nor to Popiſh Anchoriſts, which dwelled even in cities and townes, having daily reſort unto them, although they came not abroad themſelves. Eremites.

FVLKE 2 The Greeke Participle being of the Preterimperfect tenſe, as well as of the preſent, the comming of Elias in perſon, cannot be proved out of this text, notwithſtanding the opinion of Gregorie, and other ancient Writers, which S. Hierom upon this place mooveth, but doth not allow. Origen ſeemeth to be againſt it, in Matth. tract. 3. and Pamphilus Apologia pro Origine. The like uſe of this Participle is in this ſame chapter verſe 3. where the ſenſe muſt needs be, Art thou he which was to come. So it ought to be here, This is Elias which was to come. So doth Erasmus a Popiſh tranſlate it, Qui venturus erat, in Euthym.

RHEM. 2 18 Eating and drinking.] The wicked quarrellers of the world miſconſter eaſily all the actes and life of good men. If they be great faſters and auſtere livers, they are blaſphemed and counted hypocrites: if they converſe with other men in ordinary manner, then they be counted diſſolute.

The blindneſſe of the Phariſees about the Sabbath he reproveth by Scriptures, by reaſon, and by a miracle. 14 And his death being therefore ſought by them, he meekly goeth out of the way, according as Eſay had propheſied of him. 22 His caſting out of devils alſo he defendeth againſt them. 31 And ſetteth forth the danger they ſtand in for their horrible blaſphemy. 38 And becauſe they aske yet for a ſigne, he ſheweth how worthily they ſhall be damned, 43 Foretelling how the devill ſhall poſſeſſe their Nation, 46 and teſtifying, that although he be of their blood, yet not they for this, but ſuch as keepe his Commandements are deere unto him.

ANNOTATIONS CHAP. XII.

Rhem. 2 24 In Beel-zebub.] The like blaſphemy againſt the holy Ghoſt is, to attribute the miracles done by Saints, either dead or aliue, to the devill.

Fvlke 2 Thoſe miracles that are ſaid to be done by Saints, and are alledged to maintaine any doctrine contrary to the truth taught in the holy Scriptures, S. Auguſtine is bold to call them either the fictions of lying men, or elſe the workes of deceiving ſpirits: for either thoſe things are not true which are ſaid of thoſe miracles, or elſe if heretikes have any miracles, we muſt rather beware of them. This writeth S. Auguſtine againſt the Donatiſts, which were full of lying miracles, but come ſhort by a thouſand degrees of the Papiſts, the monſters of whoſe lying miracles are much more, then all the poeticall fables: which all modeſt Papiſts will be aſhamed to heare of, but theſe traitours of Rhemes, barking againſt the truth, are aſhamed of nothing. Miracles. De unit. eccleſ. cap.16. [illegible] Legenda [illegible] feſtiv. ſer. [illegible] and other ſuch monſters of lying miracles.

Rhem. 30 Not with me.] They that are indifferent to all religions, commonly and fitly called Neuters, ioyning themſelves to neither part, let them marke theſe words well, and they ſhall ſee, that Chriſt accounted all them to be againſt him and his Church, that are not plainely and flatly with him and it. Neuters in religion.

Rhem. 3 30 Gathereth not with me.] He ſpeaketh not onely of his owne perſon, but of all to whom he hath committed the government of his Church, and ſpecially of the chiefe Paſtour ſucceeding Peter in the government of the whole. As S. Hierome writing to Damaſus Pope of Rome, applieth theſe words unto him, ſaying of all heretikes: He that gathereth not with me, ſcattereth: that is to ſay, He that is not with Chriſt, is with Antichriſt. Epiſt.58.

Fvlke 3 He ſpeaketh of his owne doctrine, by which we muſt trie all, who gathereth with him, and who not. We may ſafely gather with all our governours, or equals, that gather with Chriſt, and with none other. Neither doth S. Hierome warrant us, that whoſoever gathereth with the Biſhop of Rome, gathereth with Chriſt. For that he ſaid to Damaſus, was in that reſpect, that Damaſus gathered with Chriſt, that is, acknowledged the Godhead of Chriſt, againſt the Arrians. In this Article of faith, he that gathereth not with the Biſhop Damaſus, ſcattereth with the heretikes, and with Antichriſt. Not that Damaſus ſucceeded Peter in the government of the whole Church, and in that he is Biſhop of Rome, is a rule to be alwayes followed. For the ſame Hierome that gathered with Damaſus, affirming the divinity of Chriſt, would not have gathered with Liberius, whom he teſtifieth to have ſubſcribed to the Arrians, againſt the divinity of Chriſt, in Catalo. Num. 107. Fortunatianus. And touching the Biſhop of Romes government over the whole, in his Epiſtle to Evagrius, he ſaith, that all Biſhops be the ſucceſſours of the Apoſtles: and that the poore Biſhop of Eugubium is not inferiour to the rich Biſhop of Rome, &c. And Cyprian ſaith, that all the Apoſtles were equall with Peter in honour and authority, De ſimplicitate Prælatorum. The Pope or Biſhop of Rome.

Rhem. 4 31 The blaſphemy of the Spirit.] He meaneth not that there is any ſinne ſo great, which God will not forgive, or whereof a man may not repent in this life, as ſome heretikes at this day affirme: but that ſome heinous ſins (as namely this blaſphemy of the Iewes againſt the evident workes of the holy Ghoſt, and likewiſe Archheretikes, who wilfully reſiſt the knowne truth and workes of the holy Ghoſt in Gods Church) are hardly forgiven, and ſeldome have ſuch men grace to repent. Otherwiſe among all the ſinnes againſt the holy Ghoſt (which are commonly reckoned ſix) one onely ſhall never be forgiven, that is, dying without repentance wilfully, called Finall impenitence. Which ſinne he committeth that dieth with contempt of the Sacrament of Penance, obſtinately refuſing abſolution, by the Churches miniſtery: as S. Auguſtine plainely declareth by theſe words: Whoſoever he be that beleeveth not mans ſinnes to be remitted in Gods Church, and therefore deſpiſeth the bountifulneſſe of God in ſo mighty a worke, if he in that obſtinate minde continue till his lives end, he is guilty of ſinne againſt the holy Ghoſt, in which holy Ghoſt Chriſt remitteth ſins, Enchir.83.Ep.50.in fine. Finall impenitence. Remiſſion of ſinnes in the Church.

Fvlke 4. That God will not forgive the ſinne againſt the holy Ghoſt, the text is more plaine, then that with any gloſſes of mans inventions, it can be obſcured. That there is a ſinne, which he that hath committed, cannot bee renewed by repentance, the Apoſtle ſpeaketh as plainely, Heb.6.4,5,6. They that have ſinned againſt the holy Ghoſt are never renewed by repentance, nor come to true repentance and change of minde, though as Iudas, they be ſorry, not for their ſinne, but for the puniſhment, which they have deſerved by their ſinne. S. Hierome upon the text ſaith: That the blaſphemy againſt the holy Ghoſt ſhall at no time be forgiven: and asketh how Biſhops and Prieſts that have blaſphemed the holy Ghoſt were in his time received to their degree. Heſych.l.2.c.10. Quia ſcientes & voluntarie peccantes, etſi ſe dicunt pœnitere, non pœnitent pure: blaſphemia [illegible] vocatum eſt. What this ſin is, and that it ſhall never be remitted, Pacianus ſheweth againſt the Novatians. Sinne againſt the holy Ghoſt.

Pacian.

But of the necessity [illegible], of satisfaction in worke to the justice of God for sinnes committed, of the forme of words [illegible] blowne over a mans head by a Popish Priest, S. Augustine knew nothing in his time.

Popish penance.

RHEM. 5 32 Sonne of man.] The Iewes in their words sinned against the Sonne of man, when they reprehended those things which he did as a man, to wit, calling him a glutton, a great drinker of wine, a friend of the Publicans [illegible] because he kept company with sinners, brake the Sabbath, and such like: and this sinne might more easily be forgiven them, because they iudged of him as they would have done of any other man: but they sinned and blasphemed against the holy Ghost (called here the finger of God whereby he wrought miracles) when of malice they attributed the evident workes of God, in casting out devils, to the devill himselfe: and this sinne shall not be remitted, because it shall hardly be remitted, as we see by the plague of their posterity unto this day.

FVLKE 5 Not the Iewes generally are charged, nor their posterity are punished for the sinne against the holy Ghost, but some of them, which were the Pharisees and Scribes, that came from Ierusalem, of whose posterity it is possible, there is few or none remaining at this day.

Luke 11.17. Marke 3.22.

RHEM. 6 32 Nor in the world to come.] S. Augustine and other holy Doctors gather hereupon, that some sinnes may be remitted in the next life, and consequently prove purgatory thereby, De civ. Dei, l. 21. c. 13. D. Greg. Dial. l. 4. c. 39.

Purgatory.

FVLKE 6 S. Marke is a sure interpreter of these words. For he (saith S. Marke) that blasphemeth the holy Ghost, never hath forgivenesse, but is guilty of eternall condemnation. The errour of Purgatory, in S. Augustines time, began to peere up, from which, as S. Augustine was not altogether cleere, so doth he not affirme any thing certainely of it. For in his Treatise De octo Dulcitij quæst. Quest. 1. thus he writeth of it, Tale aliquid, &c. Such a thing (as saving by fire) is not incredible to be even after this life, and whether it be so or no, it may be enquired, and either be found, or be hid, that some faithfull men are saved later, or sooner, by a certaine purging fire, by how much more or lesser they have loved corruptible goods, yet not such of whom it is said that they shall not possesse the kingdome of God, &c. except after they have duly repented, those crimes be remitted unto them.

Purgatory. Marke 3.29.

But Hypognost. cont. Pelag. lib. 5. he acknowledgeth Heaven and Hell out of the Scriptures, but of the third place he saith, Tertium penitus, &c. The third place we are utterly ignorant of, yea we find that it is not in the Scriptures. This is the variable opinion of S. Augustine, sometime doubting and thinking it not incredible, sometime denying that any such thing is found in the Scriptures. And although he spake against the Pelagians (and Papists) which fained a third place, where infants unbaptized should remaine after this life, yet his words are generall, and his reason is as good against Purgatory, as against Limbus infantum.

In Gregories time, which was almost 200. yeere after, the errour of Purgatory had gathered more strength, and yet is holden by Gregorie, but for the least and lightest offences, as idle talke, immoderate laughter, or houshold care, which scarce is occupied without offence. It is sufficient for us, that neither the Scripture teacheth Purgatory, neither the Primitive Church did admit of it, for many hundred yeeres after Christ, although by the Carpocratians, Montanists, and Originists, the foundations of that errour were laid of ancient time.

RHEM. 7 36 Idle word.] If of every idle word we must make account before God in iudgement, and yet shall not for every such word be damned everlastingly: then there must needs be some temporall punishment in the next life.

FVLKE 7 Every idle word is worthy of condemnation, if God should deale with us according to his justice; as it is plaine in the next verse: for our tongue is given us to speake alwayes that which is to the glory of God, and to the profit of the hearers. Neverthelesse, he that pardoneth all the grievous sinnes of the faithfull that are truly penitent, whereof they must also make account in judgement, forgiveth also the sinne of idle words. Therefore this is a brutish collection, as all the rest of your Popish Notes are, We must give an account and not be damned, ergo there must needs be some temporall punishment in the next life.

Purgatory.

RHEM. 48 Who is my mother.] The dutifull affection toward our parents and kinsfolke is not blamed, but the inordinate love of them, to the hinderance of our service and duty toward God. Upon this place some old heretikes denied Christ to have any mother, Aug. lib. de Fid. & Symb. cap. 4. Neither ever was there any heresie so absurd, but it would seeme to have Scripture for it.

All heresies alledge Scriptures.

CHAP. XIII.

Speaking in parables (as the Scripture foretold of him, and as meet was for the reprobate Iewes:) he sheweth by the parable of the Sower, that in the labours of the Church, three parts of foure doe perish through the fault of the hearers. 24 And yet by the parable of good seed and cockle (as also of the Net) that his servants must not for all that, never while the world lasteth, make any schisme or separation. 31 And by parables of the little mustard seed and leaven, that notwithstanding the three parts perishing, and over-sowing of cockles, yet that fourth part of the good seed shall spread over all the world. 44 And withall, what a treasure and pearle it is: 53 After all which, yet his owne countrey will not honour him.

THe same day IESVS going out of the house, sate by the Sea side.

2 And *great multitudes were gathered together unto him, insomuch, that he went up into a boat and sate: and all the multitude stood in the shore,

3 And he spake to them many things in parables,

2 And great multitudes were gathered together unto him, so that he went into the ship, and sate, and the whole multitude stood on the shore.

parables, saying, Behold the sower went foorth to sow.

4 And whiles he soweth, some fell by the way side, and the fowles of the aire did come and eat it.

5 Othersome also fell upon rockie places, where they had not much earth: and they shot up incontinent, because they had not deepnesse of earth,

6 And after the Sunne was up, they parched: and because they had not root, they withered.

7 And other fell among thornes: and the thornes grew and choked them.

8 And othersome fell upon good ground: and they yeelded fruit, the || one an hundredfold, the other threescore, and another thirty.

9 He that hath eares to heare, let him heare.

10 And his Disciples came and said to him. Why speakest thou to them in parables?

11 Who answered and said unto them, Because || to you it is given to know the mysteries of the kingdome of heaven: but to them it is not given.

12 For he that hath, to him shall be given, and he shall abound: but he that hath not, from him shall be taken away that also which he hath.

13 Therefore in parables I speak to them: because seeing they see not, and ‡ hearing they heare not, neither doe they understand:

‡ When Gods word is preached, they properly have eares to heare, that have hearts to obey: and they hearing doe not heare, which heare by sense of their body, and obey not by consent of their hearts, Aug. de dono perseu. c. 14.

14 And the prophecie of Esay is fulfilled in them, which saith, with hearing shall you heare, and you shall not understand: and seeing, shall you see, and you shall not see.

15 For the heart of this people is waxed grosse, and with their eares they have heavily heard, and their || eyes they have shut: lest at any time they may see with their eyes, and heare with their eares, and understand with their heart, and be converted, and I may heale them.

16 But blessed are your eyes because they doe see, and your eares because they do heare.

17 For amen I say to you, that * many Prophets and just men have desired to see the things that you see, and have not seene them: and to heare the things that you heare, and have not heard them.

Luke 10.23.

18 Heare you therefore the parable of the sower.

19 Every one that heareth the word of the kingdome and understandeth not, there commeth the wicked one, and catcheth away that which was sowne in his heart: this is he that was sowne by the way side.

20 And he that was sowne upon rockie places: this is he that heareth the word, and incontinent receiveth it with joy.

21 Yet hath he not root in himselfe, but is for a time: and when there falleth tribulation and persecution for the word, he is by and by scandalized.

22 And parables, saying, Behold the sower went forth to sow.

4 And when he sowed, some (seed) fell by the wayes side: and the fowles came, and devoured them up,

5 Some fell upon stony places, where they had not much earth: and anon they sprung up, because they had no deepnesse of earth.

6 And when the Sun was up, they caught heat: and because they had not root, they withered away.

7 Againe some fell among thornes: and the thornes sprung up, and choaked them.

9 Who hath eares to heare, let him heare.

10 And the Disciples came, and said unto him, Why speakest thou unto them by parables?

11 He answered, and said unto them, Because it is given unto you to know the secrets of the kingdome of heaven, but to them it is not given.

12 For whosoever hath, to him shall be given, and he shall have more abundance: but whosoever hath not, from him shall be taken away, even that he hath.*

Matth. 25. 29.

16 Blessed are your eyes, for they see: and your eares, for they heare.

17 *Verely I say unto you, * that many Prophets and righteous men have desired to see those things which ye see, and have not seene: and to heare those things which ye heare, and have not heard.*

20 But he that received the seed into stonie places, the same is he that heareth the word, and anon with joy receiveth it.

21 Yet hath he not root in himselfe, but dureth for a season: for when tribulation or persecution ariseth because of the word, by and by he is offended.

24 Another parable hee propoſed to them, ſaying, The kingdome of heaven is reſembled to a man that ſowed good ſeed in his field.

25 But when men were aſleepe, his enemie came and overſowed cockle among the wheat, and went his way.

26 And when the blade was ſhot up, and had brought forth fruit, then appeared alſo the cockle.

27 And the ſervants of the good man of the houſe comming, ſaid to him, Sir, diddeſt thou not ſow good ſeed in thy field? whence then hath it cockle?

28 And he ſaid to them, The enemy man hath done this. And the ſervants ſaid to him, Wilt thou we goe and gather it up?

27 So the ſervants of the houſholder came, and ſaid unto him, Sir, diddeſt thou not ſowe good ſeed in thy field? from whence then hath it tares?

28 Hee ſaid unto them, The malicious man hath done this. The ſervants ſaid unto him, Wilt thou then that we go, and gather them up?

ANNOTATIONS, CHAP. XIII.

RHEM. 8 [illegible] rewards [illegible] 2. adv. Iovin. Ambroſ. [illegible]

FVLKE 1 [illegible] ſome [illegible] who [illegible] as S. [illegible] (ſaith he) is hire or wages, not grace, or a free gift, [illegible] of the merit of virginity, as you underſtand that word of merit, [illegible] the [illegible]. Neither doth he allow, that [illegible] threeſcore fold to [illegible], and thirty fold to married folke, becauſe [illegible] is more excellent then the chaſtity of a virgine, Cap. 44. 45. & 46. In his [illegible] of Iovinian that he counted the chaſtity of Virgins [illegible] folke. Where, though S. Auguſtine uſe the terme merits, yet he meaneth by it, [illegible] lencie or worthineſſe, not deſert, as the places before noted doe plainely teſtifie. S. Hierome, though he [illegible] the errours of Iovinian, concerning the excellencie of [illegible] (as we doe alſo) yet he [illegible] no [illegible] deſert of virginity before God, nor of any worke of juſtice. For [illegible] he [illegible] Pelagi[illegible]. Tunc ergo iuſti, &c. Then are we iuſt, when we confeſſe our ſelves to be [illegible] not [illegible] owne merit, but of the mercy of God. [illegible] though he preferre the worthineſſe of continencie before [illegible], and uſeth the word Meritum: yet that the reward of eternall life is not given to mens merits, or deſervings, he writeth thus, Exhort. ad Virgines. [illegible], &c. Whence ſhould I have ſo great merit, or deſerving, ſeeing mercy is my crowne? And even in the ſame Epiſtle 82. ad Vercell. he writeth of the reward of eternall life, Sola vos comitabitur fides, &c. Faith onely ſhall goe with you to the next life, and iuſtice ſhall alſo accompany you, if faith goe before.

Merits.

RHEM. 11 To you is given.] To the Apoſtles and ſuch as have the guiding and teaching of others, deeper knowledge of Gods word and myſteries is given, then to the common people. As alſo to Chriſtians generally, that which was not given to the obſtinate Iewes.

RHEM. 2 15 They have ſhut.] In ſaying that they ſhut their owne eyes, which S. Paul alſo repeateth, Act. 28. *he teacheth us the true underſtanding of all other places, where it might ſeeme by the bare words that God is the very Authour and worker of this induration, and blindneſſe, and of other ſinnes: * which was an old condemned blaſphemy, and is now the hereſie of  Calvin: whereas our Saviour here teacheth us, that they ſhut their owne eyes, and are the cauſe of their owne ſinne and damnation, God not doing, but permitting it, and ſuffering them to fall further becauſe of their former ſinnes, as S. Paul declareth of the reprobate Gentiles, Rom. 1.

God is not the Authour of evill. Iren. apud Euſeb. lib. 5. cap. 19. Calv. l. 2. Inſtit. cap. 4.

FVLKE 2 It is a ſhameleſſe ſlander againſt Calvin, that he ſhould teach God to be the Author of ſinne, as whoſo will reade the place quoted of his Inſtitution, ſhall plainely ſee. For he holdeth, as S. Auguſtine ſaith, that God hardeneth the wicked, not as an evill authour, but as a righteous Iudge, not by a bare permiſſion or ſuffering, but by withdrawing and withholding his grace, and delivering them into their owne luſt, or into the deceit of Satan, as a juſt puniſhment of their former ſinnes, as Auguſtine teacheth at large, againſt Iulian the Pelagian, lib. 5. cap. 3. and S. Paul of the idolatrous Gentiles affirmeth, that God delivered them into paſſions of ignominie, as you your ſelves tranſlate, Rom. 1.

Slander.

RHEM. 25 Overſowed.] Firſt by Chriſt and his Apoſtles was planted the truth, and falſhood came afterward, and was overſowne by the enemy the devill, and not by Chriſt, who is not the Authour of evill. Tertul. de præſcrip.

29 Leſt you plucke up alſo.] The good muſt tolerate the evill, when it is ſo ſtrong that it cannot be redreſſed without danger and diſturbance of the whole Church, and commit the matter to Gods iudgement in the latter day. Otherwiſe where ill men (be they heretikes or other malefactors) may be puniſhed or ſuppreſſed without diſturbance and hazzard of the good, they may and ought by publike authority either ſpirituall or temporall to be chaſtiſed or executed.

RHEM. 3 30 Suffer both to grow.] The good and bad (we ſee here) are mingled together in the Church, which maketh againſt certaine Heretikes and Shiſmatikes, which ſevered themſelves of old from the reſt of the whole world, under pretence that themſelves onely were pure, and all other, both Prieſts and people, ſinners: and againſt ſome Heretikes of this time alſo, which ſay that evill men are not of or in the Church.

Good and evill in the Church.

FVLKE 3 The reprobate are in the viſible Church, but they are not of the Catholike Church, which is the myſticall body of Chriſt. They went out from us (ſaith S. Iohn) but they were not of us, 1 Ioan. 2. 19.

The Catholike Church.

RHEM. 32 The leaſt of all ſeeds.] The Church of Chriſt had a ſmall beginning, but afterward became the moſt glorious and knowne common wealth in the earth: the greateſt powers and the moſt wiſe of the world, putting themſelves into the ſame.

RHEM. 4 55 Carpenters ſonne.] Hereupon Iulian the Apoſtata and his flatterer Libanius tooke their ſcoffe againſt our Saviour, ſaying (at his going againſt the Perſians) to the Chriſtians, What doth the Carpenters ſonne now? and threatning that after his returne the Carpenters ſonne ſhould not be able to ſave them from his fury: whereunto a godly man anſwered by the ſpirit of prophecie, He whom Iulian calleth the Carpenters ſonne, is making a woodden coffin for him againſt his death. And indeed not long after there came newes that in that battell he died miſerably, Sozo. l. 6. c. 2. Theod. l. 3. c. 18. The very like ſcoffe uſe heretikes that call the body of Chriſt in the bleſſed Sacrament, Bakers bread. It ſeemeth indeed to the ſenſes to be ſo, as Chriſt ſeemed to be Ioſephs naturall ſonne; but faith telleth us the contrary as well in the one as in the other.

FVLKE 4 We call not the body of Chriſt, Bakers bread, but that which the Baker made, which is digeſted and caſt out with other meats (as Origen ſaith) which if it be not eaten, mouldeth, or is otherwiſe corrupted, theſe things it were blaſphemy to affirme of the body of Chriſt. Therefore it is Bakers bread, that is ſubject to corruption. And whereas you ſay, faith telleth you the contrary, tell us upon what text of Scripture your faith is builded. The Scripture telleth us, that the Lords Sacrament is bread, and bread that is broken, which cannot be verified of his naturall body, which is not now broken, but is whole and uncorruptible in heaven. S. Cyrill ſaith, our Saviour Chriſt when he gave the Sacrament of his body, gave Fragmenta panis. Pieces of bread to his Diſciples which beleeved, in Ioan. lib. 5. cap. 14. Therefore their faith and yours is not all one.

Marke 6, 14. Luk. 9, 7. 3[illegible]

AT that time Herod the Tetrarch heard the fame of IESVS:

2 And he ſaid to his ſervants, This is Iohn the Baptiſt: he is riſen from the dead, and therefore vertues worke in him.

3 For Herod apprehended Iohn, and bound him, and put him into priſon, becauſe of Herodias, his *brothers wife.

4 For Iohn ſaid unto him, It is not lawfull for thee to have her.

5 And willing to put him to death, he feared the people: becauſe they eſteemed him as a Prophet.

21 And the number of them that did eate, was fiue thouſand men, beſide women and children.

22 And forthwith IESVS commanded his Diſciples to goe vp into the boat, and to goe before him ouer the water, till he diſmiſſed the multitudes.

23 And hauing diſmiſſed the multitude, hee * aſcended into a mountaine alone to pray. And when it was euening, he was there alone.

33 And they that were in the boat, came and adored him, ſaying, Indeed thou art the Sonne of God.

34 And hauing paſſed the water, they came into the countrey of Geneſar.

FVLKE 1 God vſeth not by Heretikes, and Antichriſtian Tyrants and Maſters of impiety, to vphold and preſerue his Church, but by painefull and faithfull Teachers, and wiſe and carefull Gouernours, although they haue infirmities.

ANNOTATIONS CHAP. XIIII.

RHEM. 1 Becauſe of Herodias.] It is too ordinary in Princes to put them to death that freely tell them ſuch faults: women, whom they fanſie, ſpecially inciting them to ſuch miſchiefe.

RHEM. 2 12 Buried it.] An example of duty toward the dead bodies of the faithfull. Wherein ſee the difference of Catholike Chriſtian men and of all Infidels, be they Pagans, Apoſtates, or Heretikes. For whereas the Chriſtians had laid the body of this bleſſed Prophet and Martyr in Samaria with the reliques of Elias and Abdias, by vertue whereof wonderfull miracles were wrought in that place: in Iulian the Apoſtates time, when men might doe all miſchiefe freely againſt Chriſtian religion, the Pagans opened the tombe of S. Iohn Baptiſt, burnt his bones, ſcattered the aſhes about the fields: but certaine religious Monkes comming thither a pilgrimage at the ſame time, aduentured their life, and ſaued as much of the holy reliques as they could, and brought them to their Abbot Philip a man of God: who eſteeming them too great a treaſure

FVLKE 2 There is no doubt but the dead bodies of the faithfull are to be laid vp with reuerence, to be kept to the reſurrection, but not to be abuſed vnto idolatry: for Iohns diſciples buried his body, they thought it not to be worſhipped. Concerning the ſtory of the malice of the Pagans, you foiſt in many things that your authour ſaith not: for Theodorite in the place noted, ſaith no more, but that they brake vp the tombe of Iohn Baptiſt, burnt his bones and ſcattered abroad the aſhes.

You ſay, that the Chriſtians laid the body of Iohn the Baptiſt, with the reliques of Elias and Abdias: this ſaith not S. Hierom, but Ibi ſiti ſunt, There lie Heliſæus and Abdias the prophets and Iohn the Baptiſt than the which there was none greater, among them that were borne of a woman. Elias was taken vp in a fiery chariot, therefore they had no reliques of his body. But admit your memory failed you in putting Elias in ſtead of Heliſæus, not onely here, but alſo in the Table: What wonderfull miracles were there wrought before Iulians time? Ruffinus ſpeaketh of none, before nor after. S. Hierome ſaith in his time, that Paula quaked at many marvels that ſhe ſaw there: namely, Deuils roaring in diuers torments, and before the ſepulchres of thoſe holy men, men howling like wolues, barking like dogs, roaring like lions, hiſſing like ſerpents, lowing like buls. Some turne their heads about, and touch the earth, with the crowne of their head backward, women hanging by the feet, their garments to fall abroad upon their faces. She tooke pitie of them all, weeping for euery one, ſhe prayed Chriſt to haue mercy on them. This writeth S. Hierome, but not of any that were cured of their madneſſe there. Againe, ye may note, how S. Hierome agreeth with Ruffine, when he ſaith, That S. Iohn Baptiſt lay ſtill in his time in Sebaſte or Samaria: but let the hiſtory of Ruffine be true. He ſaith, that certaine from Hieruſalem of the Monaſtery of Philip, came to that place (where the Pagans raged againſt that body of S. Iohn Baptiſt) to pray, you ſay they came thither a pilgrimage: but howſoeuer it was, they brought ſome reliques away with them, the reſt were burned. Yet Gaudentius Biſhop of Brixia, and Paulinus of Nola were perſwaded that they had his reliques in the great Church at Fundi in Italy, Gaud. de dedic. Baſil. Paul. Ep. 32. Now for any iniury that is done by vs vnto the bodies of the Saints, it is a meere ſlander: but the counterfeit reliques that you ſhew, and worſhip as idols, we deſtroy and aboliſh. And to proue they are counterfeit, we need no other teſtimony, but of your ſelues, which place one and the ſame relique, in ſo many places at once: As for example, S. Iohn Baptiſts head, you ſay, is at Amiens, other ſay, his face onely. I will not enquire how it came thither from Conſtantinople, whither it was carried by Theodoſius, Hiſt. Trip. li. 9. c. 42. But the ſame part that is at Amiens, is at S. Iean Angely. The reſt of his head, from the forehead to the necke, is in Malta: yet the hinder part of his ſkull, is at Nemours, his braine at Nouium Roſtrouienſe, another part of his head at Iean Mories; his iaw-bone at Veſalium at the Church of S. Iohn the greater, another part at Paris at S. Iohn Laterane, a piece of his eare at S. Floride, his forehead and haires in Spaine at S. Saluadores, another piece of his head is at Noyon, and another at Luke in Italy. And yet for all theſe pieces, his whole head is in S. Silueſters Abbey at Rome to be ſeene and worſhipped. And there is no doubt, but many Churches in England ſometimes, had reliques of his head, as they would beare vs in hand. Is there not good cauſe thinke you, that we ſhould honour theſe holy reliques: if for nothing elſe, yet becauſe they can multiply themſelues, and be in ſo many places at once? O impudent brood of Antichriſt.

Eremites.

FVLKE 3 A ſimple argument to iuſtifie the profeſſion of Eremites. Yet that there were many good men that in times paſt led a contemplatiue life in deſert places, I deny not: but I affirme, that their example is a ſhame to the mock-Monkes, and falſe Eremites of Popery, which liue in cities, and in the frequence of people, that I ſpeake nothing of their faith and life, farre vnlike. Neither doth Hierome, or Sozomenus ſay, they did penance for their owne ſins, and the ſinnes of the world: neither had they any ſuch blaſphemous opinion, that they could ſatisfie for their owne ſinnes, much leſſe for the ſinnes of the world. S. Anthony which is counted the chiefe of thoſe Eremites, confeſſeth that the wound of mans ſinnes could not be healed by any meanes, but by the onely goodneſſe of God, which gaue his onely begotten Sonne to ſuffer for our ſinnes, Ep. 2. & 4.

Eremites.

RHEM. 19 The Diſciples to the multitudes.] A figure of the Miniſtery of the Apoſtles, who as they here had the diſtribution and ordering of thoſe miraculous loaues, ſo had they alſo to beſtow and diſpenſe all the food of our ſoules in miniſtring of the Word and Sacraments, neither may Lay-men challenge the ſame.

RHEM. 4 26 Walking.] When not onely Chriſt, but by his power Peter alſo walketh vpon the waters, it is euident that he can diſpoſe of his owne body aboue nature, and contrary to the naturall conditions thereof, as to goe thorow a doore, Io. 20. to be in the compaſſe of a little bread, Epiphan. in Anchorato.

FVLKE 4 Chriſt can diſpoſe his body aboue nature, but not to deſtroy the eſſentiall conditions of a body, for then he ſhould ceaſe to haue a body, and ouerthrow the hope of our reſurrection, Euſe. Emiſſ. hom. in Sabb. poſt ciner. Propter hæreticos ita fieri oportebat, qui Chriſtum Dominum, in quod ſuper mare ambulauerat, non verum, ſed phantaſticum corpus habuiſſe poſtea dicebant. Vincuntur enim iſti, dum beatum quoque Petrum ſuper mare ambulaſſe audiunt quem vtique verum corpus habuiſſe non dubitant. And where you quote Ioan. 20. to proue that his body did goe thorow a doore, your owne tranſlation is, that the doores were ſhut, not that he came thorow the doore: for he made the doore to open, and giue place to him, as the priſon doores did to the Apoſtles by the miniſtery of Angels, Act. 5. which yet were ſhut againe, ſo ſoon as they paſſed thorow: for if the diſtances of place be taken from bodies, they ſhall be no where, and being no where, they ſhall not be at all, as S. Auguſtine teacheth Ep. 57. Dardan. Finally, where you quote Epiphanius to affirme, that the body of Chriſt can be in the compaſſe of a little bread, it is a manifeſt abuſing of the Reader: for Epiphanius ſaith not ſo, but the cleane contrary. For teaching that the Sacramentall Bread, is an image of Chriſt, And yet (ſaith he) neither in greatneſſe, nor faſhion, nor power it is like, either to his Diuinity, or to his humanity: for it is a long ſhapen rowle in faſhion, and void of ſenſe as concerning power, which teſtimony of Epiphanius cleerely ouerthroweth your errour of tranſubſtantiation, and carnall manner of Chriſts preſence in the Sacrament, both together.

The Pharisees of Hierusalem comming so farre to carpe him, he chargeth with a tradition contrary to Gods Commandement. 10 And to the people he yeeldeth the reason of that which they reproved: 15 [illegible] to his Disciples, shewing the ground of the Pharisees all washing [illegible], that meates [illegible] defile the soule) to be false. 21 Then he goeth [illegible] to hide himselfe among the Gentiles: where, in a woman he findeth such faith, that he is faine [illegible] the [illegible] before the time receive the whole bread, as she had a crumme [illegible]. 29 Where (all contrary to those Pharisees) the common people seeke wonderfully unto him. And he after he hath cured their diseased, feedeth foure thousand of them with seven loaves.

The Gospel upon Wednesday the third weeke in Lent. Marke 7, 1.

THen came to him from Hierusalem Scribes and Pharisees, saying,

2 Why doe thy Disciples transgresse the tradition of the Ancients? For they wash not their hands when they eat bread.

3 But he answering, said to them: Why doe you also transgresse the Commandement of God for your tradition? For God said, Exod. 20, 12. Luke 20, 9.

4 Honour father and mother, and, he that shall curse father or mother, dying let him die.

5 But you say, Whosoever shall say to father or mother, The gift whatsoever proceedeth from me, shall profit thee:

6 And shall not honour his father or his mother: and you have made frustrate the Commandement of God for your owne tradition.

7 Hypocrites, well hath Esay prophesied of you, saying,

Esa. 29, 13.

8 This people honoureth me with their ||lips: but their heart is farre from me.

9 And in vaine doe they worship me, teaching doctrines and || commandements of men.

10 And having called together the multitudes unto him, he said to them, Heare ye and understand.

11 || Not that which entreth into the mouth, defileth a man: but that which proceedeth out of the mouth, that defileth a man.

12 Then came his Disciples, and said to him, Doest thou know that the Pharisees, when they heard this word, were scandalized?

13 But he answering, said: All planting which my heavenly Father hath not planted, shall be rooted up.

14 Let them alone: blinde they are, guides of the blinde. And if the blinde be guide to the blinde, both fall into the ditch.

15 And Peter answering, said to him, Expound us this parable.

16 But he said, Are you also as yet without understanding?

17 Doe you not understand, that all that entreth into the mouth, goeth into the belly, and is cast forth into the privie?

18 But the things that proceed out of the mouth, come forth from the heart, and those things || defile a man.

5 But ye say, Whosoever shall say to his father or his mother, By the gift that is offered of me, thou shalt be helped:

6 And so shall he not honour his father or his mother. And thus have ye made the Commandement of God of none effect by your tradition.

7 Ye hypocrites, full well did Esaias prophesie of you, saying,

The Gospel upon Thursday the first weeke in Lent. Marke 7, 24.

21 And Iesus went forth from thence and retired into the quarters of Tyre and Sidon.

22 And behold * a woman of Chanaan came forth out of those coastes, and crying out, said to him, Have mercy upon me, O Lord the Sonne of David: my daughter is sore vexed of a devill.

23 Who answered her not a word. And his Disciples came and besought him, saying, Dimisse her: because she crieth out after us:

24 And he answering said: I was not sent but to the sheepe that are lost of the house of Israel.

25 But she came and adored him, saying, Lord, helpe me.

26 Who answering, said: It is not good to take the bread of the children, and to cast it to the dogs.

27 But she said, yea lord: for the whelps also eat of the crummes that fall from the table of their masters.

28 Then Iesus answering, said to her, O woman, ‡ great is thy faith: be it done to thee as thou wilt: and her daughter was made whole from that houre. ☞

29 And when Iesus was passed from thence, he came beside the Sea of Galilee: and ascending into the mountaine, sate there.

30 And there came to him great multitudes, having with them dum persons, blinde, lame, feeble, and many others: and they cast them downe at his feet, and he cured them:

31 So that the multitudes marvelled seeing the dumbe speake, the lame walke, the blinde see: and they magnified the God of Israel.

Marke 8, 1.

32 And * Iesus called together his Disciples, and said: I pity the multitude: because three dayes now they continue with me, and have not what to eat: and dimisse them fasting I will not, lest they faint in the way.

33 And the Disciples say unto him: Whence then may we get so many loaves in the desert as to fill so great a multitude?

34 And Iesus said to them, How many loaves have you? but they said, Seven and a few little fishes.

‡ Here we see againe that the people must not be their owne carvers, nor receive the Sacraments or other spirituall sustenance immediatly of Christ, or at their owne hand, but of their spirituall governours.

35 And he commanded the multitude to sit downe upon the ground.

36 And taking the seven loaves and the fishes, and giving thankes, he brake, and gave to his Disciples, and the Disciples gave to the people.

37 And they did all eat, and had their fill. And that which was left of the fragments they tooke up, seven baskets full.

ANNOTATIONS. CHAP. XV.

RHEM. 2 8 With their lips.] This is to be underſtood properly of ſuch as haue euer God in their mouth, the word of our Lord, the Scriptures, the Goſpel, but in their heart and all their life be indeed godleſſe. It may be applied alſo to ſuch as ſay their prayers without attention or eleuation of minde to God, whether he underſt and the prayers or no that ſaith them. For many a poore Chriſtian man that underſtandeth not the words he ſpeaketh, hath his heart neerer heauen, more feruor and deuotion, more edification to himſelfe, more profit in ſpirit (as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh) and leſſe diſtractions, then not onely all Heretikes which haue no true feeling of ſuch things, but then many learned Catholikes. And therefore it is not to be underſtood of praying in unknowne tongues, as Heretikes ſometime expound it, farre wide from the circumſtance of the place and Chriſts intention, ſpeaking of the hypocriticall Iewes.

a Cor.14.

FVLKE 2 He that prayeth in a tongue which he underſtandeth not, cannot come nere to God with his heart, ſeeing his heart cannot requeſt that which is contained in the ſound of words uttered with his lips. He may haue a ſuperſtitious deuotion or zeale of God, which being not according to knowledge, cannot bring him neere to God. For he that will come neere to God, muſt come by faith, without which it is impoſſible to pleaſe God; and faith cannot be of things unknowne, but of things reuealed to us by the word of God. Neither doth the Apoſtle ſay, that he which prayeth in a tongue which himſelfe underſtandeth not, doth edifie himſelfe, but he that hath the gift to ſpeake in an unknowne tongue which he himſelfe underſtandeth, but not the Church, may edifie himſelfe, but not profit the Church. As for profit in ſpirit, S. Paul nameth not, but he that prayeth in ſpirit, that is according to his ſpirituall gift of ſtrange tongues: if he pray in the Church, he muſt pray with underſtanding of other, that his prayer be not unfruitfull, or elſe hold his peace, if neither he, nor any other, can interprete his prayers. As for him that underſtandeth not what he requireth in an unknowne tongue, prayeth not at all, but mocketh God, and the Church if he pray openly. And where you ſay ſuch a one may haue leſſe diſtractions then other in his prayer, there is nothing elſe, but a diſtraction of his minde from his tongue, when his heart cannot thinke that which the words hee pronounceth doe ſignifie, which he knoweth not whether they be bleſſing or curſing, prayers or thankſgiuing, for ſpirituall benefits or temporall, for him-ſelfe or for other, for forgiueneſſe of ſinnes, or perſeuerance in vertue. Whereas true prayer, requireth a true ſenſe or feeling of our preſent need, and of the neceſſity of our brethren, yea of the whole Church of God, Nilus de oratione cap. 33. Oratio ſine diſtractione eſt ſumma intelligentia mentis.
Prayer in an unknowne tongue, was firſt brought in by Elxai, the horrible Heretike among the Iewes, which

19. who doubteth not, that this teſtimony of Eſay, may be rightly applied againſt him and his ſect: and euen by the ſame reaſon it may be applied againſt the Papiſts, who much more then the hypocriticall Iewes, honour God in vaine with their lips, according to mens traditions, and therefore their heart is farre from him.

RHEM. 3 9 Commandements of men.] Such onely are here called traditions, doctrines, or commandements of men, which be either repugnant to Gods Lawes, as this of defrauding their parents under pretence of religion: or which at the leaſt be friuolous, unprofitable, or impertinent to piety or true worſhip, as that other ſort of ſo often waſhing hands and veſſels, without regard of inward purity of heart and minde. Let no man therefore be abuſed with the Proteſtants peruerſe application of this place againſt the holy Lawes, Canons, and precepts of the Church and our ſpirituall Gouernors, concerning faſts, feſtiuities, and other rules of diſcipline, and due order in life and in the ſeruice of God. For ſuch are not repugnant but conſonant to Gods word and all piety: and our Lord is truly honoured, worſhipped, and ſerued, both by the making and alſo by the obſeruing of them. * S. Paul gaue commandement both by his Epiſtles and by word of mouth, euen in ſuch matters wherein Chriſt had preſcribed nothing at all, and he charged the faithfull to obſerue the ſame. * The Apoſtles and Prieſts made lawes at Ieruſalem, and the Chriſtians were bound to obey them. a The keeping of Sunday, in ſtead of the Sabbath is the tradition of the Apoſtles, and dare the Heretikes deny the due obſeruation thereof to be an acceptable worſhip of God? b They preſcribed the feaſts of Eaſter, and Whitſontide and o- ther ſolemnities of Chriſt and his Saints, which the Proteſtants themſelues obſerue. c They appointed the Lent and Imber faſts and other, as well to chaſtiſe the concupiſcence of man, as to ſerue and pleaſe God thereby, as is plaine in the faſting of * Anna, Tobie, Iudith, Eſther, who ſerued and pleaſed God thereby. Therefore neither theſe nor other ſuch Apoſtolike Ordinances, nor any precepts of the holy Church or of our lawfull Paſtors are implied in theſe Phari-ſaicall traditions here reprehended, nor to be counted or called the doctrines and commandements of men, becauſe they are not made by meere humane power, but by Chriſts warrant and authority, and by ſuch as he hath placed to rule his Church, of whom he ſaith, * He that heareth you, heareth me: he that deſpiſeth you, deſpiſeth me. They are made by the holy Ghoſt, ioyning with our Paſtors in the regiment of the faithfull; they are made by our mother the Church, which whoſoeuer obeyeth not, * we are warned to take him as an Heathen. But on the other ſide, all lawes, doctrines, ſeruice, and iniunctions of Heretikes, howſoeuer pretended to be conſonant to the Scriptures, be commandements of men: becauſe both the things by them preſcribed are impious, and the authors haue neither ſending nor commiſſion from God.

The difference betweene the Iewiſh traditions here reprehended, and the Churches Apoſtolicall traditions.

of Images, ſacrifice of the Maſſe, communion in one kinde, prohibiting of marriage and meats for religions ſake, and ſuch like. Some are beſide the Lawes of God, as idle and unprofitab[illegible]es, whereof they haue an infinite number, ſeruing not to order, decencie, and edification, but to id[illegible] ſuperſtition: while they make them as a part of Gods ſeruice and worſhip. In both ſorts, being the doctrines of men, God is worſhipped holy Scriptures, 1 Cor. 16. 2. and Apoc. 1. 10. Acts 20. 7. and the obſeruation thereof, is according to Gods Commandement, and no doctrine of men.

Fourthly, you ſay, The Apoſtles preſcribed the feaſts of Eaſter and Whitſontide, and other ſolemnities of Chriſt, and of his Saints, which the Proteſtants obſerue, Epiph. her. 75. I anſwere, Epiphanius aſcribeth to tradition of the Apoſtles, the Wedneſday faſt, and many other ceremonies which the Papiſts doe not obſerue. Therefore the Pa-piſts muſt confeſſe, either that ſuch things were not preſcribed by the Apoſtles, or elſe that they were preſcribed none otherwiſe, then indifferent ceremonies, which are ſubject to alteration, and in which the religion or worſhip of God doth not conſiſt. And ſo the Proteſtants obſerue them, for order and edification of Gods people, that uſe to aſſemble at ſuch times: as the Apoſtles obſerued the Sabbath day, Pentecoſt, and other ſolemnities of the Iewes, not as a portion of Chriſtian religion, but taking occaſion of the meeting of the Iewes in thoſe feſtiuall times.

Fiftly, you ſay, The Apoſtles appointed the Lent and Imber faſts, as well to chaſtiſe mens concupiſcences, as to pleaſe God thereby. For the appointing of Lent and Imber faſts, you quote Hieron. ad Marcel. cont. Mont. who indeed alledgeth the tradition of the Apoſtles, for one forty dayes faſt in the yeere, but of Imber faſts, and ſuch other, he ſpeaketh neuer a word. And I haue ſhewed before out of Euſeb. lib. 5. cap. 18. that Montanus the heretike was the firſt that appointed lawes of faſting. And Irenæus cited by Euſeb. l. 5. c. 26. ſheweth the diuerſity of faſting, as well as of obſeruing the feaſt of Eaſter, which proueth, that neither the one, nor the other, had any certaine preſcription by the Apoſtles. That men by faſting ſerue and pleaſe God, you cite the examples of Anna, Tobie, Iudith, Heſter, who ſerued and pleaſed God thereby, whereof we doubt nothing at all, while they uſed faſting to the right end allowed of God, that is, humbling of themſelues, and chaſtiſing of the bodie, that it might be more obedient to the ſpirit, and feruent in prayer. For otherwiſe, faſting of it ſelfe (as
S. Hierome ſaith) is no perfect vertue, but a foundation of other vertues. Thinke not (ſaith he) that thou art holy, when thou haſt begun to faſt and abſtaine, for this vertue is an helpe, not a perfection of ſanctification. I conclude therefore, that Popiſh traditions, placing religion and holineſſe, in commandements and ceremonies of their owne inuention, are as ill, as the Phariſaicall traditions, and men ſeeke in vaine to worſhip God by them. For Chriſt hath giuen no warrant or authority to any man, to adde any thing to the worſhip of God preſcribed in his word. Neither hath he aſſured us, that whoſoeuer heareth man, heareth him, but ſo long as man preacheth Gods word, and not the viſions of his owne head. Iudas was one of them, of whom it was ſaid, He that heareth you, heareth me, but this was underſtood to be no longer then he preached the Goſpel, elſe the high Prieſts might be excuſed for hearkening to him, when he ſaid, What will you giue me, and I will betray him unto you? Againe, the holy Ghoſt ioyneth not with them that ſet up a new Religion, or teach new Doctrines, but with them that retaine onely the doctrine of Chriſt, as ſufficient unto ſaluation. And that is the true Church which heareth the voyce of the Spouſe, and is content to be directed thereby in all things. That company of men which teach contrary to the Scriptures, or beſide the Scriptures, to worſhip God, not as the word hath preſcribed, but according to the doctrines of men, is the Synagogue of Satan, and not the Church of Chriſt: Neither haue they ſending or commiſſion from God. But they who ſincerely, according to the Scriptures, doe teach the Goſpel, haue ſending and commiſſion from God, Rom. 10. and are to be heard euen as Chriſt himſelfe, ſo long as they teach nothing but that Chriſt hath taught, as is it to be proued out of the holy Scriptures.

RHEM. 4 11 Not that which entreth.] The Catholikes doe not abſtaine from certaine meats, for that they eſteeme any meat uncleane, either by creation, or by Iudaicall obſeruation: but they abſtaine for chaſtiſement of their concupiſcences, Aug. l. de mor. Ec. Cath. c. 33.

FVLKE 4 The Papiſts abſtaine not, as the Catholikes did in S. Auguſtines time, for chaſtiſement of their concupiſcences, but of hypocriſie, for religion and holineſſe. For wine, ſpices, fruits, ſallets, and many fiſhes which they uſe, doe much more nouriſh concupiſcence, then uſuall fleſh, from which they abſtaine. As S. Auguſtine ſheweth of the faſts of the Manichees, De error. Manich. l. 2. ca. 12.

Popiſh faſtings.

RHEM. 5 18 Defile a man.] It is ſinne onely which properly defileth a man, and meats of themſelfe or of their owne nature doe not defile: but ſo farre as by accident they make a man to ſinne, as the diſobedience of Gods commandement or of our Superiours, who forbid ſome meats for certaine times and cauſes, is a ſinne. As the apple which our firſt parents did eat of, though of it ſelfe it did not defile them, yet being eaten againſt the precept, it did defile. So neither fleſh nor fiſh of it ſelfe doth defile, but the breach of the Churches precept defileth.

Gen.3. Catholike abſtinence.

ANNOTATIONS. CHAP. XVI.

RHEM. 3 13 Whom ſay men.] Chriſt intending here to take order for the founding, regiment, and ſtabilitie of his Church after his deceaſe, and to name the perſon to whom he meant to give the generall charge thereof, would before by interrogatories draw out (and namely out of that one whom he thought to make the chiefe) the profeſſion of that high and principle article, That he was the Sonne of the living God. Which being the ground of the Churches faith, was a neceſſary quality and condition in him that was to be made head of the ſame Church, and the perpetuall keeper of the ſaid faith, and all other points thereon depending. Of Peters primacie.

Then [illegible] Yet it ſeemeth to be ſaid to all the [illegible] my Church, and the gates of hell ſhall not prevaile againſt it [illegible] becauſe they all, as Peter, be ſtones, and on them all, the Church of [illegible], and to every perfect faithfull man [illegible] prevaile againſt none of them that are ſuch. Theſe words of [illegible], you ſee [illegible] plainely overthrow the ſ[illegible] of Peter, although he confeſſe him to be a [illegible] upon which the Church is builded. S. Cyprian, De [illegible]ate Eccleſiæ, was as great a friend to Peters [illegible]ie as [illegible]. For thus [illegible] writeth, Q[illegible] Apoſtolis [illegible], &c. Although he gave equall authoritie to all [illegible] Apoſtles after [illegible] re[illegible], and ſaid, As my Father ſent [illegible], ſo doe I ſend you, receive the holy Ghoſt, whoſe [illegible] you ſhall [illegible] they ſhall be [illegible], and [illegible] ſhall retaine, they ſhall be retained, yet to manifeſt unity, the beginning of that unity [illegible] one, he [illegible]ed by his authority. The ſame thing verely were all the Apoſtles that Peter was, endued with [illegible] honor and aut[illegible], but the beginning proceedeth from one, that the Church might be ſhewed to [illegible]. This wr[illegible] Cyprian, of the building of the Church upon one man Peter, [illegible] that all the Apoſtles [illegible] the ſame honour and power that Peter had. And therefore, Peter had no [illegible] of authority over them, or over the whole Church, more then every one of the Apoſtles had. T[illegible] H[illegible] upon this place, Can. 16. of the foundation of the Church, may well be underſtood [illegible]. As he d[illegible] moſt pl[illegible] expreſſe his [illegible], De Trin. li. 2. V[illegible] igitur hoc eſt immobile, fundamentum, &c. T[illegible] one foundation is immoveable, [illegible] is t[illegible] rocke of faith confeſſed by the mouth of Peter. Thou art the Sonne of the living God. And li. 6. he ſaith: All the Apoſtles, for the worthineſſe of their faith, acknowledging his Divinity, received the keyes of the kingdome of heaven, and authority of binding and looſing in heaven and in earth. Wherefore S. Hilarie one of this text, never acknowledged the ſupremacie of Peter, or any greater authority granted unto Peter, then unto the reſt of the Apoſtles. The next place you quote, for Ambr. Serm. 46. is the very ſame which you quoted before, and aſcribed to Auguſt. Serm. 16. de Sanct. reſembling indeed the ſtile of neither of both. Likewiſe the Ser. 69. is the very ſame that you cited before, as Auguſtines Serm. 26. de Sanct. Theſe places if you had viewed your ſelves, you [illegible] not have cited for ſhame under the name of two ſeverall Doctors, and yet they ſerve you to ſmall purpoſe, as I have ſhewed before. But you know Papiſts are ready to take [illegible], [illegible] you will thruſt into their [illegible]es; and never examine whence it commeth. With whom ſo [illegible] you may retaine your credit, you [illegible] not what all the learned of the world may judge of your [illegible]. But leſt you ſhould ſeeme to have nothing of Ambroſe, but forged, you quote lib. 6. cap. 9. Luc. where he doth acknowledge, Peter none otherwiſe [illegible] be the foundation of the Church, then every faithfull man may be. For he (ſaith he) [illegible] is the f[illegible] of the Church, and though he cannot be equall to Peter, yet he may follow him. A[illegible] he ſa[illegible]: He [illegible]ed not to his Diſciple the grace of this name, that he ſhould be called Peter, becauſe he had ſ[illegible], and ſtedfaſtneſſe of faith of the rocke. Endeavour that thou alſo mayeſt be a rocke. Therefore ſeeke [illegible], not [illegible] thee, but within thee. Thy act is thy rocke, thy minde is thy rocke. Let thy houſe be builded upon this rocke that it [illegible] be beaten with any ſtormes of ſpirituall wickedneſſe. Faith is thy rocke, faith is the foundation of the Church. If thou be a rocke, thou ſhalt be in the Church. becauſe the Church is upon a rocke, &c. Here is all that can be gathered out of this place for Peters ſupremacie. You were as well adviſed to quote S. Hierome lib. 1. in Iovin. whoſe words are theſe. At dicis, ſuper Petrum fundatur Eccleſia, &c. But thou ſayeſt, the Church is founded upon Peter, al[illegible]ugh in another place, the very ſame thing is done upon all the Apoſtles, and they all receive the keyes of the king[illegible] of heaven, and the ſtrength of the Church is eſtabliſhed equally upon them all. Yet therefore among twelve one is choſen, that the [illegible] being appointed, occaſion of ſchiſme may be taken away. In theſe words Hierome ackno[illegible]eth no gre[illegible] authority of Peter, then of the reſt of the Apoſtles, [illegible] onely a primacie of order for a[illegible] of confuſ[illegible] and diſſention, which in every company of them that be equall in degree, muſt be obſerved. Your ſecond place out of S. Hierome, is in cap. 2. Eſa. where he ſaith of the Church: Hæc domus ædi[illegible]ata eſt, &c. This houſe is builded upon the foundation of the Apoſtles and Prophets, who alſo are mountaines, [illegible] of Chriſt. Of this [illegible]e and Hieruſalem, the Pſalmiſt ſaith aloud. They that put their truſt in the Lord, [illegible] be as t[illegible] S[illegible], he [illegible] not be moved for ever which dwelleth in Hieruſalem. The mountaines are round about it, and the Lord is round about his people. Wherefore upon [illegible] of theſe mount[illegible], Chriſt foundeth his [illegible], and ſ[illegible]th [illegible] him. Thou art Peter, and [illegible] this rocke I [illegible] my Churc[illegible], and the gates of hell ſhall [illegible] it. Loe by this teſtimonie, Peter is one of the [illegible], [illegible] which the Church, is f[illegible]: Where [illegible] Peters ſ[illegible] in theſe [illegible]ds? Laſt of all [illegible] 16. [illegible] to be ſure and [illegible] Temple, and habitation [illegible] to us, may be [illegible] tion of faith. F[illegible] ſtrange or [illegible] Chriſt [illegible] the Sonne of the living God) [illegible] right ſound[illegible], and [illegible] build my Church, [illegible] faith of the [illegible] foundations [illegible] : The holy Apoſtles are rightly to be [illegible] of [illegible] to the [illegible]. To the ſame [illegible] lib. 5. Cap. 54. Epiphanius [illegible] in [illegible] to [illegible] or chiefe of the Apoſtles, on whom the Church is builded, but [illegible]andeth his [illegible], faith and doctrine, not his [illegible]; [illegible] (ſaith he) the faith was eſtabliſhed by all meanes, and all queſtions of faith are decided in him: So [illegible] here. 59. after he hath acknowledged him to be a rocke, upon which the Church is builded, he addeth the reaſon, and expoundeth how he is a rocke. Becauſe (ſayth he) he confeſſeth Chriſt to be the Sonne of the living God, and heard, upon this rocke of ſtedfaſt faith, I will build my Church. Now ſeeing this rocke of ſtedfaſt faith was in all the Apoſtles it is certaine that Epiphanius purpoſed not to make Peter a ſingular foundation ſtone by himſelfe, but joyntly with all his fellow Apoſtles.

Leo Biſhop of Rome, ſtriving for the dignity of his See, as his predeceſſors Zoſimus, Boniface, and Celeſtine had done before, and were diſcovered in the Councell of Africa to have alleaged a [illegible] Canon of the Councell of Nice: is no equall judge in this caſe. Neither could his alleg[illegible] any thing prevaile in the Generall Councell of Chalcedon, but that the Biſhop of Conſtantinople was made his equall, as wee have ſhewed before. Gregory was almoſt immediatly before that Boniface, that bought the title of ſupremacy of Phocas, and the later ſtill the worſe: Yet he propheſied, that Iohn Biſhop of Conſtantinople, which firſt challenged the title of Vniverſall Biſhop, was the forerunner of Antichriſt. Ep. 7[illegible]. 82. 194. Your laſt witneſſe Theodoret, calleth Peter a principall foundation of the Church that was ſhaken, and confirmed againe by repentance. But the ſame Theodoret ſheweth, that he was a foundation, [illegible] reſpect of his faith and confeſſion, in Cantic. ſaying, Petrum appellat fidei pietatem, &c. He calleth [illegible] of faith, and profeſſion of trueth a rocke. For when our Lord enquired of his Diſciples, whom men ſayd t[illegible] be the Sonne of man was, thou, ſayth bleſſed Peter, art Chriſt the Sonne of the living God. To whom our Lord anſwered, ſaying, verely, verely I ſay to thee, thou art Peter, and upon this rocke I will build my Church. And [illegible] you ſhould thinke, that Peter in reſpect of his faith and confeſſion was a ſingular foundation. In Pſalme 47. [illegible] hee writeth: Ædificavit, &c. He hath builded (the Church) as the holy Ap[illegible]le ſayth upon the foundation of the Apoſtles and Prophets, Ieſus Chriſt being the corner ſtone thereof. And our Lord him[illegible] [illegible]ſſed Peter, and upon this rocke I will build my Church, and the gates of hell ſhall not prevaile againſt it. Therefore the Prophet hath put this word, well founded, for ſound foundations, that ſhe may remaine unſhaken and unmoveable. Theſe words declare evidently, that Peter is a rocke and foundation of the Church, no otherwiſe, then all the Apoſtles are, and hath no ſupremacy of authority over the reſt, granted by this text. Thus have we anſwered [illegible] thoſe Fathers, that ſay the Church was founded upon Peter. But becauſe you cannot deny, but that [illegible]o that the Church is builded upon Peters faith: you ſay, they meane not faith ſeparated from the man, or [illegible] other waies, as we unlearnedly take them. What they meant by faith, and how we take them, I have ſhewed by [illegible] owne words, which are plaine enough, and neede no great learning to interpret them. They meane, that faith [illegible] Peter, which he confeſſed at that time, which he held alwaies after, and which he with the reſt of the [illegible] preached in the world, as they all held the ſame faith and confeſſion, and therefore were all made f[illegible], in reſpect of the faith they taught, upon which the Church is builded, and received the keyes, [illegible] of binding and looſing, in as ample manner as Peter did. But let us heare what high poynt of [illegible] will teach us. They meane (ſay you) upon faith, as in him, who heere confeſſed that faith. That is (as I [illegible]) upon Peters faith: Now whether you meane that ſingular faith, that was in Peter onely, or the g[illegible] of the Church, whereof Peters faith was a ſingular or Individuum, [illegible] paſſeth my ſimple learning to [illegible] meane that faith, which was a ſingular accident in Peter onely, who heere confeſſeth that faith: it is a [illegible] paradoxe, to ſay, that the vniverſall Church and faith ſhould be [illegible] the [illegible] the Church ſhould faile, aſſoone as Peter died. For that ſingular accident, could not [illegible] to his [illegible] any more then other accidents to his perſon. If you meane, that generall faith, that was [illegible] all by Peters mouth, confeſſed the ſame, then are they all by C[illegible] his anſwer, made [illegible] the Church, as well as Peter. And this is the plaine meaning, according to the evident words of the [illegible].

[illegible] to be Peters [illegible] ſucceſſors, and his chaire. [illegible] upon all the Apoſtles, and [illegible]. In [illegible] as we [illegible], ſayth, The C[illegible] true doctrine is continued and kept, it is a rocke [illegible] that what [illegible] ſoever, [illegible] chayre where [illegible] Donatus ſate. [illegible] lib. 2. vero ſacerdoti dicitur, Tu es Petrus, [illegible]. And therefore he that joyned [illegible] of Rome hold not Peters [illegible], he ſitteth not in Peters chayre. [illegible] holding Peters faith of the divinity of Chriſt, would not have joyned with Liberius, ſubſcribing [illegible] Divinity of Chriſt, who alſo ſate at Rome, where Peter perhaps never came. But certaine it is he ſate not in Peters chayre, no more then the Phariſees ſate in Moſes chayre, while they held and taught that which Moſes did not [illegible]. Hierome therefore following none as principall but Chriſt, joyned [illegible] with Damaſus, who [illegible] in Peters chayre, taught as Peter did, that Chriſt is the eternall Sonne of God. And Auguſtine in that Pſalme againſt the Donatiſts, ſayth, that the continuance of the ſame doctrine and unity of the Church, even from Peters ſeate, is the rocke againſt which the proud gates of hell ſhall not prevaile. Not that whoſoever ſitteth in Peters ſeate, muſt have al authority that he will claime. For S. Auguſtine himſelfe in the African Councell, with the reſt of the Fathers of Africa, decreed againſt the Biſhops of Rome uſurped authority and forgery. And in the Councell of Chalcedon the Biſhop of Conſtantinople was made equall to the Biſhop of Rome, the Legates of Leo Biſhop of Rome, ſetting themſelves againſt it, but in vaine. Leo therefore (though otherwiſe a good man) is too partiall for the prerogative of his owne Sea, and therefore his teſtimony is no prejudice, againſt ſo many ancient fathers, as were of the contrary judgement before him.

RHEM. 10 18 Build my Church.] The Church or houſe of Chriſt was only promiſed heere to be builded upon him (which was fulfilled, Ioh. 21, 15.) the foundation ſtone and other pillars or matter being yet in preparing, and Chriſt himſelfe being not only the ſupereminent foundation, but alſo the founder of the ſame: which is another more excellent quality then was in Peter, for which he calleth it my Church: meaning ſpecially the Church of the new Teſtament, which was not perfectly formed and finiſhed and diſtincted from the Synagogue till Whitſunday, though Chriſt gave Peter and the reſt their commiſſions actually before his Aſcenſion.

FVLKE 10. Chriſt had his Church from the beginning of the world builded upon the foundation of the Prophets, himſelfe being the head and corner ſtone thereof. He ſpeaketh [illegible] now of the continuance and enlarging thereof among the Gentiles, by the miniſtery of his Apoſtles. And therefore, this is a meere fantaſie that his Church was not builded untill Chriſt reſtored Peter to his Apoſtleſhip, Ioh. 21.15. or that it was not perfectly finiſhed before Whitſonday. You may aſwell ſay, it was not diſtinguiſhed from the Synagogue or Church of the Iewes for many yeeres after, ſeeing the great multitude of the Iewes that beleeved were ſtill obſervers of the Ceremonies of the lawe. Act. 21.20.

RHEM. 11. 18 Gates of hell.] Becauſe the Church is reſembled to a houſe or a city, the adverſary powers alſo be likened to a contrary houſe or towne, the gates whereof, that is to ſay, the fortitude or impugnation ſhall never prevaile againſt the city of Chriſt. And ſo by this promiſe we are aſſured that no hereſies nor other wicked attempts can prevaile againſt the Church builded upon Peter, which the Fathers call Peters See and the Romane Church. Count (ſaith S. Auguſtine) the Prieſts from the very See of Peter, and in that order of Fathers, conſider who to whom hath ſucceeded, that ſame is the rocke which the proud gates of hell doe not overcome. And he in other place, that is it which hath obtained the top of authority, Heretikes in vaine barking round about it.

FVLKE 11 So long as the Romane Church continued in Peters faith and doctrine, it was founded upon Peter, and not onely upon Peter, but alſo upon the Prophets and Apoſtles, yea and upon Chriſt himſelfe: ſo long the gates of hell prevailed not againſt it. But none of the ancient Fathers affirme, that the Romane Church ſhould alwaies [illegible] Peters faith. Saint Auguſtine in his Pſalme againſt the Donatiſts affirmeth, that the continuance of the Church in the ſame religion, even from the ſeat of Peter, is the rocke which the proud gates of hell doe not overcome. [illegible] this count of Prieſts from the ſeat of Peter might be made as well in the Church of Antioch as in the Church of Rome, ſeeing Peter ſate at Antioch as well as he did at Rome, and the Patriarch thereof at this day [illegible] ſucceſſion of Biſhops from Peters ſeat, as well as the Biſhop of Rome. The ſame count might be [illegible] other Churches where the Apoſtles ſate, as Tertullian ſheweth, de præſcriptione. Age jam qui volet, &c. Goe to now thou that wilt exerciſe thy curioſity better in the matter of thy ſalvation goe through the Apoſtolike Churches in which the governours ſit even ſtill in the very chaires of the Apoſtles, in which their authenticall Epiſtles are rehearſed, ſounding the voyce, and repreſenting the face of every one of them. If Achaia be neere thee, thou haſt Corinth. If thou be not farre from Macedonia, thou haſt Philippi, thou haſt the Theſſalonians. If thou canſt goe into Aſia, thou haſt Epheſus. If thou be neere Italy, thou haſt Rome, from whence authority is at hand for us alſo. Theſe words of Tertullian declare, that not the Church of Rome onely, but every Apoſtolike Church, had a ſure teſtimony of the truth. And that Africa had recourſe to Rome, onely for the neereneſſe of it. In the ſecond place De utilitate credendi cap. 17. Saint Auguſtine nameth, neither Peters See, nor the Romane Church, but ſpeaketh of the Catholike Church, which even by the confeſſion of mankinde from Apoſtolike See, by ſucceſſions of Biſhops, Heretikes in vaine barking about it, and partly by the judgement of the people themſelves, partly by the gravity of Councels, partly alſo by majeſty of miracles, condemning them hath obtained the toppe of authority. He had ſpoken before of the providence of God which had gathered, builded, and beautified the Church, by the foretelling of the Prophets, by the humanity & doctrine of Chriſt, by the travels of the Apoſtles, by the contumelies [illegible] death of the Martyrs, by the commendable way of the Saints, and by convenient miracles in due time. Whereunto he addeth the teſtimony of mankinde, in the hiſtory of the ſucceſſion of Biſhops from the Apoſtles [illegible] authority of Councels, [illegible] condemning all hereſies. [illegible] nothing for the authority of the Romane Church or See, above all other Sees and Churches.

FVLKE 13 We acknowledge the authority, or chaire of doctrine, knowledge, judgement, and diſcretion betweene true and falſe doctrine, to be granted to Peter, and to every one of the Apoſtles, to whom alſo the keyes were granted, Hilar. de Trin. lib. 6. Hieron. cont. Iovin. lib. 1. Gaudentius Brixianus tract. 16. But the reſt that followeth, height of government, power of making lawes, of calling Councels, of the principall voyce in them, of confirming them, making and abrogating of Canons, ordaining and depoſing of Biſhops, power to diſpenſe the goods of the Church, both ſpirituall and temporall, eſpecially to be appropriated to Peter, hath no ground in the text: neither was any ſuch power permitted to the Biſhop of Rome, as Peters ſucceſſour, for many hundred yeeres after Chriſt. Polycarpus would not yeeld to Anicetus Biſhop of Rome, in the celebration of Eaſter, as teſtifieth Irenæus, Apud Euſeb. lib. 5. cap. 26. When Victor uſurped authority over the Churches of Aſia, he was [illegible] by the Biſhops there, Euſeb. l. 5. c. 25. and ſharpely rebuked and withſtood by Irenæus, and the Biſhops in France, Polycrates and the Biſhops in Aſia, and others. But in the firſt of Nice, he was made equall with the Patriarch of Alexandria, Can. 6. FVLKE 15 [illegible] Every one of the Apoſtles had the ſame authority in looſing which Peter had, Matth. 18. 18. And the [illegible] hath the ſ[illegible] power after them, Fulgent. de remiſſ. peccat. lib. 2. cap. 20. We reade in Leviticus of the Lepers: where they are commanded to ſhew themſelves to the prieſts, and if they have the leproſie, then they are made uncleane by the prieſt: not that the prieſts doe make men Lepers, or uncleane, but [illegible] that they have knowledge of him that is a Leper, and him that is not a Leper, and can diſcerne who is cleane, who is uncleane. Therefore as the prieſt in that caſe maketh a man cleane or uncleane, ſo here the Biſhop and prieſt bindeth or looſeth: not whether they be guilty or unguilty, but according to his office, when he hath heard the variety of ſinners, he knoweth who is to be bound, and who to be looſed. Thus farre Hierome. Bede [illegible] this text writeth to the ſ[illegible] effect. Haec poteſtas ſine dubio cunctis datur Apoſtolis, &c. This power without doubt is given to all the [illegible], to whom it is ſaid by himſelfe after his reſurrection generally, Receive the holy Ghoſt, &c. [illegible], to B[illegible] and prieſts, and to the whole Church; the ſame office is committed: although ſome of them not underſtanding rightly, thinke they can condemne innocents, and abſolve guilty perſons, which they cannot doe, but going about to deprive themſelves of the power granted. As for exerciſes of repentance preſcribed by the Church for [illegible] thereof, or other cenſures of diſcipline, may be releaſed by them by whom they are [illegible] and that [illegible] of rel[illegible] was of ancient time called Indulgence. But it was not allowed to the B[illegible] or releaſe (except in his owne Church of Rome) thoſe that were caſt out or ſuſpended [illegible] other Biſh[illegible] and Churches: as appeareth by many places in S. Cyprians Epiſtles, and namely, Ep. 55. ad Cornel. [illegible] Ep. 68. ad Clerum & plebem Hiſpan. That Hilarie and Epiphanius aſcribe no greater authority to Peter, [illegible] the reſt of the Apoſtles, we have ſhewed before ſufficiently. But Leo being a Biſhop of Rome, was too partiall in extolling of Peters prerogative, and the preeminence of his See of Rome. Therefore he was over-ruled by the generall Councell of Chalcedon, as wee have declared before. Finally, there is no godly temporall Poteſtate, that challengeth to be head of the whole Church, or of any particular Church, as Chriſt is head thereof, neither any of that authority which is here given to Peter, with the reſt of the Apoſtles and their ſucceſſours, the true Miniſters of the Church. But onely they challenge, as the higheſt Magiſtrates, [illegible] ſoveraigne authority within their dominions, to [illegible] true religion by lawes and ſentences, and to baniſh falſe religion and idolatry, to puniſh all [illegible] whether they be of the Clergie or Laitie, and that not [illegible] for offences committed againſt the ſecond Table, but for [illegible] perjurie, and [illegible] that are [illegible] the firſt Table. Which authority, the godly Kings of Iuda, David, Salomon, Ezekias, [illegible] &c. and the Chriſtian Emperours, Conſtantine, Valentinian, Theodoſius, and others, did [illegible], to the glory of God and benefit of his Church. That you [illegible] greateſt ſoveraigntie in Gods Church, attributed to Chriſt, Apoc. 3. to have communicated to Peter, it is ſuch bl[illegible], as Peter would have [illegible] his [illegible], if he had heard any man aſcribe ſo much unto him. For Chriſt hath the key of David, as the Sonne of David, and onely true Meſſias, which openeth and no man ſhutteth, and ſhutteth where no man openeth. [illegible] key [illegible] have, except he were Chriſt, for it is [illegible] onely to Chriſt, but the keyes of the kingdome of heaven, given to Peter and the Apoſtles, are keyes of [illegible] in reſpect of Chriſt, whoſe Stewards they are, to open and ſhut according to his word, and not at their owne will and pleaſure.

RHEM. 1 1 Transfigured.] Marke in this Transfiguration many marvellous points [illegible], that he made not onely his owne body, which then was mortall, but alſo the bodies of Moſes and Elias, the one dead, the other to die, for the time as it were immortall: thereby to repreſent the ſtate and glory of his body and his Saints in heaven. By which marvellous transfiguring of his body, you may the leſſe marvell that he can exhibite his body under the forme of bread and wine, or otherwiſe as he liſt.

Chriſt can exhibite his body under what forme he liſt.

FVLKE 1 Chriſt is Almighty, and yet he can doe nothing againſt his owne will, his word, or his glory. And therefore it is a brute concluſion, Chriſt could glorifie his paſſible body, ergo he can diſhonour his glorious impaſſible body, to bring it within the compaſſe of a piece of bread, that it may be devoured of dogs, cats, mice, or (that is worſe) to be eaten of wicked men, the members of the devill. Or this: Chriſt could adde a glorious forme unto his body, ergo he can take from it the eſſentiall properties of a body, and yet keepe it a true body ſtill. Although the queſtion be not ſo much betweene us, what Chriſt is able to doe of his abſolute power, as what he will doe according to his word.

The body of Chriſt. Omnipotencie of Chriſt.

Elias.

FVLKE 4 Divers of the ancient Fathers are of opinion, that Elias ſhall come in perſon, immediatly before the ſecond comming of Chriſt, as the forerunner of his ſecond comming, and to convert the remnant of the Iewes. But theſe words of Chriſt doe not prove it. For he ſaith no more, but that the Prophecie was, that Elias ſhould come, and that he is already come, as he ſaith of Iohn the Baptiſt, Mat. 11.14. he is Elias that was to come. And Origen upon this place underſtandeth no more commings of Elias, but this one of Iohn, that was come in the ſpirit of Elias.

RHEM. 5 19 Why could not we.] *No marvell if the exorciſts of the Catholike Church which have power to caſt out devils, yet doe it not alwayes when they will, and many times with much adoe: whereas the Apoſtles having received this power * before over uncleane ſpirits, yet here cannot caſt them out. But as for Heretikes, they can never doe it, nor any other true miracle, to confirme their falſe faith.*

True miracles onely in the Catholike Church.

FVLKE 5 If you meane of Popiſh Exorciſts, neither have they authority of God, nor power to caſt out devils. Neither is there any ſuch ordinary function in the Church of God: that men ſhould have power, to caſt out devels, more then to heale all manner of diſeaſes, ſpeake with ſtrange tongues which they never learned, or to worke other miracles. Which ſpirituall gifts God gave in the beginning of the preaching of the Goſpel, to confirme the credit thereof among the Iewes and the Gentiles, but of long time have ceaſed among Chriſtians, who are to be directed by Gods word, whatſoever their profeſſion bindeth them to give credit, without any farther confirmation of miracles, then that which is teſtified in the holy Scriptures. And whereas you ſay, that heretikes can never caſt out devils, or worke any true miracles, it is falſe: for our Saviour Chriſt ſaith, that many ſhall alledge in the laſt day, that they have propheſied in his Name, caſt out devils, and wrought many miracles. And God in the Law, chargeth his people not to be carried away by falſe Prophets, though they worke miracles, Deute. 13.

RHEM. 6 20 Faith as a muſtard ſeed.] This is the Catholike faith, by which onely all miracles are wrought: yet not of every one that hath the Catholike faith, but of ſuch as have a great and forcible faith, and withall the gift of miracles. Theſe are able as we here ſee by Chriſts warrant not onely to doe other wonderfull miracles here ſignified by this one, but alſo this very ſame, that is to move mountaines indeed, as S. Paul alſo preſuppoſeth, and S. Hierome [illegible], and Eccleſiaſticall hiſtories namely telleth of Gregorius Neocaeſarienſis, that he moved a mountaine to make roome for the foundation of a Church, called therefore and for other his wonderfull miracles, Thaumaturgus. And yet faithleſſe Heretikes laugh at all ſuch things and beleeve them not.

Gregorius Thaumaturgus.

FVLK. 6 We are not bound to beleeve all that, which is reported of Gregory Thaumaturgus. Yet being [illegible] by Authors of good credit, and the miracles tending to the confirmation of true faith, we doe not deride them, as we doe and juſtly may, the monſtrous fables of your Popiſh Legends, feſtivals, and other writers of like credit. Where alſo the miracles are [illegible] moſt commonly for the confirmation of falſe doctrine, and the maintenance of covetouſneſſe of Prieſts, as in the caſes of Purgatory, pilgrimage, and ſuch like.

RHEM. 7 21 Prayer and faſting.] The force of faſting and praying: whereby alſo we may ſee that the holy Church in Exorciſmes doth according to the Scriptures, when ſhe uſeth beſide the Name of IESVS, many prayers and much faſting to drive out devils, becauſe theſe alſo are here required beſide faith.

Prayer and faſting.

FVLK. 7 The Popiſh Church abuſeth the ignorant, to make them beleeve they can caſt out devils, whereas they have no ſuch power, neither by all their prayers or faſting, can they conjure out one uncleane ſpirit, unleſſe they have firſt (as Sorcerers and Witches) conjured them in.

The Gospel for marriage. And for S. Agathe, Febr. 5.

3 And there came to him the Pharisees tempting him, and saying, Is it lawfull for a man to dimisse his wife, for every cause?

4 Who answering, said to them, Have ye not read, that he which did make from the beginning, ‖ made them male and female? And he said, ‖ Make men. Gen. 1, 27.

Gen. 2, 24. 5 For this cause, shall man leave father and mother, and shall cleave to his wife: and they two shall be one flesh.

6 Therefore now they are not two, but one flesh. That therefore which God hath joyned together, let not man separate.

Deut. 24, 1. 7 They say to him, Why then *did Moses command to give a bill of divorce, and to dimisse her?

8 He saith to them, Because Moses for the hardnesse of your heart permitted you to dimisse your wives: but from the beginning it was not so.

Math. 5, 32. Marke 10, 11. Luke 16, 18. 1 Cor. 7, 11. 9 And I say to you, that whosoever shall dimisse his wife, but for fornication, and shall marry another, doth commit advoutry: and he that shall marry her that is dimissed, committeth advoutry.

1 And it came to passe, when Iesus had finished these sayings, he gat him from Galilee, and came into the coasts of Iurie, beyond Iordan. Marke 10.

2 And great multitudes followed him, and he healed them there.

3 The Pharisees also came unto him, tempting him, and saying unto him, Is it lawfull for a man to put away his wife for every cause?

*4 He answered, and said unto them, Have ye not read, that he which created at the beginning, made them male and female? Gen. 1. 27.

*5 And said, For this cause shall a man leave his father and mother, and shall be knit to his wife: and they twaine shall be one flesh. Gen. 2. 24. Ephes. 5. 1 Cor. 6.

6 Wherefore they are no more twaine, but one flesh. Let not man therefore put asunder, that which God hath coupled together.

*7 They say unto him, Why did Moses then command to give a writing of divorcement, and to put her away? Deut. 24. 1.

8 He said unto them, Moses, because of the hardnesse of your hearts, suffered you to put away your wives: but from the beginning it was not so.

*9 I say unto you, Whosoever shall put away his wife, except it be for fornication: and shall marry another, committeth adultery: and who so marrieth her which is divorced, doth commit adultery. Math. 5. 32. Marke 10. 11. Luke 16. 18. 1 Cor. 7. 11.

10 His Disciples say unto him, If the case of the man be so with his wife, then it is not good to marry.

11 But he said unto them, All men cannot receive this saying, save they to whom it is given.

12 For there are some chaste, which were so borne out of their mothers wombe: and there are some chaste, which were made chaste of men: and there be chaste, which have made themselves chaste for the kingdome of heavens sake. He that is able to receive it, let him receive it.

*13 Then were there brought unto him young children, that he should put his hands on them, and pray: and the Disciples rebuked them. Luke 10. Luke 18. 15.

27 Then Peter anſwering, ſaid to him, Behold we haue left all things, and haue followed thee: what therefore ſhall we haue?

28 And IESVS ſaid to them, Amen I ſay to you, that you which haue followed me, in the regeneration, when the Sonne of man ſhall ſit in the ſeate of his maieſtie, you alſo ſhall ſit upon twelue ſeates, iudging the twelue tribes of Iſrael.

29 And euery one that hath left houſe, or brethren, or ſiſters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or lands for my names ſake: ſhall receiue an hundred fold, and ſhall poſſeſſe life euerlaſting.

21 Ieſus ſaid unto him, If thou wilt be perfect, Goe and ſell that thou haſt, and giue to the poore, and thou ſhalt haue treaſure in heauen: and come and follow me.

22 But when the yong man heard that ſaying, he went away ſorry: for he had great poſſeſſions.

23 Then Ieſus ſaid unto his Diſciples, Verily I ſay unto you, that a rich man ſhall hardly enter into the kingdome of heauen.

24 And againe I ſay unto you, It is eaſier for a Camell to goe through the eye of a needle, then for a rich man to enter into the kingdome of God.

25 When the Diſciples heard this, they were exceedingly amazed, ſaying, Who then can be ſaued?

26 But Ieſus beheld them, and ſaid unto them, With men this is impoſſible, but with God all things are poſſible.

27 Then anſwered Peter, and ſaid unto him, Behold, we haue forſaken all, and followed thee: what ſhall we haue therefore?

28 Ieſus ſaid unto them, Verily I ſay unto you, that when the ſonne of man ſhall ſit in the throne of his Maieſtie, ye that haue followed me in the regeneration, ſhall alſo ſit upon twelue ſeates, iudging the twelue tribes of Iſrael.

29 And euery one that hath forſaken houſes, or brethren, or ſiſters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or lands, for my Names ſake, ſhall receiue an hundred fold, and ſhall inherit euerlaſting life.

Therefore this is a beaſtly concluſion of yours, ergo prayers not underſtood of the party, are acceptable to Chriſt. If you urge the words of the Pſalme, which nameth infants and ſucklings that can neither ſpeake nor underſtand, the meaning is not, that they praiſe God with their voyce: but that the providence of God, to his great praiſe, is manifeſt out of their mouthes, to whom he hath provided meat before they were borne, and in that great weakneſſe and ignorance, taught them to take it for their ſuſtenance, and call for it in their crying voyce, when they lacke it. So that our Saviour Chriſt out of that text reaſoneth from the leſſe to the more, if God ordained his praiſe out of infants and ſucklings, that cannot ſpeake or underſtand, how much more out of theſe, that can ſpeake, and have ſome underſtanding?

The Scribes and Pharisees [illegible] all this, continuing still incorrigible, although he will have the doctrine of their chaire obeyed; Yet against their workes (and namely their ambition) he openly inveigheth, crying to them eight woes for their eightfold hypocrisie and blindnesse: 34 and so concluding with the most worthy reprobation of that persecuting generation and their mother citie Hierusalem with her Temple.

The Gospel upon Tuesday the second weeke in Lent.

THen IESVS spake to the multitudes and to his Disciples,

2 Saying, Upon ‖ the chaire of Moyses have sitten the Scribes and the Pharisees.

3 All things therefore ‖ whatsoever they shall say to you, observe ye and doe ye: but according to their works do ye not, for they say and doe not.

Luke 11,46. Acts 15,10.

4 For * they binde heavie burdens and importable: and put them upon mens shoulders: but with a finger of their owne they will not move them.

5 But they doe all their works for to be seene of men; for they make broad their ⸢ Phylacteries, and enlarge their * fringes.

"These phylacteries were pieces of parchment, wherein they wrote the ten commandements, & folded it, & carried it on their forhead before their eyes, imagining grosly & superstitiously, that so they fulfilled that which is said, Deut. 6. They shall be immoveable before thine eyes. Hier in 23. Matt. Deut. 22, 12.

ANNOTATIONS. CHAP. XXIII.

RHEM. 1 2 Chaire of Moses.] God preserveth the truth of Christian religion in the Apostolike See of Rome, which is in the new Law answerable to the chaire of Moses, notwithstanding the Bishops of the same were never so wicked of life: yea though some traitor as ill as Iudas were Bishop thereof, it should not be preiudiciall to the Church and innocent Christians, for whom our Lord providing, said, Doe that which they say, but doe not as they doe, Aug.ep.165.

The See of Rome preserved in truth

FVLKE 1 S. Augustine saith not, that God preserveth the truth of Christian Religion in the Apostolike See of Rome, but sheweth that so long as the truth of Christian Religion is maintained, we must not depart from the unitie of the Church for the evill life of the Teachers or Bishops. He answereth an Epistle of a Donatist unto Generosus, wherein was declared the order of Bishops, in a certaine citie, from Donatus the Authour of that Schisme. Whereupon S. Augustine saith, Si ordo, &c. If the order of Bishops succeeding one another be to be considered, how much more certainely and indeed wholesomely doe we number from Peter, to whom bearing the figure of the whole Church, our Lord saith, upon this Rocke I will build my Church, and the gates of hell shall not overcome it: for to Peter succeeded Linus, &c. And so forth he nameth the Bishops to Anastasius, among which he saith, there was never a Bishop that was a Donatist: but overthwart out of Africa, they sent one ordained, which governing over a few Africans in the city of Rome, enlarged the [illegible] of Montenses, or Cutzupitae. But into that order of Bishops, which is brought from Peter himselfe, unto Anastasius, which now occupieth the same Chaire, although [illegible] ; or, we may safely beleeve [illegible] said [illegible], which was contrary to Gods Commandement, Mat.15. [illegible] 5.) but [illegible] as they sate in Moses [illegible] the Law: but they sate not in Moses Chaire, but in their owne chaire, [illegible] traditions, and false doctrines.

RHEM. 2 3 Whatsoever they shall say.] Why (saith S. Augustine) doest thou call the Apostolike Chaire the chaire of pestilence? If for the men, Why? Did our Lord Iesus Christ for the Pharisees, any wrong to the Chaire wherein they sate? Did he not commend that Chaire of Moses, and preserving the [illegible] of the Chaire, reprove them? For he saith: They sit upon the Chaire of Moses, that which they say, doe ye. These things if you did well consider, you would not for the men whom you defame, blaspheme the See Apostolike, wherewith you doe not [illegible] saith: Neither for the Pharisees (to whom you compare us, not of wisdome, but of malice) did our Lord [illegible] Chaire of Moses to be forsaken, in which Chaire verely he figured his owne, for he warneth the people to doe that which they say, and not to doe that which they doe; and that the holinesse of the Chaire be in no case forsaken, nor the unitie of the flocke divided, for the naughtie Pastours.

Contra l.2.c.5
Contra l.2.c.61.

FVLKE 2 S. Augustine speaketh against a railing Donatist, which called the Apostolike Chaire, with which the Catholikes in Africa had communion, the chaire of pestilence: being able to charge the Bishops that [illegible] therein, neither with false doctrine, nor with evill life, which if he could have done, the fault had beene in the men, not in the Chaire. Neither doth he speake onely of the See of Rome, but also nameth expressly the See of Ierusalem, and consequently understandeth all the Churches planted by the Apostles, which retained the purity of doctrine delivered by the Apostles. Therefore he writeth thus: Verumtamen, &c. But if all throughout the whole world, were such as thou doest most falsly accuse them, what hath the Chaire of the Church of Rome done unto thee, in which Peter sate, and at this day sitteth Anastasius, or the Chaire of the Church of Ierusalem, in which Iames sate, and at this day Iohn sitteth, to whom we in the Catholike unitie are knit, and from whom with wicked rage, you have separated your selves: Why callest thou the Apostolike Chaire, the Chaire of pestilence? &c. In the second place which you cite, where S. Augustine saith, that our Saviour Christ, by the Chaire of Moses, figured his owne Chaire, it is evident, that by the Chaire, he meaneth not the place where he sate when he taught, but the doctrine which he taught. Therefore not the dignitie of the See of Rome, but the dignitie of the doctrine of Christ, wheresoever it be taught, and the continuance, consent, and unity in the same, is commended by S. Augustine: not appropriated to the See or Bishop of Rome: any longer then the Bishop of Rome teacheth the doctrine of Christ, which is the Chaire of Christ and of Peter. It is not the wicked life of the Pope, onely nor principally, that declareth him to bee Antichrist, but the doctrine of devils, which hee holdeth, and the exaltation of himselfe in devillish pride above Christ, and all that is worshipped: while he arrogateth more to himselfe, then he alloweth to Christ, as in his wicked doctrine of Pardons, Dispensations, and such like. For under his Bull he pardoneth, that, for which the Passion of Christ did not make satisfaction (as you hold) and dispenseth against the Law of God, commandeth idolatrie, and communion under one kinde, directly against the Commandements of God and Christ, &c.

See of Rome.

Antichrist.

RHEM. 6 Love the first places.] He condemneth not due places of superiority given or taken of men according to their degrees, but ambitious seeking for the same, and their proud heart and wicked intention, which he saw within them, and therefore might boldly reprehend them.

RHEM. 3 8 One is your Master.] In the Catholike Church there is one Master, Christ our Lord, and under him one Vicar, with whom all Catholike Doctors and Teachers are one, because they teach all one thing. But in Arch-heretikes it is not so, where every one of them is a divers master, and teacheth contrary to the other, and will be called Rabbi and Master, every one of their owne Disciples: Arius a Rabbi among the Arians, Luther among the Lutherans, and so among the Calvinists, Calvin.

Many masters and many Arch-heretikes.

FVLKE 3 In the Popish Church, the Pope is your master, of whom you learne that you learne, not of Christ: and though you did all agree in your heresie, you were never the neerer, but the farther from the truth. Neverthelesse, there hath beene and still are, great dissensions among you: as of the authority of the Pope, and of the generall Councell; questions not defined among you. But neither Luther, nor Calvin, desired to be credited any further then the word and the doctrine of Christ did warrant them: neither is their authority otherwise esteemed of us, but so farre forth as it is agreeable to the holy Scriptures. And whereas you have one Vicar, he is the Vicar of Satan, whose doctrine he maintaineth, in prohibition of marriage and meats, in commanding of idolatry, and countermanding of Christ. But Christ never appointed any Vicar generall, but such as he himselfe is, even his holy Spirit the Comforter, by whom he is still present with his Church, unto the end of the world.

Mat.26.27.

RHEM. 4 10 Masters.] Wicklife and the like heretikes of this time, doe hereupon condemne degrees of schoole and titles of Doctors and Masters: where they might as well reprove S. Paul for calling himselfe Doctor and Master of the Gentiles: *and for saying * that there should be alwayes Doctors in the Church; and whereas they bring the other words following, against Religious men who are called Fathers; as well might they by this place take away the name of carnall fathers, and blame S. Paul for calling himselfe the onely spirituall Father of the Corinthians. But indeed nothing is here forbidden, but the contentious division and partiality of such as make themselves Ringleaders of Schismes and Sects, as* Donatus, Arius, Luther, Calvin.

Doctors, Masters, and spirituall Fathers.

2 Tim.1.
* Eph.4.
1 Cor.4.15.

FVLKE 4 It is a slander of Wickliffe, and of the godly of this time, though some Anabaptisticall spirits, or ignorant persons, imagine such degrees and titles, to be here forbidden. But such doctors, masters and fathers are forbidden, as be authors, teachers, & begetters of new doctrines, & religious persons, as Francis, Dominike, Loyola, & such like.

Slander.

RHEM. 5 13 Scribes and Pharisees.] In all these reprehensions it is much to be noted, that our Saviour for the honour of Priesthood, never reprehendeth Priests by that name, Cypr.ep.65. Whereas our Heretikes use this name of purpose in reproach and despight.

The honour of Priesthood.

FVLKE 5 The Priesthood of the Law was of Gods institution, and therefore our Saviour Christ (as S. Cyprian saith) kept the honour that was due unto the Priests, but not as you say, in that he never reprehended Priests, by that name. For so S. Cyprian saith not: And you forget at least the Priest that passed by the wounded man, Luke 10. 13. And was it no reprehension of the Priests thinke you? when he said, that he should suffer many things of the high Priests, and be slaine of them, Mat.16.21. Yet he findeth no fault with their name which the Scripture gave them, Honour of Priesthood.

[illegible] with the [illegible] of [illegible] Priest, [illegible] most, and [illegible] of your Pop[illegible] the true etymologie thereof.

RHEM. The intention. 15 [illegible] prayers.] They are not [illegible] selves, which for the most part [illegible] but for their wicked purpose and [illegible] Proselyt[illegible] [illegible] fasting, prayers, almes, Mat. 6.

RHEM. 6 Not onely faith. 15 [illegible]] They that teach that it is enough to have only [illegible] make such Christians, as the Iewes [illegible] of hell farre more then before, Aug. l. de fid. oper. c. 26.

FULKE 6 Slander. [illegible] on them, that teach a faith void of good [illegible], to be [illegible] for a Christian man. But [illegible] teach all good works, what Proselytes do you make by your [illegible] & Seminary Priests, [illegible] sea and land for them? Somervil, Parry, Throkmorton, Savage, Babington, [illegible] of those [illegible] its, right children of hell, and of Satan that was a murderer from the beginning.

RHEM. 7 The Altar is sanctified by our Lords body thereupon. Theophyl. Mat. 23. 19 Sanctifieth.] Note that donaries and gifts bestowed upon Churches and Altars be [illegible] fied by dedication [illegible] God, and by touching the Altar and other holy things: as now specially the vessels of the [illegible] and Sacrament [illegible] body & blood, by touching the same, and the Altar it selfe whereupon it is consecrated. Whereof Theophy[lact] writeth thus upon this place: In the old Law Christ permitteth not the gift to be greater then the Altar, [but] with us the Altar is sanctified by the gift: for the Hostes by the divine grace are turned into our Lords body, [and] therefore is the Altar also sanctified by them.

FULKE 7 Holinesse of gifts and altars. Gifts bestowed upon the Church, to the maintenance of true Religion, be sanctified by dedication unto God: but gifts offered in superstition and idolatry, are accursed as the idols are. Popish Altars that are set up to overthrow the Altar of the Crosse, are not holy but cursed. And so is all that pertaineth to them. Neither have they protection of the Lords Altar that was in the Temple, which was a figure of Christs onely singular true sacrifice once offered, and that never can bee sacrificed againe, (as S. Augustine saith.) De spir. & lit. cap. 11. Cont. Advers. legis & prophet. cap. 18. Neither did the Altar of the Temple sanctifie by touching, for then the murderer which tooke hold of the hornes of the Altar, should be sanctified, whom God commanded to be drawne from thence and executed, Exod. 21. 14. 1 Reg. 2. 28. Neither if any man had offered any other gift then that which God commanded, had the gift beene made holy by touching the Altar, for it was the Ordinance of God, by which the Altar sanctified the gift, and not any quality in the Altar. Theophyl. nameth bread, not hostes. Transubstantiation. The saying of Theophylact, being a late Writer in comparison of antiquity, is not so greatly to be regarded: whose words although they seeme to be plaine for Transubstantiation, seeing he saith, Panes, the loves of bread by divine grace, are turned into the Lords body: Yet considering he was a Bishop of the Greeke Church which never accepted the Popish heresie of Transubstantiation; his meaning is not of any change in substance, but in use, of such bread as was offered by the people for the Communion, and to the releefe of the poore. It is like you are sicke of the disease of the Pharisees, which was covetousnesse, (as Chrysostome and Theophylact note) by magnifying the gifts of the Altar.

RHEM. 8 21 By him that dwelleth therein.] By this we see that swearing by creatures, as by the Gospel, by Saints, is all referred to the honour of God, whose Gospel it is, whose Saints they are.

FULKE 8 Swearing by creatures. By this we see, that in swearing by creatures, we cannot avoid swearing by God, yet this doth not justifie swearing by creatures. For as the Author of the imperfect worke that goeth under Chrysostomes name, saith: Idololatriam se facit, &c. He maketh himselfe an Idolater, whosoever sweareth by any thing else beside God, and [illegible] neth double. First, because he sweareth, and then because he maketh him God, by whom he sweareth. In Mat. Hom. 12. Swearing by creatures also, is condemned by Bede in Mat. 5.

RHEM. 28 Appeare to men.] Christ might boldly reprehend them so often and so vehemently for hypocrisie, because hee knew their hearts and intentions: but we that cannot see within men, may not presume to call mens externall good doings, hypocrisie; but iudge of men as we see and know.

RHEM. 9 29 Garnish.] Christ blameth not the Iewes for adorning the sepulchres of the Prophets, but convinceth them of their malice toward him, and of that which by his divine knowledge he foresaw, that they would accomplish the wickednes of their fathers in shedding his bloud, as their fathers did the bloud of the Prophets. Hilar.

FULKE 9 The sepulchres of holy men. To garnish the sepulchres of the Prophets moderately without superstition, is not evill of it selfe, but this hath commonly beene the manner of hypocrites by the subtiltie of Satan, to persecute the Prophets while they live; and to make Idols of their bodies when they are dead.

CHAP. XXIIII.

To his Disciples (by occasion of Hierusalem and the Temples destruction) he foretelleth, 4 what things shall be before the consummation of the world, especially, 14 the Churches full preaching unto all nations: 15 then, what shall be in the very consummation, to wit, Antichrist with his passing great persecution and seduction, but for a short time: 29 then incontinent, the Day of iudgement to our great comfort in those miseries under Antichrist. 35 As for the moment, to us it perteineth not to know it, 37 but rather every man to watch, that we be not unprovided when he commeth to each one particularly by death.

RHEM. 5 15 Abomination of deſolation.] This abomination of deſolation foretold, was firſt partly fulfilled in divers profanations of the Temple of Hieruſalem, when the ſacrifice and ſervice of God was taken away; but ſpecially it ſhalbe fulfilled by Antichriſt and his precurſors, when they ſhall aboliſh the holy Maſſe, which is the ſacrifice of Chriſts body and blood, and the onely ſoveraigne worſhip due to God in his Church: as S. Hipollytus, writeth in theſe words: The Churches ſhall lament with great lamentation, becauſe there ſhall neither oblation be made, nor incenſe, nor worſhip gratefull to God. But the ſacred houſes of Churches ſhall be like to cottages, and the precious body and blood of Chriſt, ſhall not be extant, (openly in Churches) in thoſe dayes, the Liturgie (or Maſſe) ſhall be extinguiſhed, the Pſalmodie ſhall ceaſe, the reciting of the Scriptures ſhall not be heard, Hippol. de Antichriſto. By which it is plaine that the heretikes of theſe dayes be the ſpeciall fore-runners of Antichriſt.

The abomination of deſolation. The aboliſhing of the holy ſacrifice of the Maſſe by Antichriſt and his miniſters.

FVLKE 5 This Hippolytus was not that ancient Martyr, of whom S. Hier. writeth in Catal. but a later fantaſticall fellow, full of fables concerning Antichriſt. That he ſhould be no man, but a devill in the ſhape of man, that Iohn the Evangeliſt ſhall come with Henoch and Helias, before the comming of Antichriſt, that Antichriſt, ſhall bring devils with him in the ſhape of Angels, and command them to carry him up to heaven, with ſuch like ſtuffe. Yet he doth not expound this abomination, of the aboliſhing of the Maſſe, or the ſacrifice thereof, not ſpeaketh of either of them: but flouriſhing in words, as his manner is, foreſheweth the aboliſhing of all Chriſtian religion, which ſhall never be, for Chriſt will continue with his Church to the end of the world.

* Act. 1.2.

The Church of God had no [illegible] shew in the sight of the world, for three hundred yeeres after Christ, when they came together in secret places, to serve God. Therefore the glorious pompe of Poperie in Italie, Spaine or France, is not the bright and cleere authority of the Church, whereof S. Augustine speaketh. For that, the Church wanted not for three hundred yeeres together after Christ, but in the middest of the hottest persecution, retained the same bright and cleere authority, amongst all true Christians.

Antichrist.

You have said, that the persecution of Antichrist, should endure but three yeeres and a halfe, but you are never able to prove it of usuall yeeres, therefore it is no blasphemy to say, the Pope is Antichrist, though his tyranny hath continued almost a thousand yeeres. But rather it is blasphemy to say the Pope is Gods Vicar: for that importeth God and Christ to be absent from his Church. Otherwise the holy Ghost supplieth the want of his bodily presence, untill he come againe to judgement.

CHAP. XXV.

Continuing his Sermon, he bringeth two parables, of ten virgins, and of talents, to shew how it shalbe in Doomesday with the faithfull that prepare, and that prepare not themselves. 31 Then also without parables he sheweth that such faithfull as doe workes of mercy, shall have for them life everlasting: and such as doe not, everlasting damnation.

The Gospel for holy virgines.

1 THen shall the kingdome of heaven be like to ten || virgins: which taking their || lampes went forth to meet the Bridegroome and the Bride.

2 And five of them were foolish, and five wise.

3 But the five foolish, having taken their lampes, did not take || oile with them.

4 But the wise did take oile in their vessels with the lamps.

5 And the Bridegroome tarrying long, they slumbered all and slept.

6 And at midnight there was a clamour made, Behold the Bridegroome commeth, go ye forth to meet him.

7 Then arose all those virgins: and they trimmed their lampes.

8 And the foolish said to the wise, Give us of ‡ your oile: because our lampes are going out.

9 The wise answered, saying, Lest peradventure there suffice not for us and you, goe rather to them that sell: & buy for your selves.

10 And whiles they went to buy, the Bridegroome was come: and they that were ready entred with him to the marriage, and the gate was shut.

11 But last of all come also the other virgines, saying: Lord, Lord, open to us.

46 Rise, let us goe: behold he approcheth that shall betray me.

3. 47 * As he yet spake, behold Iudas one of the Twelve came, and with him a great multitude with swords and clubs, sent from the chiefe Priests and the Ancients of the people.

48 And he that betrayed him, gave them a signe, saying, Whomsoever I shall kisse, that is he, hold him.

49 And forthwith comming to IESVS, he said, Haile Rabbi. And he kissed him.

50 And IESVS said to him, Friend, whereto art thou come? Then they drew neere, and laid hands on IESVS, and held him.

51 And behold one of them that were with IESVS, stretching forth his hand, drew out his sword: and striking the servant of the high Priest, cut off his eare.

52 Then IESVS saith to him, Returne thy sword into his place: for all that take the sword, shall perish with the sword.

53 Thinkest thou that I cannot aske my Father: and he will give me presently more then twelve legions of Angels?

54 How then shall the Scriptures be fulfilled, that so it must be done?

55 In that houre IESVS said to the multitudes: You are come out as it were to a thiefe, with swords and clubs to apprehend mee: I sate dayly with you teaching in the Temple: and you laid no hands on me.

56 And all this was done, that the Scriptures of the Prophets might bee fulfilled. Then the Disciples all leaving him, fled.

57 But they taking hold of IESVS led him to Caiphas the high Priest, where the Scribes and Ancients were assembled.

58 And Peter followed him a farre off, even to the court of the high Priest. And going in he sate with the servants, that he might see the end.

59 And the chiefe Priests and the whole Councell sought false witnesse against IESVS, that they might put him to death:

60 And they found not, whereas many false witnesses had come in. And last of all there came two false witnesses:

Io. 2, 19. 61 And they said, * This man said, I am able to destroy the Temple of God, and after three dayes to reedifie it.

62 And the high Priest rising up, said to him: Answerest thou nothing to the things which these doe testifie against thee?

63 But IESVS held his peace. And the high Priest said to him: I adjure thee by the living God, that thou tell us if thou be Christ the Sonne of God.

64 IESVS saith to him, Thou hast said. Neverthelesse I say to you, hereafter you shall 50 And Iesus said unto him, Friend, wherefore art thou come? Then came they, and laid hands on Iesus, and tooke him.

51 And behold, one of them, which were with Iesus stretched out his hand, & drew his sword, and after that he had striken a servant of the high Priests, he smote off his eare.

MARGINALL NOTES. CHAP. XXVI.

RHEM. 1 13 Shall be reported.] Hereby we learne, that the good workes of Saints are to be recorded and set forth to their honour in the Church after their death. Whereof rise their holy dayes and commemorations.

FVLKE 1 The good workes of Saints may be recorded and set forth in the Church to the honour of God, without their holy dayes and commemorations. For Christ instituted no holy day of Mary Magdalene, nor any such matter, as the Popish commemorations are, nor commanded any image of her fact to be made, but a memory by preaching the Gospel.

Saints holy dayes.

ANNOTATIONS. CHAP. XXVI.

RHEM. 2 8 This waste.] Cost bestowed upon Christs body then alive, being to the same not necessary, seemed to the Disciples lost and fruitlesse: so the like bestowed upon the same body in the Sacrament, upon Altars, or Churches, seemeth to the simple lost, or lesse meritorious, then if the same were bestowed upon the poore.

Cost upon Churches, Altars, &c.

FVLKE 2 That which the woman did by speciall instinct of the Spirit of God, was by Gods appointment necessary to testifie his buriall to be at hand. As for the cost bestowed upon the Popish Sacrament: suppose it were the same body of Christ, yet having no manner of use of such things, nor he requiring any such thing to be bestowed on it, were lost, and might be much better imployed on the poore; whom from this time forward, he commandeth to be fed, clothed, harboured in his stead. For he shall not say, Whatsoever ye bestowed upon the Sacrament, Altars, Churches, &c. But, Whatsoever ye did to any of these little ones, ye did it to me. On Churches whatsoever is more then for convenience and comelinesse, were better bestowed on the poore that need it.

Church ornaments.

RHEM. 3 10 Good workes.] *Cost bestowed for religion, devotion, and signification, is a meritorious worke, and often more meritorious then to give to the poore, though both be very good, and in some case the poore are to preferred: yea, * in certaine cases of necessity, the Church will breake the very consecrated vessels and iewels of silver and gold, and bestow them in workes of mercy. But we may remember very well, and our fathers knew it much better, that the poore were then best releeved, when most was bestowed upon the Church.*

Releefe of the poore. Ambrose lib. 2. Off. c. 28.

FVLKE 3 The worke which the woman did by speciall instinct of Gods Spirit, was a good worke, but not meritorious. As for the superstitious workes of them that beautifie idolatry with their riches, is neither good, nor meritorious. That which Ambrose did, the Popish Church will not doe: for he brake the vessels used in the mysteries, to redeeme captives, and saith, The Church hath gold, not to keepe it, but to give it out, and to helpe in necessities. What need we to keepe that which helpeth nothing? Yet with Papists, gay and precious shewes helpe much to devotion. Yet Ambrose saith further in the person of Christ: The Sacraments require no gold, neither doe they please me in gold which are not bought with gold: the ornament of Sacraments, is the redemption of captives. If the Papists breake their Chalices, it shall be rather to maintaine war against the professors of the Gospel, then to redeeme Christian captives out of the hand of the Turkes and miscreants. Where you say the poore were best releeved, when moſt was beſtowed on Churches, it is untrue. Gods Name be praiſed, the poore that be impotent indeed, have better proviſion for them in ſuch places as the Goſpel is received, then ever they had in Popery; as the Hoſpitals erected for the Orphans, widowes, aged, and diſeaſed, are a plentifull teſtimony.

M. 4 11 Have not.] We have him not in viſible manner as he converſed on the earth with his Diſciples, needing releefe like other poore men: but we have him after another ſort in the bleſſed Sacrament, and yet have him truly and really the ſelfe ſame body. Therefore he ſaith they ſhould not have him, becauſe they ſhould not ſo have him, but after another manner; as when he ſaid, Luke 24. as though he were not then with them, When I was with you.

Chriſt alwayes with us in the bleſſed Sacrament.

LKE 4 This vaine new found gloſſe, is confuted by S. Auguſtines authority, upon the ſame word, Ioh. 12. Tract. 50. Loquebatur de præſentia corporis, &c. He ſpake of the preſence of his body: for according to his maieſtie, according to his unſpeakable and inviſible grace, it is fulfilled which he ſaid, I am with you alwayes unto the end of the world. But according to the fleſh, which the word tooke upon him, according to that he was borne of the Virgine, according to that he was apprehended of the Iewes, that he was nailed to the tree, that hee was taken downe from the Croſſe, that he was wrapped in linnen clothes, that he was laid in the Sepulchre, that he was manifeſted in his reſurrection, You ſhall not alwayes have me with you. Why ſo? For he was converſant with his Diſciples forty dayes, according to the preſence of his body, and they waiting on him by ſeeing, not by following, he aſcended into heaven, and he is not here: for there he ſitteth at the right hand of the Father. And he is here, for he departed not in the preſence of his Maieſtie. Or elſe. According to the preſence of his Maieſtie we have Chriſt alwayes: according to the preſence of his fleſh he ſaid rightly to his Diſciples, But me you ſhall not have alwayes. Likewiſe S. Hierome upon this place ſaith; Sed mihi videtur, &c. Me thinketh he ſpeaketh of his corporall preſence. S. Bede alſo upon this place writeth; Se non ſemper, &c. He ſaith he will not alwayes tarry with his Apoſtles in preſence of his body, whom he never left in power of his Divinity. And upon Ioh. 12. he ſaith; Chriſt ſhould remaine with them but a ſhort time corporally. The ancient Fathers underſtood this, not of the maner of his preſence viſible or inviſible, but of the preſence of his body indeed, neither ever heard they of that fantaſticall expoſition.

The preſence of Chriſts body in the Sacrament.

HEM. 5 20 Twelve.] It muſt needs be a great myſterie that he was to worke in the inſtitution of the new ſacrifice by the marvellous tranſmutation of bread and wine into his body and blood. Whereas he admitted none (although many preſent in the city) but the twelve Apoſtles, which were already taught to beleeve it without contradiction Ioh. 6. and were to have the adminiſtration and conſecration thereof by the Order of prieſthood, which alſo was there given them to that purpoſe. Whereas at the eating of the Paſchal lambe all the family was wont to be preſent.

A wonderfull myſtery in the inſtitution of the bleſſed Sacrament.

LKE 5 That he ſate downe with the twelve, it followeth not, that onely the twelve were preſent at the Paſchal lambe, but that all the twelve were preſent: yea by the inſtitution of the Sacrament of the Paſchal lambe, where it is commanded that none of it be reſerved, it is manifeſt that there were more of his Diſciples preſent, beſide the twelve. For thirteene perſons could not eat a lambe of a yeere old, and not being ſatiſfied with that, have other meat to make up their ſupper, as it is plaine by dipping the ſop in the platter, that there was other meat then the roſted lambe, which had no ſauce or broth, but herbs. Therefore, all this fantaſie of the new ſacrifice, and tranſmutation of bread and wine, into his body and blood, with the order of Prieſthood there given them, (this foundation of onely twelve preſent being overthrowne) falleth to the ground. And where you ſay the order of Prieſthood was given them at this Supper, other of your fellowes thinke not, till after his reſurrection, Ioh. 20.22. And there you hold that they were not full Prieſts untill then.

Tranſubſtantiation.

RHEM. 6 26 He tooke bread.] Here at once is inſtituted, for the continuance of the externall office of Chriſts eternall Prieſthood according to the order of Melchiſedec, both a Sacrifice and a Sacrament, though the Scriptures give neither of theſe names to this action: and our adverſaries without all reaſon or religion accept in a ſort the one, and utterly deny the other. A ſacrifice, in that it is ordained to continue the memorie of Chriſts death and oblation upon the Croſſe, and the application of the generall vertue thereof to our particular neceſſities, by conſecrating the ſeverall elements, not into Chriſts whole perſon as it was borne of the Virgine, or now is in heaven; but the bread into his body apart, as betrayed, broken, and given for us: the wine into his blood apart, as ſhed out of his body for remiſſion of ſins and dedication of the new Teſtament, which be conditions of his perſon as he was in ſacrifice and oblation. In which myſticall and unſpeakable manner, he would have the Church to offer and ſacrifice him daily, and he in myſterie and Sacrament dieth, though now not onely in heaven, but alſo in the Sacrament he be indeed per concomitantiam (as the Church calleth it, that is, by ſequell of all his parts to each other) whole, alive, and immortall. Which point becauſe our Adverſaries underſtand not, not knowing the Scriptures nor the power of God, they blaſpheme, and abuſe the people to their damnation. It is alſo a Sacrament, in that it is ordained to be received into our bodies, and to feed the ſame to reſurrection and immortality, and to give grace and ſalvation to our ſoules, if we worthily receive it.

The holy Euchariſt is both a Sacrifice and a Sacrament.

Math. 22.29.

FVLKE 6 Here are many words of the inſtitution of a ſacrifice, continuance of Chriſts Prieſthood in the oblation of the ſame, a new death of Chriſt in the Sacrament, concomitance, &c. but no argument out of the text, no authority of other places of Scripture, no teſtimony out of the ancient Fathers alledged for them: yet are we condemned of ignorance, not to underſtand nor to know the Scriptures, nor the power of God. Yet we be not ſo dull witted, but we underſtand what you meane by your ſacrifice, tranſubſtantiation, concomitance, and other ſuch profane novelties and vanities of voyces, which the Scripture knoweth not, nor you are able to ſhew one jot of the Scripture for them. But let us conſider the parts of this note: Firſt you ſay, here is inſtituted both a ſacrifice and a Sacrament, though the Scriptures give neither of theſe names to this action. As though our contention were for the name, rather then for the thing it ſelfe. The one you ſay, we accept in a ſort, the other we utterly deny, without all reaſon or religion. The name of Sacrament, becauſe it ſignifieth that which this action is made by Chriſt, as we finde in the Scripture, namely, an holy ſigne, we accept, I am ſure, with good reaſon and religion, and in ſuch ſort as the ancient Fathers of the Latine Church, from whoſe tongue, this name of Sacrament is borrowed, did acknowledge this action to be a Sacrament. The other terme we doe not utterly deny, but in a ſort. For in ſuch ſort as the ancient Fathers did call this action a ſacrifice, by a Metonymie, unproperly, becauſe it is a memory of the onely ſacrifice of Chriſts death, and by Synecdoche, becauſe the ſacrifice of praiſe and thankſgiving is offered to God for the redemption of the world in the celebration of this action: In this ſort, I ſay, we doe not utterly deny the terme of ſacrifice. But in ſuch ſort as the Papiſts take it, to be a ſacrifice propitiatory, wherein the naturall body and blood of Chriſt, are offered to God the Father by the Prieſt in his Maſſe, for the ſinnes of the quicke and the dead, (howſoever the matter in compaſſe of ſtrange words and phraſes be ſhrowded, to hide the horrible blaſphemy therein contained) we utterly deny the name of ſacrifice, becauſe no ſuch thing was inſtituted by Chriſt, but it is manifeſtly contrary to the Scriptures. And this I thinke is good reaſon and religion, to deny that which is not, and is fained to be, to the derogation of the glory of our redemption, by the onely ſacrifice of Chriſt. And thus much for the name: now for the thing. You ſay it was inſtituted for the continuance of the externall office of Chriſts eternall Prieſthood according to the order of Melchiſedech. This, I ſay, is a falſe ſurmized end: for the continuance of Chriſts Prieſthood, is only in his owne perſon, and paſſeth not from him (as the Apoſtle ſaith) ἀπαράβατον ἔχει, &c. He hath a Prieſthood that paſſeth not by ſucceſſion, [illegible], he is able for ever to ſave thoſe that come unto God by [illegible], that he may make interceſſion for them, Heb. 7. 24, 25. This is the continuance of [illegible], according to the order of [illegible]. As for that profane novelty, of the externall office of Chriſts [illegible], becauſe the Scripture [illegible] it not, it is to be hiſſed out of the Church of Chriſt. The Apoſtle in that Chapter before named, referring to Chriſt, whatſoever of Melchiſedech pertained to Chriſt, maketh mention of no ſuch externall [illegible]. Beſide that, this fained continuance, of the externall office of Prieſthood, is contrary to the Scripture. Which teacheth, that the Prieſthood, after the order of Melchiſedech, is proper onely to Chriſt, who is the eternall Sonne of God, without father in reſpect of his manhood, without mother in reſpect of his Godhead, having neither beginning of his dayes, nor end of life, which can agree to none but to our Saviour Chriſt; Heb. 7. 3. Therefore your Popiſh Prieſthood, challenging the continuance of Chriſts externall office of Prieſthood after the order of Melchiſedech, is an horrible blaſphemy againſt the eternall Prieſthood of the Sonne of God. Further, you ſay; It is a ſacrifice, in that it is ordained to continue the memory of Chriſts death and oblation upon the Croſſe: So indeed the Fathers doe figuratively and unproperly call it, as I have ſhewed before. And this were tollerable, if you would proceed no further. But you adde, that It is a Sacrifice, to continue the application of the generall vertue of Chriſts death to our particular neceſſities by conſecrating, &c. Whereby you meane tranſubſtantiation of the elements, into the naturall body and blood of Chriſt. But the Scripture teacheth us, that the holy Ghoſt, through faith, applieth the benefits of Chriſts death unto us, for our redemption and ſalvation, and not the Prieſt by his Maſſe, Rom. 8. 2. Gal. 3. 13, 14. Where you ſay moreover, that the Wine is conſecrated into his blood apart, as ſhed out of his body, &c. You overthrow your owne poſition of the unbloody ſacrifice, which you ſay, you offer without ſhedding of blood. Againe you ſay, in This myſticall and unſpeakable manner, he would have the Church to offer and ſacrifice him daily. But Chriſt never gave out any word, whereby you might gather that he would ſuch a thing. Beſide, the Scripture is plaine, he would not any ſuch ſacrifice of himſelfe, to be offered by other, which did not oftentimes offer himſelfe (for then he ſhould have died often) but once for all, and found by that one oblation, eternall redemption, and made perfect for ever thoſe that are ſanctified, Heb. 9. 12. & 25. & cap. 10. 14. Therefore he needeth not to be offered by any other. And where you ſay, that in myſterie and Sacrament he dieth, it is contrary to the Scripture, which ſaith, he dieth no more, Rom. 6. 9. For ſeeing for Chriſts preſence in myſtery and Sacrament, you admit no figure, I cannot but underſtand an horrible myſterie of Chriſts daily dying in your ſacrifice of the Maſſe. But if you ſay the dying in Sacrament is figurative, it will follow, that the preſence in the Sacrament is alſo figurative. And touching your high point of Concomitance, which you ſay we underſtand not, where you ſaid, the wine is Conſecrated into his blood apart, as ſhed out of his body, &c. which was the condition of his perſon, as he was in ſacrifice and oblation: I demand of you, whether the blood that was ſhed out of the body of Chriſt upon the Croſſe, was by Concomitance, his whole body and ſoule, manhood and God? If it were not, (as I hope you will ſay it was not) why then in your ſacrifice is there in the cup, by Concomitance, not onely the blood, but alſo the body of Chriſt, his ſoule, manhood, and Godhead?

Laſt of all, when you come to the Sacrament, as a matter of ſmall moment, in compariſon of the Sacrifice, you knit it up in two lines, not expreſſing what it is indeed, but affirming of it, that indeed it doth not. For not the Sacrament, but the thing or matter of the Sacrament (as S. Auguſtine calleth it) which is the body and blood of Chriſt, feedeth our ſoules. This Sacrament therefore is an holy ſigne, and ſeale of our ſpirituall nouriſhment unto eternall life, by the very body and blood of Chriſt, which is the ſpirituall matter, repreſented by this ſigne, who giveth grace, which is not received of any, but unto eternall life, as ſaith Auguſtine in Ioan. Tract. 26. And where you adde the condition of receiving it worthily, it is contrary to your owne principle, That Sacraments, of the worke wrought, doe give grace, ſo the receiver doth not withſtand. But there is more required of him that ſhall receive worthily, then not to withſtand.

In Ioan. Tract.

RHEM. 7 26 Bleſſed.] Our Adverſaries, for the two words that are in Greeke and Latine, benedixit, and gratias egit, he bleſſed, he gave thankes, uſe onely the latter, of purpoſe to ſignifie, that Chriſt bleſſed not, nor conſecrated the bread and the wine, and ſo by that bleſſing wrought any effect upon them, but gave thankes only to his Father, as we doe in ſaying grace. But the truth is, that the word εὐλογεῖν, ſignifieth properly to bleſſe, and is referred to the thing that is bleſſed, as Luke 9. of the fiſhes, εὐλόγησεν αὐτούς; benedixit eis; he bleſſed them, and thereby wrought in them that wonderfull multiplication. So the bleſſing of God is alwayes effectuall: and therefore here alſo he bleſſed the Bread, and by that bleſſing, with the words following, made it his body; Amb. li. de his qui initi. myſt. c. 9. Aug. ep. 59. ad Paulinum. Now whereas taking the Cup, it is ſaid, he gave thankes. We ſay, that it is all one with bleſſing, and that he bleſſed the Cup, as before the Bread: as it is evident by theſe words of S. Paul, Calix cui benedicimus, the Cup which we bleſſe: and therefore he calleth it, Calicem benedictionis, the Cup of bleſſing, uſing the ſame Greeke word that is ſpoken of the bread. But why is it then ſaid here, he gave thankes? becauſe we tranſlate the words faithfully, as in the Greeke and the Latine, and becauſe the ſenſe is all one, as we are taught by S. Paul before alledged, and by the Fathers, which call this giving of thankes over the Cup, or over the bread, the bleſſing thereof. S. Iuſtin. in fin. 2. Apol. FVLKE 7 Here is wrangling about words, to no purpoſe, where the one Evangeliſt ſaith, he bleſſed, the other ſaith, he gave thankes. Yea, the ſame Evangeliſt ſaith, of the one part of the Sacrament, he bleſſed; of the other part, he gave thankes: therefore to bleſſe and to give thankes, in this place, is all one: and ſeeing thankſgiving is not referred to the Bread, no more is bleſſing. For if the Evangeliſts had meant to referre it to the Bread, they would have added an accuſative caſe, as Luke 9. What then? doe we meane none other bleſſing or giving of thankes, then we doe in ſaying grace at our ordinary refections? Yes verely. We meane ſolemne bleſſing, which is praiſe and thankſgiving, by which the creatures are prepared to this holy action, as Oecumenius writeth: agreeable with the ſayings of the Apoſtle Paul, and of the ancient Fathers Iuſtinus, Irenæus, Cyprianus, not meaning the whole conſecrating to conſiſt in this bleſſing or thankſgiving, but a part onely: nor as you ſay, in that bleſſing, with the words following, which you underſtand to be none but theſe, This is my body: But in the whole action, according to Chriſts inſtitution: whereunto are required, taking, eating, drinking, ſhewing of the Lords death. Dixit enim (Origines) Spiritum Sanctum non operari ea quæ inanima ſunt, nec ad irrationabilia pervenire. Quod aſſerens non recogitat aquas in Baptiſmate myſticas adventu Spiritus Sancti conſecrari: panemque Dominicum quo ſalvatoris corpus oſtenditur, & quem frangimus in ſanctificationem noſtri: & ſacrum Calicem, quæ in menſa Eccleſiæ collocantur, & utique inanima ſunt per invocationem & adventum Sancti Spiritus, ſanctificari, Theo. Alexan. Ep. Paſc. 1. But where you joyne bleſſing with the words which you call of conſecration, to make it his body, you diſſent from other elder Papiſts, which hold, that theſe words onely, without any bleſſing, but with the Prieſts intention, doe make the body of Chriſt.

If you be better advised, now to take in blessing and thanksgiving, I hope you will shortly consent, to admit eating, drinking, and shewing of our Lords death, to be parts of the consecration.

S. Auguſtine alſo Ep.59. ſaith, Prayers are made, when that which is upon the Table, is bleſſed and ſanctified, and broken to be diſtributed. Againe, In the ſanctification and preparation of diſtribution of this Sacrament, I thinke the Apoſtle commanded prayers properly to be made. Againe, Which things being ordered, and ſo worthy a Sacrament being participated, thankeſgiving concludeth all. Therefore neither Ambroſe nor Auguſtine underſtand your Magicall kinde of conſecration, by croſſing and murmuring of words with one breath, within which you conclude your Popiſh conſecration.
